

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

THE LAWYERS REPORTS ANNOTATED

BOOK LXIX.

ALL CURRENT CASES OF GENERAL VALUE AND IMPORTANCE, WITH FULL ANNOTATION.

BURDETT A. RICH AND HENRY P.

FARNHAM, EDITORS.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING COMPANY.

1906.

122131

JUL 29 1942

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year nineteen hundred five, by

THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING CO.,

In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year nineteen hundred six, by

THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING CO.,

In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

TABLE

OF

CASES REPORTED

IN LAWYERS' REPORTS ANNOTATED, BOOK LXIX.

A.

Albright v. Sussex County Lake & Park Commission (N. J. Err. & App.)	768
Allegheny Nat. Bank, Youghiogheny River Coal Co. v. (Pa.)	637
Allen v. Conn. (Mass.)	599
v. North Des Moines M. E. Church (Iowa)	255
American Tobacco Co. v. Strickling (Md.)	909
Andis, Doyle v. (Iowa)	953
Asheville Electric Co., Brown v. (N. C.)	631
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., Bibb Broom Corn Co. v. (Minn.)	500
Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co., Kinzel v. (C. C. A. 8th C.)	757
Augusta v. Reynolds (Ga.)	564
Augusta Brokerage Co., Central of Ga. R. Co. v. (Ga.)	119

B.

Back, State ex rel. Morton v. (Neb.)	447
Bank, Allegheny Nat., Youghiogheny River Coal Co. v. (Pa.)	637
Buffalo Sav., Kelley v. (N. Y.)	317
Citizens', Langdale v. (Ga.)	341
Citizens' Nat., v. Greene & W. Teleph. Co. (Iowa)	968
Exchange, Wilson v. (Ga.)	97
Security, v. Greene & W. Teleph. Co. (Iowa)	968
Waterbury Sav., Chase v. (Conn.)	329
Barker, Clancy v. (Neb.)	642
Clancy v. (C. C. A. 8th C.)	653
Barmon, Howes v. (Idaho)	568
Barnum v. Le Master (Tenn.)	353
Beare v. Wright (N. D.)	409
Beason v. State (Tex. Crim. App.)	193
L. R. A.

Bibb Broom Corn Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (Minn.)	509
Bingham v. Weller (Tenn.)	370
Bissell, De Witt v. (Conn.)	933
Blackwater Boom & Lumber Co., Griffith v. (W. Va.)	124
Thompson v. (W. Va.)	124
Blanks, Three States Lumber Co. v. (C. C. A. 6th C.)	283
Blue v. Gunn (Tenn.)	892
Board of Inspectors, People ex rel. Detroit v. (Mich.)	184
Board of Trade v. L. A. Kinsey Co. (C. C. A. 7th C.)	59
Bonsal v. Yellott (Md.)	914
Boone Suburban R. Co., Cotant v. (Iowa)	982
Boston Advertising Co., Com. v. (Mass.)	817
Boston Ins. Co., Collinsville Sav. Soc. v. (Conn.)	924
Bowles, State v. (Kan.)	170
Brannon v. Curtis (Tenn.)	760
Brooksville Graded School Dist., Hackett v. (Ky.)	592
Brown v. Asheville Electric Co. (N. C.)	631
Buffalo Sav. Bank, Kelley v. (N. Y.)	317
Busell Trimmer Co. v. Coburn (Mass.)	821
Byrne v. Werner (Mich.)	900

C.

Campbell v. Justices of Superior Court. (Mass.)	311
Cannon v. Mathews (Ark.)	827
Cappier, Union P. R. Co. v. (Kan.)	513
Central of Ga. R. Co. v. Augusta Brokerage Co. (Ga.)	119
Chace, Ex parte (R. I.)	493
Charlton v. Columbia Real Estate Co. (N. J. Err. & App.)	394
Chase v. Waterbury Sav. Bank (Conn.)	329

John J. O'Brien Contracting Co., Rincicotti v. (Conn.).....	936
Jones, Re (Pa.).....	940
Justices of Superior Court, Campbell v. (Mass.)	311

K.

Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Washington (Ark.).....	65
Keller, Garrigue v. (Ind.).....	870
Kelley v. Buffalo Sav. Bank (N. Y.) ..	317
Kerr v. Murphy (S. D.).....	490
Kinsey, L. A., Co., Board of Trade v. (C. C. A. 7th C.)	59
Kinzel v. Atlanta, K. & N. R. Co. (C. A. 6th C.).....	757
Kleis v. McGrath (Iowa).....	260
Knickerbocker Ice Co., Maginnis v. (Wis.)	833
Kurtz, New Castle v. (Pa.)	488

L.

Ladd v. Weiskopf (Minn.)	785
L. A. Kinsey Co., Board of Trade v. (C. A. 7th C.)	59
Langdale v. Citizens' Bank (Ga.)	341
Le Master, Barnum v. (Tenn.)	353
Linthicum, Polk v. (Md.)	920
Lippincott, Supreme Council A. L. of H. v. (C. C. A. 3d C.)	803
Lone Acre Oil Co., Swayne v. (Tex.) ..	986
Loomis v. Wallblom (Minn.).....	771
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dillard (Tenn.)	746
v. Sawyer (Tenn.)	662

M.

McBeath v. Rawle (Ill.)	697
McDonald v. Doust (Idaho)	220
McFall, St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. (Ark.)	217
McGrath, Kleis v. (Iowa)	260
McKell, State ex rel., v. Robins (Ohio)	427
McPhee, People v. (Mich.)	505
Maginnis v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. (Wis.)	833
Mallory, Davis Calyx Drill Co. v. (C. C. A. 8th C.)	973
Manchester Assur. Co. v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. (Or.)	475
Marden v. Portsmouth, K. & Y. Street R. Co. (Me.)	300
Mukowitz v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (Mo.)	389
Marmon, Dill v. (Ind.)	163
Marshall, Holmes v. (Cal.)	67
Mathews, Cannon v. (Ark.)	827
May, Cohn v. (Pa.)	800
Mcford, Hellen v. (Mass.).....	314
© L. R. A.

Medlock, Draper v. (Ga.)	97
Memphis v. Hastings (Tenn.) ..	601
Merrill, Watson v. (C. C. A.) ..	601
Metropolitan Street R. Co., Ma. & W. v. (Mo.)	968
Miller, Snyder v. (Kan.)	83
Wade v. (Mass.)	83
Montgomery, Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. (Ind.).....	87
Morris & C. Dredging Co. v. Nelson (C. A. 1st C.)	293
Morrison v. Dickey (Ga.)	87
Morton, State ex rel., v. Back (Neb.)	447
Mumford v. Starmont (Mich.)	350
Murphy, Kerr v. (S. D.)	499

N.

Nahant v. United States (C. C. A. 1st C.)	723
Neely, Williams v. (C. C. A. 8th C.)	232
Nelson, Morris & C. Dredging Co. v. (C. C. A. 1st C.)	293
New Castle v. Kurtz (Pa.)	488
New England L. Ins. Co., Pavesich v. (Ga.)	101
New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., Richards v. (Conn.)	929
North Des Moines M. E. Church, Allen v. (Iowa)	255

O.

Oregon R. & Nav. Co. Manchester Assur. Co. v. (Or.)	475
---	-----

P.

Pacific Mail S. S. Co., Re (C. C. A. A. 9th C.)	71
Parker, Hargis v. (Ky.)	270
Pavesich v. New England L. Ins. Co. (Ga.)	101
Peirce v. Van Dusen (C. C. A. 6th C.)	705
People v. McPhee (Mich.)	505
v. Schneider (Mich.)	345
People ex rel. Detroit v. Board of Inspectors (Mich.)	184
Deneen v. Gilmore (Ill.)	701
Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Montgomery (Ind.)	875
Polk v. Linthicum (Md.)	920
Portsmouth, K. & Y. Street R. Co., Marden v. (Me.)	300
Powers-Simpson Co., Schus v. (Minn.)	887
Pressly v. State (Tenn.)	291
Proctor v. Proctor (Ill.)	673

R.

Railroad Co., Kansas City, Ft. S. & M., v. Washington (Ark.)	65
---	----

CASES REPORTED.

4

Louisville & N., v. Dillard
Citizens' Bank, Tenn.)	746
Citizens' Nat. lle & N., v. Sawyer
Tenn.)	662
Clancy v. P. ork, N. H. & H., Richards
(Conn.)	929
Clark, Louis & S. F., v. McFall
(Ark.)	217
Cobr Co., Atchison, T. & S. F., Bibb
Broom Corn Co. v. (Minn.)	509
Atlanta, K. & N., Kinzel v. (C. A. 6th C.)	757
Boone Suburban, Cotent v. (Iowa)	982
Central of Ga., v. Augusta Brokerage Co. (Ga.)	119
Metropolitan Street, Markowitz v. (Mo.)	389
Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L., v. Montgomery (Ind.)	875
Portsmouth, K. & Y. Street, Marden v. (Me.)	300
Union P., v. Cappier (Kan.)	513
Union, Ruckman v. (Or.)	480
Rawle, McBeath v. (Ill.)	697
Re Jones (Pa.)	940
Pacific Mail S. S. Co. (C. C. A. 9th C.)	71
Rees, Slack v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	393
Reynolds, Augusta v. (Ga.)	564
Rhode Island Co., Vizacchero v. (R. I.)	188
Richard v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. (La.)	278
Richards v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (Conn.)	929
Richardson, Gordon v. (Mass.)	867
v. Stuesser (Wis.)	829
Rideout v. Winnebago Traction Co. (Wis.)	601
Rincicotti v. John J. O'Brien Contracting Co. (Conn.)	936
Roberts, Dreyfus v. (Ark.)	823
Robins, State ex rel. McKell v. (Ohio)	427
Ruckman v. Union R. Co. (Or.)	480

S.

St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. McFall (Ark.)	217
St. Mark's Church, Ginter v. (Minn.)	621
Sawyer, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. (Tenn.)	662
Schneider, People v. (Mich.)	345
Schus v. Powers-Simpson Co. (Minn.)	887
Security Bank v. Greene & W. Teleph. Co. (Iowa)	968
Senate, French v. (Cal.)	556
Service v. Shoneman (Pa.)	792
Shoneman, Service v. (Pa.)	792
Slack v. Rees (N. J. Err. & App.)	393
Smith v. Dana (Conn.)	76
v. Supreme Tent K. of M. (Iowa)	174
Snyder v. Miller (Kan.)	250
69 L. R. A.

Souther v. Gloucester (Mass.)	300
Southern Ohio Loan & T. Co., Cramer v. (Ohio.)	411
Spinks, Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. (Ky.)	240
Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co., Richard v. (La.)	27
Stanley v. Steele (Conn.)	56
Starmont, Mumford v. (Mich.)	35
State, Beason v. (Tex. Crim. App.)	19
v. Bowles (Kan.)	17
v. Coleman (Mo.)	38
v. Currie (N. D.)	46
v. Edwards (Minn.)	66
v. Guglielmo (Or.)	46
Hopkins v. (Ga.)	11
Pressly v. (Tenn.)	29
v. Yegge (S. D.)	56
State ex rel. Morton v. Back (Neb.)	44
McKell v. Robins (Ohio)	43
Steam Dredge No. 1 (C. C. A. 1st C.)	25
Steele, Stanley v. (Conn.)	56
Stephenson v. Corder (Kan.)	24
Strickling, American Tobacco Co. v. (Md.)	96
Stuesser, Richardson v. (Wis.)	8
Supreme Council A. L. of H. v. Lippincott (C. C. A. 3d C.)	84
Supreme Tent, K. of M., Smith v. (Iowa)	1
Sussex County Lake & Park Commission, Albright v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	7
Swayne v. Lone Acre Oil Co. (Tex.)	9

T.

Taylor v. Crawford (Ohio)	9
v. Evans (Pa.)	7
Teagan Transp. Co. v. Detroit Bd. of Assessors (Mich.)	4
Temby v. Ishpeming (Mich.)	6
Thompson v. Blackwater Boom & Lumber Co. (W. Va.)	1
Three States Lumber Co. v. Blanks (C. C. A. 6th C.)	5

U.

Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Spinks (Ky.)	240
Union P. R. Co. v. Cappier (Kan.)	513
Union R. Co., Ruckman v. (Or.)	480
United States, Nahant v. (C. C. A. 1st C.)
Usher v. Daniels (N. H.)
Usher v. Holmes (N. H.)

V.

Van Dusen, Peirce v. (C. C. A. 6th C.)
Vizacchero v. Rhode Island Co. (R. I.)

CITATIONS

IN OPINIONS OF THE JUDGES CONTAINED IN THIS BOOK.

A

Abbott v. Allen, 14 Johns. 252.....	762
Abernethy v. Hutchinson, [1825] 3 L. J. Ch. 209	109
Adams v. Rathbone, 54 Conn. 444, 8 Atl. 677	825
Adkins v. Hickman, 63 Ala. 494, 35 Am. Rep. 54	478
Adams County v. Kansas City & O. R. Co. (Neb.), 99 N. W. 245.....	456
Adams Exp. Co. v. Walker, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1025, 67 L. R. A. 412, 83 S. W. 106	269
Adkins v. Com. 98 Ky. 539, 32 L. R. A. 108, 33 S. W. 948.....	273
Adler v. Whitbeck, 44 Ohio St. 539, 9 N. E. 672	814
Adams L. Ins. Co. v. Milward, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 589, 68 L. R. A. 285, 81 S. W. 364.....	270
Adair v. Cortright, 64 N. J. L. 380, 48 L. R. A. 616, 81 Am. St. Rep. 504, 45 Atl. 634.....	769
Aden v. Minneapolis, 24 Minn. 254.....	629
Alexander v. State, 99 Ind. 450.....	118
Allegany v. Zimmerman, 95 Pa. 295, 40 Am. Rep. 649.....	248
Allen v. Craft, 109 Ind. 476, 58 Am. Rep. 425, 9 N. E. 919.....	957
v. Flood [1898] A. C. 1.....	95
v. Georgia, 166 U. S. 138, 41 L. ed. 949, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 525.....	313
v. Louisiana, 103 U. S. 80, 26 L. ed. 318	229
v. Williamsburgh Sav. Bank, 69 N. Y. 314	325
Alpa Checkrower Co. v. Bradley, 105 Iowa, 537, 75 N. W. 369.....	976
America, The, 92 U. S. 432, 23 L. ed. 724.....	299
Ames v. People, 26 Colo. 83, 56 Pac. 656.....	457
v. Union P. R. Co. 60 Fed. 966.....	721
Anderson v. East, 117 Ind. 128, 2 L. R. A. 712, 10 Am. St. Rep. 35, 19 N. E. 726	621
v. Hapler, 34 Ill. 436, 85 Am. Dec. 318	746
v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. 42 Minn. 490, 18 Am. St. Rep. 525, 44 N. W. 518.....	305
v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co. 57 Mich. 216, 23 N. W. 776.....	582
Andrews, Re, 162 N. Y. 1, 48 L. R. A. 662, 76 Am. St. Rep. 294, 56 N. E. 529	427
v. Andrews, 188 U. S. 14, 47 L. ed. 366, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 237.....	495
v. Senter, 32 Me. 894.....	860
Atter v. Bay State Distilling Co. 178 Mass. 163, 59 N. E. 630.....	499
Aize v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 55, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240.....	96
v. Rugeley, 6 Q. B. 107.....	291
v. Miller, 81 Pa. 212.....	943, 950
Avery v. Wilson, 60 Ga. 421.....	95
Avery v. Erie County Sav. Bank, 62 N. Y. 12	324, 336
Applegate v. Dowell, 15 Or. 513, 16 Pac. 651	482
Archer v. Baltimore Bldg. & L. Asso. 45 W. Va. 37, 30 S. E. 241.....	421
v. Jacobs, 125 Iowa, 467, 101 N. W. 193	958

Armour v. Draseau, 191 Ill. 117, 60 N. E. 904	938
Armstrong v. Lawson, 73 Ind. 498.....	828
Arnold, Ex parte, 128 Mo. 260, 33 L. R. A. 386, 49 Am. St. Rep. 557, 30 S. W. 769	187
v. Shields, 5 Dana, 18, 30 Am. Dec. 669	272
Ashley v. Hendee, 56 Vt. 209.....	825
v. Sioux City (Iowa) 93 N. W. 308.....	985
Atchison v. State, 13 Lea, 275.....	293
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Clark, 60 Kan. 826, 47 L. R. A. 77, 58 Pac. 477	440
v. Jennison, 60 Mich. 232, 27 N. W. 6	313
v. Stanford, 12 Kan. 377, 15 Am. Rep. 362	248
Atkins v. Chilson, 11 Met. 112.....	868
v. Wilcox, 53 L. R. A. 118, 44 C. C. A. 626, 3 N. B. N. Rep. 497, 105 Fed. 595.....	721
Atkinson v. John E. Doherty & Co. 121 Mich. 372, 46 L. R. A. 219, 80 Am. St. Rep. 507, 80 N. W. 285	111, 115
Atlee v. Northwestern Packet Co. 21 Wall. 389, 22 L. ed. 619.....	299
Atty. Gen. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 35 Wis. 425	881
v. Williams, 174 Mass. 476, 47 L. R. A. 314, 55 N. E. 77.....	819
Augir v. Ryan, 63 Minn. 373, 65 N. W. 640	487
Auman v. Auman, 21 Pa. 343.....	966
Avery v. Brown, 81 Conn. 398.....	237
Aylet v. Hill, 2 Dick. 551.....	498

B

Bach v. Parmely, 35 Wis. 238.....	832
Backus v. Detroit, 49 Mich. 110, 43 Am. Rep. 447, 13 N. W. 380.....	932
v. McCoy, 3 Ohio, 211, 17 Am. Dec. 585	762
Baer Bros. v. Terry, 105 La. 479, 29 So. 886	875
Bageard v. Consolidated Traction Co. 64 N. J. L. 316, 49 L. R. A. 424, 81 Am. St. Rep. 498, 45 Atl. 620	192
Bailey v. Centerville, 108 Iowa, 20, 78 N. W. 831	985
v. Clark, 21 Wall. 284, 22 L. ed. 651	81
v. Massey, 2 Swan. 168.....	744
v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 139 N. Y. 302, 34 N. E. 918.....	938
Bain v. Fothergill, L. R. 7 H. L. 158.....	766, 767
Baird v. Goodrich, 5 Helsk. 23.....	762
Baker v. Baker, 51 Ohio St. 217, 37 N. E. 125	425
v. Helskell, 1 Coldw. 641.....	379
v. Howell, 6 Serg. & R. 476.....	739
v. Hunt, 40 Ill. 264, 89 Am. Dec. 346	762
Baker's Appeal, 107 Pa. 381, 52 Am. Rep. 478	427
Baker Transfer Co. v. Merchants' Refrigerator & Ice Mfg. Co. 12 App. Div. 260, 42 N. Y. Supp. 76.....	157
Baldwin v. Douglas County, 37 Neb. 283, 20 L. R. A. 850, 55 N. W. 875.....	832
v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 60 N. H. 164.....	925, 926
Ballinger v. Tarbell, 16 Iowa, 491, 85 Am. Dec. 527	501, 502
Ballock v. State, 73 Md. 1, 8 L. R. A. 671, 25 Am. St. Rep. 559, 20 Atl. 184	508

Baltimore & H. R. Co. v. Algire, 65 Md. 337, 4 Atl. 293.....	570	Benson v. Christian, 129 Ind. 535, 29 N. E. 26	879
Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Andrews, 17 L. R. A. 191, 1 C. C. A. 636, 6 U. S. App. 75, 50 Fed. 728.....	748	Benton v. Hamilton, 110 Ind. 294, 11 N. E. 238	885
v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. ed. 772, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914	171	Bergman v. Commercial Assur. Co. 92 Ky. 494, 15 L. R. A. 270, 18 S. W. 122	921
v. Camp, 13 C. C. A. 233, 31 U. S. App. 213, 65 Fed. 952.....	712	Berliner v. State, 6 Tex. App. 181.....	191
v. Keedy, 75 Md. 320, 23 Atl. 643.....	512	Berwind v. Barnes, 13 W. N. C. 541.....	643
Baltimore County v. Wilson, 97 Md. 207, 54 Atl. 71, 56 Atl. 596.....	917	Bethel v. Cincinnati Street R. Co. 15 Ohio, C. C. 381, 8 Ohio, C. D. 310.....	190
Bamford v. Creasy, 3 Giff. 875	869	Bethel, Re, L. R. 38 Ch. Div. 220	495
Bangor v. Brockner, 25 Hun. 621.....	832	Betts v. Baxter, 58 Miss. 334.....	502
v. Lansill, 51 Me. 521	629	Bibb v. Freeman, 59 Ala. 612.....	762
v. Wiscasset, 71 Me. 535.....	832	Bickford v. Page, 2 Mass. 455.....	762
Bank of State v. New Albany, 11 Ind. 139	883	Biddeford Sav. Bank v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 81 Me. 566, 18 Atl. 298	925
Banks v. Pike, 15 Me. 268.....	99	Bierce v. Sharon Electric Light Co. 73 Conn. 300, 47 Atl. 324.....	935
Barbour v. Tompkins, 31 W. Va. 410, 7 S. E. 17	264	Billings v. Aspen Min. & Smelting Co. 2 C. C. A. 252, 10 U. S. App. 1, 51 Fed. 338.....	242
Bargent v. Thomson, 4 Giff. 473	869	Birdsall v. Kewaunee County (Wis.) 103 N. W. 1.....	831
Barnes v. McMurry, 29 Neb. 184, 45 N. W. 285	270	Birmingham R. & Electric Co. v. City Stable Co. 119 Ala. 615, 72 Am. St. Rep. 957, 24 So. 558.....	306
Barnett v. Harshbarger, 105 Ind. 410, 5 N. E. 718	883	Biters v. Fulton County, 81 Ind. 125.....	882
v. McCree, 76 Hun. 610, 27 N. Y. Supp. 820.....	396	Black v. Sharkey, 104 Cal. 279, 37 Pac. 939	580
Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 24 L. ed. 224	634	Black Case. See SUPREME COUNCIL, A. L. H. v. BLACK.....	763
Barnum v. Boughton, 55 Conn. 117, 10 Atl. 514	70	Blackburn v. Smith, 2 Exch. 783.....	976
v. LeMaster, 110 Tenn. 638, 69 L. R. A. 353, 75 S. W. 1045.....	379	Blackmore v. Fairbanks, M. & Co. 79 Iowa, 289, 44 N. W. 548.....	976
Barrett v. Carden, 65 Vt. 431, 36 Am. St. Rep. 876, 26 Atl. 530.....	884	Blackshire v. Iowa Homestead Co. 39 Iowa, 625	971
v. Dodge, 16 R. I. 740, 27 Am. St. Rep. 777, 19 Atl. 530	874	Blaine County v. Heard, 5 Idaho, 6, 45 Pac. 890	227
v. Failing, 8 Or. 152	482	Blake v. Stone, 27 Vt. 475	963
Barricklow v. Stewart, 163 Ind. 438, 72 N. E. 128	874	Blakely Twp. v. Devline, 36 Minn. 53, 29 N. W. 342.....	629
Barron v. Baltimore, 7 Pet. 243, 8 L. ed. 672	729	Blewett v. State, 34 Miss. 606.....	118
v. Collins, 49 Ga. 580	96	Blewitt v. Boorin, 142 N. Y. 357, 40 Am. St. Rep. 600, 37 N. E. 120.....	580
Barry v. Page, 10 Gray. 398.....	630	Blossom v. Negus, 182 Mass. 515, 65 N. E. 846	869
Bass v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 36 Wis. 459, 17 Am. Rep. 495.....	647	Blumenthal v. Boston & M. R. Co. 97 Me. 255, 54 Atl. 747.....	303
Bateman v. Phillips, 15 East. 272.....	396	Board of Education v. Minor, 23 Ohio St. 211, 13 Am. Rep. 233.....	598
Bates v. People's Sav. & L. Assn. 42 Ohio St. 655	419	Board of Trade v. Donovan Commission Co. 121 Fed. 1012.....	65
v. Santa Barbara County, 90 Cal. 543, 27 Pac. 438.....	498	v. Ellis, 122 Fed. 310.....	65
Batterson's Appeal, 72 Conn. 374, 44 Atl. 546	81	v. O'Dell Commission Co. 115 Fed. 574	65
Baxter v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 104 Wis. 307, 80 N. W. 644.....	617	Board of Trade Teleg. Co. v. Barnett, 107 Ill. 507, 47 Am. Rep. 453.....	635
Beard v. Connecticut & P. Rivers R. Co. 48 Vt. 101.....	986	Bobo v. Patton, 6 Hielsk. 172, 19 Am. Rep. 593	290
Beason v. State, 2 Tex. Ct. Rep. 921, 63 S. W. 633	196	Bogan v. Edinburgh American Land Mortg. Co. 11 C. C. A. 128, 27 U. S. App. 346, 63 Fed. 192.....	242
Beavers' Case, 58 Ind. 531	204	Bolin v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 108 Wis. 333, 81 Am. St. Rep. 911, 84 N. W. 446.....	616
Beazley v. Held, 68 Ga. 380	116	Bolin Case. See BOLIN v. CHICAGO, ST. P. M. & O. R. Co.....
Beckham v. Drake, 2 H. L. Cas. 579.....	869	Bolin v. Nebraska, 176 U. S. 83, 44 L. ed. 382, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 287.....	469
Beckwith v. Carleton, 14 Ga. 693	98		471
Bedford Belt R. Co. v. Brown, 142 Ind. 659, 42 N. E. 359.....	170	Bolt v. Keyhoe, 30 Hun. 619.....	60
Beecher v. Baldwin, 55 Conn. 419, 3 Am. St. Rep. 57, 12 Atl. 401.....	237	Bonnell v. Madison, 107 Iowa, 85, 77 N. W. 530	860
v. Detroit, 114 Mich. 228, 72 N. W. 206	439	Booth v. Booth, 2 Atk. 343.....	498
Beers v. Hanlin, 3 N. B. N. Rep. 749, 90 Fed. 695	721	Boothby v. Bennett, 73 Me. 117.....	263
Behre v. National Cash Register Co. 100 Ga. 213, 62 Am. St. Rep. 320, 27 S. E. 986.....	116	Bordman v. Osborn, 23 Pick. 205.....	721
Bell v. Morrison, 179 362, 7 L. ed. 179	262	Boreham v. Bignall, 8 Hare. 131.....	947
v. Packard, 69 Me. 105, 31 Am. Rep. 251.....	872	Boston & M. R. Co. v. Graham, 179 Mass. 62, 60 N. E. 405.....	870
v. Smalley, 45 N. J. Eq. 478, 18 Atl. 70	950	Boston Water Power Co. v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 23 Pick. 360	728
Belle v. Brown, 37 Or. 588, 61 Pac. 1024	482	Botwick v. Leach, 3 Day. 476.....	828
Bellevue Water Co. v. Stockslager, 4 Idaho, 636, 43 Pac. 568.....	222	Bouch v. Sproule, L. R. 12 App. Cas. 385	82
Belsay v. Engel, 107 Ill. 182	963	Boudreau v. Eastman, 59 N. H. 467.....	630
Bender v. Fromberger, 4 Dall. 442, 1 L. ed. 901	763	Boulter, Re, 5 Wyo. 329, 40 Pac. 520.....	469
Benjamin v. Holyoke St. R. Co. 180 Mass. 3, 39 Am. St. Rep. 446, 35 N. E. 95	302	Bowen v. Hall, L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 333.....	97
	304	Bowles v. Field, 78 Fed. 742.....	872
		Bowman v. Venice & C. R. Co. 102 Ill. 472	502
		Bowser v. Colby, 1 Hare. 109.....	869
		Boyce v. Grundy, 3 Pet. 210, 7 L. ed. 655	240

Boyd v. Bartlett, 36 Vt. 9.....	240	Brunk v. Means, 11 B. Mon. 214.....	274
v. Heinzelman, 1 Ves. & B. 381.....	498	Bryan, Re. 2 Sim. N. S. 103.....	947
Bracebridge v. Buckley, 2 Price. 200.....	869	v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 133 N. C.
Bradford v. Bradford, 19 Ohio St. 546, 2		607, 45 S. E. 938.....	404
Am. Rep. 419.....	426	Bryant v. Rich, 106 Mass. 188, 8 Am. Rep.
Bradley v. Johnson, 49 Ga. 412.....	485	311.....	661
Braman v. Bingham, 26 N. Y. 492.....	580, 581	v. Wells, 56 N. H. 152.....	630
Brammell v. Hart, 12 Helsk. 366.....	739	Bryce, Re. 104 Pa. 135, 44 Atl. 1076.....	945
Brandt v. Foster, 5 Iowa 287.....	762	Buchanan v. Alwell, 8 Humph. 516.....	239
Brangan v. Rose, 8 Ill. 123.....	499	v. Berkshire L. Ins. Co. 96 Ind.
Brashear v. West, 7 Pet. 608, 8 L. ed. 801	237	510.....	253
Brasfield v. Burgess, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 660,		Buck v. Peoples' Street R. & Electric Light
10 S. W. 122.....	37	& Power Co. 108 Mo. 186, 18
Bray v. Cobb, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 788, 100		S. W. 1090.....	306
Fed. 270.....	722	Bucklew v. Central Iowa R. Co. 64 Iowa,
Brazil Block Coal Co. v. Hoodlet, 129 Ind.		611, 21 N. W. 103.....	881
327, 27 N. E. 741.....	886	Bugbee v. Union R. Co. (R. I.) 59 Atl.
Breen v. Moran, 51 Minn. 525, 53 N. W.		165.....	192
755.....		Buhrens v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. 53
Brennan v. Swasey, 16 Cal. 140, 76 Am.		Hun, 571, 6 N. Y. Supp. 224.
Dec. 507.....	490	Affirmed in 125 N. Y. 702, 26
Brenton v. Davis, 8 Blackf. 318, 44 Am.		N. E. 752.....	305
Dec. 789.....	976	Bullmore v. Wynter, 48 L. T. N. S. 309.....	944
Brnell, Ex parte, L. R. 16 Ch. Div. 484.....	600	Bullock v. Zilley, 1 N. J. Eq. 489, 943, 947,
Brewster v. Kitchin, 1 Ld. Raym. 317.....	291	Bunn v. Stuart, 183 Mo. 375, 81 S. W.
Brick Presby. Church v. New York, 5 Cow.		1091.....	581
538.....	291	Buntain Case, 15 Tex. App. 515.....	202
Briggs v. Lewiston & A. Horse R. Co. 79		Burges v. Thompson, 13 R. I. 712.....	966
Me. 367, 1 Am. St. Rep. 316,		Burguleres v. Sanders, 111 La. 109, 35 So.
10 Atl. 48.....	302	478.....	277
v. Titus, 13 R. I. 136.....	498	Burke v. Stillwell, 23 Ark. 294.....	100
Bright v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 132 N. C.		Burlington v. Baumgardner, 42 Iowa, 673
326, 43 S. E. 844.....	405	Burnett v. Com. 169 Mass. 417, 48 N. E.
Brinkley v. Brinkley, 47 N. Y. 40.....	313	758.....	316
Brinley v. Grou, 50 Conn. 68, 47 Am. Rep.		v. Great Northern R. Co. 76 Minn.
618.....	80	461, 79 N. W. 523.....	626
Briabin v. Cleary, 26 Minn. 107, 1 N. W.		Burns v. Bradford, 137 Pa. 361, 11 L. R.
825.....	187	A. 726, 20 Atl. 997.....	492
Brisbane v. St. Paul & S. City R. Co. 23		v. Sennett, 99 Cal. 363, 33 Pac. 916
Minn. 114.....	932	Burnside v. Twitchell, 43 N. H. 390.....	897
Brodhead v. Reinhold, 200 Pa. 618, 86 Am.		Burr v. Knickerbocker Steam Towage Co.
St. Rep. 735, 50 Atl. 229.....	631	65 C. C. A. 554, 132 Fed. 248
Brogden v. Marriott, 2 Scott. 703.....	132	Burrill v. Dollar Sav. Bank, 92 Pa. 134, 37
Brolair v. Marquis, 80 Iowa, 49, 45 N. W.		Am. Rep. 669.....	344
395.....	960	Burton v. Plummer, 2 Ad. & El. 341.....	478
Brook v. Brook, 9 H. L. Cas. 193, 494, 495,		v. Sturgeon, 34 L. T. N. S. 706.....	944
497.....		Butler v. Myer, 17 Ind. 77.....	873
Brooklyn Park v. Armstrong, 45 N. Y. 234,		v. Peck, 16 Ohio St. 336, 88 Am.
6 Am. Rep. 70.....	754	Dec. 452.....	465
Brooks v. Cooper, 50 N. J. Eq. 761, 21 L.		v. Thompson, 52 W. Va. 311, 43 S.
R. A. 617, 35 Am. St. Rep. 795,		E. 174.....	163
26 Atl. 978.....	884	v. Tifton, T. & G. R. Co. 121 Ga.
v. Stackpole, 168 Mass. 537, 47 N.		817, 49 S. E. 763.....	488
E. 419.....	99	v. Wagner, 35 Wis. 54.....	831
v. Wentz, 61 N. J. Eq. 474, 49 Atl.		Butte Hardware Co. v. Frank, 25 Mont.
147.....	396	344, 65 Pac. 4.....	582
Broome v. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co.		Butterfield v. Forrester, 11 East. 60.....	208
42 N. J. Eq. 141, 7 Atl. 851.....	635	Byrne v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co.
Brovelli v. Bianachi, 136 Cal. 612, 69 Pac.		24 L. R. A. 693, 9 C. C. A. 666,
416.....	576	22 U. S. App. 220, 61 Fed. 605
Brown v. Ancient Order of U. W. 208 Pa.		289
101, 57 Atl. 176, 944, 947, 948,
v. Arnold, 67 C. C. A. 125, 131 Fed.
723.....	240
v. Balfour, 46 Minn. 68, 12 L. R. A.
373, 48 N. W. 604.....	69
v. Brown, 125 Iowa, 218, 67 L. R.
A. 629, 101 N. W. 81.....	960
v. Brown, 174 Mass. 197, 75 Am. St.
Rep. 303, 54 N. E. 532.....	869
v. Brown, 33 N. J. Eq. 650.....	397
v. Caldwell, 10 Serg. & R. 114, 13
Am. Dec. 660.....	739, 740
v. Hartford Ins. Co. 5 R. I. 308.....	927
v. Jacobs' Pharmacy Co. 115 Ga.
429, 57 L. R. A. 547, 90 Am. St.
Rep. 126, 41 S. E. 553.....	93
	97
v. Jones, 125 Ind. 375, 21 Am. St.
Rep. 227, 25 N. E. 452.....	873
v. Merrimack River Sav. Bank, 67
N. H. 549, 68 Am. St. Rep.
700, 39 Atl. 336.....	337, 339
v. Valles, 16 Colo. 462, 14 L. R. A.
120, 27 Pac. 945.....	914
v. Volkening, 64 N. Y. 80.....	741
v. Whipple, 58 N. H. 229.....	631
v. White, 202 Pa. 297, 58 L. R. A.
321, 51 Atl. 962.....	492
v. Winona & S. W. R. Co. 53 Minn.
259, 39 Am. St. Rep. 603, 55
N. W. 123.....	625, 628
v. Witter, 10 Ohio, 142.....	763
v. Worden, 39 Wis. 432.....	832
Browning v. Merritt, 61 Ind. 425.....	873
Bruffett v. Great Western R. Co. 25 Ill.
353.....	250
49 L. R. A.

C

Cadwalader v. Howell, 18 N. J. L. 138..	400
Cagle v. Lane, 49 Ark. 465, 5 S. W. 790..	244
Cain v. McGuire, 13 B. Mon. 340.....	828
Caldwell v. Bowen, 80 Mich. 382, 45 N.
W. 185.....	478
v. State, 12 Tex. App. 302.....	210
v. West, 21 N. J. L. 411.....	289
Caledonian Ins. Co. v. Cooke, 101 Ky. 412,
41 S. W. 279.....	268
Callahan v. Houston, 78 Tex. 494, 14 S.
W. 1027.....	366
Calve's Case, 8 Coke, 32a, 33b.....	649
	654, 658,
	661
Camden v. Werninger, 7 W. Va. 528.....	160
Camp v. Sturdevant, 16 Neb. 693, 21 N. W.
449.....	241
Campbell v. Campbell, 118 Iowa, 131, 91
N. W. 894.....	263
v. Cook, 86 Tex. 630, 40 Am. St.
Rep. 878, 26 S. W. 486.....	711
v. Morse, Harp. L. 468.....	512
v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 42 Fed.
485.....	657
Canton Female Academy v. Gilman, 55
Mass. 148.....	263
Card v. Alexander, 48 Conn. 492, 40 Am.
Rep. 187.....	952
Carlin v. Babbitt, 58 N. H. 579.....	896, 904
Carleton v. Jenks, 26 C. C. A. 265, 47 U.
S. App. 734, 80 Fed. 937.....	976
Carlin v. Chappel, 101 Pa. 348, 47 Am.
Rep. 722.....	639, 640

Carpenter v. Franklin, 89 Tenn. 142, 14 S. W. 484	360	Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Flexman, 103 Ill. 548, 42 Am. Rep. 33. 647, 657, 662	662
v. Stevens, 12 Wend. 589	132	v. Iain (Ind. App.) 72 N. E. 539	874
Carr v. Porter, 1 McCord, Eq. 60	289	Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Morehouse, 112 Wis. 1, 56 L. R. A. 240, 88 Am. St. Rep. 918, 87 N. W. 849	863
Carrington v. Com. 78 Ky. 83	274	Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Avery, 109 Ill. 314	700
Carry's Appeal, 75 Pa. 201	945	v. Richardson County (Neb.) 100 N. W. 950	460
Carson v. Barnes, 1 Ala. 93	100	v. Richardson County, 61 Neb. 519, 85 N. W. 532	456
v. Browder, 2 Lea, 701	828	Chicago City R. Co. v. Lewis, 5 Ill. App. 242	192
v. Prater, 6 Coldw. 565	739	v. Young, 62 Ill. 238	305
Carter, Re, 141 Cal. 319, 74 Pac. 997	500	Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Bell, 1 Kan. App. 71, 41 Pac. 209	248
v. Dale, 3 Lea, 710, 31 Am. Rep. 660	379, 381	Chicago Terminal Transfer Co. v. Walton, (Ind.) 72 N. E. 646	874
Cartwright v. Smith, 104 Tenn. 689, 58 S. W. 331	738	Childerston v. Hammon, 9 Serg. & R. 68	100
Case v. Johnson, 91 Ind. 477	885	Chinn v. State, 47 Ohio St. 575, 11 L. R. A. 630, 26 N. E. 986	175
Casaday v. Lindstrom, 44 Or. 309, 75 Pac. 222	482	Choen v. State, 85 Ind. 209	179, 180
Cason v. Ottumwa, 102 Iowa, 99, 71 N. W. 192	620	Christie Grain & Stock Co. v. Board of Trade, 61 C. C. A. 11, 125 Fed. 161	65
Cass v. Dillon, 2 Ohio St. 907	716	Christensen v. Eno, 106 N. Y. 97, 60 Am. Rep. 429, 12 N. E. 648	81
Cassaday v. American Ins. Co. 72 Ind. 95	885	Christianson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 67 Minn. 94, 69 N. W. 640	892
Cassiday v. Young, 4 B. Mon. 265, 39 Am. Dec. 505	512	Cincinnati v. Fieischer, 63 Ohio St. 229, 58 N. E. 568	87
Cattell v. Simons, 5 Beav. 396	313	Cincinnati Street R. Co. v. Whitcomb, 14 C. C. A. 183, 31 U. S. App. 374, 66 Fed. 915	305
C. Aultman & Co. v. Torrey, 55 Minn. 492, 57 N. W. 211	242	City Bank v. Bruce, 17 N. Y. 519	972
Caupfield v. Cook, 92 Mich. 626, 52 N. W. 1031	914	Clancy v. Barker, 69 L. R. A. 653, 66 C. C. A. 469, 131 Fed. 161	648
Cavaness v. Ross, 33 Ark. 572	826	Clark v. Dew, 1 Russ. & M. 103	313
Central Bridge Corp. v. Lowell, 4 Gray, 474	728	v. Drake, 3 Pinney (Wis.) 228	866
Central Loan & T. Co. v. Campbell Com. mission Co. 173 U. S. 84, 43 L. ed. 623, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 346	816	v. Glidden, 80 Vt. 702, 15 Atl. 358	570
Central Park, Re, 50 N. Y. 493	754	v. Ikenes, 20 N. J. L. 299	400
Central R. Co. v. Keegan, 160 U. S. 259, 40 L. ed. 418, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269	754	Clarke v. Hardgrove, 7 Gratt. 399	237
v. New Jersey West Line R. Co. 32 N. J. Eq. 67	717	Clayton v. Clark, 74 Miss. 499, 37 L. R. A. 771, 60 Am. St. Rep. 521, 21 So. 565, 22 So. 189	825
v. Sheftall, 118 Ga. 865, 45 S. E. 687	498	Cleghorn v. Thompson, 62 Kan. 727, 54 L. R. A. 402, 64 Pac. 605	248
Central Trust Co. v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 26 Fed. 12	711	Clement v. Bank of Rutland, 61 Vt. 298, 4 L. R. A. 425, 17 Atl. 717	762
Chamberlain v. Chandler, 3 Mason, 245, Fed. Cas. No. 2,575	647	v. National Bank, See CLEMENT v. BANK OF RUTLAND	743
Chambers v. Payne, 59 N. C. (6 Jones Eq.) 276	665	v. Wright, 40 Pa. 250	743
v. St. Louis, 29 Mo. 543	753	Cleveland, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Miller, 149 Ind. 490, 40 N. E. 445	612
Chandler v. Coe, 54 N. H. 561	630	Clift v. Clift, 72 Tex. 144, 10 S. W. 338	992
Channon v. Sanford Co. 70 Conn. 573, 41 L. R. A. 200, 66 Am. St. Rep. 133, 40 Atl. 462	700	Clough v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 7 Exch. 26	805
Chapman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 88 Ga. 763, 17 L. R. A. 430, 30 Am. St. Rep. 183, 15 S. E. 901	109	Cloyd v. Trotter, 118 Ill. 391, 9 N. E. 507	675
Charlton Plov Co. v. Davidson, 16 Neb. 374, 20 N. W. 256	240	Coal Creek Min. Co. v. Davis, 90 Tenn. 711, 18 S. W. 387	747
Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. v. Gibbs, 142 U. S. 386, 35 L. ed. 1051, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255	880	Coape v. Arnold, 31 Eng. L. & Eq. 133	966
Charlton v. Miller, 27 Ohio St. 298, 22 Am. Rep. 307	944	Contes v. Chapman, 195 Pa. 109, 45 Atl. 676	802
Charnley v. Winstanley, 5 East, 266	132	Cobb v. Davenport, 32 N. J. L. 369, 33 N. J. L. 223, 97 Am. Dec. 718	769
Charouleau v. Shields (Ariz.) 76 Pac. 821	576	Coffee v. Ruffin, 4 Coldw. 516	763
Chase v. Kaynor, 78 Iowa, 449, 43 N. W. 269	970	Coffey v. Sullivan, 63 N. J. Eq. 302, 49 Atl. 528	394
Chatterton v. Thomas, 36 L. J. Ch. N. S. 592	313	Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 5 L. ed. 25	658
Chattanooga v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 7 Lea, 501	456	Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 112, 33 L. ed. 114, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 289	274
Chattanooga Electric R. Co. v. Lawson, 101 Tenn. 408, 47 S. W. 489	746	Coleman v. Chadwick, 80 Pa. 81, 21 Am. Rep. 93	630
Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Hennessey, 38 C. C. A. 307, 314n, 96 Fed. 713	760	Coleman Case, See PEOPLE EX REL. DE-REEN v. COLEMAN
Chesapeake & P. Teleph. Co. v. Mackenzie, 74 Md. 30, 28 Am. St. Rep. 219, 21 Atl. 690	635	Coles v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. 86 Ga. 251, 12 S. E. 749	121
Chesman v. Cummings, 142 Mass. 65, 7 N. E. 13	790	Collier v. Yearwood, 5 Baxt. 581	743
Chester Glass Co. v. Dewey, 16 Mass. 94, 8 Am. Dec. 128	973	Collignon, Re, 4 Am. Bank. Rep. 250	721
Chicago v. Banker, 112 Ill. App. 94	349	Collins v. State, 46 Neb. 37, 64 N. W. 432	648
v. Collins, 175 Ill. 445, 49 L. R. A. 408, 67 Am. St. Rep. 224, 51 N. E. 907	349	v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. 80 Mich. 390, 45 N. W. 178	984
v. Robbins, 2 Black, 418, 17 L. ed. 298	289	Columbus v. Jacques, 30 Ga. 506	567
Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Dillon, 123 Ill. 570, 5 Am. St. Rep. 559, 15 N. E. 181	664	Columbus & I. C. R. Co. v. Arnold, 31 Ind. 174, 99 Am. Dec. 615	168
v. Maroney, 170 Ill. 520, 62 Am. St. Rep. 396, 48 N. E. 933	700	Columbus Southern R. Co. v. Wright, 151 U. S. 470, 38 L. ed. 238, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 396	459
69 L. R. A.		Colvard v. Black, 110 Ga. 643, 36 S. E. 80	116

Compass, Re. 107 Cal. 1, 28 L. R. A. 414, 40 Pac. 15.....	951	Craker v. Chicago, & N. W. R. Co. 36 Wis. 657, 17 Am. Rep. 504.....	661
Comben v. Belleville Stone Co. 59 N. J. L. 228, 36 Atl. 473.....	938	Crenshaw v. Smith, 5 Munf. 415.....	237
Commercial Bulletin Co., Re. 2 Woods, 220, Fed. Cas. No. 3,080.....	721	Crater v. Binninger, 33 N. J. L. 513, 97 Am. Dec. 737.....	412, 413
Commercial Nat. Bank v. Brill, 37 Neb. 626, 56 N. W. 382.....	648	Crawford v. Bynum, 7 Yerg. 381.....	739
Com. v. Charlottesville Perpetual Bldg. & L. Co. 90 Va. 790, 44 Am. St. Rep. 950, 20 S. E. 364.....	81	v. Linn County, 11 Or. 482, 5 Pac. 738.....	443, 444, 445
v. Dascom, 111 Mass. 404.....	275	v. Taylor, 27 Ohio C. C. 245.....	815
v. Davidson, 91 Ky. 162, 15 S. W. 53.....	273	Crawfordsville & S. W. Turnp. Co. v. Fletcher, 104 Ind. 97, 2 N. E. 243.....	879, 883
v. Flagg, 135 Mass. 545.....	181	Criner v. Pike, 2 Head. 398.....	739
v. Ford, 130 Mass. 64, 39 Am. Rep. 428.....	478	Crisswell's Appeal, 41 Pa. 299.....	965
v. Harrington, 3 Pick. 26.....	181	Cronin v. Gore, 38 Mich. 381.....	908
v. Interstate Consol. Street. R. Co. 187 Mass. 436, 73 N. E. 530.....	818	Cronkhite v. Cronkhite, 94 N. Y. 323.....	571
v. Jones, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 867, 82 S. W. 643.....	273	Crosdale v. Lanigan, 129 N. Y. 604, 26 Am. St. Rep. 551, 29 N. E. 824.....	571
v. Lane, 113 Mass. 458, 18 Am. Rep. 509.....	495	Cross v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 69 Mich. 363, 13 Am. St. Rep. 399, 37 N. W. 361.....	984
v. McGill, Addison (Pa.) 21.....	181	v. Noble, 67 Pa. 74.....	237, 238
v. Packard, 185 Mass. 64, 69 N. E. 1067.....	821	Crow v. State, 6 Tex. 334.....	206
v. Parker, 108 Ky. 673, 57 S. W. 484.....	275	Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 34 L. ed. 620, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 13.....	819
v. Perry, 139 Mass. 198, 29 N. E. 656.....	821	Cumber v. Wane, 1 Strange. 426.....	825
v. Power, 7 Met. 601, 41 Am. Dec. 465.....	660	Cunningham v. Mahan, 112 Mass. 58.....	914
v. Ruggles, 6 Allen, 588.....	566	Curran v. Olson, 88 Minn. 307, 60 L. R. A. 733, 97 Am. St. Rep. 517, 92 N. W. 1124.....	650
v. Temple, 14 Gray, 89.....	305	Currier v. Elliot, 141 Ind. 394, 39 N. E. 554.....	882
Com. ex rel. Springfield v. Highway Comrs. 6 Pick. 501.....	316	Curtis, Re. 109 La. 171, 9 Am. Bankr. Rep. 286, 94 Am. St. Rep. 445, 33 So. 125.....	721, 722
Computing Scale Co. v. Churchill, 109 Wis. 303, 85 N. W. 337.....	237	v. Dinneen, 4 Dak. 245, 30 N. W. 148.....	649, 652, 653, 659, 662
Condit v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 54 N. Y. 500.....	511	v. Leasia, 78 Mich. 480, 44 N. W. 500.....	903, 905, 909
Conklin v. Parsons, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 140.....	903	v. Woodward, 58 Wis. 499, 46 Am. Rep. 647, 17 N. W. 328.....	782
Conner v. Henderson, 13 Mass. 319, 8 Am. Dec. 103.....	763	Cushing v. Boston, 124 Mass. 434.....	87
v. Smith, 88 Ala. 300, 7 So. 150.....	242	v. The John Fraser, 21 How. 184, 16 L. ed. 108.....	299
Consolidated Traction Co. v. Scott, 58 N. J. L. 682, 33 L. R. A. 122, 55 Am. St. Rep. 629, 34 Atl. 1094.....	304	Cutler v. Pope, 13 Me. 377.....	828
Continental Ins. Co. v. Ruckman, 127 Ill. 364, 11 Am. St. Rep. 121, 20 N. E. 77.....	282
Continental Trust Co. v. Toledo, St. L. & K. C. R. Co. 72 Fed. 92.....	709	Dalbeattie S. S. Co. v. Card, 59 Fed. 159.....	157
Conway, Re. 124 N. Y. 455, 11 L. R. A. 796, 26 N. E. 1028.....	427	Dale v. Shively, 8 Kan. 276.....	762
Cook v. Stearns, 11 Mass. 533.....	570	Daly v. Morgan, 69 Md. 467, 1 L. R. A. 757, 16 Atl. 287.....	917, 920
v. Whiting, 16 Ill. 480.....	904	Daniel v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 36 W. Va. 397, 16 L. R. A. 383, 32 Am. St. Rep. 870, 15 S. E. 162.....	748
Cook County v. Industrial School for Girls, 8 Am. St. Rep. 386n, 125 Ill. 540, 1 L. R. A. 437, 18 N. E. 183.....	597	v. Weaver, 5 Lea. 393.....	897
Cooley v. Cook, 125 Mass. 406.....	914	v. Whartenby, 17 Wall. 639, 21 L. ed. 661.....	962
v. Port Wardens, 12 How. 299, 13 L. ed. 996.....	712	Daniels v. Barney, 22 Ind. 207.....	885
Cooldge v. Brigham, 1 Met. 547.....	763	Daniel v. Hart, 118 Mass. 543.....	890
Cooper v. Portner Brewing Co. 112 Ga. 894, 38 S. E. 91.....	103	Dankel v. Hunter, 61 Pa. 382, 100 Am. Dec. 651.....	238
v. Watson, 73 Ala. 252.....	739, 745	Darling v. Butler, 10 L. R. A. 469, 45 Fed. 332.....	580
Copeland v. Draper, 157 Mass. 558, 19 L. R. A. 283, 34 Am. St. Rep. 314, 32 N. E. 944.....	563	Darrow v. Scullin, 10 Kan. 59.....	252
Corbett v. Hughes, 75 Iowa, 282, 39 N. W. 500.....	99	Dartmouth College Case, 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629.....	729
Corbin v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 64 Minn. 185, 66 N. W. 271.....	892	Davenport v. Buchanan, 6 S. D. 376, 61 N. W. 47.....	414
Core v. Faupel, 24 W. Va. 245.....	741	Davidson v. New Orleans, 98 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616.....	814, 815
Corliss v. E. W. Walker Co. 31 L. R. A. 283, 57 Fed. 434, 64 Fed. 280.....	110, 114	v. Phillips, 9 Yerg. 95, 30 Am. Dec. 393.....	745
Croft v. Bennett, 32 Minn. 371, 20 N. W. 360.....	976	Davis v. Davies, L. R. 36 Ch. Div. 364.....	267
v. Provident Inst. for Savings, 64 N. J. L. 653, 46 Atl. 617.....	344	v. Mann, 10 Mees. & W. 546.....	191
Costello v. Wyoming, 49 Ohio St. 202, 30 N. E. 613.....	715	Davis v. Bank of Fulton, 31 Ga. 69.....	98
Cotting v. Godard. See COTTING v. KANSAS CITY STOCK YARDS CO. v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. 183 U. S. 79, 46 L. ed. 92, 104 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30.....	311	v. Bean, 114 Mass. 358.....	237
Coulter v. Clark, 66 N. E. 739.....	414	v. Belford, 70 Mich. 120, 37 N. W. 919.....	902
County Court v. Griswold, 58 Mo. 175.....	754	v. Davis, 98 Me. 135, 56 Atl. 588.....	263
Crofts v. Acworth L. R. & Eq. Cas. 558.....	384	v. Easley, 13 Ill. 192.....	739
Croft v. People, 82 Ill. 191.....	182	v. Field, 56 Vt. 426.....	478
Croft v. Downie, 14 Fla. 544.....	237, 239	v. Fogle, 124 Ind. 41, 7 L. R. A. 485, 23 N. E. 800.....	952
		v. Garrett, 6 Bing. 716.....	512
		v. Milburn, 3 Iowa, 163.....	239
		v. St. Vincent's Inst. for Insane, 9 C. C. A. 501, 15 U. S. App. 432, 61 Fed. 277.....	832
		v. Sawyer, 133 Mass. 289, 43 Am. Rep. 519.....	821

Davis v. Wakelee, 156 U. S. 680, 39 L. ed. 578, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 555.	240	Donahoe v. Richards, 38 Me. 379, 61 Am. Dec. 256.	503
v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 107 Ky. 527, 92 Am. St. Rep. 371, 54 S. W. 849.	268	Donald v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 93 Iowa, 284, 33 L. R. A. 492, 61 N. W. 971.	883
v. Whidden, 117 Cal. 623, 49 Pac. 766.	559	Donlan v. Provident Inst. for Savings, 127 Mass. 183, 34 Am. Rep. 358.	336
Davison v. Mure, 3 Dougl. 28.	132		344
Davison's Appeal, 95 Pa. 394.	947	Donnally v. Hearndon, 41 W. Va. 519, 23 S. E. 946.	259
Day v. Boston, & M. R. Co. 97 Me. 528, 55 Atl. 420.	303	Donnelly v. Eastes, 94 Wis. 390, 69 N. W. 157.	852
Deane v. Caldwell, 127 Mass. 242.	721	D'Ooge v. Leeds, 176 Mass. 558, 57 N. E. 1025.	79
Dearborn v. Northwestern Sav. Bank, 42 Ohio St. 617, 51 Am. Rep. 851.	418	Doremus v. Hennessey, 176 Ill. 608, 43 L. R. A. 797, 68 Am. St. Rep. 203, 52 N. E. 924, 54 N. E. 524.	96
Decker v. McSorley, 116 Wis. 643, 93 N. W. 808.	610	Dorr v. Fisher, 1 Cush. 271.	237
Delahay v. Clement, 4 Ill. 201.	499	Dougherty v. Horseheads, 159 N. Y. 154, 53 N. E. 799.	87
Delaplaine v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 42 Wis. 214, 24 Am. Rep. 386.	932	Boughty v. Penobscot Log Driving Co. 76 Me. 143.	172
Delaware County v. McDonald, 46 Iowa, 170.	832	Douling v. Hickmon, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 170	744
Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Trautwein, 52 N. J. L. 169, 7 L. R. A. 435, 19 Am. St. Rep. 442, 19 Atl. 178.	984	Douthitt v. Farrell, 60 Kan. 195, 56 Pac. 252, 253.	254
Deloraine v. Browne, 3 Bro. Ch. 633.	402	Douthitt Case. See DOUTHITT v. FARRELL.
Deming v. Foster, 42 N. H. 165.	976	Downing v. Elliott, 182 Mass. 28, 64 N. E. 201.	821
v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 48 N. H. 455, 2 Am. Rep. 267.	512	Drake v. Baker, 34 N. J. L. 358.	766
v. Williams, 26 Conn. 231, 68 Am. Dec. 386.	365	v. Lowell, 13 Met. 292.	620
De Mott v. Hagerman, 8 Cow. 220, 18 Am. Dec. 443.	739	Driscoll v. West End Street R. Co. 159 Mass. 145, 34 N. E. 172.	302
Den ex dem. Creswick v. Hobson, 2 W. Bl. 695.	966		303, 305, 308
Wooden v. Shotwell, 23 N. J. L. 465.	508	Dubois v. Kingston, 102 N. Y. 219, 55 Am. Rep. 804, 6 N. E. 273.	87
Denman v. Johnston, 85 Mich. 387, 48 N. W. 565.	613	Dunkley v. Van Buren, 3 Johns. Ch. 330.	498
De Pew v. Robinson, 95 Ind. 109.	886	Dunn v. West, 5 B. Mon. 377.	100
Derwort v. Loomer, 21 Conn. 245.	563	Dunson v. New York C. R. Co. 3 Lans. 265.	511
De Sollar v. Hanscomb, 158 U. S. 221, 39 L. ed. 959, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1012.	486	Dupre v. Boulard, 10 La. Ann. 411.	494
		Durham v. State, 89 Tenn. 723, 18 S. W. 74.	293
Detroit v. Board of Assessors, 91 Mich. 78, 16 L. R. A. 59, 51 N. W. 787.	445	Dushane v. Benedict, 120 U. S. 630, 30 L. ed. 810, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 696.	976
v. Lothrop Estate Co. 11 Det. L. N. 6, 99 N. W. 0.	436	Dwinnelle v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 120 N. Y. 122, 8 L. R. A. 224, 17 Am. St. Rep. 611, 24 N. E. 319.	647, 656, 661
v. Osborne, 135 U. S. 492, 34 L. ed. 260, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1012.	290
v. Rentz. See DETROIT v. BOARD OF ASSESSORS.
Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Detroit, 125 Mich. 673, 84 Am. St. Rep. 589, 85 N. W. 96, 86 N. W. 809.	440, 457	Eads v. Brazelton, 22 Ark. 499, 79 Am. Dec. 88.	314
Detroit Transp. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 91 Mich. 382, 51 N. W. 978.	439	Earle v. Com. 180 Mass. 579, 57 L. R. A. 292, 91 Am. St. Rep. 326, 93 N. E. 10.	601
DeVaughn v. Hutchinson, 165 U. S. 566, 41 L. ed. 827, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 959.	966	Earp's Appeal, 28 Pa. 368.	83
Dewald v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. 44 Kan. 586, 24 Pac. 1101.	249	East Tennessee & W. N. C. R. Co. v. Collins, 85 Tenn. 227, 1 S. W. 883.	746
Dexter v. Arnold, 5 Mason, 310, Fed. Cas. No. 3,856.	398	East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. De Armond, 86 Tenn. 73, 6 Am. St. Rep. 816, 6 S. W. 600.	747
Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 578, 25 L. ed. 618.	582	v. Watson, 94 Ala. 634, 10 So. 228.	984
Dickinson v. Todd, 172 Mass. 184, 51 N. E. 976.	869	v. Wright, 100 Tenn. 56, 42 S. W. 1065.	747
Dickson v. Waldron, 135 Ind. 507, 24 L. R. A. 483, 41 Am. St. Rep. 440, 34 N. E. 510, 35 N. E. 1.	647	Eaton v. Southby, Willes, 131.	739
	650, 657, 660	Eaves v. People's Sav. Bank, 27 Conn. 229, 71 Am. Dec. 59.	336
Diezl v. G. H. Hammond Co. 156 Ind. 583, 60 N. E. 353.	174	Eckford v. Evans, 56 Miss. 18.	263
Dingley v. Boston, 100 Mass. 544.	316	Eddy v. Lafayette, 163 U. S. 456, 41 L. ed. 225, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1082.	714
Disbrow v. Disbrow, 46 App. Div. 115, 61 N. Y. Supp. 614, Affirmed in 167 N. Y. 606, 60 N. E. 1110.	923	Edminson v. Baxter, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 112, 9 Am. Dec. 751.	230
Ditberner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 47 Wis. 138, 2 N. W. 69.	881	Eels v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 143 N. Y. 132, 25 L. R. A. 640, 38 N. E. 202.	637
Division of Howard County, Re, 15 Kan. 194.	225	Elhrisman v. East Harrisburg City Pass. R. Co. 150 Pa. 180, 17 L. R. A. 448, 24 Atl. 596.	192
Dixon's Appeal, 55 Pa. 424.	943	Elkins v. Boston & M. R. Co. 19 N. H. 337, 51 Am. Dec. 184.	630
Doan v. Logan County, 3 Idaho, 38, 26 Pac. 167.	227	Elliott v. Cumberland Coal & Coke Co. 109 Tenn. 745, 71 S. W. 749.	741
Doans v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 468, 37 S. W. 751.	206	v. Felton, 56 C. C. A. 75, 119 Fed. 270.	289
Dodge, Ex parte, 7 Cow. 147.	914	v. Thompson, 4 Humph. 99, 40 Am. Dec. 630.	239
Doe ex dem. Thong v. Bedford, 4 Maule & S. 363.	969	Ellis v. Andrews, 56 N. Y. 83, 15 Am. Rep. 379.	414
Cock v. Cooper, 1 Barn. 229.	966	v. Mills, 99 Ga. 490, 27 S. E. 740.	89
Jones v. Davies, 4 East. & Ad. 43.	966	Ells, Re, 2 N. B. N. Rep. 360, 98 Fed. 967.	721, 722
Hitchings v. Lewis, 1 Burr. 614.	869	Ellwood v. Wolcott, 32 Kan. 526, 4 Pac. 1056.	252
Church v. Perkins, 3 T. R. 749.	478
69 L. R. A.

Elwood v. Bullock, 13 L. J. O. R. N. S. 330	567
Engel v. Fitch, L. R. 3 Q. R. 315	766, 767
Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. McElroy, 28 C. C. A. 365, 49 U. S. App. 548, 83 Fed. 631	240
Equitable Loan & Security Co. v. Waring, 117 Ga. 599, 62 L. R. A. 93, 97 Am. St. Rep. 177, 44 S. E. 320	508
Erickson v. Barber Bros. 83 Iowa, 367, 49 N. W. 838	563
Evansville Street R. Co. v. Gentry, 147 Ind. 408, 37 L. R. A. 378, 62 Am. St. Rep. 423, 44 N. E. 311	305
Everett v. Los Angeles Consol. Electric R. Co. 115 Cal. 105, 34 L. R. A. 350, 46 Pac. 889, 43 Pac. 207	192
Evers v. Philadelphia Traction Co. 176 Pa. 376, 53 Am. St. Rep. 674, 35 Atl. 140	305
Eversmann v. Schmitt, 53 Ohio St. 174, 29 L. R. A. 184, 53 Am. St. Rep. 632, 41 N. E. 139	419
Ewing v. Coddling, 5 Blackf. 433	157

F

Faby v. North, 19 Barb. 341	132
Fairbanks v. Haentzsch, 73 Ill. 236	913
Fairbanks v. Bangor, O. & O. R. Co. 95 Me. 78, 49 Atl. 421	303
Fairbanks, M. & Co. v. Bankett, 98 Mo. App. 53, 71 S. W. 1113	976
Fairchild v. McMahon, 139 N. Y. 290, 36 Am. St. Rep. 701, 34 N. E. 779	414
Falk, Ex parte, 42 Ohio St. 638	715, 716
Fargo Gas & Coke Co. v. Fargo Gas & Electric Co. 4 N. D. 219, 37 L. R. A. 593, 59 N. W. 1066	411, 412, 413, 414
Farley v. Harris, 186 Pa. 440, 40 Atl. 798	666
Farmers' Bank v. Groves, 12 How. 51, 13 L. ed. 889	763
Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Denver, L. & G. R. Co. 60 C. C. A. 588, 126 Fed. 46	242
Farrell v. State, 45 Ind. 371	843
Farrow v. Wilson, L. R. 4 C. P. 744	132
Favor v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 114 Mass. 350, 19 Am. Rep. 364	663, 666
F. B. Hauck Clothing Co. v. Sharpe, 83 Mo. App. 385	872
Fenton v. Clark, 11 Vt. 557	132
Ferguson v. Harlem Sav. Bank, 43 Misc. 10, 96 N. Y. Supp. 825	337
Fidelity Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Armstrong, 35 Fed. 567	721
Feld v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Assn. 117 Iowa, 195, 90 N. W. 717	971, 973
Firemen's Charitable Assn. v. Ross, 9 C. C. A. 70, 13 U. S. App. 643, 60 Fed. 456	200
First Nat. Bank v. How, 65 Minn. 187, 67 N. W. 994	69
v. Mitchell, 34 C. C. A. 542, 92 Fed. 565	872
v. Peck, 8 Kan. 663	251, 252, 253
v. Woodman, 93 Iowa, 671, 57 Am. St. Rep. 287, 62 N. W. 28	263
First Soc. of M. E. Church v. Brownell, 5 Ill. 464	258
Fisher v. Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. 22 Or. 535, 16 L. R. A. 519, 30 Pac. 425	759, 826
Fitch v. Sutton, 5 East. 230	826
Fitzgerald v. Chapman, 33 L. T. N. S. 587	944
Fitzhugh v. Croghan, 2 J. J. Marsh. 429, 19 Am. Dec. 139	762
Flagg v. Worcester, 13 Gray. 901	629
Flanders v. McVickar, 7 Wis. 372	614
Fleming v. Way, 48 C. C. A. 748, 109 Fed. 932	290
Flint v. Steadman, 36 Vt. 210	762
Flory v. Becker, 2 Pa. St. 470, 45 Am. Dec. 610	946
Flureau v. Thornhill, 2 W. R. 1078, 766	767
Flynn v. Campbell, 160 Mass. 128, 35 N. E. 453	173
Foakes v. Freer, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 605	824
Fogg v. Middlesex Mut. F. Ins. Co. 10 C.ush. 337	927
60 L. R. A.

Folsom v. Apple River Log-Driving Co. 41 Wis. 602	478
Forbes v. Cooper, 88 Ky. 285, 11 S. W. 24	239
Ford v. Fitchburg R. Co. 110 Mass. 240, 14 Am. Rep. 598	938
Fordeyce v. Nelson, 91 Ind. 447	873
Ft. Payne Rolling Mill v. Hill, 174 Mass. 224, 54 N. E. 532	142
Ft. Smith v. Ayers, 43 Ark. 82	349
Foster v. Davies, 4 DeG. F. & J. 130, 922	923
v. Park Comrs. 133 Mass. 321	754
Foss v. Harbottle, 2 Hare, 481	148
Foust v. Territory, 8 Okla. 541, 58 Pac. 728	741
Frankford & P. Pass. R. Co. v. Philadelphia, 58 Pa. 119, 98 Am. Dec. 242	348
Franklin Coal Co. v. McMillan, 49 Md. 540, 33 Am. Rep. 280	991
Franklin Sav. Inst. v. Central Mut. F. Ins. Co. 119 Mass. 240, 925	927
Fraser v. Red River Lumber Co. 45 Minn. 235, 47 N. W. 785	938
Frazer v. Hightower, 12 Helsk. 94	379
v. Peoria County, 74 Ill. 282	380, 763
Fredenburg v. Lyon Lake M. E. Church, 37 Mich. 476	908
Frederick L. Grant Shoe Co., Re, 66 C. C. A. 78, 130 Fed. 881	720, 723
Freeman v. Illinois C. R. Co. 107 Tenn. 340, 64 S. W. 1	747
Fremont Carriage Mfg. Co. v. Thomsen, 65 Neb. 370, 91 N. W. 378	973
French v. Taunton Branch R. Co. 116 Mass. 537	304
Freund, Re, 1 Am. Bankr. Rep. 31	782
Frick v. White, 57 N. Y. 103	237
Friend v. Burleigh, 53 Neb. 677, 74 N. W. 50	648
Friendly v. Lee, 20 Or. 202, 25 Pac. 396	478
Frost v. Pfeiffer, 26 Colo. 338, 58 Pac. 147	232
Fry v. Dubuque & S. W. R. Co. 45 Iowa, 418	985
Fuller v. Berger, 65 L. R. A. 381, 56 C. C. A. 588, 120 Fed. 274	65
v. Brown, 11 Met. 440	132
v. Steiglitz, 27 Ohio St. 355, 22 Am. Rep. 312	237
Funk v. St. Paul City R. Co. 61 Minn. 435, 29 L. R. A. 208, 52 Am. St. Rep. 608, 63 N. W. 1099	890
Furlow v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 12, 51 S. W. 938	210

G

Gaines v. Green Pond Iron Min. Co. 32 N. J. Eq. 86	991
Galbraith v. Lunsford, 87 Tenn. 80, 1 L. R. A. 522, 9 S. W. 365	588
Gale Sulky Harrow Co. v. Laughlin, 31 Neb. 103, 47 N. W. 638	648
Gallup v. Tracy, 25 Conn. 10	932
Garland v. Pamplin, 32 Gratt. 314	364
Garratt v. Niblock, 1 Russ. & M. 629	947
Garth v. Caldwell, 72 Mo. 622	828
Gartrell v. Linn, 79 Ga. 700, 4 S. E. 918	263
Gates v. Buckle, 4 C. C. A. 116, 12 U. S. App. 69, 53 Fed. 901	243
v. Parmlly, 93 Wis. 294, 66 N. W. 253, 67 N. W. 739	852, 854
Gay v. Alter, 102 U. S. 79, 26 L. d. 48	763
v. Fair, 175 Mass. 521, 56 N. E. 708	142
Gayle v. Fattie, 14 Md. 69	240
Geltelsohn v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 17 Misc. 374, 40 N. Y. Supp. 662	339
Gentleman, The Olcott, 115, Fed. Cas. No. 5324	75
Gentry v. Pacific Live Stock Co. (Or.) 77 Pac. 15	482
George v. Howlett, 70 Miss. 2, 35 Am. St. Rep. 626, 12 So. 855	289
George Case See PEOPLE EX REL. LIX-COLN COUNTY v. GEORGE
Georgia Masonic Ins. Co. v. Davis, 63 Ga. 471	270
German Ins. Co. v. Gray, 43 Kan. 497, 8 L. R. A. 70, 19 Am. St. Rep. 150, 23 Pac. 637	282
German Sav. & L. Soc. v. Dormitzer, 192 U. S. 125, 48 L. ed. 373, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 221	400

Harrison v. Henderson, 4 Ga. 198.....	101	Hexter v. United States L. Ins. Co. 91 Ky.	268
v. Middleton, 11 Gratt. 527.....	478	356, 15 S. W. 803.....
Harrison & Mack. Works v. Kelgor, 64 Tex.	251	Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc. v. San Francisco,
89.....	740	139 Cal. 205, 96 Am. St. Rep.
Hart v. Vinsant, 6 Helsk. 616.....	743, 744, 746	100, 72 Pac. 920.....	70
Hartford & S. Ore. Co. v. Miller, 41 Conn.	763	Hichens v. Congreve, 4 Russ. Ch. 562.....	149
113.....		Hicks v. Com. 86 Va. 223, 19 Am. St. Rep.
Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Bourbon County		891, 9 S. E. 1024.....	182
Court, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1850,	268	v. Fredericks, 9 Lea, 491.....	741
72 S. W. 739.....	926	Higgins v. Senior, 8 Mees. & W. 834.....	630
v. Olcott, 97 Ill. 439.....	478	Higginson v. Nahant, 11 Allen, 530.....	810
Harwood v. Mulry, 8 Gray 250.....	40	High v. Berret, 148 Pa. 261, 23 Atl. 1004.....	412
v. Wentworth, 162 U. S. 547, 40	716	Highland Ave. & Belt R. Co. v. Winn, 93
L. ed. 1069, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep.	96	Ala. 306, 9 So. 509.....	612
890.....		High School Dist. No. 137 v. Lancaster
Haskins v. Royster, 70 N. C. 601, 16 Am.	825	County, 60 Neb. 147, 49 L. R.
Rep. 780.....	581	A. 343, 83 Am. St. Rep. 525,
Hastings v. Lovejoy, 140 Mass. 261, 54	926	82 N. W. 380.....	453
Am. Rep. 462, 2 N. E. 776.....		Hilleman v. Bouslaugh, 13 Pa. 344, 53 Am.
v. Vaughn, 5 Cal. 315.....	927	Dec. 474.....	958, 960,
v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 73 N.	396	Hill v. Barclay, 16 Ves. Jr. 402, 18 Ves.	868, 869
Y. 141.....	414	Jr. 56.....	484
Hathaway v. Orient Ins. Co. 134 N. Y.		v. Freeman, 7 Ga. 211.....
409, 17 L. R. A. 514, 32 N.		v. Harriman, 95 Tenn. 305, 32 S.
E. 40.....		W. 202.....	763
Hatton v. Gray, 2 Ch. Cas. 164.....		v. Morgan (Idaho) 76 Pac. 323.....	229
Hauk v. Brownell, 120 Ill. 161, 11 N. E.		v. State, 17 Wis. 675, 86 Am. Dec.
416.....		736.....	478
Hawralt v. Warren, 18 N. J. Eq. 124, 90		v. West End Street R. Co. 158
Am. Dec. 613.....		Mass. 458, 33 N. E. 582.....	307
Hay v. Com. 183 Mass. 294, 67 N. E. 884		Hindman v. Toney, 97 Ky. 413, 30 S. W.
Hayden v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co. 76		1006.....	272
Conn. 355, 56 Atl. 613.....		Hirth v. Graham, 50 Ohio St. 57, 19 L. R.
v. Hoxie, 27 Ill. App. 533.....		A. 721, 40 Am. St. Rep. 641, 33
Haydock v. Haydock, 34 N. J. Eq. 575, 38		N. E. 90.....	828
Am. Rep. 385.....		Hiss v. Bartlett, 3 Gray, 473, 63 Am. Dec.
Haynes v. East Tennessee & G. R. Co. 3		768.....	558
Coldw. 222.....		Hixon v. Lowell, 13 Gray, 61.....	619
Hays, F. & W. Co. Re, 117 Fed. 879, 720,		Hochster v. De La Tour, 2 El. & Bl. 678
Hazard v. Durant, 11 R. I. 195.....		Hodges v. Eddy, 38 Vt. 327.....	804
Hearn v. Boston & M. R. Co. 67 N. H.		v. Standard Wheel Co. 152 Ind.	741
320, 29 Atl. 970.....		680, 52 N. E. 391, 54 N. E. 383
Heaslett v. Spratlin, 54 Ark. 185, 15 S.		v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 133 N. C.
W. 461.....		225, 45 S. E. 572.....	634
Hebard v. Scott, 95 Tenn. 467, 32 S. W.		Hoffman v. Muscatine, 113 Iowa, 332, 85
390.....		N. W. 17.....	629
Heinsfurter, Re, 97 Fed. 198.....		Hofnagle v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 55
Heise v. Heise, 31 Pa. 246.....		N. Y. 608.....	172
Helmetag v. Frank, 61 Ala. 69.....		Holbrook v. Blodget, 5 Vt. 520.....	825
Hematite Min. Co. v. East Tennessee V.		Hollenbeck v. Missouri P. R. Co. 141 Mo.
& G. R. Co. 92 Ga. 268, 18 S.		97, 38 S. W. 723, 41 S. W. 887
E. 24.....		Hollis v. Burgess, 37 Kan. 487, 15 Pac.
Hemenway v. Hemenway, 181 Mass. 406,		536.....	396
63 N. E. 919.....		Holman, Ex parte, 28 Iowa, 88, 4 Am.
Hemmer v. Cooper, 8 Allen, 334.....		Rep. 159.....	962
Hemp v. Garland, 4 Q. B. 519.....		Holmes v. Clisby, 118 Ga. 823, 45 S. E.
Henderson v. Fox, 80 Ga. 479, 6 S. E. 164,		684.....	116
v. State, 137 Ind. 552, 24 L. R. A.		v. Clisby, 121 Ga. 241, 104 Am. St.
460, 38 N. E. 257.....		Rep. 103, 48 S. E. 934.....	116
v. Walker, 55 Ga. 481.....		v. Reynolds, 55 Vt. 39.....	872
Henderson Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Johnson,		v. Slinnicks, 15 N. J. L. 313.....	766
88 Ky. 191, 3 L. R. A. 289,		v. Smythe, 100 Ill. 413.....	422
10 S. W. 787.....		Holt v. People, 23 Colo. 1, 45 Pac. 374.....	475
Hennington v. Georgia, 163 U. S. 299, 41		Holyoke Water-Power Co. v. Lyman, 15
L. ed. 166, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep.		Wall. 500, 21 L. ed. 133.....	935
1086.....		Hooper v. Great Northern R. Co. 80 Minn.
Henry v. Davis, 13 W. Va. 230.....		400, 83 N. W. 440.....	891
v. Tupper, 29 Vt. 358.....		Hoosier Stone Co. v. McCain, 133 Ind. 231, Henshaw v. Bissell, 18 Wall. 271, 21 L.		31 N. E. 956.....	168, 169,
ed. 840.....		Hopkins v. Grazebrook, 6 Barn. & C. 31.....	766
v. Foster, 9 Pick 312.....		767.....	767
Herbert v. Wren, 7 Cranch, 380, 3 L. ed.		Hopper v. Moore, 42 Iowa, 563.....	258
378.....		Horn v. Ludington, 28 Wis. 81.....	614
Hercules Mut. Life Assur. Soc. v. Brinker,		v. Perry, 11 W. Va. 694.....	160
77 N. Y. 435.....		Horne v. Lyeth, 4 Harr. & J. 435.....	959, 960
Herndon v. Harrison, 34 Miss. 486, 69 Am.		Horner v. Philadelphia, 194 Pa. 542, 45
Dec. 399.....		Atl. 330.....	87
Hernsheim Bros. v. Newport News & M.		v. Watson, 79 Pa. 242, 21 Am. Rep.
Valley Co. 18 Ky. L. Rep. 227,		55.....	640
35 S. W. 1115.....		Hornaby v. Eddy, 5 C. C. A. 560, 12 U. S.
Herrick v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 31		App. 404, 56 Fed. 461.....	711
Minn. 11, 47 Am. Rep. 771, 16		Hotchkiss v. National Shoe & Leather
N. W. 413, 32 Minn. 435, 21		Bank, 21 Wall. 354, 22 L. ed.
N. W. 471.....		645.....	245
Herring v. Chesapeake & W. R. Co. 101 Va.		Houghton, Ex parte, 1 Low. Dec. 554, Fed.
778, 45 S. E. 322.....		Cas. No. 6, 725.....	721
Herrrod v. Blackburn, 56 Pa. 103, 94 Am.		v. Huron Copper Min. Co. 57 Mich.
Dec. 49.....		547, 24 N. W. 820.....	753
Herter v. Mullen, 159 N. Y. 34, 44 L. R. A.		Hourigan v. Norwich, 77 Conn. 358, 59
703, 70 Am. St. Rep. 517, 53		Atl. 487.....	931
N. E. 700.....		House Bill No. 1201, Re, 178 Mass. 605,
Heseltan v. Lister, Cooke, C. P. 88.....		54 L. R. A. 430, 60 N. E. 129.....	187
Hess v. Rosenthal, 160 Ill. 621, 43 N. E.		Hovey v. Elliott, 167 U. S. 409, 42 L. ed.
743.....		215, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 841.....	813
Hevenor, Re, 144 N. Y. 271, 39 N. E. 303.		Howard v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 26 Fed.
69 L. R. A.....		837.....	171, 749

Howard v. Fanshawe [1895] 2 Ch. 589, 868, 869	Isaacs v. Price, 2 Dill. 351, Fed. Cas. No. 7,097	501
v. McDonough, 77 N. Y. 592, 478	Isbell v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 27 Conn. 393, 71 Am. Dec. 78, 191
v. Whetstone Twp. 10 Ohio, 365, 832	Island Coal Co. v. Swagerty, 159 Ind. 664, 62 N. E. 1103, 65 N. E. 1026, 168, 170
Howe v. Batchelder, 49 N. H. 204, 828	Ives v. Van Epps, 22 Wend. 155, 238, 238
Howes v. District of Columbia, 2 App. D. C. 188, 86
Howland v. Bradley, 38 N. J. Eq. 288, 396
Hoyle v. Plattsburgh & M. R. Co. 54 N. Y. 315, 13 Am. Rep. 595, 897
Hoyt v. Hudson, 27 Wis. 656, 9 Am. Rep. 473, 629
v. Sprague, 103 U. S. 613, 26 L. ed. 585, 497
Hubbard v. Greeley, 84 Me. 340, 17 L. R. A. 511, 24 Atl. 799, 580, 581
v. Hubbard, 97 Mass. 188, 93 Am. Dec. 75, 860, 861
v. Taunton, 140 Mass. 467, 5 N. E. 157, 819
Hubbell v. Meigs, 50 N. Y. 480, 414
Huddleston v. Askey, 56 Ala. 218, 100
Hugerty v. White, 69 Wis. 317, 34 N. W. 92, 866
Humphries v. Brogden, 1 Eng. L. & Eq. 241, 639, 641
Hungerford v. Redford, 29 Wis. 345, 744, 745 Hunt v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 112 Ind. 69, 13 N. E. 263, 883
v. Standart, 15 Ind. 33, 77 Am. Dec. 79, 873
Hunter v. Bills, 3 Tenn. Cas. 97, 741
v. Burnsville Twp. Co. 56 Ind. 213, 883
v. Davis, 19 Ga. 413, 485, 486
v. Western U. Tele. Co. 135 N. C. 450, 47 S. E. 745, 404, 405
Hunter's Case. See HUNTER v. WESTERN U. TELE. CO.
Huntington v. Knox, 7 Cush. 371, 630
Huntsman v. Hooper, 32 Minn. 163, 20 N. W. 127, 789
Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 28 L. ed. 232, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 111, 460, 473, 183
Hutchinson v. State, 38 Tex. 293, 183
Hyman v. State, 87 Tenn. 109, 1 L. R. A. 497, 9 S. W. 372, 757
I
Ide v. Leiser, 10 Mont. 5, 24 Am. St. Rep. 17, 24 Pac. 695, 396
Illinois C. R. Co. v. Bentz, 108 Tenn. 670, 58 L. R. A. 690, 91 Am. St. Rep. 763, 69 S. W. 317, 747
v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 445, 36 L. ed. 1039, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110, 932
v. Spence, 93 Tenn. 173, 42 Am. St. Rep. 907, 23 S. W. 211, 747 Illinois Commission Co. v. Cleveland Tele. Co. 56 C. C. A. 205, 119 Fed. 301, 59
Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Dailey, 110 Ind. 75, 10 N. E. 631, 887
Indiana Car Co. v. Parker, 100 Ind. 181, 170, 172, 938
Indianapolis v. Huegele, 115 Ind. 581, 18 N. E. 172, 883
Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Johnson, 102 Ind. 352, 26 N. E. 200, 170
Indianapolis, B. & W. R. Co. v. Hartley, 67 Ill. 439, 16 Am. Rep. 624, 636
Indianapolis, C. & L. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 44 Ind. 70, 665
Ingalls v. Bills, 9 Met. 1, 43 Am. Dec. 346, 563
Inland & Seaboard Coasting Co. v. Tolson, 139 U. S. 551, 35 L. ed. 270, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 653, 299
International Bldg. & L. Asso. No. 2 v. Wall, 153 Ind. 554, 55 N. E. 431, 421
Iowa Lumber Co. v. Foster, 49 Iowa, 25, 31 Am. Rep. 140, 971
Iowa Sav. & L. Asso. v. Heldt, 107 Iowa, 297, 43 L. R. A. 689, 70 Am. St. Rep. 197, 77 N. W. 1050, 421
Iowa State Sav. Bank v. Burlington, 98 Iowa, 739, 61 N. W. 851, 81
Irish v. Smith, 8 Serg. & R. 573, 11 Am. Dec. 648, 950
Iron R. Co. v. Lawrence Furnace Co. 49 Ohio St. 102, 30 N. E. 616, 81
60 L. R. A.
J
Jackson v. Staunfield, 137 Ind. 592, 23 L. R. A. 588, 36 N. E. 345, 37 N. E. 14, 97
v. State, 104 Ind. 516, 3 N. E. 863, 502
v. State, 87 Md. 194, 39 Atl. 505, 916
Jackson ex dem. Ireland v. Hull, 10 Johns. 481, 498
Jackson County v. State, 147 Ind. 476, 46 N. E. 908, 879
Jacobus v. Congregation of Children of Israel, 107 Ga. 518, 73 Am. St. Rep. 141, 35 S. E. 853, 111
Jaffray v. Davis, 124 N. Y. 104, 11 L. R. A. 710, 26 N. E. 351, 825
James County v. Hamilton County, 89 Tenn. 237, 14 S. W. 601, 223, 228
James D. Leary, The, 110 Fed. 685, 51 C. C. A. 620, 113 Fed. 1019, 299
Jaques v. Esler, 4 N. J. Eq. 461, 237, 239
Jarecki Mfg. Co. v. McElwaine, 5 Am. Bankr. Rep. 751, 17 Fed. 249, 782
Jebsen v. East & West India Dock Co. L. R. 10 C. L. 300, 157
Jefferson, Re, 2 Am. Bankr. Rem. 206, 93 Fed. 948, 720, 722
Jeffrey v. Owen, 41 N. J. L. 260, 741
Jencks v. Coleman, 2 Sumn. 221, Fed. Cas. No. 7,258, 646, 650, 657, 660
Jenson v. Chicago, St. L. M. & O. R. Co. 86 Wis. 589, 22 L. R. A. 680, 57 N. W. 359, 664
Jesson v. Doe, 2 Bligh. 1, 10 English Ruling Cases, 714, 956, 957, 966
J. I. Case Plow Works v. Niles & S. Co. 90 Wis. 590, 63 N. W. 1013, 976
Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L. 338, 10 Am. Rep. 243, 396
v. Elwood, 53 N. Y. 431, 744
v. Gere, 2 Johns. Ch. 546, 237, 239
v. Jackson, 27 Miss. 498, 61 Am. Dec. 522, 703
v. Mahaffey, 43 Pa. 808, 82 Am. Dec. 568, 903, 904, 905, 909
v. Meyers, 4 C. C. A. 399, 12 U. S. App. 220, 54 Fed. 417, 914
v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 163 Pa. 127, 20 Atl. 854, 883
v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 43 Minn. 222, 8 L. R. A. 419, 45 N. W. 156, 889
v. Skillman, 29 Minn. 95, 43 Am. Rep. 192, 12 N. W. 149, 570, 571
v. Southern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 79 Ky. 406, 266
v. State, 59 N. J. L. 535, 38 L. R. A. 373, 37 Atl. 949, 39 Atl. 646, 771
v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. Rep. 625, 48 S. W. 70, 197
Johnson County v. Thayer, 94 U. S. 631, 24 L. ed. 133, 972
Johnston v. Farmers' F. Ins. Co. 106 Mich. 96, 64 N. W. 5, 907
Johnstone v. Milling, L. R. 16 Q. B. Div. 460, 804
Jones v. Conde, 6 Johns. Ch. 77, 498
v. Gilbreath, 28 N. C. (6 Ired. L.) 338, 99
v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 91 Minn. 229, 103 Am. St. Rep. 507, 97 N. W. 893, 512
v. Morgan, 1 Bro. Ch. 220, 957
v. Robbins, 8 Gray, 329, 473
v. Stanley, 76 N. C. 355, 96
v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 492, 30 S. W. 1059, 31 S. W. 664, 203
v. Wagner, 66 Pa. 429, 5 Am. Rep. 385, 642
Jordan v. Adams, 9 C. B. N. S. 483, 956
Jungblum v. Minneapolis, N. Y. & S. W. R. Co. 70 Minn. 153, 571
Justice v. Pennsylvania Co. 130 Ind. 321, 30 N. E. 303, 170

K

Kalleck v. Deering, 161 Mass. 469, 42 Am. St. Rep. 421, 37 N. E. 450.	172
Kansas City Land Co. v. Hill, 87 Tenn. 589, 5 L. R. A. 45, 11 S. W. 797.	763
Kansas P. R. Co. v. Peavey, 29 Kan. 169, 44 Am. Rep. 630.	881
Keates v. Cadogan, 2 Eng. L. & Eq. 320, 10 C. B. 591.	976, 977
Keegan Case. See CENTRAL R. Co. v. KEDGAN.
Keenan v. Union Traction Co. 202 Pa. 107, 58 L. R. A. 217, 51 Atl. 742.	192
v. Waters, 181 Pa. 247, 37 Atl. 342.	799
Kelley v. Roettcher, 29 C. C. A. 14, 56 U. S. App. 363, 85 Fed. 53.	242
Kelny v. Missouri P. R. Co. 101 Mo. 67, 8 L. R. A. 783, 13 S. W. 806.	392
Kellogg v. Dickinson, 147 Mass. 452, 1 L. R. A. 346, 18 N. E. 223.	267
Kellogg Bridge Co. v. Hamilton, 110 U. S. 108, 28 L. ed. 86, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 537.	980, 992
Kelly v. Deegan, 111 Ala. 152, 20 So. 378.
v. Pittsburgh, 104 U. S. 79, 26 L. ed. 659.	814
Kendall v. J. I. Porter Lumber Co. 69 Ark. 442, 64 S. W. 220.	828
Kendrick v. Beard, 90 Mich. 589, 51 N. W. 645.	907
Kennedy v. Gibson, 68 Kan. 612, 75 Pac. 1044.	252, 253
Kenney v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 70 Mo. 252.	520
Kensington Bank v. Patton, 14 Pa. 481, 53 Am. Dec. 564.	262
Kentucky Mut. Security Fund Co. v. Turner, 89 Ky. 665, 13 S. W. 104.	269
Kerlin v. Chicago, I. & St. L. R. Co. 50 Pa. 186.	748
Kerner v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. 149 Md. 1, 48 N. E. 364.	170
Keyes v. Cyrus, 100 Cal. 322, 34 Am. St. Rep. 299, 34 Pac. 722.	70
Keyl v. Feuchter, 56 Ohio St. 424, 47 N. E. 140.	427
Kiene v. Gmehle, 85 Iowa, 312, 52 N. W. 252.	958, 960, 961
Killbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 182, 26 L. ed. 384.	814
Kilgore v. Bruce, 166 Mass. 136, 44 N. E. 108.	414
Kimbrough v. Kimbrough, 99 Ga. 134, 25 S. E. 176.	363
Kincald v. Brittain, 5 Sneed, 119.	762, 763
Kinchlow v. Midland Elevator Co. 67 Kan. 375, 46 Pac. 703.	913
King v. Higgins, 2 East 5.	181
v. Jolliffe, 4 T. R. 285.	470, 474
v. St. Asaph, 3 T. R. 428.	107
v. Sewer Coms. 8 Barn. & C. 355.	464
v. Smith, 4 Esp. 109.	567
v. State Mut. F. Ins. Co. 7 Cush. 6, 34 Am. Dec. 683.	927
v. Welcome, 5 Gray 41.	158
Kingsley v. Siebrecht, 92 Me. 30, 69 Am. St. Rep. 486, 42 Atl. 240.	631
Kinne v. Webb, 4 C. C. A. 170, 12 U. S. App. 137, 54 Fed. 34.	242
Klamey v. Com. 30 Gratt. 858, 32 Am. Rep. 690.	494
Kirk v. Furgerson, 6 Coldw. 483.	377
Kittrell v. State, 104 Tenn. 522, 58 S. W. 120.	293
Klause v. State, 27 Wis. 462.	831
Klein v. New York L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 88, 26 L. ed. 602.	853, 855
Kline v. Electric Traction Co. 181 Pa. 276, 37 Atl. 522.	190
Klockenbrink v. St. Louis & M. River R. Co. 172 Mo. 678, 72 S. W. 900.	302
Klopper v. Bromme, 28 Wis. 372.	124
Knaapp v. Lee, 3 Pick. 452.	240
Knauss v. Brna, 107 Pa. 85.	492
Knight v. Bean, 22 Me. 531.	132
Knowlton v. Williams. See ATRY. GEN. v. WILLIAMS.
Koger v. Kane, 5 Leigh. 606.	239
Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 367, 23 L. ed. 449.	726
Koontz v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 20 Or. 3, 23 Pac. 820.	479
Kopelke v. Kopelke, 112 Ind. 435, 13 N. E. 695.	873
60 L. R. A.
Krom v. Levy, 1 Hun. 171.	478
Kummel v. Germania Sav. Bank, 127 N. Y. 488, 13 L. R. A. 786, 28 N. E. 398.	337
L
Ladd v. Androscoggin County Sav. Bank, 96 Me. 520, 52 Atl. 1016.	339
v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 96 Me. 510, 58 L. R. A. 288, 52 Atl. 1012.	337, 339
v. Boston, 170 Mass. 332, 40 L. R. A. 171, 49 N. E. 627.	311
Lafayette v. Allen, 81 Ind. 166.	886
Lafin v. Chicago, W. & N. R. Co. 33 Fed. 415.	731
LaFollett v. Mitchell, 42 Or. 465, 95 Am. St. Rep. 780, 69 Pac. 916.	482
Laird v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 100 Iowa, 336, 69 N. W. 414.	985
Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. McFall (Ind.) 72 N. E. 552.	874
Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Richards, 30 L. R. A. 33, n. 44, 152 Ill. 59, 38 N. E. 773.	763
Lamar v. Cottle, 27 Ga. 265.	98
Lamb v. State, 67 Md. 524, 10 Atl. 208.	183
Lumson Consol. Store Service Co. v. Bowland, 52 C. C. A. 335, 114 Fed. 639.	721
Landon v. White, 101 Ind. 249.	887
Lang v. Henry, 54 N. H. 57.	630
Langan v. Atchison, 35 Kan. 322, 57 Am. Rep. 165, 11 Pac. 58.	621
Lansing v. Haynes, 95 Mich. 16, 35 Am. St. Rep. 545, 54 N. W. 699.	942, 950, 948, 744
Large v. Dennis, 5 Sneed, 597.	744
Latham v. Shipley, 86 Iowa, 543, 53 N. W. 342.	976
Laundry License Case, 22 Fed. 703.	349
Lavallee v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 40 Minn. 249, 41 N. W. 874.	889
Law v. Douglass, 107 Iowa, 606, 78 N. W. 212.	958, 866, 762
Lawe v. Hyde, 39 Wis. 345.
Lawrence v. Montgomery, 37 Cal. 183.
v. Springer, 49 N. J. Eq. 289, 31 Am. St. Rep. 702, 24 Atl. 933.	571, 580, 586
Lawton v. Sager, 11 Barb. 349.	386
Laythorp v. Bryant, 2 Bing. N. C. 744.	100
Leach v. Lambeth, 14 Ark. 668.	365
Leake v. Benson, 29 Gratt. 156.
Lease v. Pennsylvania Co. 10 Ind. App. 47, 37 N. E. 423.	883
Leathers v. Gray, 96 N. C. 548, 2 S. E. 455.	957
Leavenworth County v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 134 U. S. 988, 33 L. ed. 1064, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 708.	142
Leavitt v. Cutler, 37 Wis. 40.	123
Lee v. Cherry, 85 Tenn. 707, 4 Am. St. Rep. 800, 4 S. W. 835.	396
v. J. B. Stickle Saddlery Co. 38 Mo. App. 201.	976
v. Minneapolis, 22 Minn. 13.	929
v. Richmond, 90 Iowa, 695, 57 N. W. 613.	580, 581
v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1712, 56 S. W. 724, 269.	270
Lee's Estate, 207 Pa. 218, 56 Atl. 425.	945
Leeper v. State, 20 Tex. App. 154, 15 S. W. 411.	205
Lee v. Mosley, 1 Young & C. Exch. 589.	900
Lehman v. McBride, 15 Ohio St. 573.	716
v. Mahler, 34 La. Ann. 319.	263
Leland v. Isenbeck, 1 Idaho, 469.	582
Lemon v. Stevenson, 36 Ill. 49.	99
Leonard v. Hughlett, 41 Md. 380.	203
v. Sparks, 117 Mo. 103, 38 Am. St. Rep. 616, 22 S. W. 899.	502
Leopold v. VanKirk, 27 Wis. 152.	976
Lerned v. Johns, 9 Allen. 419.	631
Leroy v. Beard, 8 How. 451, 12 L. ed. 1151.	762
Lester v. Jackson, 60 Miss. 887, 11 So. 114.	753
Levin v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 109 Ala. 332, 19 So. 395.	612
Ley v. Franklin Sav. Bank, 117 Mass. 448.	341
Lewis v. Lewis, 58 Kan. 561, 50 Pac. 454.	252
v. State, 148 Ind. 346, 47 N. E. 675.	879
Lexington v. McQuillan, 9 Dana, 513, 35 Am. Dec. 150.	442

Licking County Sav. Loan & Bldg. Asso. v. Bebout, 29 Ohio St. 252.....	419	McDonald v. Fernald, 68 N. H. 171, 38 Atl. 729.....	631
Linch v. Sagamore Mfg. Co. 143 Mass. 206, 9 N. E. 728.....	760	v. United States, 12 C. C. A. 339, 24 U. S. App. 25, 63 Fed. 426.....	308
Little v. Hackett, 116 U. S. 366, 29 L. ed. 652, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391.....	219	McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157, 29 Am. St. Rep. 181, 22 Atl. 1004.....	938 939
Littlewood v. Smith, 1 Ld. Raym. 182.....	828	McFeely v. Moore, 5 Ohio, 465, 24 Am. Dec. 314.....	966
Livingston v. McDonald, 21 Iowa, 160, 89 Am. Dec. 564.....	466	McFerrin v. Perry, 1 Sneed, 316.....	743
Lloyd, Re, 61 Kan. 501, 33 Pac. 307.....	182	McGill v. State, 34 Ohio St. 238.....	715
Locke v. Locke, 57 Ala. 475.....	238	McGovern v. Hern, 153 Mass. 308, 10 L. R. A. 815, 25 Am. St. Rep. 632, 26 N. E. 861.....	631
Lofton v. Collins, 117 Ga. 434, 61 L. R. A. 160, 43 S. E. 708.....	100	McIlhinny v. McIlhinny, 137 Ind. 411, 24 L. R. A. 489, 45 Am. St. Rep. 186, 37 N. E. 147.....	963
Logan v. Moulder, 1 Ark. 313, 33 Am. Dec. 338.....	762	McIntire v. Evans, 59 N. H. 237.....	630
Lohr v. Phillipsburg, 156 Pa. 246, 27 Atl. 133.....	492	McIntyre v. McIntyre, 16 S. C. 290.....	960
Loring v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 8 Gray, 28.....	927	McKelgue v. Janesville, 68 Wis. 50, 31 N. W. 298.....	616
Loughran v. Ross, 45 N. Y. 792, 6 Am. Rep. 173.....	767	McKenzie v. Harrison, 120 N. Y. 260, 8 L. R. A. 257, 17 Am. St. Rep. 638, 24 N. E. 458.....	825
Louisville v. Kuntz, 104 Ky. 584, 47 S. W. 592.....	269	v. Soden Mineral Springs Co. 27 Abb. N. C. 402, 18 N. Y. Supp. 240.....	109
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bowler, 9 Helsk. 866.....	746	McKinley v. Williams, 20 C. C. A. 312, 36 U. S. App. 749, 74 Fed. 94.....	978
v. Edmund, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1049, 64 S. W. 727.....	748	McKittick v. Cahoon, 89 Minn. 383, 62 L. R. A. 757, 99 Am. St. Rep. 606, 95 N. W. 223.....	781 903
v. Gidley, 119 Ala. 523, 24 So. 753.....	512	McLaughlin v. Johnson, 46 Ill. 163.....	621
v. Jackson, 106 Tenn. 438, 61 S. W. 771.....	747	McLoughlin v. Philadelphia, 142 Pa. 80, 21 Atl. 754.....	69
v. Johnston, 79 Ala. 436.....	612	McManus, Re, 87 Cal. 294, 10 L. R. A. 567, 22 Am. St. Rep. 250, 25 Pac. 413.....	748 362
v. Lahr, 86 Tenn. 335, 6 S. W. 863.....	746	McMaster v. Illinois C. R. Co. 65 Miss. 264, 7 Am. St. Rep. 634, 4 So. 59.....	814
v. Martin, 87 Tenn. 398, 3 L. R. A. 282, 10 S. W. 772.....	747	McMillan v. Peacock, 57 Ala. 127.....	745
v. Northington, 91 Tenn. 56, 16 L. R. A. 268, 17 S. W. 880.....	746	McMillen v. Andrelson, 95 U. S. 37, 24 L. ed. 335.....	502
v. Robertson, 9 Helsk. 276.....	747	McNarra v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 41 Wis. 69.....	711
Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Hanning, 131 Ind. 528, 31 Am. St. Rep. 443, 31 N. E. 187.....	168 170 938	McNeill v. Hallmark, 28 Tex. 157.....	87
v. Utz, 133 Ind. 265, 32 N. E. 881.....	938	McNulta v. Lochridge, 141 U. S. 327, 35 L. ed. 790, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 11.....	87 629
Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Bryan, 107 Ind. 51, 7 N. E. 807.....	611	Macomber v. Taunton, 100 Mass. 253.....	190
v. Heck, 151 Ind. 292, 50 N. E. 988.....	170	Macoon v. Dannenberg, 113 Ga. 1111, 39 S. E. 446.....	992
Lowry v. Hurd, 7 Minn. 356, Gil. 282.....	237	McQuade v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 17 Misc. 154, 39 N. Y. Supp. 335.....	262
Lucas v. Pennsylvania Co. 120 Ind. 205, 16 Am. St. Rep. 323, 21 N. E. 972.....	984	McQueen v. Turner, 91 Ala. 273, 8 So. 863.....	868 869
Ludlow v. New York & H. R. Co. 12 Barb. 440.....	861	Macrum v. Marshall, 129 Pa. 506, 15 Am. St. Rep. 730, 18 Atl. 640.....	926 721
Lumley v. Gye, 2 El. & Bl. 216.....	96	Mactier v. Osborn, 136 Mass. 399, 4 Am. St. Rep. 323, 15 N. E. 641.....	748
Lundin v. Scheffel, 167 Mass. 465, 45 N. E. 933.....	869	Madden v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 28 W. Va. 617, 57 Am. Rep. 605.....	291
Lydia A. Harvey, The, 84 Fed. 1000.....	290	Magoun v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. 86 Minn. 486, 91 Am. St. Rep. 370, 91 N. W. 5.....	35 253
Lyman v. Pratt, 183 Mass. 61, 66 N. E. 425.....	79	Mahler, Re, 3 N. B. N. Rep. 39, 105 Fed. 428.....	653
Lyne, Re, L. R. 8 Eq. 65.....	947	Mahogany v. Ward, 16 R. I. 479, 27 Am. St. Rep. 753, 17 Atl. 860.....	973
Lynn v. Sentel, 183 Ill. 882, 75 Am. St. Rep. 110, 55 N. E. 838.....	676	Mahon v. South Brooklyn Sav. Inst. 175 N. Y. 69, 96 Am. St. Rep. 603, 67 N. E. 118.....	328
Lyon v. Bertram, 20 How. 149, 15 L. ed. 847.....	237	Mahoning County v. Young, 8 C. C. A. 27, 16 U. S. App. 253, 59 Fed. 96.....	291
v. Fishmongers' Co. L. R. 1 App. Cas. 662.....	932	Makemson v. Braun, 100 Ky. 88, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 584, 37 S. W. 495.....	35
Lytton v. Lytton, 4 Bro. Ch. 441.....	402	Malcolm v. Allen, 49 N. Y. 148.....	253
M		Mallach v. Ridley, 24 Abb. N. C. 181, 9 N. Y. Supp. 922.....	653
		Manchester & L. R. Co. v. Concord R. Corp. 66 N. H. 100, 9 L. R. A. 689, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 319, 49 Am. St. Rep. 582, 20 Atl. 383.....	973
McAdams v. State, 8 Lea. 456.....	408	Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Patterson, 109 Ky. 624, 53 L. R. A. 378, 95 Am. St. Rep. 393, 60 S. W. 383.....	268
McAllister v. Reab, 4 Wend. 485.....	238	v. Savage, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 483, 63 S. W. 278.....	268
McAunich v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 20 Iowa, 338.....	879, 881	Manola v. Stevens.....	1019
McC Campbell v. McC Campbell, 2 Lea, 664, 31 Am. Rep. 623.....	350	Mansfield v. Northcutt, 112 Tenn. 536, 80 S. W. 437.....	745
McCaslin v. State, 44 Ind. 151.....	883	Maraman v. Maraman, 4 Met. (Ky.) 84.....	366
McClellan v. Chippewa Valley Electric Co. 110 Wis. 326, 85 N. W. 1018.....	615
McClintock's Appeal, 71 Pa. 365.....	828
McColman v. Wilkes, 3 Strobb. L. 471, 51 Am. Dec. 637.....	741, 742
McConaughy v. Wilsey, 115 Iowa, 589, 88 N. W. 1101.....	263
McCormick v. Burt, 95 Ill. 263, 35 Am. Rep. 163.....	596
McCray Refrigerating & Cold Storage Co. v. Woods, 99 Mich. 269, 41 Am. St. Rep. 599, 58 N. W. 320.....	976
McDade v. People, 28 Mich. 50.....	183
McDaniel v. Cummings, 83 Cal. 515, 8 L. R. A. 575, 23 Pac. 795.....	464
McDonald v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 26 Iowa, 124, 95 Am. Dec. 114.....	986
69 L. R. A.

Marden v. Dorothy, 160 N. Y. 39, 46 L. R. A. 694, 54 N. E. 726.	322	Miller v. Beardsley, 81 Iowa, 720, 45 N. W. 756.	263
Marine Ins. Co. v. Hodgson, 7 Cranch, 332, 3 L. ed. 362.	243	v. Boone County, 95 Iowa, 5, 63 N. W. 352.	985
Marks v. Jaffa, 6 Misc. 290, 26 N. Y. Supp. 908.	110	v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 65 Fed. 305.	884
Marshall v. Green, L. R. 1 C. P. Div. 35.	828	v. Crawford County, 106 Wis. 210, 82 N. W. 175.	831
v. Marshall, 11 Pa. 430.	945	v. English, 21 N. J. L. 317.	258
v. Western North Carolina R. Co. 92 N. C. 322.	250	v. Fletcher, 27 Gratt. 403, 21 Am. Rep. 359.	580
Marshall County v. Burkey, 1 Ind. App. 563, 27 N. E. 1108.	832	v. Kretler, 76 Pa. 78.	100
Martin v. Franklin F. Ins. Co. 38 N. J. L. 146, 20 Am. Rep. 372.	926	v. Ottaway, 81 Mich. 196, 8 L. R. A. 428, 21 Am. St. Rep. 513, 45 N. W. 665.	245
v. State, 1 Tex. App. 525.	205	v. Shay, 145 Mass. 162, 1 Am. St. Rep. 449, 16 N. E. 468.	478
Masie v. Com. 90 Ky. 485, 14 S. W. 419.	273	v. Wilson, 104 Ill. App. 557.	628
Mast v. Kern, 75 Am. St. Rep. 580.	171	v. Wilson, 146 Ill. 523, 37 Am. St. Rep. 186, 34 N. E. 1111.	872
Mather v. Chapman, 40 Conn. 382, 16 Am. Rep. 46.	932	v. Wilson, 71 Iowa, 610, 33 N. W. 128.	897
v. Trinity Church, 3 Serg. & R. 509, 8 Am. Dec. 663.	739	Milliken v. Pratt, 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241.	872
Matlock v. Fry, 15 Ind. 483.	828	Mills v. Britton, 64 Conn. 4, 24 L. R. A. 536, 29 Atl. 231.	80
Matthews v. State, 92 Ala. 89, 9 So. 740.	914	v. Evansville Seminary, 47 Wis. 354, 2 N. W. 550, 52 Wis. 669, 9 N. W. 925, 58 Wis. 135, 16 N. W. 133.	866
v. Warner, 29 Gratt. 570, 26 Am. Rep. 396.	612	v. Thore, 95 N. C. 362.	966
Mauch v. Hartford, 112 Wis. 40, 87 N. W. 816.	617	Millner v. Field, 5 Exch. 829.	132
Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co. 41 Mich. 453, 2 N. W. 639.	908	Millwaukee Boiler Co. v. Duncan, 87 Wis. 120, 41 Am. St. Rep. 33, 58 N. W. 232.	978
May v. May, 167 U. S. 320, 42 L. ed. 184, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 828.	923	Miner v. Atherton, 35 Pa. 528.	947
Mayberry v. Cliffe, 7 Coldw. 117.	291	v. Gilmour, 33 L. T. 98.	935
Mayo v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 82 S. W. 515.	118	Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Herrick, 127 U. S. 210, 32 L. ed. 109, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1176.	881
Meek v. Blake, 22 Wis. 495, 99 Am. Dec. 68, 73 N. E. 762, 763.	764	Minot v. Paine, 99 Mass. 101, 96 Am. Dec. 705.	81
Mc-dury v. Watson, 6 Met. 246, 30 Am. Dec. 726.	414	Missouri & K. Teleph. Co. v. Vandervort (Kan.) 79 Pac. 1068.	247
Medway v. Needham, 16 Mass. 157, 8 Am. Dec. 131.	494, 495, 497	Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Labette County, 9 Kan. App. 545, 59 Pac. 383.	459
Meek v. Pierce, 19 Wis. 300.	832	v. McFadden Bros. 89 Tex. 138, 33 S. W. 853.	512
Mel-edge v. Boston Iron Co. 5 Cush. 158, 51 Am. Dec. 59.	971	Missouri P. R. Co. v. Columbia, 65 Kan. 390, 58 L. R. A. 399, 69 Pac. 338.	249
Mellen v. McManis, (Idaho) 75 Pac. 98.	587	v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 29 L. ed. 463, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110, 711.	881
Mellon v. Estate, 28 W. N. C. 120.	944, 950	v. Mackey, 33 Kan. 298, 6 Pac. 291.	881
Memphis Sav. Bank v. Houchens, 52 C. C. A. 176, 115 Fed. 96.	243	v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161.	713
Memphis Water Co. v. Magens, 15 Lea, 37.	258	Mitchell v. Bridgers, 113 N. C. 63, 18 S. E. 91.	741
Mendenhall v. Gately, 18 Ind. 149.	872	v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 100 Tenn. 329, 40 L. R. A. 426, 45 S. W. 337.	663
Menger v. Laur, 55 N. J. L. 205, 20 L. R. A. 61, 26 Atl. 180.	613	v. People's Sav. Bank, 20 R. I. 500, 40 Atl. 502.	496
Mentzer v. Western C. Teleg. Co. 93 Iowa, 757, 28 L. R. A. 72, 57 Am. St. Rep. 294, 62 N. W. 1.	962	Mode v. Beasley, 143 Ind. 306, 42 N. E. 727.	879
Mercur v. 58 C. C. A. 472, 122 Fed. 389.	783	Monongahela Case. See MONONGAHELA
Merriden Sav. Bank v. Home Mut. F. Ins. Co. 50 Conn. 396.	925, 926	Nav. Co. v. UNITED STATES.
Merrill v. Ithaca & O. R. Co. 16 Wend. 586, 30 Am. Dec. 130.	478	Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 37 L. ed. 463, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622.	727, 728, 730, 731, 732
v. Merrill, 53 Wis. 522, 10 N. W. 684.	614	Monroe County v. Budlong, 51 Barb. 493.	832
v. Suffolk Bank, 31 Me. 57, 50 Am. Dec. 649.	132	Montgomery v. Montgomery, 3 Jones & L. 47.	965
Methodist Episcopal Church Home v. Thompson, 108 N. Y. 618, 15 N. E. 193.	789	v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 14 Bush. 51.	268
Meyer, Re. 74 Fed. 885.	75	Montpellier v. East Montpellier, 29 Vt. 12, 67 Am. Dec. 748.	730
v. Graeber, 19 Kan. 165.	252	Moody v. Hamilton Mfg. Co. 159 Mass. 70, 38 Am. St. Rep. 396, 34 N. E. 185.	172
v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 41 La. Ann. 639, 17 Am. St. Rep. 408, 6 So. 218.	512	Moore v. First Ruthven Circuit M. E. Church, 117 Iowa, 33, 90 N. W. 492.	971
v. Weller, 121 Iowa, 51, 95 N. W. 254.	958	v. Hanover F. Ins. Co. 141 N. Y. 219, 36 N. E. 191.	926
Meyers, Re. 98 Fed. 408.	783	v. Monroe, 64 Iowa, 367, 52 Am. Rep. 444, 20 N. W. 475.	596
v. Anderson, 1 Strobb. Eq. 344, 47 Am. Dec. 537.	960	v. Mountcastle, 61 Mo. 424.	396
Michaels v. New York C. R. Co. 30 N. Y. 564, 86 Am. Dec. 415.	511	v. Parker, 1 Id. Raym. 37.	966
Morgan C. R. Co. v. Curtis, 80 Ill. 324.	512	v. Sanford, 151 Mass. 285, 7 L. R. A. 151, 24 N. E. 323.	870
Moscow Co. v. McCue, 149 Mass. 103, 14 Am. St. Rep. 402, 21 N. E. 230.	629	v. Sargent, 112 Ind. 484, 14 N. E. 466.	253, 254
Morton v. Smith, 1 Coldw. 144.	377
Mound Steel Co. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, (Ind. App.) 72 N. E. 290.	873
Mukelson v. Truesdale, 63 Minn. 137, 65 N. W. 260.	880, 890
Murdock v. Worcester, 7 Mass. 48.	495
Mut. Re. 121 Cal. 353, 53 Pac. 908.	70
v. Avery, 2 Barb. Ch. 582.	240
v. Barber, 66 N. Y. 558.	414
v. Bayer, 94 Wis. 123, 68 N. W. 869.	614
40 L. R. A.

Moore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 85 Mo. 588.	938	N	Nail v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. 129 Ind. 260, 28 N. E. 183.	168, 170
v. Williams, 115 N. Y. 586, 5 L. R. A. 654, 12 Am. St. Rep. 844, 22 N. E. 233.	789		Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Carroll, 6 Helsk. 347.	747
Moots v. State, 21 Ohio St. 653.	478		Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 32 L. ed. 352, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 238, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28.	712
Moran v. Dunphy, 177 Mass. 485, 52 L. R. A. 115, 83 Am. St. Rep. 289, 59 N. E. 125.	96		v. Franklin County, 12 Lea, 521.	456
Moreland v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. 104 Ky. 129, 46 S. W. 516.	266		v. Handman, 13 Lea, 428.	746
Morgan v. Birnie, 9 Bing. 672.	132		Nashville Trust Co. v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 91 Tenn. 336, 15 L. R. A. 710, 18 S. W. 822.	236
v. Farrel, 58 Conn. 413, 18 Am. St. Rep. 282, 20 Atl. 614.	340		National Docks R. Co. v. Central R. Co. 32 N. J. Eq. 755.	769
v. Potter, 157 U. S. 195, 39 L. ed. 670, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 590.	497		National Foundry & Pipe Works v. Oconto City Water Supply Co. 105 Wis. 48, 81 N. W. 125.	258
v. Wabash R. Co. 159 Mo. 262, 60 S. W. 195.	392		National Surety Co. v. State Bank, 61 L. R. A. 394, 56 C. C. A. 657, 120 Fed. 593.	243
Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Board of Health, 118 U. S. 455, 30 L. ed. 237, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1114.	712		National Ulster County Bank v. Madden, 114 N. Y. 280, 11 Am. St. Rep. 653, 21 N. E. 408.	478
Morgenroth v. Spencer (Wis.) 102 N. W. 1086.	832		Nebraska, The, 21 C. C. A. 448, 24 U. S. App. 559, 75 Fed. 598.	290
Morrill v. Morrill, 20 Or. 96, 11 L. R. A. 155, 23 Am. St. Rep. 95, 25 Pac. 362.	482		Nell v. Tolman, 12 Or. 289, 7 Pac. 103.	482
Morris v. Bradley Fertilizer Co. 12 C. C. A. 34, 28 U. S. App. 87, 64 Fed. 55.	976		Nelson v. Becker, 14 Kan. 509.	502
v. Council Bluffs, 67 Iowa 343, 56 Am. Rep. 343, 25 N. W. 274.	629		v. Fehd, 104 Ill. App. 114.	628
v. Lowe, 97 Tenn. 243, 36 S. W. 1098.	738		v. Hanson, 62 Iowa 356, 54 Am. St. Rep. 508, 60 N. W. 655.	263
v. Rowan, 17 N. J. L. 304.	760		v. Stephens, 107 Wis. 136, 82 N. W. 163.	852
v. Whitehead, 65 N. C. 637.	314		v. Trigg, 2 Tenn. Cas. 645.	361
Morrison v. Wilson, 13 Cal. 495, 73 Am. Dec. 593.	588		Neptune, The, 1 Hagg. Adm. 227.	290
Morse v. Garner, 47 Am. Dec. 570n, 1 Strobh. L. 514.	762		Newark Pass. R. Co. v. Block, 55 N. J. L. 605, 22 L. R. A. 374, 27 Atl. 1077.	307
v. Gilman, 16 Wis. 505.	614		Newcome v. Crews, 98 Ky. 339, 32 S. W. 947.	741
v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 30 Minn. 465, 16 N. W. 358.	627		New Haven S. B. Co. v. Sargent, 50 Conn. 199, 47 Am. St. Rep. 632.	932
v. Union Stock Yard Co. 21 Or. 289, 14 L. R. A. 157, 28 Pac. 2.	976		Newman v. Ashe, 9 Baxt. 380.	753
Moss v. Atkinson, 44 Cal. 3.	396		New Orleans, 105 U. S. 166, 26 L. ed. 1015.	973
Mount v. State, 7 Ind. 654.	118		New Pittsburgh Coal & Coke Co. v. Peterson, 130 Ind. 398, 43 Am. St. Rep. 327, 35 N. E. 7.	172
Mt. Hope Cemetery v. Boston, 158 Mass. 509, 35 Am. St. Rep. 515, 33 N. E. 695.	730		New York, Re, 34 Hun. 444.	756
Mt. Washington Road Co.'s Petition, 35 N. H. 134.	754		Re, 99 N. Y. 569, 2 N. E. 642, 754, v. Second Ave. R. Co. 102 N. Y. 581, 55 Am. Rep. 839, 7 N. E. 905.	478
Mosseau, Re, 30 Minn. 202, 14 N. W. 887.	581		New York, The, 173 U. S. 187, 45 L. ed. 126, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 67.	299
Mowry v. Henry, 86 Cal. 471, 25 Pac. 17.	208		New York C. & H. R. Co. v. Fralot, 100 U. S. 24, 25 L. ed. 53.	717
Moxley v. Ragan, 10 Bush. 156, 19 Am. Rep. 61.	539		New York Condensed-Milk Co. v. Nassau Electric R. Co. 29 Misc. 127, 60 N. Y. Supp. 234.	192
Mullan v. State, 114 Cal. 581, 34 L. R. A. 262, 46 Pac. 670.	802		New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Steinbrenner, 47 N. J. L. 161, 54 Am. Rep. 126.	219
Mullen v. Old Colony R. Co. 127 Mass. 86, 34 Am. Rep. 349.	570		New York L. Ins. Co. v. McKellar, 68 N. H. 326, 44 Atl. 516.	873
Mumford v. Whitney, 15 Wend. 380, 30 Am. Dec. 60.	132		v. Warren Deposit Bank, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 326, 75 S. W. 234.	268
Mumma v. Potomac Co. 8 Pet. 280, 8 L. ed. 947.	938		Noble v. People, 23 Colo. 9, 45 Pac. 376.	475
Munch v. Great Northern R. Co. 75 Minn. 61, 77 N. W. 541.	498		Noble County v. Schmoke, 51 Ind. 416.	832
Mundy v. Whittemore, 15 Neb. 650, 19 N. W. 691.	245		Noell v. Gaines, 68 Mo. 649.	251
Munroe v. Bordier, 8 C. B. 362.	366		Noonan v. Pardee, 200 Pa. 474, 55 L. R. A. 410, 86 Am. St. Rep. 722, 50 Atl. 255.	642
Murdock v. Memphis & O. R. Co. 7 Baxt. 572.	197		Norcross v. Norcross, 53 Me. 169.	640
Murmurt v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 67 S. W. 508.	762		Norma, The, 15 C. C. A. 553, 35 U. S. App. 421, 68 Fed. 509.	478
Murmurt Case. See MURMURT v. STATE.	118		Norris v. Showerman, 2 Doug. (Mich.) 16.	902
Murphy v. Price, 48 Mo. 247.	282		North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co. Re, 11 Sawy. 590, 27 Fed. 795.	314
v. Rogers, 151 Mass. 118, 24 N. E. 35.	290		North Chicago Rolling Mill Co. v. St. Louis Ore & Steel Co. 152 U. S. 596, 38 L. ed. 565, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 710.	239
v. Royal Ins. Co. 52 La. Ann. 775, 27 So. 143.	110		Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Bldg. Assn. 183 U. S. 308, 46 L. ed. 213, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133.	240
v. Sullote, 5 Fed. 90.	245		Northern C. R. Co. v. State, 20 Md. 420, 96 Am. Dec. 545.	51
Murray v. Gast Lithographic & Engraving Co. 8 Misc. 36, 28 N. Y. Supp. 271.	101		Northern P. R. Co. v. Hamby, 154 U. S. 349, 38 L. ed. 1009, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 983.	17
v. Lardner, 2 Wall. 110, 17 L. ed. 857.	268		v. Mase, 11 C. C. A. 63, 27 U. S. App. 238, 63 Fed. 114.	74
v. Forty-Second Street, M. & St. N. Ave. R. Co. 9 App. Div. 610, 41 N. Y. Supp. 620.	268
Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Jarboe, 102 Ky. 80, 89 L. R. A. 504, 80 Am. St. Rep. 343, 42 S. W. 1097.
v. O'Neil, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 983, 76 S. W. 839.
69 L. R. A.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S.
346, 40 L. ed. 994, 16 Sup. Ct.
Rep. 843 171
North Western Bank v. Hays, 37 W. Va.
475, 16 S. E. 561. 160
Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Barbour, 92 Ky. 427, 15 L. R. A. 449,
17 S. W. 796. 268
Northwestern Union Packet Co. v. Clough,
20 Wall. 528, 22 L. ed. 406. 717
Porton v. Brookline, 181 Mass. 360, 63
N. E. 930. 311
Poyes v. Southworth, 55 Mich. 173, 54 Am.
Rep. 359, 20 N. W. 891. 952
Purtall v. Bracewell, L. R. 2 Exch. 1. 935

O

Oak Harbor v. Gallagher, 52 Ohio St. 185,
39 N. E. 144. 620
O'Brien v. McGlinchay, 68 Me. 552. 191
O'Brien Case. See VICKSBURG & M. R.
Co. v. O'BRIEN.
Okerhausen v. Tyson, 71 Conn. 31, 40 Atl.
1041. 932
Ottelle v. Hammond, 78 Minn. 275, 80 N.
W. 1123. 629
Ogburn v. Connor, 46 Cal. 346, 13 Am. Rep.
213. 464
Oho & M. R. Co. v. Weber, 96 Ill. 443. 81
Ohio River & C. R. Co. v. Edwards, 111
Tenn. 31, 76 S. W. 897. 746
Om v. San Francisco, 92 Cal. 449, 28 Pac.
580. 559
Orsted v. Morris Aqueduct, 47 N. J. L.
311. 769
Owen v. O'Malley, 75 Ill. App. 387. 499
Owens Coal, Coke, & Lime Co. v. Fay, 37
Neb. 68, 55 N. W. 211. 976
O'Neil, Re, 91 N. Y. 516. 427
O'Neil v. Dry Dock E. B. & B. R. Co. 129
N. Y. 125, 26 Am. St. Rep. 512,
29 N. E. 84. 302, 803, 305
Opinion of Justices, 7 Me. 495, Appx.
187
Ornd v. Ruspini, 2 Esp. 569. 242
Ornd v. Boston & P. R. Corp. 14 R. I.
104, 51 Am. Rep. 354. 192
Ormsby v. Phenix Ins. Co. 5 S. D. 72, 58
N. W. 301. 926
Ors v. Ward, 73 Ill. 318. 132
Ors v. Noonan, 29 Wis. 541. 832
Ors v. Le Page, 21 Eng. L. & Eq. 640. 497
Ors v. Starch Factory v. Dolloway, 21 N.
Y. 449. 439
Ors v. Moser, 88 Mo. App. 72. 650, 655
Ors v. Hancock, 1 Head. 563. 377
Ors v. Howard Ins. Co. 87 Ky. 571, 10
S. W. 119. 269, 270

P

Pack v. Fowler, 28 Cal. 605. 740, 746
Parker v. Parker, 43 N. H. 363, 80 Am.
Dec. 172. 412
P. O'Toole, 144 Mass. 303, 10 N. E.
851. 316
Paine Ins. Co. v. Weiss, 109 Ky. 464, 59
S. W. 509. 288
Paine v. Forbes, 23 Ill. 301. 803
Paine v. Hughes, 84 Md. 652, 36 Atl. 431.
913
Paine v. Riley, 4 Coldw. 5. 748
Paine v. Cheek, 4 Coldw. 26. 762, 763
Paine v. Com. 12 Bush. 191. 273
Paine v. Macon, 39 Ga. 725, 99 Am. Dec.
486. 621
Paine v. Pennsylvania Co. 134 Ind. 673,
23 L. R. A. 552, 34 N. E. 504. 612
Paine v. Newburyport, 10 Gray. 28. 629
Paine v. Carey, 28 Iowa. 438. 262, 263
Paine v. Empire Transp. Co. 49 C. C. A.
302, 111 Fed. 202. 75
Paine v. Band Cutter & Self Feeder Co.
v. Mallinger, 122 Iowa, 703, 98
N. W. 580. 976
Paine v. Hervey, 1 Gray, 119. 494, 496
Paine v. Westenhaver, 114 Wis. 460, 90
N. W. 467. 617
Paine v. Wold, 33 Fed. 791. 482
Paine v. Taylor, 7 How. 133, 12 L. ed.
638. 239
Paine v. Halstead, 44 Ill. App. 97. 593
Paine v. Somerset, 1 Strange, 447. 868, 860
L. R. A.

Peck v. Batchelder, 40 Vt. 233, 94 Am. Dec.
392. 897, 904
Peck v. Valentine, 94 N. Y. 569. 478
Peck v. Vandemark, 99 N. Y. 30, 1 N. E.
41. 396
Peck v. Derry, L. R. 37 Ch. Div. 541. 413
Pelican v. Rock Falls, 81 Wis. 428, 51 N.
W. 871, 52 N. W. 1049. 832
Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill Co. v.
Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 187, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 24, 81 L.
ed. 650, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 737. 880
Pendleton v. Kingsley, 3 Cliff. 417, Fed.
Cas. No. 10,922. 647, 657, 661
Penley v. Waterhouse, 3 Iowa, 418. 262
Pennegar v. State, 87 Tenn. 244, 2 L. R. A.
703, 10 Am. St. Rep. 648, 10
S. W. 305. 494
Pennewell, Re, 55 C. C. A. 571, 9 Am.
Bankr. Rep. 490, 119 Fed. 139. 722
Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Norcross, 163 Ind.
379, 72 N. E. 132. 874
Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 727, 24 L. ed.
570. 676
Pennsylvania Co. v. Krick, 47 Ind. 368. 664
Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Barnett, 59 Pa.
259, 98 Am. Dec. 346. 666
People v. Bush, 4 Hill. 133. 182
People v. Croswell, 3 Johns. Cas. 337. 108
People v. Elliott, 74 Mich. 264, 3 L. R. A.
403, 16 Am. St. Rep. 640, 41 N.
W. 916. 508
People v. Kitting, 99 Cal. 577, 34 Pac. 237. 473
People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y.
174. 130, 133, 137
People v. Green, 85 App. Div. 400, 83 N. Y.
Supp. 460. 820
People v. Hammond, 132 Mich. 422, 93 N.
W. 1084. 183
People v. Hanselman, 76 Cal. 460, 9 Am.
St. Rep. 238, 18 Pac. 425. 408
People v. Hawkins, 157 N. Y. 12, 42 L. R.
A. 490, 68 Am. St. Rep. 736, 51
N. E. 257. 267
People v. McLaughlin, 150 N. Y. 365, 44
N. E. 1017. 478
People v. Manning, 8 Cow. 297, 18 Am.
Dec. 451. 132
People v. New York C. R. Co. 13 N. Y. 78
865
People v. Roby, 52 Mich. 577, 50 Am. Rep.
270, 18 N. W. 365. 672
People v. Sergeant, 8 Cow. 139. 118
People ex rel. Bolton v. Albertson, 53 N.
Y. 50. 231, 232
Atty. Gen. v. Alturas County, 6
Idaho, 418, 44 L. R. A. 122,
53 Pac. 1007. 222, 227
Manhattan R. Co. v. Barker, 152
N. Y. 417, 40 N. E. 875. 322
Williams v. Clcott, 16 Mich. 283, 97
Am. Dec. 141. 188
Deneen v. Coleman, 210 Ill. 79, 71
N. E. 693. 703, 704
Union Trust Co. v. Coleman, 126
N. Y. 433, 12 L. R. A. 762,
27 N. E. 818. 81
Lemmon v. Feltnier, 56 App. Div.
280, 67 N. Y. Supp. 893. 81
Healey v. Forbes, 52 Hun, 30, 4 N.
Y. Supp. 757. 118
Johnson v. George, 186 Ill. 122, 57
N. E. 804. 702
Lincoln County v. George, 3 Idaho,
72, 26 Pac. 983. 222
Seaver v. Green, 52 How. Pr. 440. 736
Crymble v. Horton, 46 Ill. App. 434
313
Drake v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481. 559
Stephenson v. Marshall, 12 Ill. 391
225
Wilson v. Salomon, 51 Ill. 37. 754
Chicago v. State Board, 205 Ill. 296,
68 N. E. 943. 457
Metropolitan Street R. Co. v. State Tax Comrs. 174 N. Y. 417, 63
L. R. A. 884, 67 N. E. 69. 326
Granger v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 27
Mich. 406, 15 Am. Rep. 195. 498
People's Bldg. & L. Assn. v. Billing, 104
Mich. 186, 62 N. W. 373. 422
People's Sav. Bank v. Alexander, 2 Sadler
(Pa.) 287, 3 Atl. 821. 791, 792
Peppin v. Cupps, 81 Pa. 315. 339
Peppin v. Bickford, 3 Ves. Jr. 570. 947
Perrin v. Blake, 4 Burr. 2579, 10 English Ruling Cases 689. 955
956, 957, 963

Richardson v. Mellish, 2 Bing. 229.....	884	Ross v. Walker, 130 Pa. 42, 23 Am. St. Rep. 160, 21 Atl. 157.....	173
v. Richardson, 75 Me. 570, 46 Am. Rep. 428.....	79	Rowan v. Portland, 8 B. Mon. 232.....	754
Richland County v. Lawrence County, 12 Ill. 1.....	729	Royle v. Wanne, 8 B. Mon. 252.....	497
Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co. 26 Iowa, 191.....	884	Rublee v. Davis, 35 Neb. 779, 29 Am. St. Rep. 509, 51 N. W. 135.....	245
v. Morford, 4 Wash. 337, 30 Pac. 242, 31 Pac. 513.....	580	Rugan v. Sablin, 3 C. C. A. 378, 10 U. S. App. 519, 53 Fed. 415.....	242
Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Burnett, 88 Va. 538, 14 S. E. 372.....	928	Ruhe v. Buck, 124 Mo. 178, 23 L. R. A. 178, 46 Am. St. Rep. 439, 27 S. W. 412.....	872
Richmond R. & Electric Co. v. Garthright, 92 Va. 627, 32 L. R. A. 220, 53 Am. St. Rep. 844, 24 S. E. 267.....	305	Rupard v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 88 Ky. 280, 7 L. R. A. 316, 11 S. W. 70.....	665
Ricketts v. Mornington, 7 Sim. 200.....	313	Russell v. Alvarez, 5 Cal. 48.....	498
Riddlebarger v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 7 Wall. 386, 19 L. ed. 257.....	266	v. Fagan, 7 Houst. (Del.) 396, 8 Atl. 258.....	64
	269, 270	v. Place, 94 U. S. 606, 24 L. ed. 214.....	486
Riddlebarger Case. See RIDDLEBARGER v. HARTFORD F. INS. CO.		Russellville v. White, 41 Ark. 485.....	349
Ridgeway v. Lamphear, 99 Ind. 253.....	967	Ruter v. Foy, 46 Iowa, 132.....	612
Rigney v. Rigney, 127 N. Y. 413, 24 Am. St. Rep. 462, 28 N. E. 405.....	678	Ryan v. Barger, 10 Ill. 28.....	99
Riley v. Stallworth, 56 Ala. 481.....	100	v. Caldwell, 106 Ky. 543, 50 S. W. 968.....	252
Ringle v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 104 Pa. 529, 44 Am. St. Rep. 628, 30 Atl. 492.....	883	v. Dayton, 25 Conn. 188, 65 Am. Dec. 560.....	132
Ripley v. Paige, 12 Vt. 354.....	903	v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 132 Pa. 304, 19 Atl. 81.....	664
Richie v. Richards, 14 Utah, 345, 47 Pac. 670.....	187	United States, 136 U. S. 68, 34 L. ed. 447, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 913.....	397
Robbins v. Holley, 1 T. B. Mon. 191.....	239
v. Springfield St. R. Co. 165 Mass. 30, 42 N. E. 334.....	303
Robeno v. Marlatt, 136 Pa. 35, 20 Atl. 512.....	950
Roberson v. Rochester Folding Box Co. (1901) 64 App. Div. 30, 71 N. Y. Supp. 876, reversed in 171 N. Y. 540, 59 L. R. A. 478, 89 Am. St. Rep. 828, 64 N. E. 442.....	111
	112, 114, 115
Roberson Case. See ROBERSON v. ROCHESTER FOLDING BOX CO.
Robert v. Powell, 168 N. Y. 414, 55 L. R. A. 775, 85 Am. St. Rep. 673, 61 N. E. 699.....	86
Roberts v. Donovan, 70 Cal. 108, 9 Pac. 180, 11 Pac. 599.....	99
v. Hammon, 29 Iowa, 128.....	263
v. Wilcoxson, 36 Ark. 356.....	499
Robertson v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 146 Ind. 486, 45 N. E. 655.....	172
v. Phillips, 3 G. Greene. 220.....	896
Robinson v. Beall, 3 Yeates. 267.....	100
v. Coulter, 90 Tenn. 707, 25 Am. St. Rep. 708, 18 S. W. 250.....	763
v. George F. Blake Mfg. Co. 143 Mass. 528, 10 N. E. 314.....	938
v. Harman, 1 Exch. 850.....	766
v. Haug, 71 Mich. 38, 38 N. W. 668.....	349
v. Owen, 46 N. H. 387.....	313
v. Robinson, 1 Burr. 38.....	966
v. State, 2 Coldw. 181.....	293
Roche v. West, 164 N. Y. 510, 53 L. R. A. 548, 79 Am. St. Rep. 659, 58 N. E. 673.....	820
Rockland Water Co. v. Adams, 84 Me. 472, 30 Am. St. Rep. 368, 24 Atl. 840.....	311
Roddy v. Fitzgerald, 6 H. L. Cas. 823.....	956
	957, 966
Rodgers v. Niles, 11 Ohio St. 53, 78 Am. Dec. 290.....	976
Roehm v. Horst, 178 U. S. 1, 44 L. ed. 953, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 780.....	804
Rogers v. Elliott, 146 Mass. 349, 4 Am. St. Rep. 316, 15 N. E. 768.....	821
v. Paterson, 4 Paige, 450.....	313
Roland v. Miller, 3 Watts & S. 300.....	238
Rollins v. Shaver Wagon & Carriage Co. 80 Iowa, 390, 20 Am. St. Rep. 427, 45 N. W. 1037.....	971
Romick v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 62 Iowa, 167, 17 N. W. 458.....	891
Romilly v. James, 6 Taunt. 263.....	780
Romme v. Schambacher, 120 Pa. 579, 6 Am. St. Rep. 732, 11 Atl. 779.....	646
	650, 657
Rose Case, 77 Pa. 276.....	754
Rose v. Des Moines Valley R. Co. 39 Iowa, 246.....	881
Rose v. United States Credit System Co. 61 N. S. J. L. 543, 40 Atl. 501.....	133
		Saddler v. White, 14 La. Ann. 173.....	241
		St. Johnsbury v. Thompson, 59 Vt. 300, 59 Am. Rep. 731, 9 Atl. 571.....	349
		St. Louis v. Western U. Tele. Co. 148 U. S. 92, 37 L. ed. 380, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 485.....	730
		St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Needham, 25 L. R. A. 837, 11 C. C. A. 58, 27 U. S. App. 227, 63 Fed. 107.....	748
		v. Worthem, 52 Ark. 529, 7 L. R. A. 874, 13 S. W. 254.....	459
		St. Louis Nat. Stockyards v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 112 Ill. 384, 54 Am. Rep. 243.....	571
		St. Paul & D. R. Co. v. Duluth, 66 Minn. 494, 23 L. R. A. 88, 45 Am. St. Rep. 491, 58 N. W. 159.....	629
		Salmon Falls Mfg. Co. v. Goddard, 14 How. 446, 14 L. ed. 493.....	631
		Salter v. Howard, 43 Ga. 601.....	96
		Salt Lake Lithographing Co. v. Ibox Mine & Smelting Co. 15 Utah, 440, 62 Am. St. Rep. 944, 49 Pac. 768.....	499
		San Antonio Real Estate Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Stewart, 94 Tex. 441, 86 Am. St. Rep. 864, 61 S. W. 386.....	254
		Sanborn v. Flagler, 9 Allen, 474.....	631
		v. Woodman, 5 Cush. 36.....	868
		Sandage v. Studabaker Bros. Mfg. Co. 142 Ind. 148, 34 L. R. A. 363, 51 Am. St. Rep. 165, 41 N. E. 380.....	885
		Sandburg v. Papineau, 81 Ill. 446.....	71
		Sanders v. Pope, 12 Ves. Jr. 282.....	858
		Sandford v. Handy, 23 Wend. 260.....	414
		San Diego Land & Town Co. National City, 174 U. S. 389, 43 L. ed. 1154, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 804.....	311
		Sandys v. Fitzhugh, 4 L. J. C. P. N. S. 598.....	658
		Santa Clara County v. Southern R. R. Co. 118 U. S. 304, 30 L. ed. 118, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1132.....	880
		Sasseen v. Hammond, 13 B. Mon. 673.....	272
		Savage v. Fox, 60 N. H. 17.....	873
		Sayers v. Wall, 26 Gratt. 373, 21 Am. Rep. 303.....	364
		Scantlin v. Allison, 12 Kan. 85.....	237
		Scheffel v. Hays, 7 C. C. A. 308, 19 U. S. App. 220, 58 Fed. 457.....	242
		Schillinger v. Boes, 85 Ky. 357, 3 S. W. 427.....	69
		Schleider v. Dielman, 44 La. Ann. 463, 10 So. 934.....	134
		Schmidt v. Northern Life Asso. 112 Iowa, 41, 51 L. R. A. 141, 84 Am. St. Rep. 323, 83 N. W. 800.....	176
		Schoenwald v. Metropolitan Sav. Bank, 57 N. Y. 418.....	324
		Schoole v. Sall, 1 Sch. & Lef. 176.....	498

- Perry v. Barker, 13 Ves. Jr. 205..... 498
 v. Barker, 13 Ves. Jr. 198..... 498
 v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 45 S. W. 567..... 210
 Peters v. Bowman, 98 U. S. 58, 25 L. ed. 91..... 762
 Pfeiffer v. Board of Education, 118 Mich. 580, 42 L. R. A. 536, 77 N. W. 250..... 596
 Pharr v. Bachelor, 3 Ala. 245..... 763
 Phenix Ins. Co. v. Omaha Loan & T. Co. 41 Neb. 834, 25 L. R. A. 679, 60 N. W. 133..... 926
 Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Howard, 13 How. 307, 14 L. ed. 157..... 971
 Phillips v. Taylor, 93 Minn. 28, 100 N. W. 649..... 628
 Phillips Case. See PHILIPS v. TAYLOR.
 Phillips v. Postal Tele. Cable Co. 130 N. C. 513, 89 Am. St. Rep. 868, 41 S. E. 1022..... 634
 v. Waterhouse, 69 Iowa, 189, 58 Am. Rep. 220, 28 N. W. 539..... 628
 Pickett v. Ferguson, 45 Ark. 177, 55 Am. Rep. 545..... 313
 Pierce, Re, 44 Wis. 411..... 314
 v. Merrill, 128 Cal. 473, 79 Am. St. Rep. 63, 61 Pac. 67..... 262
 Pierson v. Lane, 60 Iowa, 60, 14 N. W. 90..... 962
 Pifer v. Brown, 43 W. Va. 412, 49 L. R. A. 497n, 27 S. E. 309..... 570
 Pilcher v. Smith, 2 Head, 208..... 588
 Pingree v. Auditor General, 120 Mich. 95, 44 L. R. A. 679, 78 N. W. 1025..... 440
 Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 585, 91 Am. Dec. 657..... 680
 Pinnel's Case, 5 Coke, 117a..... 824
 Pitcher v. Livingston, 4 Johns. 1, 4 Am. Dec. 229..... 763
 v. Patrick, Minor (Ala.) 321, 12 Am. Dec. 54..... 100
 Pitkin v. Springfield, 112 Mass. 509..... 869
 Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Cox, 55 Ohio St. 497, 35 L. R. A. 507, 45 N. E. 641..... 715
 Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Devinney, 17 Ohio St. 197..... 748
 Pittsburgh v. Grier, 22 Pa. 64, 60 Am. Dec. 65..... 892
 Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adams, 105 Ind. 151, 5 N. E. 187..... 170
 Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Hinds, 53 Pa. 515, 91 Am. Dec. 224..... 647
 Poirier v. Morris, 2 El. & Bl. 89..... 245
 Polk v. Farris, 9 Yerg. 209, 30 Am. Dec. 400..... 959
 v. Henderson, 9 Yerg. 310..... 744
 Pollard v. Dwight, 4 Cranch, 421, 2 L. ed. 666..... 762
 v. Photographic Co. (1888) L. R. 40 Ch. Div. 345..... 109
 Pope v. Tuastall, 2 Ark. 209..... 826
 Popp Case. See WERNER v. POPP.
 Portwood v. Montgomery County, 52 Miss. 523..... 225
 Pounsett v. Fuller, 17 C. B. 660..... 766
 Powell v. Powell, 9 Humph. 486..... 357
 v. Smith, 2 Watts, 126..... 739
 Powell Case. See POWELL v. POWELL.
 Pratt v. Pratt, 33 Conn. 446..... 82
 Price v. Deal, 90 N. C. 290..... 762
 Priddy v. Hartsook, 81 Va. 87..... 498
 Prince Albert v. Strange (1849) 2 De G. & S. 652..... 109
 Prince Albert's Case, 1 Macn. & G. 25..... 109
 Pringle v. Vesta Coal Co. 172 Pa. 438, 33 Atl. 690..... 639
 Providence, The, 38 C. C. A. 670, 98 Fed. 133..... 299
 Prue v. New York, P. & B. R. Co. 18 E. I. 360, 27 Atl. 450..... 191
 Pruitt v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 62 Mo. 527..... 512
 Pullen v. Hopkins, 1 Lea. 741..... 741
 Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Lowe, 28 Neb. 239, 6 L. R. A. 809, 26 Am. St. Rep. 325, 44 N. W. 226..... 647
 Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Harkins, 5 C. C. A. 326, 17 U. S. App. 22, 55 Fed. 932..... 913
 v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 157 U. S. 94, 39 L. ed. 632, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 503..... 981
 69 L. R. A.
 Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 166, 20 L. ed. 537..... 731
 Purdy v. Steel, 1 Idaho, 216..... 570
 Purviance v. Jones, 120 Ind. 162, 16 Am. St. Rep. 319, 21 N. E. 1099..... 874
 Putnam v. Bicknell, 18 Wis. 333..... 380
 v. Putnam, 3 Ariz. 182, 24 Pac. 320..... 570
 v. Putnam, 8 Pick. 433..... 494
 Q
 Qualfe v. Chicago, & N. W. R. Co. 48 Wis. 513, 33 Am. Rep. 821, 4 N. W. 638..... 616
 Queen Anne's County v. Talbot County, 99 Md. 13, 57 Atl. 1..... 919
 Quick v. Lemon, 105 Ill. 578..... 238
 Quindnick Co. v. Chafee, 13 R. I. 367..... 497
 Quincy Min. Co. v. Klits, 42 Mich. 34, 3 N. W. 240..... 173
 Quinn v. Leathem [1901] A. C. 495..... 9
 R
 Radley v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 1 App. Cas. 754..... 298
 Rafferty v. Lougee, 63 N. H. 54..... 631
 Rahmel v. Lehnardt, 142 Cal. 681, 65 L. R. A. 89, 100 Am. St. Rep. 154, 76 Pac. 659..... 652
 Rand v. Hubbell, 115 Mass. 461, 15 Am. Rep. 121..... 71
 Randall v. Union R. Co. (R. I.) 59 Atl. 165..... 191
 Ransom v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 62 Wis. 178, 51 Am. Rep. 719, 22 N. W. 147..... 661
 Ratcliff v. People, 22 Colo. 75, 43 Pac. 553..... 471
 Raubitschek v. Blank, 80 N. Y. 478..... 534
 Reab v. McAllister, 8 Wend. 109..... 23
 Read v. Frankfort Bank, 23 Me. 321..... 18
 v. Spaulding, 30 N. Y. 630, 86 Am. Dec. 426..... 511
 Real v. Hollister, 20 Neb. 112, 29 N. W. 189..... 761
 Reams v. State, 23 Ind. 111..... 681
 Recoins v. Younglove, 8 Baxt. 387..... 75
 Redell v. Moores, 63 Neb. 219, 55 L. R. A. 740, 93 Am. St. Rep. 431, 95 N. W. 243..... 23
 Redfield v. Redfield, 110 N. Y. 671, 18 N. E. 373..... 32
 Reed v. McCord, 160 N. Y. 330, 54 N. E. 737..... 32
 v. Western U. Tele. Co. 135 Mo. 601, 34 L. R. A. 492, 58 Am. St. Rep. 609, 37 S. W. 904..... 40
 Rees v. Higgins, 9 Kan. App. 832, 61 Pac. 500..... 740
 Reeves v. Butcher [1891] 2 Q. B. 509..... 23
 Refeld v. Woodfolk, 22 How. 318, 16 L. ed. 370..... 239
 Reg. v. Harris, 10 Cox C. C. 352..... 51
 Rehberg v. Grelser, 24 Mont. 487, 62 Pac. 820, 63 Pac. 41..... 51
 Reid v. Eatonton Mfg. Co. 40 Ga. 103, 2 Am. Rep. 563..... 1
 Reining v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 168, 14 L. R. A. 133, 28 N. E. 640..... 633
 Reuss v. Pickley, L. R. 1 Exch. 342, 35 L. J. Exch. N. S. 218..... 2
 Rex v. Carille, 6 Car. & P. 636..... 109
 v. Davis, 4 Burr. 2089..... 109
 v. Phillips, 3 Burr. 1564..... 109
 v. Wilkes, 4 Burr. 2527..... 109
 Reynolds v. Franklin, 44 Minn. 30, 20 Am. St. Rep. 540, 46 N. W. 139..... 299
 v. O'Neil, 26 N. J. Eq. 223..... 377
 v. Pitt, 19 Ves. Jr. 134..... 388
 v. Reynolds, 55 Ark. 369, 18 S. W. 377..... 377
 Rhoadaback v. Blair Town Lot & Land Co. 62 Iowa, 368, 17 N. W. 582..... 582
 Rhodes v. Forwood, L. R. 1 App. Cas. 256..... 256
 Rice v. Fidelity & D. Co. 43 C. C. A. 270, 103 Fed. 427..... 270
 Rich v. Baker, 3 Denio, 79..... 79
 Richards v. Hayes, 17 App. Div. 422, 45 N. Y. Supp. 234..... 234

- Richardson v. Mellish, 2 Bing. 229..... 884
v. Richardson, 75 Me. 570, 46 Am. Rep. 428..... 79, 80
Richland County v. Lawrence County, 12 Ill. 1..... 729
Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co. 26 Iowa, 191..... 884
v. Morford, 4 Wash. 337, 30 Pac. 242, 31 Pac. 513..... 580
Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Burnett, 88 Va. 538, 14 S. E. 372..... 928
Richmond R. & Electric Co. v. Garthright, 92 Va. 627, 32 L. R. A. 220, 53 Am. St. Rep. 844, 24 S. E. 267..... 305
Ricketts v. Morningson, 7 Sim. 200..... 313
Riddlesbarger v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 7 Wall. 386, 19 L. ed. 257..... 266
269, 270
Riddlesbarger Case. See RIDDLESBARGER v. HARTFORD F. INS. CO.
Ridgeway v. Lamphear, 99 Ind. 253, 963, 967
Rigney v. Rigney, 127 N. Y. 413, 24 Am. St. Rep. 462, 28 N. E. 405..... 676
Riley v. Stallworth, 56 Ala. 481..... 100
Ringle v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 164 Pa. 529, 44 Am. St. Rep. 628, 30 Atl. 492..... 883
Ripley v. Paige, 12 Vt. 354..... 903
Ritchie v. Richards, 14 Utah, 345, 47 Pac. 670..... 187
Robbins v. Holley, 1 T. B. Mon. 191..... 239
v. Springfield St. R. Co. 185 Mass. 30, 42 N. E. 334..... 303
Robeno v. Marlatt, 136 Pa. 35, 20 Atl. 512..... 950
Roberson v. Rochester Folding Box Co. (1901) 64 App. Div. 30, 71 N. Y. Supp. 876, reversed in 171 N. Y. 540, 59 L. R. A. 478, 89 Am. St. Rep. 828, 64 N. E. 442..... 111, 112, 114, 115
Roberson Case. See ROBERSON v. ROCHESTER FOLDING BOX CO.
Robert v. Powell, 168 N. Y. 414, 55 L. R. A. 775, 85 Am. St. Rep. 673, 61 N. E. 690..... 86
Roberts v. Donovan, 70 Cal. 108, 9 Pac. 180, 11 Pac. 599..... 99
v. Hammon, 29 Iowa, 128..... 263
v. Wilcoxson, 36 Atk. 356..... 499
Robertson v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 146 Ind. 486, 45 N. E. 655..... 172
v. Phillips, 3 G. Greene, 220..... 896
Robinson v. Beall, 3 Yeates, 267..... 100
v. Coulter, 90 Tenn. 707, 25 Am. St. Rep. 708, 18 S. W. 250..... 762, 763
v. George F. Blake Mfg. Co. 143 Mass. 528, 10 N. E. 314..... 938
v. Harman, 1 Exch. 850..... 766
v. Haug, 71 Mich. 38, 38 N. W. 668..... 349
v. Owen, 46 N. H. 387..... 313
v. Robinson, 1 Burr. 38..... 966
v. State, 2 Coldw. 181..... 293
Rochester v. West, 164 N. Y. 510, 53 L. R. A. 548, 79 Am. St. Rep. 659, 58 N. E. 673..... 820
Rockland Water Co. v. Adams, 84 Me. 472, 30 Am. St. Rep. 368, 24 Atl. 840..... 311
Roddy v. Fitzgerald, 6 H. L. Cas. 823..... 956
957, 966
Rodgers v. Niles, 11 Ohio St. 53, 78 Am. Dec. 290..... 976
Roehm v. Horst, 178 U. S. 1, 44 L. ed. 953, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 780..... 804
Rogers v. Elliott, 146 Mass. 349, 4 Am. St. Rep. 316, 15 N. E. 768..... 821
v. Paterson, 4 Paige, 450..... 313
Roland v. Miller, 3 Watts & S. 390..... 238
Rollins v. Shaver Wagon & Carriage Co. 80 Iowa, 390, 20 Am. St. Rep. 427, 45 N. W. 1037..... 971
Romick v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 62 Iowa, 167, 17 N. W. 458..... 801
Romilly v. James, 6 Taunt. 263..... 789
Rommel v. Schambacher, 120 Pa. 579, 6 Am. St. Rep. 732, 11 Atl. 779, 650, 857, 754
Root's Case, 77 Pa. 278..... 754
Roe v. Des Moines Valley R. Co. 39 Iowa, 246..... 881
Rozenbaum v. United States Credit System Co. 61 N. J. L. 543, 40 Atl. 591..... 133
L. R. A.
Ross v. Walker, 130 Pa. 42, 23 Am. St. Rep. 160, 21 Atl. 157..... 172, 173
Rowan v. Portland, 8 B. Mon. 232..... 764
Royle v. Wynne, Craig & P. 252..... 497
Rublee v. Davis, 33 Neb. 779, 29 Am. St. Rep. 500, 51 N. W. 135..... 245
Rugan v. Sabin, 3 C. C. A. 578, 10 U. S. App. 519, 53 Fed. 415..... 242
Ruhe v. Buck, 124 Mo. 178, 25 L. R. A. 178, 46 Am. St. Rep. 439, 27 S. W. 412..... 872
Rupard v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 88 Ky. 280, 7 L. R. A. 316, 11 S. W. 70..... 665
Russell v. Alvarez, 5 Cal. 48..... 498
v. Fagan, 7 Monst. (Del.) 396, 8 Atl. 258..... 647
v. Place, 94 U. S. 606, 24 L. ed. 214..... 486
Russellville v. White, 41 Ark. 485..... 349
Ruter v. Foy, 46 Iowa, 132..... 612
Ryan v. Barger, 16 Ill. 28..... 99
v. Caldwell, 106 Ky. 543, 50 S. W. 966..... 252
v. Dayton, 25 Conn. 188, 65 Am. Dec. 560..... 132
v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 132 Pa. 304, 19 Atl. 81..... 664
v. United States, 136 U. S. 68, 34 L. ed. 447, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 913.. 397
S.
Saddler v. White, 14 La. Ann. 173..... 241
St. Johnsbury v. Thompson, 59 Vt. 300, 59 Am. Rep. 731, 9 Atl. 571..... 349
St. Louis v. Western U. Tele. Co. 148 U. S. 92, 37 L. ed. 380, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 485..... 780
St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Needham, 25 L. R. A. 837, 11 C. C. A. 56, 27 U. S. App. 227, 63 Fed. 107..... 748
v. Worthem, 52 Ark. 529, 7 L. R. A. 374, 13 S. W. 254..... 450
St. Louis Nat. Stockyards v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 112 Ill. 384, 64 Am. Rep. 243..... 571
St. Paul & D. R. Co. v. Duluth, 66 Minn. 494, 23 L. R. A. 88, 45 Am. St. Rep. 491, 58 N. W. 159..... 629
Salmon Falls Mfg. Co. v. Goddard, 14 How. 446, 14 L. ed. 493..... 681
Salter v. Howard, 43 Ga. 601..... 96
Salt Lake Lithographing Co. v. Ibez Mine & Smelting Co. 15 Utah, 440, 62 Am. St. Rep. 944, 49 Pac. 768..... 499
San Antonio Real Estate Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Stewart, 94 Tex. 441, 86 Am. St. Rep. 864, 61 S. W. 386..... 254
Sanborn v. Flagler, 9 Allen, 474..... 631
v. Woodman, 5 Cush. 36..... 868
Sandage v. Studabaker Bros. Mfg. Co. 142 Ind. 148, 34 L. R. A. 363, 51 Am. St. Rep. 165, 41 N. E. 380..... 885
Sandburg v. Papineau, 81 Ill. 446..... 71
Sanders v. Pope, 12 Ves. Jr. 282..... 858, 869
Sandford v. Handy, 23 Wend. 260..... 414
San Diego Land & Town Co. v. National City, 174 U. S. 739, 43 L. ed. 1154, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 804..... 311
Sandys v. Florence, 47 L. J. C. P. N. S. 598..... 649, 654, 656, 658, 662
Santa Clara County v. Southern P. R. Co. 118 U. S. 394, 30 L. ed. 118, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1132..... 880
Sasseen v. Hammond, 18 B. Mon. 673..... 272
Savage v. Fox, 60 N. H. 17..... 873
Sayers v. Wall, 28 Gratt. 373, 21 Am. Rep. 303..... 364
Scantlin v. Allison, 12 Kan. 85..... 237
Scheftel v. Hays, 7 C. C. A. 308, 19 U. S. App. 220, 58 Fed. 457..... 242
Schilling v. Boes, 85 Ky. 357, 3 S. W. 427, 69
Schleider v. Dielman, 44 La. Ann. 463, 10 So. 934..... 134
Schmidt v. Northern Life Asso. 112 Iowa, 41, 51 L. R. A. 141, 84 Am. St. Rep. 323, 83 N. W. 800..... 176
Schoenwald v. Metropolitan Sav. Bank, 57 N. Y. 418..... 324, 344
Schoole v. Sall, 1 Sch. & Lef. 176..... 498

- Schroeder v. Schmidt, 74 Cal. 450, 16 Pac. 243 577
- Schuchmann v. Knoebel, 27 Ill. 175 237
- Schurman, Re, 40 Kan. 533, 20 Pac. 277 183
- Schuyler v. Curtis, 27 Abb. N. C. 387, 15 N. Y. Supp. 787 109, 110, 111 828
- Scorell v. Boxall, 1 Younge & J. 396 923
- Scott v. Rand, 118 Mass. 215 932
- Scranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S. 141, 45 L. ed. 126, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48 932
- Scrimshire v. Scrimshire, 2 Hagg. Consist. Rep. 395 494
- Scudder v. Trenton Delaware Falls Co. 1 N. J. Eq. 694, 23 Am. Dec. 756 769
- v. Union Nat. Bank, 91 U. S. 406, 23 L. ed. 245 872
- Seager v. McCabe, 92 Mich. 186, 16 L. R. A. 247, 52 N. W. 299 991
- Seaver v. Bradley, 179 Mass. 329, 88 Am. St. Rep. 384, 60 N. E. 795 563
- Second Universalist Church v. Colegrove, 74 Conn. 83, 49 Atl. 902 83
- Security Co. v. Hartford, 61 Conn. 89, 23 Atl. 699 81
- Security Sav. & L. Asso. v. Elbert, 153 Ind. 198, 54 N. E. 753 421
- Seeman v. Blemann, 108 Wis. 305, 84 N. W. 490 850
- Selfert & W. Lumber Co. v. Hartwell, 94 Iowa, 576, 58 Am. St. Rep. 413, 63 N. W. 333 970
- Seltz v. Brewers' Refrigerating Mach. Co. 141 U. S. 510, 35 L. ed. 837, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 46 976
- Seltz Case, See SEITZ v. BREWERS' REFRIGERATING MACH. CO. 977, 979, 980
- Semayne's Case, 5 Coke, 91, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 228 105
- Senft v. Carpenter, 18 R. I. 545, 28 Atl. 963 832
- Senior v. Ratterman, 44 Ohio St. 661, 11 N. E. 321 716
- Senter v. Hill, 5 Sneed, 505 240
- Sentner v. Tees, 182 Pa. 216, 18 Atl. 1114 628
- Sessions v. Crunkilton, 20 Ohio St. 349 811
- Sewell v. Moore, 166 Pa. 570, 31 Atl. 370 802
- Shaddon v. Knott, 2 Swan, 358, 58 Am. Dec. 63 739
- Shany v. Androscoggin Mills, 66 Me. 420 938
- Shapleigh v. Wyman, 134 Mass. 118 304
- Sharon Iron Co. v. Erie, 41 Pa. 341 860
- Sharpe's Estate, 15 W. N. C. 419 944
- Shaver v. Pennsylvania Co. 71 Fed. 931 714
- Shaver's Case, See SHAVER v. PENNSYLVANIA 715
- Sheehan v. Flynn, 59 Minn. 438, 26 L. R. A. 632, 61 N. W. 462 628
- Shaffer v. Willoughby, 163 Ill. 518, 34 L. R. A. 464, 54 Am. St. Rep. 483, 45 N. E. 253 649, 655, 658
- Shelley's Case 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 960, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965, 966, 967, 968, 990
- Shepherd v. Thompson, 122 U. S. 236, 30 L. ed. 1157, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1229 262
- Sherburne v. Shaw, 1 N. H. 157, 8 Am. Dec. 47 631
- Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99, 23 L. ed. 819 712
- Sherron v. Hall, 4 Lea, 500 359
- Shields v. Dodge, 14 Lea, 356 739
- Shlimer v. Mann, 99 Ind. 190, 50 Am. Rep. 82 965
- Shirley v. Shewmaker, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 452, 63 S. W. 11 37
- Shively v. Semi-Tropic Land & W. Co. 99 Cal. 259, 33 Pac. 848 763
- Shoemaker v. Smith, 37 Ind. 122 883
- v. United States, 147 U. S. 282, 37 L. ed. 170, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 361 754
- Shreve v. Shreve, 43 Md. 382 966
- Shurtleff v. United States, 189 U. S. 317, 47 L. ed. 832, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 535 560
- Sibley v. Smith, 2 Mich. 486 231
- Siceloff v. Redman, 26 Ind. 251 903
- Siegrist v. Arnot, 86 Mo. 200, 56 Am. Rep. 424 503
- 69 L. R. A.
- Sigafus v. Porter, 179 U. S. 116, 45 L. ed. 113, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 34 412, 413
- Simcoke v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 84 Iowa, 383, 15 L. R. A. 114, 51 N. W. 8 175
- Simmonds v. Holmes, 61 Conn. 1, 15 L. R. A. 253, 23 Atl. 702 335
- Simon v. Myers, 68 Ga. 76 101
- Simpers v. Simperts, 15 Md. 160 966
- Simpson v. Jennings, 15 Neb. 671, 19 N. W. 473 237
- v. Keokuk, 34 Iowa, 568 629
- Sims v. Bond, 5 Barn. & Ad. 389 630
- v. Ricketts, 35 Ind. 181, 9 Am. Rep. 679 366
- Singleton v. Hill, 91 Wis. 51, 51 Am. St. Rep. 868, 64 N. W. 588 396
- Slater, Ex parte, 72 Mo. 102 387
- Sisters of Charity v. Kelly, 67 N. Y. 409 427
- S. K. Edwards Hall Co. v. Dresser, 168 Mass. 136, 46 N. E. 420 869
- Sledge v. Swift, 53 Ala. 110 100
- Slemmer v. Crampton, 50 Iowa 303, 959 961
- Slide & S. Gold Mines v. Seymour, 154 U. S. 509, 38 L. ed. 14, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 842 239
- Slocum v. Seymour, 36 N. J. L. 138, 13 Am. Rep. 432 828
- Sloggy v. Dillworth, 38 Minn. 179, 8 Am. St. Rep. 656, 36 N. W. 451 629
- Smalley v. Ranken, 85 Iowa, 612, 52 N. W. 507 252, 253
- Smalley Case, See SMALLEY v. RANKEN 252, 253
- Smart v. Wolfe, 3 T. R. 342 498
- Smith v. Agawan Canal Co. 2 Allen, 356 935
- v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 31 L. ed. 508, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 804, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564 712
- v. Applegate, 23 N. J. L. 357 769
- v. Bolles, 132 U. S. 125, 33 L. ed. 279, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 39 412, 413
- v. Brady, 17 N. Y. 173, 72 Am. Dec. 442 132
- v. Bryan, 5 Md. 151, 59 Am. Dec. 104 828
- v. Com. 54 Pa. 209, 93 Am. Dec. 686 183
- v. Com. 108 Ky. 53, 55 S. W. 718 273
- v. Countryman, 30 N. Y. 635 414
- v. Fly, 24 Tex. 353, 76 Am. Dec. 106 262
- v. Hastings, 29 Vt. 240 960, 963
- v. Herd, 110 Ky. 56, 60 S. W. 841 269, 270
- v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 44 Minn. 17, 46 N. W. 149 890
- v. Selberling, 35 Fed. 677 396
- v. Sioux City, 119 Iowa, 50, 93 N. W. 81 955
- v. Smith, 28 N. J. L. 208, 78 Am. Dec. 49 767
- v. Valence, 1 Rep. in Ch. 169 570
- Smith's Estate, 140 Pa. 344, 23 Am. St. Rep. 237, 21 Atl. 438 83
- Smock v. Smock, 37 Mo. App. 56 929
- Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418 311
- Sneed v. Moorehead, 70 Miss. 690, 13 No. 235 650, 655
- Snoddy v. Kreutch, 3 Head. 303 744
- Snodgrass v. Hyder, 95 Tenn. 575, 32 S. W. 764 381
- Snow v. Sheldon, 126 Mass. 332, 30 Am. Rep. 684 600
- Snyder v. Vaux, 2 Rawle, 427, 21 Am. Dec. 466 739
- Sons of Abraham v. Gerbert, 57 N. J. L. 395, 31 Atl. 383 767
- South Bend Chilled Plow Co. v. George C. Cribb Co. 97 Wis. 230, 72 N. W. 749 614
- South Boston Iron Co. v. Brown, 63 Me. 139 244
- Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Harrell, 161 Ind. 689, 63 L. R. A. 460, 68 N. E. 262 170, 172
- v. Martin, 160 Ind. 280, 66 N. E. 886 170, 172
- Southern Kansas R. Co. v. Rice, 38 Kan. 398, 5 Am. St. Rep. 766, 16 Pac. 817 647
- Southern R. Co. v. Hall, 107 Tenn. 512, 64 S. W. 481 739
- Spader v. Mural Decoration Mfg. Co. 47 N. J. Eq. 18, 20 Atl. 378 134

- Spalding v. Rosa, 71 N. Y. 40, 27 Am. Rep. 7 132
- Speakman v. Forepaugh, 44 Pa. 374 791
- Spence v. Smith, 121 Cal. 536, 66 Am. St. Rep. 62, 53 Pac. 653 69
- Spencer v. Johnston, 58 Neb. 44, 78 N. W. 482 237
- Spies, Ex parte. See Spies v. ILLINOIS.
- Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, 31 L. ed. 80, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 21 471
- Spiller v. Woburn, 12 Allen, 127 596
- Spohn v. Missouri P. R. Co. 87 Mo. 74 661
- Springfield v. Connecticut River R. Co. 4 Cush. 63 729
- Springfield Mill Co. v. Barnard & L. Mfg. Co. 26 C. C. A. 389, 49 U. S. App. 438, 81 Fed. 261 240
- Springfield Twp. v. Demott, 13 Ohio, 104 832
- Springlock v. Brown, 91 Tenn. 241, 18 S. W. 868 360
- Staats v. Ten Eyck, 3 Calnes, 111, 2 Am. Dec. 254 763
- Stancil v. Norton, 11 Kan. 218 252
- Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 95 Mich. 466, 53 N. W. 112 440
- Stanhope v. Haworth, 3 Times L. R. 34 869
- Stanley v. Bircher, 78 Mo. 245, 650, 655, 658
- State v. Adams, 115 N. C. 775, 20 S. E. 722 408
- v. Adams, 76 Mo. 357 383
- v. Ah Lee, 18 Or. 540, 23 Pac. 424 469
- v. Avery, 7 Conn. 267, 18 Am. Dec. 105 181
- v. Baller, 26 W. Va. 90, 53 Am. Rep. 66 182
- v. Belding, 43 Or. 95, 71 Pac. 330 473
- v. Book, 41 Iowa, 550, 20 Am. Rep. 609 118
- v. Brown, 7 Or. 186 469
- v. Butler, 8 Wash. 194, 25 L. R. A. 434, 40 Am. St. Rep. 900, 35 Pac. 1093 182
- v. Calder, 23 Mont. 504, 59 Pac. 909 205
- v. Cantlin, 118 Mo. 100, 23 S. W. 1091 385
- v. Colvin, 11 Humph. 599, 54 Am. Dec. 60 275
- v. Dierberger, 96 Mo. 666, 9 Am. St. Rep. 380, 10 S. W. 168 384
- v. Dodson, 4 Or. 64 469
- v. Doon, R. M. Charlt. (Ga.) 1 119
- v. Douglas County Road Co. 10 Or. 198 471
- v. Fletchall, 31 Mo. App. 296 472
- v. Fuller, 96 Mo. 165, 9 S. W. 583 385
- v. Furgerson, 162 Mo. 668, 63 S. W. 101 385
- v. Furgerson, 152 Mo. 92, 53 S. W. 427 385
- v. Glahn, 97 Mo. 679, 11 S. W. 260 383
- v. Grant, 79 Mo. 137, 49 Am. Rep. 218 383
- v. Hall, 32 N. J. L. 165 118
- v. Harney, 101 Mo. 470, 14 S. W. 657 182
- v. Harris, 121 Mo. 445, 26 S. W. 558 913
- v. Heck, 23 Minn. 549 672
- v. Howery, 41 Tex. 506 118
- v. Jansen, 22 Kan. 498 408
- v. Keaton, 9 Baxt. 559 293
- v. Kelly, 77 Conn. 266, 58 Atl. 705 839
- v. Kelm, 79 Mo. 515 386, 387, 388
- v. Kennedy, 76 N. C. 251, 22 Am. Rep. 683 494
- v. Kinney, 81 Mo. 101 180
- v. Kyle, 166 Mo. 303, 56 L. R. A. 115, 65 S. W. 763 387
- 388, 471, 472
- v. Lane, 158 Mo. 572, 59 S. W. 965 384
- v. Laverack, 34 N. J. L. 204 567
- v. Lawrence, 12 Or. 297, 7 Pac. 116 469
- v. Lee Yan Yan, 10 Or. 365 469
- v. Leighton, 23 N. H. 167 117
- v. Lorry, 7 Baxt. 95, 32 Am. Rep. 553 293
- v. McNally, 87 Mo. 644 383, 385
- v. Magers, 36 Or. 38, 58 Pac. 892 478
- v. Maus, 6 Coldw. 557 293
- v. Maze, 6 Humph. 17 293
- State v. Meyers, 90 Mo. 107, 12 S. W. 516 385, 386, 388
- v. Miller, 53 Iowa, 154, 4 N. W. 900 118
- v. Moren, 48 Minn. 555, 51 N. W. 618 508
- v. Mumford, 73 Mo. 647, 39 Am. Rep. 532 508
- v. Nelson, 52 Ohio St. 88, 26 L. R. A. 317, 39 N. E. 22 715
- v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 30 Conn. 290 81
- v. Nulif, 15 Kan. 404 178, 180
- v. O'Connor, 58 Minn. 198, 59 N. W. 999 672
- v. Parker, 39 Mo. App. 116 472
- v. Pohl, 170 Mo. 422, 70 S. W. 695 472
- v. Portsmouth & C. Turnp. R. Co. 37 Ohio St. 481 716
- v. Quaid, 43 La. Ann. 1076, 26 Am. St. Rep. 207, 10 So. 183 118
- v. Ransberger, 106 Mo. 135, 17 S. W. 290 388, 471
- v. Records, 4 Harr. (Del.) 554 117
- v. Robinson, 55 Minn. 169, 56 N. W. 594 672
- v. Rose, 142 Mo. 418, 44 S. W. 329 384
- 385
- v. Seaton, 106 Mo. 198, 17 S. W. 109 914
- v. Shaw, 9 S. C. N. S. 94 186, 187
- v. Sickie, Brayton (Vt.) 132 388
- v. Simpson, 28 Minn. 66, 41 Am. Rep. 270, 9 N. W. 78 275
- v. Sneed, 22 Neb. 481, 35 N. W. 219 408
- v. Spellmire, 67 Ohio St. 86, 65 N. E. 622 420
- v. Spencer, 6 Or. 152 469
- v. Stacy, 103 Mo. 11, 15 S. W. 147 385
- v. Stickney, 53 Kan. 308, 42 Am. St. Rep. 284, 36 Pac. 714 408
- v. Sunapee Dam Co. 70 N. H. 458, 59 L. R. A. 55, 59 Atl. 108 935
- v. Tannahill, 4 Kan. 117 180
- v. Tucker, 36 Or. 291, 51 L. R. A. 246, 61 Pac. 894 469
- v. Waters, 156 Mo. 132, 56 S. W. 734 385
- v. Wilkison, 36 Mo. App. 373 472
- v. Wisniewski, 13 N. D., 102 N. W. 883 409
- v. Wrightsville & T. R. Co. 104 Ga. 437, 30 S. E. 891 122
- v. Young, 55 Kan. 349, 40 Pac. 659 183
- State ex rel. Prout v. Altken, 62 Neb. 428, 27 N. W. 153 452
- Runge v. Anderson, 100 Wis. 523, 42 L. R. A. 239, 76 N. W. 482, 186
- Smith v. Anderson, 26 Fla. 240, 8 So. 1 187
- Milwaukee Street R. Co. v. Anderson, 90 Wis. 550, 63 N. W. 746 459
- Weiss v. District Board, 76 Wis. 177, 7 L. R. A. 330, 20 Am. St. Rep. 41, 44 N. W. 967 597, 508
- Nolan v. District Court, 22 Mont. 25, 55 Pac. 916 179
- Breckenridge v. Fleming (Neb.) 97 N. W. 1063 452
- Matthews v. Forsythe, 147 Ind. 466, 33 L. R. A. 221, 44 N. E. 503 885
- Atty. Gen. v. Greenville Bldg. & Sav. Asso. 29 Ohio St. 92 419
- Bradford v. Hamilton, 40 Kan. 323, 19 Pac. 723 225
- Atty. Gen. v. Interstate Sav. Invest. Co. 64 Ohio St. 283, 52 L. R. A. 530, 83 Am. St. Rep. 754, 60 N. E. 220 508
- Poe v. Jones, 51 Ohio St. 492, 37 N. E. 945 814
- Kellogg v. Kansas Mercantile Asso. 45 Kan. 351, 11 L. R. A. 430, 23 Am. St. Rep. 727, 25 Pac. 984 507
- Shriver v. Kurr, 64 Neb. 514, 90 N. W. 298 453
- Robb v. Kiowa County, 41 Kan. 630, 21 Pac. 601 225
- Terre Haute v. Kolseem, 130 Ind. 434, 14 L. R. A. 566, 29 N. E. 595 879, 883
- Batz v. Lewis, 118 Wis. 432, 95 N. W. 388 81

Toomey v. Eureka Iron & Steel Works, 89 Mich. 249, 50 N. W. 850.....	760
Townsend v. State, 147 Ind. 624, 37 L. R. A. 294, 62 Am. St. Rep. 477, 47 N. E. 19.....	881
Trainer v. Seymour, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 674, 32 S. W. 154.....	263
Trammell v. Harrell, 4 Ark. 602.....	99, 100
Trask v. Weeks, 81 Me. 325, 17 Atl. 162.....	267
Trueman v. Loder, 11 Ad. & El. 589.....	630
Tuck v. Priester [1887] L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 639.....	109
Tuff v. Warman, 5 C. B. N. S. 573.....	298, 299
Tully v. Com. 13 Bush. 142.....	275
Turnan v. White, 14 B. Mon. 560.....	960
Turnage v. Kenton, 102 Tenn. 328, 52 S. W. 174.....	741
Turner v. Goodrich, 26 Vt. 707.....	240
v. Bevere Water Co. 171 Mass. 329, 40 L. R. A. 657, 68 Am. St. Rep. 432, 50 N. E. 634.....	311
Tuttle v. State, 1 Tex. App. 364.....	118
Twin-Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 587, 23 L. ed. 328.....	141, 147, 149
Tyler v. Guthrie, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1193, 33 S. W. 934.....	37

U

Union Bank & T. Co. v. Fred. W. Wolf Co. (Tenn.) 86 S. W. 310.....	896
Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Duvall, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 441, 46 S. W. 518.....	266
Union Nat. Bank v. Chapman, 169 N. Y. 538, 57 L. R. A. 513, 88 Am. St. Rep. 614, 62 N. E. 672.....	872
v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. ed. 188.....	973
v. Pinner, 25 N. J. Eq. 495.....	237, 239
Union P. R. Co. v. Daniels, 152 U. S. 684, 38 L. ed. 597, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 756.....	938
v. O'Brien, 161 U. S. 451, 40 L. ed. 766, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 618.....	759
Union Selling Co. v. Jones, 63 C. C. A. 224, 128 Fed. 672.....	978
Union Street R. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 42 Or. 606, 72 Pac. 586, 73 Pac. 341.....	480, 483
United Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 47 L. R. A. 450, 27 C. C. A. 42, 53 U. S. App. 517, 82 Fed. 406.....	240
United States v. Alexander, 148 U. S. 186, 37 L. ed. 415, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 529.....	731
v. Behan, 110 U. S. 338, 28 L. ed. 168, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 81.....	150, 157
v. California & O. Land Co. 192 U. S. 355, 48 L. ed. 476, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 266.....	482
v. Cooper, 9 Mackey, 104.....	754
v. Gettysburg Electric R. Co. 160 U. S. 688, 40 L. ed. 576, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427.....	726, 754
v. Great Falls Mfg. Co. 112 U. S. 645, 28 L. ed. 846, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306.....	731
v. Nagle, 17 Blatchf. 258, Fed. Cas. No. 15,852.....	473
v. Olney, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 275, Fed. Cas. No. 15,918.....	508
v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 68, 25 L. ed. 96.....	274
v. Tidball, 3 Ariz. 384, 29 Pac. 385.....	576
v. Truesdell, 148 U. S. 196, 37 L. ed. 419, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 532.....	731
v. Tureaud, 20 Fed. 621.....	469, 471
v. Union P. R. Co. 91 U. S. 72, 23 L. ed. 224.....	231
v. Weld, 1 Kan. Dasser's ed. 21 Appx.....	178, 179
v. Worrall, 2 Dall. 384, 1 L. ed. 426, Fed. Cas. No. 16,766.....	181
United States ex rel. D. & N. O. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 16 Fed. 853.....	314
United States Nat. Bank v. Floss, 38 Or. 68, 84 Am. St. Rep. 752, 62 Pac. 751.....	245
United States Steel Corp. v. Hodge, 64 N. J. Eq. 807, 60 L. R. A. 742, 54 Atl. 1.....	142, 150
Usell v. Hartford Life & Annuity Ins. Co. 32 Fed. 443.....	240
U. R. A.

V

Vallo v. United States Exp. Co. 147 Pa. 404, 14 L. R. A. 743, 30 Am. St. Rep. 741, 23 Atl. 594.....	802
Van Buren v. Diggles, 11 How. 461, 13 L. ed. 711.....	238
v. St. Joseph County Village F. Ins. Co. 28 Mich. 398.....	926
Van Buskirk v. Day, 32 Ill. 260.....	241
Vanderwiele v. Taylor, 65 N. Y. 341.....	628
Van Epps v. Harrison, 5 Hill, 63, 40 Am. Dec. 314.....	412, 414
Van Grutten v. Foxwell [1897] A. C. 668.....	965
Van Voorhies v. Brintnall, 86 N. Y. 18, 40 Am. Rep. 505.....	494
Varner v. State, 72 Ga. 745.....	408
Vausse v. Russel, 2 M'Cord, L. 329.....	739
Venice v. Murdock, 92 U. S. 494, 23 L. ed. 583.....	289
Vermont Loan & T. Co. v. Whithed, 2 N. D. 83, 49 N. W. 318.....	422
Vernon v. Wright, 7 H. L. Cas. 35.....	966
Vick v. Gower, 92 Tenn. 391, 21 S. W. 677.....	366
v. Percy, 7 Smedes & M. 256, 45 Am. Dec. 303.....	239
Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 119 U. S. 99, 30 L. ed. 299, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 118.....	717, 718
Vidal v. Philadelphia, 2 How. 127, 11 L. ed. 205.....	595
Vinal v. Dorchester, 7 Gray, 421.....	620
Vinson v. Platt, 21 Ga. 135.....	98
Vinton v. Baldwin, 95 Ind. 433.....	886
Vogel v. Leichner, 102 Ind. 55, 1 N. E. 554.....	873
Vorce v. Rosenbury, 12 Neb. 448, 11 N. W. 879.....	241
Voting Machine, Re, 19 R. I. 729, 36 L. R. A. 547, 36 Atl. 716.....	187
Vulkevicch v. Skinner, 77 Cal. 239, 19 Pac. 424.....	828

W

Wabash & W. R. Co. v. Morgan, 132 Ind. 438, 31 N. E. 663, 32 N. E. 85.....	886, 887
Wabash R. Co. v. Speer, 156 Ill. 244, 40 N. E. 835.....	612
Wadleigh v. Janvrin, 41 N. H. 503, 77 Am. Dec. 780.....	903
v. Marathon County Bank, 58 Wis. 546, 17 N. W. 314.....	744
Wafer v. Mocato, 9 Mod. 112.....	857
Wagner v. Baird, 7 How. 234, 12 L. ed. 681.....	242
v. Bissell, 3 Iowa, 396.....	958, 962
v. Ziegler, 44 Ohio St. 59, 4 N. E. 705.....	426
Wald v. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 162 Ill. 545, 35 L. R. A. 356, 53 Am. St. Rep. 332, 44 N. E. 888.....	512
Walker, Re, 110 Cal. 387, 30 L. R. A. 460, 52 Am. St. Rep. 104, 42 Pac. 815.....	427
Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555.....	96
v. Dunham, 17 Ind. 483.....	883
v. Hall, 34 Pa. 483.....	943, 951
v. Tucker, 70 Ill. 527.....	182
v. Vincent, 19 Pa. 369.....	957
v. Walker, 82 N. Y. 260.....	313
v. Willson, 13 Wis. 522.....	237, 239
Wall v. Platt, 169 Mass. 398, 48 N. E. 270.....	890
Wallace v. Georgia, C. & N. R. Co. 94 Ga. 732, 22 S. E. 579.....	105
Walla Walla v. Walla Walla Water Co. 172 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 341, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77.....	721
Walls v. Home Ins. Co. 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1452, 71 S. W. 850.....	266
Walsh v. Russell, 6 Bing. 169.....	884
Wamsley v. Hunter, 29 La. Ann. 628.....	237
Warburton v. White, 176 U. S. 484, 44 L. ed. 555, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 404.....	289
Ward v. State, 17 Ohio St. 32.....	118
Ware v. City Bank, 59 Ga. 844.....	98
Warner v. Gunnison, 2 Colo. App. 430, 31 Pac. 238.....	753
v. Helden, 28 Wis. 517, 9 Am. Rep. 515.....	832

- Warren v. Bangor. O. & O. R. Co. 95 Me. 115, 49 Atl. 609..... 303
 v. Britton, 84 Ind. 14..... 882
 v. Crane, 50 Mich. 300, 15 N. W. 465 240
 v. Wells, 1 Met. 80..... 99
- Washington County Abstract Co. v. Stewart (Idaho) 74 Pac. 955..... 229
- Washington Ice Co. v. Webster, 68 Me. 449..... 291
- Washington L. Ins. Co. v. Miles, 112 Ky. 743, 66 S. W. 740..... 268
 Washington Park, Re. 52 N. Y. 137..... 754
- Watauga Water Co. v. Scott, 111 Tenn. 321, 76 S. W. 889..... 754
- Waterhouse v. Martin, Peck (Tenn.) 374..... 175
- Watermolen v. Fox River Electric R. & Power Co. 110 Wis. 153, 85 N. W. 663..... 610
- Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. New Iberia, 47 La. Ann. 863, 17 So. 343..... 278
- Watkins v. State, 68 Ind. 427, 34 Am. Rep. 273..... 275
- Watson v. Oxanna Land Co. 92 Ala. 320, 8 So. 770..... 986
- Watt v. Smith, 89 Cal. 602, 26 Pac. 1071..... 832
- Watts v. Camora, 115 U. S. 353, 29 L. ed. 406, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 91..... 157
 v. Creighton, 85 Iowa, 154, 52 N. W. 12..... 252
 v. Equitable Mut. Life Assn. 111 Iowa, 90, 82 N. W. 441..... 973
- Way v. Bragaw, 16 N. J. Eq. 214, 84 Am. Dec. 147..... 498
- Weakland v. Hoffman, 50 Pa. 513, 88 Am. Dec. 560..... 238
- Weed v. London & L. F. Ins. Co. 116 N. Y. 106, 22 N. E. 229..... 282
- Weeks v. McNulty, 101 Tenn. 499, 43 L. R. A. 185, 70 Am. St. Rep. 693, 48 S. W. 809..... 649, 654, 658
- Wegner v. Second Ward Sav. Bank, 76 Wis. 242, 44 N. W. 1086..... 337
- Wells v. Hill, 118 N. C. 900, 24 S. E. 771 263
- Wells, F. & Co. v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 9 Sawy. 601, 19 Fed. 20..... 314
- Wendell v. New York, C. & H. R. R. Co. 91 N. Y. 429..... 304
- Werner v. Popp (Minn.) 102 N. W. 306..... 625, 628
- Wescott v. Blinford, 104 Iowa, 645, 65 Am. St. Rep. 530, 74 N. W. 18..... 960, 961
- West v. Averill Grocery Co. 109 Iowa, 488, 80 N. W. 555..... 971
 v. Flemming, 18 Ill. 248, 68 Am. Dec. 539..... 498
 v. Lanier, 9 Humph. 771..... 744
- West Cambridge v. Lexington, 1 Pick. 506, 11 Am. Dec. 231..... 494
- West Chicago Park v. Western U. Tele. Co. 103 Ill. 33..... 754
- West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Schwartz, 93 Ill. App. 387..... 190
- Western Paving & Supply Co. v. Citizen's Street R. Co. 25 Am. St. Rep. 477..... 305, 439
- Western Transp. Co. v. Scheu, 19 N. Y. 408
- Western U. Tele. Co. v. Rubanks, 100 Ky. 604, 36 L. R. A. 711, 66 Am. St. Rep. 361, 38 S. W. 1008..... 268
 v. James, 162 U. S. 650, 40 L. ed. 1105, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934..... 713
- Westminster v. Shipley, 68 Md. 610, 13 Atl. 365..... 913
- Westmoreland Coal Co.'s Appeal, 85 Pa. 344..... 991
- West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 6 How. 507, 12 L. ed. 535..... 728
- Wetzstein v. Largey, 27 Mont. 212, 70 Pac. 717..... 582
- Wheat v. Dotson, 12 Ark. 699..... 236
- Wheatley v. Baugh, 25 Pa. 528, 64 Am. Dec. 721..... 466
- Wheaton Roller-Mill Co. v. John T. Noye Mfg. Co. 66 Minn. 156, 68 N. W. 854..... 976
- Wheelahan v. Philadelphia Traction Co. 150 Pa. 187, 24 Atl. 688..... 192
- Wheeler v. Reynolds, 66 N. Y. 227..... 570, 571
- Wheeler & Mfg. Co. v. Howard, 28 Fed. 741..... 252
- White v. Adams, 77 Iowa, 295, 42 N. W. 199..... 976
 v. Griffling, 44 Conn. 437..... 722
 v. Ladd, 41 Or. 324, 93 Am. St. Rep. 732, 68 Pac. 739..... 482
- White v. Northwestern North Carolina R. Co. 113 N. C. 610, 22 L. R. A. 627, 37 Am. St. Rep. 639, 18 S. E. 330..... 634, 635
 v. Stretch, 22 N. J. Eq. 76..... 237, 239
 v. Worcester Consol. Street R. Co. 167 Mass. 43, 44 N. E. 1052 304
- Whitfield v. Whitfield, 44 Miss. 254..... 289
- Whitten v. Tomlinson, 160 U. S. 231, 40 L. ed. 406, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 297..... 496
 v. Whitten, 3 Cush. 199..... 364
- Whittier v. Cocheco Mfg. Co. 9 N. H. 454, 32 Am. Dec. 382..... 935
- Wickham, Re. L. R. 35 Ch. Div. 272..... 313
 v. State, 7 Coldw. 525..... 293
- Wilkes v. King, 4 Bro. P. C. 360..... 469, 472
- Wilkins v. Hogue, 55 N. C. (2 Jones, Eq.) 479..... 239
- Wilkinson v. Parish, 3 Paige, 653..... 398
- Willett v. People, 27 Hun, 469..... 409
- Wm. Glenn Glass Co. v. Taylor, 99 Ky. 24, 34 S. W. 711..... 872, 874
- Williams v. Bacon, 2 Gray. 387..... 630
 v. Bemis, 108 Mass. 91, 11 Am. Rep. 318..... 158
 v. Greene, Cro. Eliz. pt. 2 P. 884..... 580
 v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 40 Ia. Ann. 421, 8 Am. St. Rep. 538, 4 So. 85..... 657
 v. Stein, 38 Ind. 90, 10 Am. Rep. 97
 v. Triplett, 3 Iowa, 518..... 973
- Williamson v. Michigan F. & M. Ins. Co. 86 Wis. 393, 39 Am. St. Rep. 906, 57 N. W. 46..... 926
 v. New Jersey Southern R. Co. 29 N. J. Eq. 311..... 897
- Willington v. West Boylston, 4 Pick. 101..... 132
- Willis v. Erie Tele. & Teleph. Co. 37 Minn. 347, 34 N. W. 337..... 636
 Wilson v. Bates, 3 Myl. & C. 197..... 313
 v. Chippewa Valley Electric R. Co. 120 Wis. 636, 66 L. R. A. 912, 98 N. W. 536..... 609, 611, 614
 v. Cochran, 46 Pa. 229, 237, 238, 762
 v. Hakes, 36 Ill. App. 547..... 927
 v. Hart, 7 Taunt. 295..... 630
 v. McQueen, 1 Head. 17..... 739
 v. New United States Cattle Ranch Co. 20 C. C. A. 244, 36 U. S. App. 634, 73 Fed. 994..... 978
 v. Pennsylvania Trust Co. 52 C. C. A. 374, 114 Fed. 742..... 721
 v. Perrin, 11 C. C. A. 66, 22 U. S. App. 514, 62 Fed. 629, 289.
 v. Willmantic Linen Co. 50 Conn. 433, 47 Am. Rep. 653..... 939
 v. Wilson, 145 Mass. 492, 1 Am. St. Rep. 477, 14 N. E. 521..... 922, 923
- Wiltshire Iron Co., Re. L. R. 3 Ch. 443..... 134
- Wimberg v. Schwegeman, 97 Ind. 529..... 239
- Winchester v. Hinsdale, 12 Conn. 88..... 175
 v. Howard, 97 Mass. 303, 93 Am. Dec. 93..... 630
- Winder v. Caldwell, 14 How. 434, 14 L. ed. 487..... 237
- Winstanley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 72 Wis. 375, 39 N. W. 856..... 664
- Wineland's Appeal, 118 Pa. 37, 4 Am. St. Rep. 571, 12 Atl. 301..... 427
- Winstead, Ex parte, 92 N. C. 703..... 992
- Winter v. Central Iowa R. Co. 80 Iowa, 443, 45 N. W. 737..... 985
- Winters v. Duluth, 82 Minn. 127, 84 N. W. 788..... 890
 v. Halner, 107 Tenn. 337, 64 S. W. 44..... 741
- Winston v. Salem, 131 N. C. 404, 42 S. E. 889..... 443, 444
- Wisconsin Red Pressed-Brick Co. v. Hood, 54 Minn. 545, 56 N. W. 165..... 976
- Wise v. Adair, 50 Iowa, 104..... 263
- Wiseman v. Lucksinger, 84 N. Y. 31, 38 Am. Rep. 479..... 570
- Wiser v. Blachly, 2 Johns. Ch. 489..... 398
- Wistow's Case of Gary's Inn. 14 Hen. VIII, cited in 11 Coke 506..... 903
- Withers v. Greene, 9 How. 214, 13 L. ed. 109..... 238
- Witherspoon v. Musselman, 14 Bush, 214, 29 Am. Rep. 404..... 269
- Witthaus v. Zimmerman, 91 App. Div. 202, 11 Am. Bankr. Rep. 314, 86 N. Y. Supp. 315..... 700
- Wogan v. Small, 11 Serg. & R. 141..... 951

Wolf v. American Exp. Co. 43 Mo. 421, 97 Am. Dec. 406.....	311	Wyhddon's Case, Cro. Eliz. pt. 2, p. 520.....	580
Wolfe v. Howes, 24 Barb. 174.....	132	Wyman v. Hallowell & A. Bank, 14 Mass. 58, 7 Am. Dec. 194.....	258
Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U. S. 135, 25 L. ed. 807.....	242	Wynne v. Wynne, 9 Irelsk. 309.....	377
v. Leadbitter, 13 Mees. & W. 838, 16 English Ruling Cases, 54.....	570	Y
v. Michigan Air Line R. Co. 90 Mich. 334, 51 N. W. 263.....	571	Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. ed. 984.....	932
Woodbury Sav. Bank & Bldg. Asso. v. Charter Oak F. & M. Ins. Co. 29 Conn. 374.....	925	Yerrington v. Greene, 7 R. I. 589, 84 Am. Dec. 578.....	132
Woodford v. Hamilton, 139 Ind. 481, 39 N. E. 47.....	885	Young v. Hart, 101 Va. 480, 44 S. E. 703.....	873
Woodman v. Pease, 17 N. H. 282.....	897, 904	v. Leedon, 67 Pa. 351.....	628
Woods v. Harris, 5 Blackf. 585.....	99	v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 107 N. C. 370, 9 L. R. A. 609, 22 Am. St. Rep. 883, 11 S. E. 1044.....	404
v. McCay, 144 Ind. 316, 33 L. R. A. 97, 43 N. E. 269.....	879	Young's Appeal, 39 Pa. 115, 80 Am. Dec. 513.....	942, 945, 946, 951
Woodworth v. Spring, 4 Allen. 321.....	496	Youngman v. Linn, 52 Pa. 413.....	237
Woodridge v. State, 13 Tex. App. 443, 44 Am. Rep. 708.....	205	Yovatt v. Wingard (1820) 1 Jac. & W. 394.....	109
Worsley v. Wood, 6 T. R. 710.....	132	Z
Worth v. Carmichael, 114 Ga. 699, 40 S. E. 797.....	484	Zabriskie v. Hackensack & N. Y. R. Co. 18 N. J. Eq. 178, 90 Am. Dec. 617.....	469
Worthington v. Warrington, 8 C. B. 134.....	767	Zacher v. Fidelity Trust & S. V. Co. 45 C. C. A. 480, 106 Fed. 593.....	289, 290
Wray v. Wray, 33 Ala. 187.....	832	Zavitz v. Preston, 96 Iowa, 52, 64 N. W. 668.....	960, 961
Wright v. Chicago, & N. W. R. Co. 27 Ill. App. 212.....	248	Zenith Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Helmbach, 77 Minn. 97, 79 N. W. 809.....	421
v. Gardner, 98 Ky. 454, 33 S. W. 622, 35 S. W. 1116.....	268	Zimmerman v. So Kelle, 25 C. C. A. 518, 49 U. S. App. 387, 80 Fed. 417.....	243
v. Kelley, 4 Idaho, 624, 43 Pac. 565.....	227	Zuver v. Lyons, 40 Iowa, 510.....	959
v. Pipe Line Co. 101 Pa. 204, 47 Am. Rep. 701.....	973
v. Remington, 41 N. J. L. 48, 32 Am. Rep. 180.....	872, 875
Wuesthoff v. Germania L. Ins. Co. 107 N. Y. 580, 14 N. E. 811.....	497

STATUTES AND CONSTITUTIONS CITED, CONSTRUED, ETC.

England.

Statutes.

3 & 9 Wm. III. chap. 11, § 8. Forfeiture of bonds.....	869
13 Edw. I. chap. 2, § 3. Replevin.....	289
3 Hen. VII. chap. 1. Jurisdiction of court of star chamber.....	470
11 Hen. VII. chap. 3. Offenses against statutes.....	470
21 Jac. I. chap. 16. Statute of limitations.....	251
4 & 5 Wm. & Mary, chaps. 11, 18. Information.....	470
2 Geo. II. chap. 27, § 13. Set-off.....	98
1 Geo. II. chap. 28. Landlord and tenant.....	869
22 & 23 Vict. chap. 10, § 4. Relief for breach of covenant to insure.....	860
44 & 45 Vict. chap. 41, § 14. Relief for breach of covenant.....	869

United States.

Constitution.

Art. 1, § 10. Impairment of obligation of contracts.....	560
Amend. 4. Searches and seizures.....	278, 470
Amend. 5. Compensation for property taken.....	278, 729
Amend. 14. Equal protection of the laws.....	278, 468, 473, 560, 672, 751, 814, 880

Statutes.

1857, March 3. Management of property by receivers.....	713
1868, Aug. 1, chap. 728. Condemnation of land for building sites.....	725
1868, Aug. 13, chap. 866. Management of property by receivers.....	713
40 L. R. A.

1898, July 1, chap. 541. Bankruptcy act.....	720, 779
1893, Feb. 13, chap. 105, p. 445. Bills of lading.....	72

Revised Statutes.

§ 721. Laws of states to be rules of decisions.....	712
§ 4403. Officers and crew of passenger steamers.....	75
§ 4493. Liability of master for damages to passenger.....	75

Statutes at Large.

Vol. 24, p. 554. Management of property by receivers.....	713
Vol. 25, p. 357. Condemnation of land for building sites.....	725
Vol. 25, p. 433. Management of property by receivers.....	713
Vol. 30, pp. 544, 547. Bankruptcy.....	780
Vol. 30, p. 550. Bankruptcy act.....	779
Vol. 30, pp. 562, 563. Bankruptcy act.....	720

Compiled Statutes, 1901.

P. 581. Laws of states to be rules of decision.....	712
P. 582. Management of property by receivers.....	713
F. 2516. Condemnation of land for building sites.....	725
P. 3045. Officers and crew of passenger steamers.....	75
P. 3058. Liability of master for damage to passenger.....	75
PP. 3418-3424. Bankruptcy.....	780
PP. 3427, 3428. Bankruptcy act.....	779
P. 3447. Bankruptcy act.....	721

Arkansas.

Constitution, 1874, Schedule.

§ 1. Distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments.....	826
---	-----

Revised Statutes.
Chap. 139, p. 726. Set-off	99

California.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 16. Impairment of obligation of contracts	560
Art. 3. Distribution of powers	538
Art. 4, § 2. Time for sessions of legislature	550
Art. 4, § 9. Expulsion of member of legislature	538
Art. 4, § 35. Bribery of member of legislature	560
Art. 5, § 9. Call for extra sessions of legislature	550

Code of Civil Procedure.

§ 556. Discharge of attachment	71
§ 690, subdiv. 18. Property exempt from execution	68
§ 1465. Exempt property set apart for use of wife	68
§ 1875, subdiv. 3. Judicial knowledge	559

Connecticut.General Statutes, 1902.

§ 797. Evidence and rulings part of record	562
§ 802. Action of supreme court on appeals	335

District of Columbia.Revised Statutes.

§ 222. Prohibiting occupation of streets ..	85
§ 225. Setting aside portions of streets as parks	85
§ 226. Removal of obstructions from streets	85
§ 227. Institution of suits	85
§ 229. Penalty for obstruction	85

Florida.Constitution.

Art. 6, § 6. Voting by ballot	186
-------------------------------------	-----

Georgia.Statutes.

1898, p. 131. Charter of Augusta	567
--	-----

Prince's Digest.

P. 425. Set-off	100
-----------------------	-----

Code, 1863.

§ 2842. Set-off	101
-----------------------	-----

Code, 1868.

§ 2850. Set-off	100
§ 3746, 3747. Set-off of mutual demands and debts	98
§ 3754. Effect of dismissal after filing set-off	101
§ 3807. Defining torts	107
§ 4929. For every right a remedy	103
§ 4970. Dismissal of petition	101
§ 5112. Liberty of speech	107
§ 5113. Searches and warrants	106
§ 6014. Freedom of the press	107
§ 6017. Searches and seizures	106

Political Code.

§ 745. Use of streets	566
-----------------------------	-----

Penal Code.

§ 401. Gaming	118
---------------------	-----

Idaho.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 1. Inalienable rights of people	223
Art. 1, § 2. Special privileges and immunities	223
Art. 18, § 1. Counties of state	222
Art. 18, § 2. Removal of county seat	222
Art. 18, § 3. Division of counties	222
Art. 18, § 4. Establishment of new county	222

Art. 18, § 5. County governments under legislative control	223
--	-----

Session Laws.

1891, March 3. Creation of Alta and Lincoln counties	226
1903, p. 346. Control of separate property by wife	588
1905, Feb. 28. Abolishment of county	221

Revised Statutes, 1887.

§ 2921, 2922. Protection of homesteads	587
§ 3040. Conveyance of homestead	587
§ 3041. Abandonment of homestead	587
§ 4427. Exceptions	587
§ 6007. Statute of frauds	570, 588
§ 6008. Statute of frauds	588

Illinois.Hurd's Revised Statutes, 1903.

Chap. 38, p. 670, § 273. Punishment for attempt to commit offense	182
Chap. 68, § 6. Contracts of married women	571

Indiana.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 23. Exclusive privileges forbidden	421, 580
Art. 4, § 19. Act to embrace but one subject	579
Art. 4, § 22. Prohibiting passage of special laws	421, 579
Art. 4, § 23. Laws to be uniform	579

Statutes.

§ 5206-5206v. Employers' liability act ..	579
---	-----

Revised Statutes, 1881.

§ 3407. Building associations	421
-------------------------------------	-----

Burns's Revised Statutes, 1904.

§ 7083-7087. Employers' liability act ..	579
--	-----

Horner's Revised Statutes, 1897.

§ 5206-5206v. Employers' liability act ..	579
---	-----

Burns's Annotated Statutes, 1901.

§ 6904. Contracts of married women	571
---	-----

Iowa.Code.

§ 1307. Employer's liability act	581
§ 1824. Regulation of insurance company ..	173
§ 2901. Suspension of power of controlling property	967
§ 3061. Written tender of stock	971
§ 3456. Revivor of causes of action	262

Kansas.Statutes.

1857-58, chap. 13, p. 195. Local prosecutors	179
1801, chap. 58, p. 216. Duty of attorney general	179
1809, chap. 43, p. 128. Bribery statutes ..	180
General Statutes, 1868.
PP. 283, 284, §§ 135-137. Prosecuting attorney	179

General Statutes, 1889.

§ 6873. Taxation of railway property ...	470
--	-----

General Statutes, 1901

§ 2212. Punishment for accepting bribe ..	181
§ 2284. Attempt to bribe	181
§ 5540. Signing indictments	179
§ 7271. Duty of attorney general	179

Kentucky.Constitution.

§ 5. Compulsory worship	592
§ 11. Rights of accused in criminal prosecutions	273
§ 59. Forbidding passage of special acts	269
§ 110. Jurisdiction of court of appeals ..	272
§ 159. Tax for educational purposes	592
§ 196. Common carriers' liability	268

Statutes.

1796 (1 Stat. Laws, 530). Trial of accessory to murder ...	275
--	-----

Statutes, 1903.

§ 700. Liability of insurer	268
§ 1128. Crimes and punishments	275
§ 1147. Prosecution of offense	273
§ 2514. Statute of limitations	270
§ 4368. Use of sectarian book in common schools	592

Criminal Code of Practice.

§ 3. Repeal of laws	275
§ 21, 24. Jurisdiction of offense	273

Louisiana.Constitution, 1898.

Art. 1. Origin and end of government ..	278
Art. 2. Due process of law	278
Art. 166. Prohibiting ex post facto laws ..	278
Art. 167. Compensation for property taken	278

Statutes.

1898, No. 136, p. 232. Powers of mayor and aldermen	278
---	-----

Civil Code.

Art. 497. Ownership of property	278
---------------------------------------	-----

Maryland.Constitution, 1851.

Art. 3, § 22. Forbidding the loaning of credit of state	916
Art. 3, § 42. Transfer of stock in improvement company ..	919

Constitution, 1867.

Art. 3, § 34. State not to give or loan credit	915
Art. 3, § 54. County not to give or loan credit	918
Art. 7, § 1. Powers of county commissioners	917
Art. 12, § 3. Sale of state's interest by board of public works	919

Statutes.

1774, chap. 21. Money loaned for public roads	916
1842, 1843, chap. 301. Sale of state's interest in internal improvement companies	916
1868, chap. 454, p. 880. Aid for construction of internal improvements	918
1878, chap. 158, p. 266. Repair of national road by counties	920
1898, chap. 51. State commission	915
1904, chap. 225, p. 388. State aid for the construction of roads	915

Code of Public Local Laws.

Art. 4, § 170. Time of signing bills of exception	909
Art. 5, § 6. Appeals from orders of orphan's courts	914
Art. 5, § 7. Appeals under insolvent laws ..	914
Art. 66, § 8. Notice of sales	914

Code of Public General Laws.

Art. 25. Powers of county commissioners ..	917
--	-----

69 L. R. A.

Massachusetts.Declaration of Rights.

Art. 10. Compensation for property taken ..	820
---	-----

Statutes.

1882, chap. 154, pp. 111-113. Damages for land taken	315
1891, chap. 370, p. 949. Establishment of gas and electric plants	79
1895, chap. 488, p. 573. Compensation for destruction of established business ..	599
1896, chap. 450, p. 444. Compensation to employees	600
1897, chap. 445, p. 429. Compensation for damages	600
1898, chap. 551, p. 666. Compensation for damages	600
1900, chap. 196, p. 138. Abandonment of land taken	315
1901, chap. 503, p. 451. Compensation for damages	600
1902, chap. 373, p. 289. Approval of acquisition of land by United States	725
1903, chap. 158, p. 121. Rules of park commission	818

Public Statutes, 1882.

Chap. 150, § 8. Reservation of questions of law	313
Chap. 191, § 46. Mechanic's lien	499

Revised Statutes.

Chap. 25, § 1. Highways	619
Chap. 150, § 7. Reservation of questions of law	313
Chap. 203, § 11. Payment of costs before second suit	313

Michigan.Constitution.

Art. 4, § 11. Voting at elections	186
Art. 6, § 26. Forbidding unreasonable searches	349
Art. 6, § 32. Testimony of person against himself	349
Art. 7, § 2. Voting by ballot	185
Art. 14, § 11. Uniform taxation	430

Statutes.

1893, No. 206, p. 358. Tax law	434
1895, No. 229, p. 520. Taxation of corporate property ..	435
1897, No. 61, p. 71. Use of voting machine	186
1903, No. 234, p. 383. Use of voting machine	186

Compiled Laws, 1897.

§ 3441. Duty of municipality to keep streets safe	619
§§ 3750-3758. Use of voting machine	186
§ 3834. Taxation of corporate property ..	434
§§ 11, 344, chap. 316. Lotteries	507
§§ 11, 795. Punishment of common law offenses	183

Minnesota.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 2. Rights of citizens	672
Art. 1, § 7. Rights of accused	672

Laws.

1887, chap. 13. Fellow-servant act	889
1899, chap. 225, p. 246. Returns by commission merchants ..	670

General Statutes, 1894.

§ 2701. Fellow-servant act	889
----------------------------------	-----

Missouri.Constitution, 1875.

Art. 2, § 11. Issuance of warrant without probable cause ...	471
--	-----

Statutes.

1899, p. 382. Prosecution of felonies	471
Revised Statutes, 1879.
§ 1253. Rape	182
§ 1645. Attempt to commit offense	182
Revised Statutes, 1899.
§ 2477. Informations	386
§ 2481. Prosecution by information	386
§ 2535. Indictments when not invalid	387

Nebraska.Constitution.

Art. 8, § 11. Sectarian instruction in schools	598
Art. 9, § 1. Taxation to be uniform	454
Art. 9, § 6. Taxation for corporate purposes	454

Compiled Statutes, 1901.

Chap. 12a, § 98. Tax commissioner	451
Chap. 77, art. 1, §§ 39, 40. Taxation of railway property ..	451

Cobbey's Annotated States, 1903.

§ 7547. Omaha Charter; tax commissioner	451
Chap. 49. Revenue act	447
§§ 10,484-10,486. Revenue act	455

New Hampshire.Statutes.

Ed. 1815, p. 191, § 3. Regulation of contracts for sale of land	631
---	-----

Public Statutes, 1901.

Chap. 215, § 1. Regulation of contracts for sale of land	631
--	-----

New Jersey.Constitution.

Art. 1, Par. 16. Compensation for property taken	769
--	-----

Statutes.

1901, chap. 161 (P. L. p. 333). Right of fishery in private lake	768
--	-----

General Statutes.

Vol. 2, p. 1603, § 5. Memorandum of agreement for lease	396
---	-----

New York.Constitution.

Art. 3, § 16. Bills to embrace but one subject	756
--	-----

Statutes.

1850, chap. 140, p. 232. Duty to signal at crossings	685
1884, chap. 522, p. 625. Park act.	756

North Dakota.Revised Codes, 1899.

§ 3836. Requisites of contract	411
§ 3841-3844. Consent to contract	411
§ 3848. "Actual fraud" defined	411
§ 3934. Affirmance of contract	411
§ 3941. Liability for wilful deceit	411
§ 3942. Actionable deceit	411
§ 4996. Damages for breach of promise of marriage	414
§ 4997. Measure of damages for breach of obligation	411
§ 5003. Damages for seduction	414
§ 5004. Damages for injury to animals ..	414
§ 5014. Recovery of damages	414
60 L. R. A.

Ohio.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 1. Inalienable rights	429
Art. 1, § 2. Object of government ..	431
Art. 1, § 16. Courts to be open	814
Art. 1, § 18. Compensation for property taken	813
Art. 2, § 26. General laws to be uniform ..	420, 714
Art. 10, § 7. Exercise of police powers ..	811

Statutes.

1867, Feb. 21 (64 Ohio Laws, p. 18). Building and loan association	418
1868, May 5. Building and loan associations	419
1868, May 9. Building and loan associations	419
1890, April 2 (87 Ohio Laws, p. 149). Protection of railroad employees	709
1891, May 1 (88 Ohio Laws, p. 469). Building and loan associations	419
94 Ohio Laws, p. 142. Cleansing of drainage ditches	812
1902, April 15 (95 Ohio Laws, p. 155). Cleansing of drainage ditch	800
1904, April 20 (97 Ohio Laws, 182). Giving of surety bonds	429
1904, April 22 (97 Ohio Laws, p. 262). Contracts for cleaning ditch	812

Revised Statutes, 1892.

§ 3841c. Giving of surety bonds	429
§ 4491. Ditch laws	814
§ 4500. Public water course	810
§ 5848. Jurisdiction of courts to enjoin illegal taxes	814
§ 5916. Wills	425

Bates's Annotated Statutes.

§§ 3836-3, p. 2130. Power of building and loan associations ..	417
--	-----

Oklahoma.Wilson's Revised Annotated Statutes.

§§ 4052-4062. Easements and servitudes ..	463
---	-----

Oregon.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 9. Issuance of warrant without probable cause	469
Art. 7, § 17. Prosecuting attorneys	473
Art. 7, § 18. Jurors	468
Art. 15, § 3. Oath of office	473

Session Laws.

1899, Feb. 17, p. 99. Proceedings by information	474
--	-----

Special Laws.

1903, Dec. 28, p. 32. Appointment of deputies by district attorney	472
--	-----

Bellinger and Cotton's Annotated Codes and Statutes.

§ 788, subdiv. 15. Performance of official duty	469
§ 848. Memorandum to be made by witness	478
§§ 1258-1264. Proceedings by information ..	469
§ 1271. Form of oath of grand jury	469
§ 1304. Form of indictment	469
§ 1581. Defining "information"	471
§ 1584. Examination of informant	471
§ 1585. Issuance of warrant of arrest	471
§ 2502. Oath of office required	473
§ 2927. Appointment of deputies by district attorney	472

Pennsylvania.Statutes.

- 1794, April 19 [3 Smith's Laws, p. 143].
Revocation of wills 951 1851, April 3 (P. L. 327). Opening of streets 791
1879, June 4 (P. L. 88). Wills 950

Rhode Island.Public Laws.

- 1898, 1899, chap. 549, p. 49. Consent of guardian to marriage 493

General Laws, 1896.

- Chap. 196, § 7. Appointment of guardian 493
Chap. 196, § 16. Invalidity of ward's contract 493
Chap. 279, § 65. Observation of street railway tracks.... 190

South Carolina.Constitution.

- Art. 2, § 24. Elections by general assembly 187

South Dakota.Laws.

- 1902, chap. 176, p. 202. Board of Medical examiners 505

Revised Justices' Code.

- §§ 14, 15. Service of summons..... 501

Tennessee.Constitution.

- Art. 1, § 21. Compensation for property taken 751
Art. 2, § 17. Bills to embrace but one subject 751

Statutes.

- 1879, chap. 11, p. 15. Establishment of taxing district.... 752 1899, chap. 142, p. 250. Condemnation of land for park purposes 751

Shannon's Code.

- § 1844. Taking land for internal improvement 755
§ 1845. Petition for appropriation of land 755
§ 1846. Notice of petition 755
§ 1849. Assessment of damages 755
§ 1856. Examination of ground; assessment 755
§ 1857. Estimation of damages 755
69 L. R. A.

- § 1859. Confirmation of report..... 755
§ 1865. Prepayment of damages 755
§ 1866. Suit for damages 755
§ 3531. Mechanic's lien 898
§ 3539. Continuance of lien 898
§ 4456. Estate vests in seven years..... 738
§ 4470. Actions for injuries to property.. 738
§ 5096. Forcible entry and detainer.... 738
§ 5103. Merits of title not inquired into 745
§ 5131. Replevin 286
§ 5144. Judgment for defendant 286
§ 6437. Misdemeanor 293
§ 6786, 6787. Furnishing liquors to minors 292
§ 6789. Punishment for giving liquors to minors 292
§ 7202. Sentence to penitentiary 293
§ 7212. Assessment of fine 293

Texas.Statutes.

- 1840, Jan. 20. Adoption of common law.. 990
Paschal's Digest.
Art. 1870. Indictment for bribery 183
Revised Statutes, 1895.
Art. 1689. Descent and distribution 990
Art. 3258. Adoption of common law..... 990
White's Annotated Code of Criminal Procedure.
§ 766. Practice as to improper argument 200

West Virginia.Code, 1899.

- Chap. 53, § 59. Dissolution of corporation 137
Chap. 54, § 26. Building associations.. 421
Chap. 75, § 8. Lien 129

Wisconsin.Statutes.

- 1899, chap. 245, p. 407. Trustees of county poor 831
Revised Statutes, 1878.
§§ 1045, 1046. Entries on assessment rolls 459
Revised Statutes, 1898.
§ 600. Collection of cost of support of insane persons.... 830 § 600e. Rendition of accounts..... 831 § 604q. Collection of cost of support from estate 830
§§ 1500-1505. Relief and support of poor 831
§ 2668. Pleading 614
§ 2829. Error or defect in pleading 615
§ 2858. Special verdict 617

LAWYERS' REPORTS

ANNOTATED.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

R. B. COWPER, Appt.,

v.

D. B. WEAVER'S ADMINISTRATOR.

(.....Ky.....)

A court order annulling a judicial sale, and directing a resale of the property, without accepting the bid, or directing any proceedings against the bidder, or any confirmation of the sale, relieves him from all liability upon his bid.

(January 10, 1905.)

NOTE.—Relief of purchaser upon annulling judicial or execution sale.

- I. Release from bid, 33.
- II. Release from bid and return of deposit, 36.
- III. Relief by reimbursement or subrogation.
 - a. Generally, 39.
 - b. Reimbursement, 39.
 - c. Subrogation.
 1. Generally, 42.
 2. Out of proceeds of resale, 44.
 - d. Probate, guardians', and administrators' sales.
 1. Guardians' sales, 45.
 2. Administrators' sales, 47.
 - e. Statutory relief, 51.
 - f. Proceedings against nonresidents, 52.
 - g. Fraudulent sales, 53.
- IV. Relief by action against the debtor, 55.
- V. Relief by action against the creditor, 56.
- VI. Relief by action against the sheriff, 58.
- VII. Summary, 58.

I. Release from bid.

It is a necessary result that a purchaser is released from his bid on the sale being set aside. So the converse is also true, and a release from the bid will, in effect, set the sale aside. This rule is only intended to include such cases as show, in effect, that the sales were set aside or treated as invalid. In many cases a resale was had because the purchaser failed to comply with his bid, and proper steps were taken to hold him for a deficiency where the sale was not set aside. The reason for holding him liable is on the theory that his purchase is binding, and he has caused loss by his delinquency. The rule is that where proper steps are not taken to fix the purchaser's liability, and a resale is had, he will be released; and it may be stated that where he is led to believe that the first sale has been abandoned, and another sale is had, he will not be liable. This was the rule adopted 69 L. R. A.

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Livingston County holding him responsible for a bid made at a judicial sale. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hendrick & Miller and J. C. Hodge for appellant.

Messrs. Bush & Wilson and C. C. Grassham for appellee.

Hobson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

D. B. Weaver died a resident of Living-in COWPER v. WEAVER'S ADMR. As to whether or not he may claim release if the sale is not confirmed, the case of COWPER v. WEAVER'S ADMR. holds that he is released, saying: "The purchaser at the first sale was only a preferred bidder until his bid was accepted by the court confirming the sale." But in a case in the United States Supreme Court (Camden v. Mayhew, 129 U. S. 73, 32 L. ed. 608, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 246), he was held not released; but the court offered to confirm the sale if he would pay, and an order was made to fix his liability when the subsequent sale was ordered. Judicial sales differ from execution sales, in that in the former a confirmation is necessary to fix the liability of the purchaser. Some states have a statutory provision for the confirmation of all sales. The purchaser will be released if the conditions in the second sale vary from those in the first sale. If the sale is void the purchaser will be released from his bid (see subdv. III.). He will be released by the court in judicial sales which are set aside on the ground that the title is doubtful (see subdv. II.). He has been released on the ground of poverty.

So, where no notice was given or rule taken against the purchaser at a sheriff's sale, that a resale would be at his risk, he was held justified in regarding his purchase as abandoned. Galpin v. Lamb, 29 Ohio St. 529.

The same was held in Girard L. Ins. Co. v. Young, 8 Phila. 16, the court saying: "Surely if, after such a sale, the property is again put up without any demand on the part of the sheriff or anyone else for the performance of the contract, and without any notice or intimation that the purchaser is to be held responsible for the loss, on a resale, he may fairly infer that his bid is not insisted on, that his compliance with it has been waived."

In Makemson v. Braun, 100 Ky. 88, 37 S. W. 495, the purchaser refused to execute bonds, and the commissioner, without reporting to the ston county, and his administrator brought this suit to sell the land owned by him for the payment of debts, and for the settlement of his estate. At the April term, 1903, a judgment was entered directing a sale of the real estate. The sale was made on June 1st, and at it appellant, R. B. Cowper, bid in lots 67, 68, 69, 70, and a part of lot 17, for $265. After the sale he seems to have concluded that the title of the intestate to the land was not good, and refused to execute a bond for the price. The commissioner on September 9th filed his report of sale, stating that Cowper had purchased the property at the sale, and had refused to execute a sale bond. On this report on September 25th the court, without taking any proceedings against Cowper or confirming the sale, entered the following order: "It appearing to the court by report of the master commissioner, W. I. Clarke, that he sold to R. B. Cowper lots 67, 68, 69, 70, and 71, and a part of outlot No. 17, as appears on the town plat of Smithland, Kentucky, and said Cowper having failed and refused to execute bonds therefor, and said fact being made known to this court as aforesaid, the said commissioner is here directed to treat said sale to Cowper as if it had not been made, and readvertise said property for sale, and sell same in the full way and manner set out and directed in the judgment filed herein, and will in all respects comply with said judgment in taking bond, making report, and so forth and so on, as herein set out; and this cause is continued." The resale was made on November 2, 1903, and at it the property brought the sum of $32.

court, readvertised and sold the property, which sale was confirmed. Subsequently a rule was issued against the first purchaser to show cause why he should not be required to pay a deficiency arising between the sales. It was held that, as the commissioner had elected to treat the first purchase as a nullity, and reported all his acts to the court, and no steps were taken to compel the purchaser to comply with his purchase, but, instead, the last sale was confirmed, the rule was taken too late, and the purchaser was released.

And in Stout v. Philippi Mfg. & M. Co. 41 W. Va. 330, 56 Am. St. Rep. 843, 23 S. E. 571, where, by consent of the parties, it was agreed that there should be a resale, and the same purchaser purchased at the second sale at a less price, and the first sale was not confirmed, or reported until after the second sale, it was held that he was not liable for the deficiency. In this case the property was injured by a freshet between the sales, although this was not pleaded in the proceedings to hold the purchaser liable. The court said: "But, without report of this bid, or its acceptance by the court, or intimation of a purpose to hold him to his bid, the property is resold, by mere act of the attorneys of the parties, without advertisement. As all parties consented to a resale, Douglass could fairly infer that they recognized the injustice of confirming the sale, and agreed to dis regard it."

In Mississippi it was held that no liability attaches to the first purchase until after the sale is confirmed; that, if the purchaser refuses to pay, and the commissioners advertise and resell at a lower price, without reporting to the court until after a second sale, which is confirmed, the purchaser will not be held liable for the deficiency. Campe v. Saulcer, 68 Miss. 278, 24 Am. St. Rep. 273, 8 So. 846.

In regard to the necessity of a confirmation to hold the purchaser, in Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Cottrell, 85 Va. 857, 17 Am. St. Rep. 108, 9 S. E. 132, the court said: "Until the sale has been confirmed the proceeding is in fieri; the bidder is not considered as a purchaser, and he is therefore not liable for loss to the property, by fire or otherwise, in the interim; nor is he compellable, before confirmation, to complete his purchase."

So, in Neal v. Andrews, 53 Ark. 445, 14 S. W. 646, the court said: "In a judicial sale the court is the vendor, and there is no completed sale until confirmation by the court, which is the acceptance of the bidder's offer."

And a motion that a person reported best purchaser should complete his purchase by a certain day was refused; the report not being absolutely confirmed. Anonymous, 2 Ves. Jr. 335. The lord chancellor said: "He felt a difficulty; as until confirmation, the purchaser is always liable to have the biddings opened; until that, non constat that he is the purchaser."

And in Campbell v. Johnston, 4 Dana, 178, the court said: "Although in general the purchaser under an erroneous decree in chancery may not be affected by the reversal of the decree, yet, as was determined by this court in the case of Forman v. Hunt, at the last spring term, 3 Dana, 614, such sales are not complete until they are sanctioned by the court."

So, in Harwood v. Cox, 26 Ill. App. 374, the court said: "The accepted bidder at a master's sale acquires no independent right to have his purchase completed, but is nothing more than a preferred bidder, who proposes for the purchase of the property, depending upon the sound, equitable discretion of the chancellor for a confirmation of the sale by his ministerial agent."

And in Gowan v. Jones, 10 Smedes & M. 164, the court said: "In chancery, some reports are conclusive, and others require confirmation. Among the latter, is the report allowing the highest bidder at a sale under a decree to be the purchaser."

So, in Mebane v. Mebane, 80 N. C. 34, the court said: "The bid is but a proposition to buy, and, until accepted and sanctioned by the court, confers no right whatever upon the purchaser. The sale is consummated when the sanction is given and an order for title made and executed."

In Forman v. Hunt, 3 Dana, 614, the commissioner in a foreclosure sale, supposing that the estate would be subject to redemption, had the estate valued, which depressed the sale, and the property did not bring its fair value. The court set the sale aside on condition that the purchaser be paid costs and expenses. The court said: "Those who purchase at a chancellor's sale purchase subject to this revising power and control, exercised by the chancellor over the sale; and their right to the purchase thereupon, at the December term of the court, the court awarded a rule against Cowper to show cause, if any he could, why he should not pay the difference between the bid made by him and the bid made at the second sale, which the court then confirmed. Appellant, Cowper, in response to the rule, set out that the intestate had no interest in the property, and also relied on various irregularities in the proceedings. He also set up the order above quoted, by which the sale to him was ordered to be treated as nullity, and pleaded it in bar of the rule, in connection with the subsequent orders of the court confirming the second sale, and conveying the property to the purchaser in treat.

In Makemson v. Braun, 100 Ky. 88, 18 S. W. 2d 584, 37 S. W. 495, the commissioner sold a tract of land, and, the purchaser failing to execute bond, readvertised the property, and made a second sale at the next county court. He then reported to the court both the sales. The court confirmed the second sale, and ordered the property conveyed to the purchaser. After this a rule was taken out against the purchaser at the first sale to show cause why he should not pay the deficiency. It was held that he was not liable. The court said: "While an accepted bidder at a judicial sale who fails to comply with his bid may, by proper proceedings, be required to pay the damage resulting from such failure, which would include the difference between the bid, if any, and the amount realized on the final sale, if the property sold for less on that sale [than at the former sale], yet, where the at execution sale to make a necessary memorandum in writing. Linn Boyd Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. Terrill, 13 Bush, 463.

In Harvey v. Adams, 9 Lea, 289, it was held that the purchaser at the first sale, where there had been a resale, could not be held liable by the judgment creditor for the difference in the first and last bid, the court saying: "There is no privity of contract between the complainants and the defendant. The defendant's contract was with the sheriff, and the liability to him."

In Grier v. Yontz, 50 N. C. (5 Jones, L.) 371, a purchaser was held released from liability for a deficiency on a resale where a new process was issued to sell the land. The court said: "By suing out the venditioni exponas, the creditor treats the debtor as still the owner of the land, and he relies upon that for the payment of his debt."

Under S. C. act 1839, § 58, providing that, if the purchaser at sheriff's sale shall fail to comply with the terms, the sheriff shall proceed to resell at the risk of the defaulting purchaser, either on the same or some subsequent sale day, as the plaintiff may direct, and, in the absence of any directions, shall resell on the same day if practicable, and, if not, on the next succeeding sale day, making in every such case proclamation that he is reselling at the risk of such defaulting former purchaser,—it was held, in Yongue v. Cathcart, 2 Strobb. L. 221, that the purchaser was released where the sheriff failed at the resale to make the proclamation required by the statute. On a subsequent trial of this case (3 Strobb. L. 304) it was held that, if the sheriff did not sell on the same day, or the succeeding sale day, the purchaser would be released from a deficiency unless the sheriff showed that the second sale was by the direction of the plaintiff.

And where the sheriff before the return day returned on his writ that the purchaser had not paid, and the property was unsold for want of bidders, and made no demand, it was held that the bidder was not liable for the difference in the price. Holdship v. Doran, 2 Penn. & W. 9. There seems to be some difference in the practice in such cases. In this case the court suggested that the sheriff should sue if the money was not ready at the return day, without tendering a deed, or he might make a special return "that the property was knocked down to A B for so much,—that said A B has ends upon and awaits his sanction and confirmation." In Camden v. Mayhew, 129 U. S. 73, 32 Fed. 608, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 246, the purchaser was held to pay his cash bid. A rule was awarded against the purchaser to show cause why he should not pay the sum bid by him for the property, or why the sale should not be set aside and a resale had at his risk and costs, if the exceptions to the report of the sale were sustained. The sale was set aside, and the commissioners were directed to resell the property at the cost of the purchaser, for cash, reserving for future "determination in this case the question whether the said Camden will be required to pay the deficiency." He was held liable for the deficiency on a proceeding by rule. The setting aside of the sale in this case was mainly because of noncompliance with the bid, though the reasons are not given, and the purchaser was not released, because the same was provided for his liability being retained. The chief question discussed was the right to proceed by rule or attachment without the sale having been confirmed. On ordering the resale, the court had offered the first purchaser the choice of paying his bid, which was held tantamount to a confirmation.

A purchaser will be discharged from liability on a resale where proper steps to fix his liability are not taken.

A purchaser was held released from the deficiency caused by a resale, where such resale was on different terms from those on which he purchased. Ray v. Adams, 28 Misc. 664, 59 N. Y. Supp. 1047; Riggs v. Pursell, 74 N. Y. 2d 100; James v. Gordon, 9 Pa. 426; Weast v. Derwent, 509 Pa. 509; Labauve v. McCabe, 34 La. 221; Zimmerman v. Eckert, 2 Pennyp. 221; Brown v. Husband, 77 Pa. 389; Paul v. L. 2 Rawle, 326; Hare v. Bedell, 98 Pa. 107, 73 Am. Dec. 726, holding, also, that where property must be resold, and resold to the property of the identical defendant, as the property it had been bid off to the first bidder.

A purchaser was held released from liability on a deficiency on second sale where, on a return of the execution, made by the sheriff of the defaulting bidder. The court held that it was the duty of the sheriff commissioner has elected to treat the bid as a nullity, and has proceeded to advertise and sell again, and the second sale has been confirmed without objection, it is then too late to proceed against the first purchaser for failure to comply with the terms of the sale." The commissioner, in making the sale, is the agent of the court. His powers are limited by the orders of the court. He has no power to treat a sale as a nullity, and in the case cited the judgment of the court turned, not on the action of the commissioner, but on the order of the court confirming the action of the commissioner, for the act of the agent amounted to nothing until it was ratified by the court. The commissioner is simply ordered to sell the property. He is without power to release the purchaser from his obligation. The liability of the purchaser depends upon the action of the court. In the case at bar the court ordered the sale to be treated as a nullity. He directed the land to be resold, and, when that sale was made, he confirmed it, and directed the property to be conveyed to the purchaser. The purchaser at the first sale was only a preferred bidder until his bid was accepted by the court by confirming the sale. The contract was not complete, and, when the court decided not to confirm the sale, but to treat it as though it had not been made, the purchaser stood simply as any other person who makes a proposition which is not accepted. When the purchaser not paid the purchase money, and that, therefore, the property remains unsold." But that the sheriff could not, unless the purchaser was notoriously insolvent, return that the purchaser has not paid long before the return day, and that the property was, therefore, unsold for want of bidding; and "where he does so, and has made no demand, and no evidence to justify him in so doing, the bidder is not liable for the difference in prices."

R. A.

In Miller v. Collyer, 36 Barb. 250. It was held that the purchaser was not liable to the assignee of the sheriff under a foreclosure sale, where the terms of sale were that, if any purchaser shall fail to comply with the conditions, the premises so struck down will be put up for sale upon the same terms without notice to the purchaser, and such purchaser shall be held liable for any deficiency; that the remedy against a purchaser was by application to the court to compel him to complete it, or to resell, and hold him liable for the loss.

Purchasers have been released from liability on the ground of mistake, or want of authority in their agent to bid, or defects in the property or title.

So, in Clay v. Kagelmacher, 98 Ga. 149, 26 S. E. 493, it was held that a bidder would be released from liability on a resale, where he had refused to comply with his bid by reason of the statements of the auctioneer causing him to make a mistake as to the identity of the lot purchased.

In Harder v. Sayle-Stegall Commission Co., 61 Ark. 66, 31 S. W. 979, it was held that, if a second sale was made because an alleged purchaser refused to ratify a bid made by his agent, and the authority of the agent was limited, and the sheriff knew that he was exceeding his authority, the purchaser would be released from the deficiency arising from the second sale.

Executors of a mortgagor were misled and induced to believe that a sale of the premises would not take place. It was held that the sale should be set aside on the ground of surprise, on their paying to the purchaser his costs and expenses; and, if this was not complied with, the plaintiff could cause the property to be exposed again for sale. Williamson v. Dale, 3 Johns. Ch. 290.

And where an administrator's sale was void, it was held that an action for specific performance could not be maintained by the heir against the purchaser. Kertchem v. George, 78 Cal. 597, 21 Pac. 372.

69 L. R. A.

And where a sheriff's sale was set aside and quashed, it was held that the sale bond also was properly quashed, and the purchaser released. Wilson v. Percival, 1 Dana, 419.

So, a bidder was held released from his purchase as adjudicatee of a succession, where it appeared that there was probability of litigation on the title. Rogge v. Municipal Improv. Co., 49 La. Ann. 37, 21 So. 170; Bachino v. Coste, 35 La. Ann. 570; Nash's Succession, 48 La. Ann. 1573, 21 So. 254.

And in Duncomb v. Holst, 13 Fed. 11, where the title was such that the purchaser was not bound to accept, an order was made relieving him from complying with his bid, and directing a resale.

A sale was void where the vendor, having a purchase-money lien, had an execution sale thereon of the land without having his deed securing such lien put on record. It was held that the purchaser should be released from his bid. McCord v. McGinty, 99 Ga. 307, 25 S. E. 667. This sale was void under a statute. (See Upchurch v. Lewis, 53 Ga. 621, subdiv. III. b.)

So, where an administrator fraudulently represented that the land sold was the property of his intestate by virtue of the location of a head right, where he knew that it had been located upon another tract, it was held that the judgment upon the sale note for the purchase money should be enjoined. Coombs v. Lane, 17 Tex. 280.

In Deaver v. Reynolds, 1 Bland, Ch. 50, a purchaser in partition sale was released by order of court, where he was unable to comply with the requirements of the sale in regard to executing bonds, and asked that the sale be set aside; but he was held chargeable with the costs and expenses of the first sale, to be retained out of any share coming to him.

For other cases where the purchaser at a judicial sale was released on account of the title, see next subdiv., where sales were set aside and deposit returned.

II. Release from bid and return of deposit.

In England, Ireland, and Canada the practice is that on a report of sale the purchaser may suggest doubts upon the title, whereupon reference is had to ascertain and report, and if the master reports that there is a cloud on the title, the purchaser is released, and is entitled to a return of the purchase money paid and is usually allowed interest and costs. The question of practice is stated to be as follows:

als to execute his bond, it may be that the parties prefer another sale, thinking that the property will sell for more, and in this event the court may so order without making any proceedings against the purchaser. But if it is desired to hold the purchaser, then his bid must be accepted by the court, and, if he still refuses to give the bond, a resale may be ordered, or the purchaser may be dealt with as in cases of contempt; and, in this state of case, if the bid on the second sale sells for more than the first, the surplus will belong to the purchaser. The court cannot, however, treat the sale as a nullity, and thus keep the surplus, if the land on the second sale sells for more than on the first, and at the same time hold the purchaser responsible for the deficiency if on the second sale it sells for less. In Shirley v. Sheumaker, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 452, 63 S. W. 11, the first sale was confirmed by the court and a rule was taken against the purchaser to show cause why he should not give bond, which was made absolute. Brassfield v. Burgess, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 660, 10 S. W. 122, is in effect the same, and so is Tyler v. Guthrie, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1193, 33 S. W. 934. But in none of the cases is the court allowed to treat the sale as a nullity, and still proceed to hold the purchaser liable.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with directions to discharge the rule against appellant.

Kirwan v. Blake, 1 Hogan, 151: First, that the adding binds the bidder, while it is open to the court to receive an out bid and order a resale, until the conditional order of confirmation becomes absolute; second, that the condition cannot be entered until the bidder has deposited one fourth of the purchase money; third, that the order to confirm absolutely cannot be done until the remaining three fourths of the purchase money is paid; fourth, if the bid is not good, the purchaser will be paid back his purchase money at 6 per cent without being involved in any of the consequences of the investment or disposition of the funds between the parties; fifth, that the purchaser has a right to have his purchase money included in the stocks at his own risk, or to transact at his own risk to the amount of the purchase money, but in that case he will be held to make good the full amount of the purchase money when the transaction is completed, and to gain or lose the difference himself.

In the following cases, on the sale being set aside, the purchaser was held entitled to a refund of his deposit with costs. There is not much difference in the facts in these cases to be setting them out in full: Ward v. Johnson, 14 Sim. 82; Reynolds v. Blake, 2 Sim. 117; Calvert v. Godfrey, 6 Beav. 97, without interest; Feely v. Kilkenny, Flan. K. 466; Lachlan v. Reynolds, Kay, 52; McCullagh v. Gregory, 1 Kay & J. 286.

And where a purchaser under a decree was refused because the title was encumbered by a right to cut timber, it was held that the purchase was justified in withholding payment until the objection was removed, and, if it could not be removed, the purchaser would be entitled to be discharged from his purchase and to have his deposit refunded, or to an allowance of an amount in the purchase money. Street v. Smith, 6 Ont. Pr. Rep. 312. The court did not allow costs because the application was premature.

In the following cases the purchaser was refused the return of his purchase money with interest and costs: Lineham v. Cotter, 8 Ir. Eq. Rep. 344; Gower v. Hill, Hayes & J. 127; Roberts v. Roberts, 2 Molloy, 507.

Where a purchaser under a decree was discharged upon a report of bad title, and it was held that his deposit should be paid back without prejudice to his applying for interest and costs when there should be a fund in court. A fund was realized from which the personal representative was held entitled to 60 L. R. A.

be paid interest and costs. Mackay v. Orr, 3 Ir. Eq. Rep. 499.

In Hill v. Kirwan, 1 Hogan, 175, where the purchaser was discharged because a good title could not be made, and there was no fund in court to pay his interest and costs, the purchase money having already been paid back, it was held that he was entitled to have a receiver appointed over the lands, with direction to apply the rents in the discharge of his interest and costs.

A person who had made a deposit as the highest bidder under a decree, and who was outbid at a subsequent sale, was held entitled to have his deposit paid back immediately; but as to his interest and costs he was required to wait until the sale was completed. Archdall v. Montgomery, Vern. & S. 302.

And where the title to land sold under a decree was defective, and the purchaser was discharged, he was held entitled to the full amount of his purchase money, interest and costs. It was further held that, where such interest and costs were to be paid out of a fund chargeable with the usher's poundage, the loss should be borne by the funds in the cause, and not by the discharged purchaser. Johnson v. Reardon, 3 Ir. Eq. Rep. 200.

A sale in partition was invalid because it took place before the certificate in answer to the inquiries directed by the decree was made. It was held that the purchaser was entitled to his costs arising from the deposit, which had been paid into court and invested, with the dividends thereon, or the actual amount of deposit and produce, with costs, charges, and expenses. Powell v. Powell, L. R. 19 Eq. 422. The court said: If he insisted upon the return of the money itself, he was entitled to it and all the dividends which have arisen from its investment.

But where the purchaser lodged stock instead of money in court, and the sale was set aside by the House of Lords for want of title, on a motion by the purchaser to have the stock returned in specie, and not merely the money ordered deposited with 6 per cent interest, as the funds had risen in the interim, it was held that, as it was not shown that he undertook the risk of a fall in the prices, he was not entitled to the benefit of the advance; and his money, with interest, was returned. Kirwan v. Blake, 2 Molloy, 506.

In New York the practice is for the purchaser to have the title examined before confirmation, and, if his objection to the proceedings, or to the title, are sustained, the sale will be set aside, and the deposit or purchase money paid will be refunded to him, with the expenses of examining the title and costs.

So, a purchaser was held entitled to be relieved from his purchase, and to be repaid his deposit upon the sale with interest, and all his proper expenses of examining the title, with costs, where there was a question affecting the title as against heirs who were not made parties in a partition sale. Toole v. Toole, 112 N. Y. 333, 2 L. R. A. 465, 8 Am. St. Rep. 750, 19 N. E. 682.

And purchasers were held entitled to have the amount paid on their bids refunded, and the auctioneer's fees and costs, where the sale was made in partition, and there was a question as to the lien of legatees, which could not be determined, as they were not parties. Jordan v. Poillon, 77 N. Y. 518.

In Campbell's Estate, Tucker, 240, the surrogate held that a sale was so irregular that it should be set aside, and that the purchaser was entitled to be paid his deposit and the auctioneer's fees. But he further held that a surrogate had no power to allow counsel fees on this proceeding, or on examining the title.

And under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2752 and 2754, providing, in a petition to sell decedent's real estate to pay debts, that the petition should state the names of the heirs and devisees, and that they should be cited, where the petition omitted the same, and the heirs were not cited, a purchaser was held entitled to a return of the purchase money paid, and the auctioneer's fees, and the expenses incurred in the examination of the title, in an application to be relieved from sale. John's Estate, 21 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 326.

So, it was held that the purchaser was entitled to have the purchase price refunded, with the expenses, including searching of title, and this was apportioned between the parties procuring the sale. Muller v. Struppman, 6 Abb. N. C. 343. In this case a partition sale was held invalid on the ground that the supreme court had no inherent original authority to order a sale of the real estate of an infant.

And in an action for partition a sale was held to pass an insufficient title, and the purchaser was held entitled to be discharged from his bid, and to the return of his deposit of 10 per cent, and to interest, out of the rents and profits in the hands of the receiver, and expenses of investigating the title. Rogers v. McLean, 10 Abb. Pr. 306. In this case an infant lunatic, who was a necessary party, was not served with summons.

And a purchaser under a sale to pay debts under an order of surrogate's court was held released, and the return of his deposit granted, and costs of examining the title, where the proceedings were invalid, and creditors were not parties, and the title was doubtful. Mahoney v. Allen, 18 Misc. 134, 42 N. Y. Supp. 1127. In this case the referee moved to compel the purchaser to comply with his bid, and the purchaser moved to be released from his bid, and to have his deposit returned, and to be reimbursed expenses, and to set aside the final judgment and order confirming the sale.

And a sale under a mechanic's lien was set aside because the purchaser was ignorant that the defendant's wife had an interest in the property. It was held that the court had power to set aside the sale, and to reimburse the purchaser from the proceeds. It was held that the 69 L. R. A.

sale was properly set aside, and the purchaser was allowed $50 expenses for examination of title, to be paid from the proceeds of the sale. Rogers v. Menton, 21 Misc. 535, 47 N. Y. Supp. 1147. This evidently was to be refunded from a second sale, but the case does not show this.

So, a purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure was held entitled to have his bid canceled, and to a return of the purchase money paid, with $102, the expense of examining the title, where the sale was made subject to a mortgage having eighteen months to run, when in fact such other mortgage was already in process of foreclosure. Bradley v. Leahy, 54 Hun, 390, 7 N. Y. Supp. 461.

And a purchaser was held entitled to be relieved from his bid, and to have the 10 per cent deposit refunded, and the costs and expenses of searching the title paid to him, where the sale was made by the receiver of an insurance company on a foreclosure, and infant owners were not made parties to the action. People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 33 Hun, 393.

In the following cases, where the sale was set aside, a return of the deposit was allowed: Re Whitlock, 32 Barb. 48; Hirsch v. Livingston, 3 Hun, 9; Beckenbaugh v. Nally, 32 Hun, 160; Collier v. Whipple, 13 Wend. 224.

And a sale of a decedent's estate in an action for partition was objected to on the ground that there was a mortgage on the premises, and that there were no advertisements for creditors, and that the administrator could have a resale to pay debts. It was held that the purchaser could not be compelled to take the property, but was entitled to be refunded his 10 per cent deposit with interest. Hall v. Partridge, 10 How. Pr. 188.

On a bill against devisees to subject property in their hands to a debt of the testator, judgment creditors were not made parties. The sale was set aside, and it was held that the purchaser should be discharged from his purchase and the deposit returned to him, and that he was also entitled to the interest on his deposit, and to the costs to which he had been subjected. Morris v. Mowatt, 2 Paige, 586, 22 Am. Dec. 661. The court said: "At present, there is no fund under the control of the court out of which the interest and costs can be paid; and, as all the parties have acted in perfect good faith in relation to this sale, the expenses must be paid out of the fund hereafter to be raised, if a second sale takes place. If no sale of the property is had, and no other way is provided for the payment, the charge must fall on the complainants personally."

And where a plaintiff guardian of an infant in a foreclosure action was also appointed guardian ad litem without disclosing that he was guardian, the sale was held voidable, so that the purchaser was entitled to be relieved from the purchase and to have the money paid in refunded, with costs. Hecker v. Sexton, 43 Hun, 593.

So, a purchaser at a partition sale was held entitled to be released, and to have the money paid returned, with his disbursements, where the property was encumbered by a condition limiting the buildings to be erected at a certain cost, which was not disclosed at the sale. Knee v. Kuykendall, 6 N. Y. S. R. 1.

So, where the complainant in a partition suit was a feme covert, and her husband was not joined as a party, it was held to be fatal to the title of the purchaser; and it was held that, if the title could not be perfected, the purchasers were to be discharged and their deposits returned, including costs, out of the proceeds of the lots directed to be sold. Spring v. Sandford, 7 Paige, 550.

In Aspinwall v. Balch, 4 Abb. N. C. 193, it was held that, if the property bought at a foreclosure sale was materially damaged by fire before the deed was delivered, the purchaser would not be obliged to accept it. In this case the damage was not material, but it was held that, if the plaintiffs in the foreclosure action did not repair the building within a reasonable time, or give adequate compensation, the purchaser could renew his motion to be discharged, and for a return of his deposit.

And a purchaser was relieved from his bid in a sale under partition instituted under the Revised Statutes, when such proceedings had been abolished by the Code. It was held that the purchaser was entitled to have his deposit repaid, and to an order directing the petitioners to pay costs and expenses, to be a charge upon the petitioners' interest in the land. Re Cavanagh, 14 Abb. Pr. 258.

In other states, where the sale is set aside the practice is to direct the return to the purchaser of the purchase money paid, where it has not been distributed. This was held in the following cases: Levy v. Riley, 4 Or. 302; Dula v. Seagle, 98 N. C. 458, 4 S. E. 549; Shields v. Allen, 77 N. C. 375; Smith v. Brittain, 38 N. C. (3 Ired. Eq.) 347, 42 Am. Dec. 175; Dumestre's Succession, 40 La. Ann. 571, 4 So. 328; Lee v. Texas & N. O. R. Co. 22 Tex. Civ. App. 501, 55 S. W. 976; Hyman v. Smith, 13 W. Va. 744; Edney v. Edney, 80 N. C. 81; State Bank v. Green, 10 Neb. 130, 4 N. W. 942; Preston v. Fryer, 38 Md. 221.

After a decretal sale a deficiency execution was issued without authority of law, because there was on file a supersedeas bond staying proceedings, and the execution was invalid. The purchasers of the property were held entitled to a return of the purchase money paid, with legal interest. State Bank v. Green, 10 Neb. 130, 4 N. W. 942.

And a purchaser at a master's sale which was confirmed appealed from the order of confirmation. The sale was set aside on appeal, and the purchaser in the meantime had paid her bond. It was held that she was entitled to have the purchase money returned with interest, and that she was not liable for the fees of the appellant's attorneys, the commissioner and the clerk. Hall v. Dineen, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1017, 83 S. W. 120.

On a bill to enforce a mechanic's lien against the separate real estate of a woman, a decree of sale was made. The decree was reversed on the ground that against a separate estate it should have provided for the application of rents and profits, and not for a sale of the corpus, and the sale set aside. It was held that the purchaser should receive back her bonds executed for the purchase money, and the cash payment should be refunded, but that she should be charged with the rents and profits, less taxes paid, and, if the rents and profits should exceed the cash payment, a personal execution should be rendered against her for the balance. Charleston L. & M. Co. v. Brockmeyer, 23 W. Va. 635.

III. Relief by reimbursement or subrogation.

a. Generally.

The general rule, according to the weight of 33 L. R. A.

authority, is that a judicial or execution sale will not be set aside at the instance of the debtor, or the purchaser will not be ousted from possession without refunding to him his purchase money which has been applied to the benefit of the debtor. This is on the ground that "he who seeks equity must do equity." And the same relief has been had in common-law cases where the distinction between common law and equity has been abolished. This principle is derived from the Roman law, as shown by Justice Story in the case of Bright v. Boyd, 1 Story, 478, Fed. Cas. No. 1,875, saying: "Where a bona fide possessor or purchaser of real estate pays money to discharge any existing encumbrance or charge upon the estate having no notice of any infirmity in his title, he is entitled to be repaid the amount of such payment by the true owner, seeking to recover the estate from him. Dig. lib. 8, title, 1, L. 65; Pothier Pand. lib. 6, title 1, note 43.

So, the purchaser losing title is allowed by subrogation a lien on the interest of the debtor in the land, on the principle that equity will subrogate the party extinguishing the lien to the rights of the lien holder, and will protect him to that extent. The question of reimbursement or subrogation arises from the nature of the relief sought, the pleadings in the case, and the possession of the land.

The exceptional cases in regard to the restitution to the purchaser of the purchase money, or his right to subrogation, occur in probate or guardian sales, where the purchase money was not used to extinguish liens, in some cases applying the principle of caveat emptor where subrogation was denied.

In some cases relief was denied where the proceedings were void, as in attachment proceedings, or a personal judgment on publication only, and there was no judgment to support the lien.

There were other cases where relief was denied on account of the pleadings or parties, or where another remedy was suggested.

b. Reimbursement.

The weight of authority is that reimbursement to the purchaser will be imposed as a condition precedent in actions to set aside execution and judicial sales, and in actions of ejectment in states allowing equitable defenses, where the money of the purchaser has extinguished debts which were a charge on the land. This is on the principle that he who seeks equity must do equity, or on the principle of compensation, or on what is known as an equitable lien allowed the purchaser to secure his advances. Keeping these principles in view, the courts have established a broad equitable principle that the purchaser will not be compelled to restore the property under a void sale, where he is not in fault, without being compensated for his purchase money.

This was held where a mistake was made by the auctioneer in confusing the numbers of two lots, thereby sacrificing a valuable lot for a small amount. The purchaser was held entitled to the amount paid and interest and taxes, subject to rental value. Howlett v. Garner, 50 S. C. 1, 27 S. E. 533.

So where a sheriff's sale under execution of an indefinite interest in an estate was held void. L'enu v. Spencer, 17 Gratt. 85, 91 Am. Dec. 375.

A purchaser under a title bond brought suit against the purchaser of the same land under execution sale for the deferred payments where the deed had not been put upon record. This execution sale was void under Ga. act 1847, § 3, providing that when any judgment shall be given on a purchase-money note, where titles have not been made, but bond for titles has been given, the obligor of the bond may file a deed of conveyance, and thereupon the same may be levied on and sold under said judgment. It was held that the purchase should be set aside on complainant paying to the purchaser the amount paid by him. Upchurch v. Lewis, 53 Ga. 621.

In another case arising under this statute, a vendor of a title bond, where part of the money was paid, obtained a judgment against the vendee on his purchase-money notes, although the purchaser was willing to pay provided he could obtain the title that he had contracted for. An execution sale was had of the property to a purchaser, combining with the vendor to defraud the holder of the title bond. In an action by the holder of the title bond to set aside the sale, and for a specific performance, the court said: "If the purchaser has paid his bid, and it has been appropriated to the payment of the debt due by complainant to his vendor, he is entitled to be reimbursed, and he should be protected to that extent in any decree that may be rendered." Brunson v. Grant, 48 Ga. 394.

So, on the principle that "he who seeks equity must do equity," it was held that the complainants would be required, as a condition precedent, to refund to the purchaser so much of the purchase money as came into their hands. This was a suit by heirs against the purchaser to set aside a sale made in partition under a decree by a court having no jurisdiction of their persons, and for an accounting of rents. It was also held that the purchaser was entitled to be refunded taxes paid by him. Chambers v. Jones, 72 Ill. 275. The court said: "They are seeking relief against defendant, and, if they have his money in their possession, arising out of the same transaction, it is but just they should restore it to him. The court will not assist them to recover the possession of their land, and give them an account of the rents and profits, while they still retain in their hands the purchase money. The case of Kinney v. Knoebel, 51 Ill. 112, is an authority for this view of the law, and the principle of that case would authorize the imposition of conditions upon which relief will be granted. . . . If it shall appear that either of the heirs has received any portion of the proceeds of the sale, the court, with great justice, may decree a restoration of the amount before adjusting the equities between the parties. The same may be said of the taxes."

So, an offer to reimburse was held to be a condition precedent in an action by heirs to have a sale made in partition set aside, where the money had been distributed. Byars v. Spencer, 101 Ill. 429, 40 Am. Rep. 212.

And the defendant in the execution was held entitled to relief only on condition that within thirty days he pay into court for the benefit of the purchaser the amount of the judgment, costs, and interest, where a sale on execution of a homestead was held void for failure to follow the requirements of the statute, and conveyed no title. Bullen v. Dawson, 130 Ill. 633, 20 N. E. 1038.

And a sheriff's deed to the purchaser, and the deed from the purchaser to his wife, were set aside on condition that the debtor pay to the purchaser the amount of the bid with 8 per cent interest, and the money which the purchaser paid, and the interest on an existing mortgage, and improvements, taxes, and insurance, less the rents. Lurton v. Rodgers, 139 Ill. 554, 32 Am. St. Rep. 214, 29 N. E. 866. This was an action to set aside and redeem because lots valued at $2,000 were sold on execution sale for $60, and because sold en masse.

And where a levy was void for uncertainty, and the sale passed no title, it was held that, if the defendant was incompetent to consent to the sale, and was not thereby estopped, his administrator could not cancel the sheriff's deed and recover the land without accounting for so much of the purchase money as the intestate had the benefit of, with interest. O'Kelley v. Gholston, 89 Ga. 1, 15 S. E. 123.

So, reimbursement was made a condition precedent in a suit against the purchaser under execution to enforce liens. It was held that, as no judgment sustaining the execution was produced, on account of a mistake in the execution reciting a different judgment, the sale should be set aside; but, as the proceeds arising from the sale of slaves were applied to the discharge of the judgment debts of the plaintiff, it was held that he could not recover until he had repaid that money. Dufour v. Camfranc, 11 Mart. (La.) 607, 13 Am. Dec. 360.

The same was held in a similar case. Donaldson v. Rouzan, 8 Mart. N. S. 162.

And a purchaser in good faith, who paid the money in discharge of the judgment, was held entitled to reimbursement before the relief sought by the bill would be granted, in an action by an infant to set aside a sale under execution issued after the death of the defendant without revivor. Cook v. Toumbs, 36 Miss. 685. The court said: "But this is rather a matter of defense, than a part of the complainant's case; and it would be entirely competent for the court, under the bill as now framed, to decree that the deed of the sheriff to Cook be set aside and delivered up to be canceled, upon the appellant paying to him the sum of money paid by him in discharge of the judgment. Such a course is not inconsistent with the scope and prayer of the bill, and the court, in granting the relief sought, is competent to do so upon such equitable terms as may be shown to be just and proper."

And in a suit in equity to avoid a judgment and sale on the ground of false claims by creditors and an irregular sale, there being no fraud charged against the purchaser, it was held that relief would not be granted where the complainants did not offer to refund the money that had been paid for the property by innocent purchasers. Wilson v. Bellows, 30 N. J. Eq. 282.

An order granted a new trial on payment of costs. An execution for costs and a sale thereunder was void. In a suit by the defendant against the purchaser to cancel the deed as a cloud on the title, it was held that he should pay the purchaser the money appropriated for his benefit. Herndon v. Rice, 21 Tex. 455. In this case the court draws a distinction between an action by the purchaser to cancel his deed and recover the purchase money, and an action by the defendant to remove the ground of possible attack upon his title. The court said the latter "is a remedy ex gratia, dependent upon the sound discretion of the court, and will never be exercised without doing ample justice to both sides, so far as it is practicable."

A sale was made of the equity of redemption, and the holder of the first mortgage became the purchaser. The sale was set aside on account of the ignorance and age of the defendant, who tendered the purchaser all the money due on his decree, and the costs. Campbell v. Gardner, 11 N. J. Eq. 423, 69 Am. Dec. 598.

The same rule was held to apply in actions to enjoin a judgment in ejectment where the recovery was had by reason of a void sale.

A purchaser at an execution sale was defeated in an action of ejectment by the debtor, the sheriff's deed being void. It was held, in an action to enjoin this judgment, that the purchaser had an equitable right to retain possession of the land as security for his purchase money, and the injunction should not be dissolved until he was reimbursed. Shepherd v. McIntire, 5 Dana, 574.

So, in an action to enjoin a judgment in ejectment, it was held that the defendant should be required to refund to the purchaser the amount paid. Henderson v. Overton, 2 Yerg. 394, 24 Am. Dec. 492. In this case after the levy of an attachment the defendant died. A sci. fa. was run against the executor, and judgment was taken by default. A sci. fa. was run against heirs without naming them, and a judgment rendered against the heirs. The land was sold to this purchaser. The plaintiff in the original proceedings acquired the title of the heirs, and then brought ejectment against the purchaser. The court said: "It is said defendant did not receive from the sheriff the whole amount. It is his misfortune. Had he let his void judgment rest it would not have happened."

In Andrews v. Richardson, 21 Tex. 287, the purchaser at judicial sale brought suit to enjoin a writ of possession against his tenant, issued by a justice, and the defendants sought to avoid the sale on the ground that there had been no appraisal. The plaintiff in replication asked that, if the sale was invalid, he should be reinstated in his original decree of foreclosure, and have execution. The court held the sale was valid, but said that, if it was not, the plaintiff would be entitled to the relief sought if he was the owner of the judgment, and, if not, he would be entitled to be reimbursed the money he had paid.

In some states the practice is to administer equitable relief in common-law courts; and so it is held in Missouri and Texas that a recovery of the property from the purchaser on a void sale will be granted only on condition that the purchaser is reimbursed the purchase money applied to plaintiff's debt.

An execution sale was made after the execution became dead and no vend. exp. issued. In an action of trespass to try title, by the purchaser, the equitable doctrine was applied, and it was held that he was entitled to recover the purchase money paid, in the absence of fraud. Johnson v. Caldwell, 38 Tex. 217. The court held that the equitable doctrine that a purchaser should not be compelled to restore property without being reimbursed was applicable, and should have been applied when the sheriff's deed was ruled out in evidence.

So, in an action by the heir the defendant was allowed possession until the payments could be ascertained by a reference. French v. Grenet, 57 Tex. 273. In this case, after a member of a firm died, and his estate was being administered by executors, a bankruptcy court having no jurisdiction ordered the sale of the individual property of the deceased member. The purchaser acquired no title. He had paid the assignee, who applied the purchase money to the judgment lien.

In an action by heirs to recover land sold at a sheriff's sale, the court said: "The sale, if valid, divested the title of their ancestor, and they cannot recover. But, whether valid or not, it was averred in the answer, and appears in proof, that the ancestor of the plaintiffs received the benefit of the proceeds of the sale, applied to the satisfaction of the execution against him. And, under the decision of this court in the case of Howard v. North, 5 Tex. 290, 51 Am. Rep. 769, the plaintiffs cannot recover the property without reimbursing the purchase money paid, which went to the satisfaction of the judgment against their ancestor. This is according to the plainest dictates of reason and natural justice; and this they have not done, nor offered to do." Morton v. Welborn, 21 Tex. 772.

In Henry v. McKerie, 78 Mo. 416, holding that the purchaser acquired title, the court said: "When the sale has not been approved, no title, either legal or equitable, passes to the purchaser. The equity open to him proceeds upon the assumption of a void sale, and is for a return of the purchase money, and reimbursement for the benefits received by the heirs, and for improvements which enhance the value of their land; the extent of this equity to be ascertained by an account of his expenditures and receipts. This equity suspends the right of recovery until the amount coming to him shall be ascertained and paid. It is administered upon the theory that the title has not passed to the purchaser, but that he has a charge or lien for his outlays and improvements incurred by him in good faith."

And reimbursement to the purchaser was held a condition precedent in an action by an administrator of one partner against the purchaser to recover the property, where there was a valid judgment against partners and after the death of one of the partners there were an execution levied upon the estate of the deceased partner and a sale. Balley v. White, 13 Tex. 114. The court said: "Under the circumstances of this case, the court, on general equity principles and in the discharge of equity jurisdiction, clearly had a right to make the decree, and could have prescribed the time within which it should be paid, and that plaintiff should not have execution of his writ of possession until it was paid."

But reimbursement was denied in the following cases on account of the pleadings, or the failure to follow the proper practice:

Executors made a mortgage without procuring an order of the probate court, and a foreclosure sale failed to pass title. In an action against the vendee of the purchasers to recover the property the court said: "If the money bid for the land on sale made on foreclosure was actually paid, and a valid debt of the estate thus satisfied, appellants cannot be permitted to recover the land without refunding the money, although the sale was null. No question as to the right of appellee to have such money as may have been so paid was made by pleadings or the evidence, and, as the judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded, on account of matters before referred to, such pleadings may hereafter be filed, and such an issue tried as will enable the court below to adjust any equities that may exist between the parties." Smithwick v. Kelly, 79 Tex. 564, 15 S. W. 486.

Three executions of different priority were in the sheriff's hands, and he sold the property levied upon to the third execution creditor, who paid off the first judgment and credited his debt, and the sheriff returned the execution unsatisfied for failure to pay the bid. A sale was then had on the second execution, and it was held that the first purchaser was entitled to an injunction to restrain a deed until reimbursed what he had paid on the first execution. Carnahan v. Yerkes, 87 Ind. 62. The court said: "The payment of the Potts judgment operated for the benefit of the appellees. It removed a lien which was prior to the Cook judgment, under which they purchased, and, had it not been so removed, they would have been compelled to pay it. Under the circumstances, equity would, perhaps, keep this judgment and its lien on the land alive for the benefit and security of the appellant. But the pleadings and record are not in such a condition as that the appellees can in this action be compelled to pay the sum so advanced by the appellant for their benefit, as the condition upon which the deed to the appellant for said land should be enjoined. It would be granting to the appellant relief which he has not asked, and which the facts set up in the answer would not justify. Had the appellant disclaimed any right to the land by virtue of the sale made by the sheriff to him, and asked that the money advanced by him for the purpose of paying off the Potts judgment should be refunded, he might, perhaps, have been entitled to affirmative relief."

So, in Kuddell v. Sparks, 79 Tex. 308, 15 S. W. 239, it was said that, if the purchaser had a claim for purchase money which had been applied to the payment of the judgment, and thereafter lost his property in an ejectment suit because the levy was on a homestead, he should have set up his claim there for reimbursement. It was held that he could not thereafter set it up as a set-off against an execution for officer's costs in a suit to try title, as they have no connection.

A sale of land under execution eight years after the death of the defendant was void because there was no administrator. In an action of trespass to try title, where no equitable relief was asked by either of the parties, it was held that the rule that the purchase money paid for the land at the void sale must be repaid before title will be decreed to the heirs did not apply. Fleming v. Ball, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 209, 60 S. W. 985. The court said: "Whoever showed the superior legal title to the land was entitled to a judgment, notwithstanding facts may have existed which, if properly pleaded and proved, would have entitled plaintiffs to some affirmative equitable relief should it appear that appellee held the superior legal title."

A tract of land was levied on under execution, and only part was sold, sufficient to satisfy the execution. It was held that the sale was void, as the statute authorizing a sale of less than the whole tract levied on had been repealed. In an action of ejectment against the purchaser the court said: "We have repeatedly determined that the legal and equitable rights of parties litigant, in relation to the subject-matter of a controversy, should, as far as practicable, be set up and determined in a single suit. In the due order of pleading, under our 59 L. R. A.

blended system, the plaintiffs should have averred their willingness to pay the amount of the execution, with interest thereon; or the defendant should have claimed, provided his title were declared invalid, that he should not be compelled to restore possession until the purchase money which he had paid for the benefit of the plaintiffs, and by which the judgment against them had been discharged, should be reimbursed, and he indemnified." Howard v. North, 5 Tex. 290, 51 Am. Dec. 769.

So, where an advance bid on a master's sale was made, and a resale was ordered, it was held that the purchaser was entitled to have his original bid canceled, and the cash paid refunded, and his notes given up and canceled, and he should have taken an order to that effect; but where he allowed the money to remain in the hands of the commissioner, and it was lost by the death of the commissioner and insolvency of his estate, he must bear the loss and look to that estate for reimbursement. Head v. Moore, 98 Tenn. 358, 34 S. W. 518.

The exceptional cases where restitution was denied are those relating to probate sales, proceedings against nonresidents, and fraudulent sales, for which see infra.

c. Subrogation.

1. Generally.

The weight of authority is that a purchaser at a void judicial sale is entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the creditor where the sale is set aside. The doctrine of subrogation is also derived from the civil law. See Domat, Civil Law, pt. 1, book 3, § 6, art. 1785: "The purchaser of an estate, employing the price of his purchase for the payment of the creditors to whom the estate was mortgaged, is substituted to their right to the value of what he pays them. For, by paying them with the price of their pledge in order to secure it to himself, he preserves it to himself for the value of what he pays them, against other subsequent creditors, although they be prior to his purchase."

So, a sale of property of an insolvent corporation to a reorganized corporation under a decree in equity was held void because there was no service on any officer of the corporation. St. Louis & S. Coal & Min. Co. v. Sandoval Coal & Min. Co. 111 Ill. 32.

After this decision a bill was filed (116 Ill. 170, 5 N. E. 370), alleging that the new company had advanced money to pay off the debts of the old, and asking that the ejectment suits be enjoined, and that equitable claims of the new company be adjusted. It was held that the new company was entitled to be subrogated to the rights of creditors notwithstanding its deed was void.

Attention is here called to Milwaukee & M. R. Co. v. Soutter, 13 Wall. 517, 20 L. ed. 543, which was a trustee's sale, and therefore not within the scope of this note, and which was a similar case, except that the purchase by the new corporation was held fraudulent as to creditors, and it was denied subrogation which it claimed for having paid $450,000 on a prior mortgage.

In Bruschke v. Wright, 166 Ill. 183, 57 Am. St. Rep. 125, 46 N. E. 813, a foreclosure sale was set aside at the instance of heirs, and a resale was ordered. It was held that a purchaser at foreclosure sale and his assignee would be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee.

Subrogation is also allowed on the ground that the purchaser has paid a debt under a colorable obligation, and that he should be protected. This was held where a mortgage sale by school commissioners was void for want of notice, and the heirs of the mortgagor recovered from the subvendee, who recovered on his warranty from the purchaser. Muir v. Berkshire, 52 Ind. 149.

So, on the ground that it was the policy of the law to protect bidders at public sales, a purchaser was held entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the state in the mortgage, where a sale made by an auditor under a school-fund mortgage was set aside. Willson v. Brown, 52 Ind. 471. The court said: "The principal objection urged against the sufficiency of the complaint, which is that the plaintiffs were volunteers, occupying no such relation either to the mortgage debt or the property sold as to entitle them to be subrogated to the rights of the state, may be regarded as fully answered by the case of Muir v. Berkshire, 52 Ind. 149. We are not disposed to restrict the scope of the decision in that case. A sound public policy forbids that a purchaser at a public sale, who has in good faith paid the amount of his bid, in discharge of the decree, judgment, or other lien by virtue of which the sale was made, should be deemed a mere volunteer, and should be denied any equitable relief in case the sale proved to be invalid, merely because he had no personal interest to protect, and made the purchase for the sake of the investment only. Bidding should be encouraged, to the end that property may not be sacrificed for less than its worth."

So, subrogation was allowed on the ground that the bidding was itself a meritorious act, and created an equity, and it was the policy of the law to give the greatest security to bidders at judicial sales compatible with the equities of the parties, where a purchaser was held to have a prior lien on the land for the purchase money paid by him before an appeal, and the judgment thereafter was appealed from and reversed, and the sale set aside. Miller v. Hall, 1 Bush, 229.

So, under the principle that the policy of the law and the rules of equity will protect the purchaser, he was held entitled to be subrogated to the mortgagee to the extent of the purchase money applied to the mortgage debt, where, under a decree of foreclosure, the mortgaged property was sold and the sale confirmed, and the decree was subsequently vacated for defects in the order of publication. Johnson v. Robertson, 34 Md. 165. The court said: "The purchaser should be protected so far that, if he has paid the purchase money, and it has been applied to the payment of the mortgage debt, or so far as he has paid and applied the purchase money, he should be subrogated to the mortgagee, and the mortgage, to the extent of such payment, treated as assigned to him. This plain justice and equity would seem to require."

And a purchaser was held entitled to be substituted to the lien of the plaintiff to the extent and for the amount he had paid to the plaintiff on his deed, subject to a credit of rents and profits, where a decree enforcing a vendor's lien was void because the debtor resided within the Confederate lines, and the creditor within the Federal lines, and a sale thereunder was void. Raymond v. Camden, 22 W. Va. 180.

And it is held that the purchaser on execution sales which are void, is entitled to be subro-gated to the lien of the judgment paid with the purchase money.

So, the assignee of the purchaser was held entitled to subrogation where the defendant in an execution sale on liens died on the day of sale, and the sale was held void because the revivor was premature. The executrix of the defendant became the assignee of the purchaser, and paid the judgment and debts, and in a suit by the heirs the sale was held void. Forst v. Davis, 101 Ky. 343, 41 S. W. 27.

A sheriff represented that land would be sold subject to redemption, under Indiana act 1861 (which was afterwards held inoperative), and the land only brought one third of its value. It was held that the sale should be set aside at the instance of the execution defendant, and the purchaser was allowed a lien upon the land to be enforced by execution. Seller v. Lingerman, 24 Ind. 264. The court said: "The case of Banks v. Bales, 16 Ind. 423, cited by the appellee, is not in conflict with this authority. The power possessed by the court to secure to the purchaser the return of his money, by decreeing a lien for the same upon the land struck off by the sheriff, would seem to render a tender of repayment of the sum by the execution defendant unnecessary."

In Banks v. Bales, 16 Ind. 423, land worth $300 was sold under an execution not exceeding $35. In an action to set aside a sheriff's sale because the entire tract was sold without being offered in parcels, the complainant had tendered the amount paid by the purchaser before he commenced his suit, but he failed to bring the money into court. It was held that a tender was not necessary in a suit to set aside a sheriff's sale. This was because the court had the power to decree a lien in favor of the purchaser. See Seller v. Lingerman, 24 Ind. 264, supra.

And where a sheriff's sale was set aside because of sale en masse, it was held that the purchaser satisfying the judgment was entitled in equity to be subrogated to the lien of the judgment. Mellany v. Schenk, 83 Ill. 357.

An execution sale was made after appeal bond was filed. The judgment was valid, but the execution and sale were invalid. The purchaser, who was attorney for the plaintiff in the proceedings, and who was guilty of no fraud, was held not entitled to hold the property until reimbursed, but was held entitled to subrogation. Burns v. Ledbetter, 54 Tex. 374. The court said: "Owing to the manner in which Ledbetter came into the possession of the property, and the fact that he was attorney of record for the plaintiff, in the judgment, and the further fact that the money paid by him only liquidated the judgment in part, we are of the opinion that he is not entitled to hold possession of the property until he is reimbursed. It is more consonant with justice and right to subrogate him to the lien of the original judgment, with order of sale, for the amount he is entitled to recover of appellee Burns on account of the payment on the judgment made with his money."

On a subsequent appeal in this case (56 Tex. 282) the court said: "Ledbetter was the attorney of the judgment plaintiff, but was not for that reason precluded from recovering back money paid without consideration. His position can scarcely be such as to give him less rights than the plaintiff. The cases are numerous in this state in which equitable relief, predicated on these rights of the judgment plaintiff or the purchaser, has been liberally extended."

And in an action to try title, the purchaser of the land at sheriff's sale under a valid judgment which was a lien on the land was held entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the original judgment where the sale was ineffective for want of proper description. Jones v. Smith, 55 Tex. 383. In this case the purchaser was liable on his warranty to the defendant. The court said: "Under such circumstances, Smith had the right to be subrogated to the lien of the original judgment upon the land, for the amount he had paid in the discharge of the same. Nor were his rights materially affected by the fact that he did not get possession of the land under his purchase. If he or his vendee was in possession, the appellants could not disturb that possession until they had refunded the money paid by him in discharging the judgment; and, if not in possession, he would be entitled to be subrogated to the lien of that judgment."

And the purchaser was allowed the money and a lien on the land where the execution was irregular because issued on a judgment which had been destroyed by fire without substitution, and the property brought but a small proportion of its value, and the sale was set aside. Beckham v. Medlock, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 61, 46 S. W. 402.

So, where a judgment was reversed on appeal, and the debtor recovered the land from the purchaser's grantee, it was held that the latter was entitled to a lien upon the land for the amount paid to the sheriff, with interest. O'Brien v. Harrison, 59 Iowa, 686, 12 N. W. 256, 13 N. W. 764. In this case the plaintiff had tendered the defendant this sum. Iowa Code, § 3199, provided that property acquired by a purchaser in good faith under a judgment subsequently reversed shall not be affected by such reversal; but it was held that the purchaser, not having paid the full amount of his purchase money, was not a purchaser in good faith.

But subrogation was denied where suit was not brought by the proper party.

A receiver of a firm had a judgment against a member of the firm. A levy was made on land notwithstanding he had conveyed the same. The purchaser's heirs brought a suit to set aside the conveyance as fraudulent. The same was set aside, and also the sheriff's sale to the purchaser. It was held, on a prayer for subrogation, that the voluntary purchase discharged the creditor's judgment, and there could be no substitution. It was held, also, that the administrator could not be subrogated to the lien, but that the heirs might, on proper procedure, obtain relief. Richmond v. Marston, 15 Ind. 134.

In Mulr v. Berkshire, 52 Ind. 149, the court said: "We are aware that there are some dicta in the case of Richmond v. Marston, 15 Ind. 134, which would seem to take a narrower view of the right of subrogation than we have expressed in this opinion; but that case differed in its premises from this; besides it was decided upon another ground. Subsequent decisions of this court, however, fully support, as we think, the principles governing us in this opinion."

See Boggs v. Fowler, 16 Cal. 559, 76 Am. Dec. 561; Abadie v. Lobero, 36 Cal. 390,—subdiv. V.

The exceptional cases where subrogation was denied are those relating to probate sales, proceedings against nonresidents, and fraudulent sales, for which cases see infra.

60 L. R. A.

2. Out of proceeds of resale.

In some cases the sale was set aside, and the purchaser was protected, by simply directing that out of the proceeds of the second sale his purchase money be returned to him. This was under the general principle that equity will afford relief, and will protect the purchaser. But it must have been upon the theory that the purchaser is subrogated to the lien of the creditor for his advances, although this equitable principle is only noticed in one of the cases explaining a prior decision in the same state.

A sale was void because made without notice to occupants as required by Iowa Rev. 1860, § 3318, providing that, if a defendant is in possession of part of land levied on, the officer having execution shall serve the defendant with written notice mentioning time and place of sale, and sales made without the notice may be set aside. It was held that a resale should be ordered, and, if an advance bid was made, the property should be resold, and the amount paid by the first purchaser refunded to him. Jensen v. Woodbury, 16 Iowa, 515.

In Fleming v. Maddox, 32 Iowa, 493, referring to the case of Jensen v. Woodbury, 16 Iowa, 515, it was said: "This order can be explained and justified only upon the theory that the purchasers had acquired an interest in the judgment, and been subrogated to the rights of the creditor. And this doctrine is just and reasonable, and to our minds entirely applicable to this case."

Applying the doctrine of subrogation, a purchaser was held entitled to have the credit on the judgment set aside to the extent of his bid, and a resale of the land for the purpose of indemnifying him, where an execution debtor after a sale paid off the judgment, and then had the sale set aside on the ground of irregularity. Fleming v. Maddox, 32 Iowa, 493. The court said: "It is said by the counsel that defendant had a right to pay off the judgment, and prevent a further sale of his property. This we concede. But he should have paid to the purchasers the amount of their bids, and not to the plaintiff, who already had received satisfaction."

And in a foreclosure judgment an interpleader was adjudged to have a prior lien. An order of sale was issued by him without notice to plaintiff. A new sale was ordered, and it was held that out of the proceeds of that sale there be paid to the prior purchaser the amount paid by him as purchase money of the land, and that the balance due the interveners be then satisfied, and the remainder be paid to plaintiff in the judgment below. Elam v. Donald, 58 Tex. 316.

A judicial sale was set aside where the master withdrew the land from sale and readvertised without order of the court or consent of the parties. It was held that, the purchase money having been appropriated to pay charges on the land, the purchaser should be protected, and that a second sale should not be had unless a greater bid was made, and, if so, he should be repaid what he had paid in, and his deed, bond, and mortgage should be canceled. Tompkins v. Tompkins, 39 S. C. 537, 18 S. E. 233. The court said: "The purchaser has paid into court $1,625 of his money, a large part of which has been appropriated to the purposes of the action under the decree of court. Now, if there is one thing over others in our system of jurisprudence that merits the commendation of all, it must be the flexibility of the principles adopted by courts of equity, by which they are made to subserve the needs of each particular case. Ought not those principles to be applied here? It seems so to us. Under our law, William R. Parks, by being a successful bidder at the sale provided for by a decree in this cause, has, to a certain extent, become a party to this action. His money has been paid into court and used for the purpose of the action, under an honest mistake, it is true. Only one party to the action seeks any relief against him. The circuit judge orders a new sale, without any provision being made for his (Parks') protection. This is error, and must be rectified."

Property of infants was sold under foreclosure for half of its value. It was held that a resale should be ordered upon security that the property should produce 50 per cent advance, and that the purchaser would be entitled to be paid out of the amount of such advance the interest of his deposit and of the whole purchase money which he had kept on hand, together with all reasonable costs and expenses. Duncan v. Eodd, 2 Paige, 90.

And a sale was set aside on the ground of material errors which, if allowed to stand, would permit the purchaser to enjoy "an unconscionable advantage" by the sacrifice of the property through the mistake of the receiver as to the number of cattle and the value thereof that were sold. A resale was ordered, and it was held that out of the purchase money the former purchaser should be repaid the purchase price, with interest at 6 per cent and expenses. Horse Springs Cattle Co. v. Schofield, 9 N. M. 136, 49 Pac. 954.

So, in an action by infants claiming that a sale was for $10,000, and was reported only for $5,000, the sale was set aside, and the assignee of a purchaser at mortgage foreclosure was held entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the mortgage paid by his money. But the decree was that a resale be had, and the holder of the purchaser's certificate at the first sale be paid his purchase money. Bruschke v. Wright, 166 Ill. 183, 57 Am. St. Rep. 125, 46 N. E. 813.

But where the confirmation was set aside, and the officer did not pay into court all of the proceeds, relief out of the proceeds of a second sale was denied the purchaser. In this case a sale of real estate was confirmed, and afterwards, on proof of fraud, was vacated, and the trustee was removed and required to pay into court the proceeds, but had defaulted to the extent of $1,000. It was held that the purchaser, who had paid his money to the trustee, and received only a part of it back, was not entitled to have the balance due him paid from the proceeds of a second sale made by another trustee. Kenaday v. Waggaman, 3 App. D. C. 412. The court said: "As to Kenaday, the decree denies his right to property of which he claims to be owner, and which is of the value of $11,000. He paid that sum for it in cash to Green as trustee. It is true that there are funds in the registry of the court below, which, in the event of the affirmance of the decree, can be paid over to him, and he be thus far reimbursed for what he paid to Green on the purchase of the property." Kenaday v. Edwards, 134 U. S. 123, 33 L. ed. 856, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 523. The decree of the general term having been affirmed, the appellant did receive the money that was in the registry of the court, and was to that extent reimbursed. And, if the balance of the $11,000 could be reached and made subject to the direction of the court, the appellant would be entitled to receive that also. But clearly he has no enforceable claim whatever against the fund realized on the last sale of the property, and now in the hands of the present trustees to serve the purposes of the trust under the will of Mrs. Macpherson."

See Elchelberger v. Hawthorne, 33 Md. 588, and Re Dickerson, 111 N. C. 108, 15 S. E. 1025, subdiv. III. d. 1; Martin v. Turner, 2 Helsk. 384, subdiv. III. d. 2.

d. Probate, guardians' and administrators' sales.

1. Guardian's sales.

The weight of authority is that the purchaser at a guardian's or partition sale of infant's land, where the sale is set aside as void, is entitled to be reimbursed or subrogated to the amount of the purchase money paid.

So, in an action by a ward to set aside a guardian's sale it was held that the minors were bound by the acts of the guardian, and that it would be inequitable to set the sale aside unless the consideration paid should be refunded. Kendrick v. Wheeler, 83 Tex. 247, 20 S. W. 44. The court said: "The acts of the guardian in dealing with innocent purchasers, under lawful orders of the court, are binding upon the minors, in so far as they affect the rights of such purchasers. Dancy v. Stricklin, 15 Tex. 557, 65 Am. Dec. 179; Clayton v. McKinnon, 54 Tex. 211. The purchaser at the guardian's sale is not required to see to a proper application of the purchase money, or that the guardian executes his trust in a legal way in dealing with the fund after it goes into his possession."

A sale made in orphans' court was ratified by an order nisi, but never by final order. The executors made a deed, and charged themselves with the purchase money, and distributed the surplus. Subsequently one of the distributees had the sale set aside on the ground that the executor was interested in the purchase. It was held that the original purchaser was entitled to be reimbursed out of the purchase money arising from the second sale to the full amount he had paid the executors on the original purchase. Elchelberger v. Hawthorne, 33 Md. 588. The court said: "There is certainly nothing to be found in this record tending to induce a court of equity to deny to this complainant and purchaser the benefit of these equitable doctrines, or those of like character announced in Jones v. Jones, 4 Gill, 87, and in the more recent case of McLaughlin v. Barnum, 31 Md. 425. He purchased at a public sale for a fair price, has paid the purchase money, and made improvements under the impression he had obtained a good title, and the sale has been vacated for no other conceivable reason than because he agreed at the time, the executors, or one of them, should become interested in the purchase, or have some part of the land."

A sale of an infant's land in partition was made ex parte instead of publicly. A resale was ordered, and the purchaser having conveyed his interest, it was held that an account should be taken of the amount paid to the guardian by the purchaser, and of the rents and profits since the attempted sale and the possession of the purchaser and those claiming under him, and that the balance of the sum so paid, after deducting the rents and profits, be a charge upon the fund arising from the second sale then ordered. Re Dickerson, 111 N. C. 108, 15 S. E. 1025.

And the purchaser was held entitled to have such sum as was paid to the mother as guardian of the children repaid to him in an action brought against him to set aside the sale, where a guardian's sale was void, under Tenn. Code, § 3339, providing that no guardian, next friend, or witness, shall purchase at administrator's sale, and, if they purchase, the sale shall be void, and the infant or married woman may bring ejectment as if no sale had been made. Starkey v. Hammer, 1 Baxt. 438. In this case the purchaser was one of the witnesses to show that it was for the interest of the minors that the land should be sold.

See Bone v. Tyrrell, 113 Mo. 175, 20 S. W. 798, and Douglas v. Bennett, 51 Miss. 680, infra, holding that the purchaser must show that the guardian has made a proper application of the fund.

Some cases grant relief to the purchaser on a void sale, where it is shown that the ward was benefited.

So, the purchaser was held entitled to reimbursement where a life tenant and guardian of an infant remainderman obtained an order of sale for a part of the property to improve the remainder. The remainderman, who was not a party, after the death of the life tenant, brought a suit to recover. The sale was void because the chancellor had only jurisdiction to sell for reinvestment. Hays v. Bradley, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 387; 23 S. W. 372. This was on the ground of benefiting the remainderman's estate.

A guardian's sale was void, and the heirs brought ejectment, and the purchaser filed a bill to restrain the prosecution of the ejectment until the purchase money and improvements were paid for. It was held that the complainant in equity had the burden of tracing the fund to some appropriation or use beneficial to the wards. Douglas v. Bennett, 51 Miss. 680. The court said: "The doctrine of a court of equity is, that the heir, who has received the price of his real estate, sold by his guardian, cannot hold on to the money and at the same time recover the land on account of some defect in the judicial proceeding under which it was sold. The circumstances put him under an equitable estoppel, and he must come to a fair account with the purchaser respecting the money. If he will refund the money, he may recover the land, or the chancellor may treat the money as an equitable charge upon the land. Short v. Porter, 44 Miss. 534; Jayne v. Boisgerard, 39 Miss. 799."

And the purchaser was held entitled to reimbursement where the proceeds were applied to the payment of proper debts.

In an action by a widow and heirs to set aside a guardian's sale of real estate belonging to the children, where the sale was set aside because competition had been prevented, and the purchaser had paid off the mortgage bearing 10 per cent interest, it was held that the purchaser was only entitled to 6 per cent. Devine v. Harkness, 117 Ill. 145, 7 N. E. 52. In this case the court said: "Paying the mortgage debt to the mortgagee was no more than paying the amount of it to the guardian, and was but paying appellant's bid for the land. The payment was one made in wrong, in the carrying out of a wrongful purchase, and presents no case for the application of the equitable doctrine of subrogation."

application of the equitable doctrine of subrogation."

So it was held that the minors were entitled to recover, subject to the purchaser's claim for reimbursement, where a guardian's sale of sheep under an order of the county court was invalid because not confirmed, and the purchase money was applied to the payment of established claims. Harrison v. Ilgner, 74 Tex. 86, 11 S. W. 1054.

And a sale of real estate of a ward was made while she was insane, and when there was sufficient personal property. On leave obtained by the ward to redeem, it was held that the vendee of the purchaser should be reimbursed by the redemptioner the amounts paid by the purchaser to satisfy judgments which were claims against the judgment debtor. Cosgrove v. Merz (R. I.) 37 Atl. 704. It was also held that the vendee was entitled to be reimbursed for repairs and improvements.

Guardians refunded the purchase money on the heirs recovering from the purchaser in ejectment because the sale was void, and then the guardians sought to hold the heirs responsible for the purchase money for which they had accounted on a settlement. It was held that the heirs could not retain the property and hold the guardians liable on a settlement, and, if the new guardian refused to ratify the sale, the former guardians might recover their money. Burleigh v. Bennett, 9 N. H. 15, 31 Am. Dec. 213.

And the purchaser at a guardian's sale which was void was held entitled to relief where the ward had received his full share. Summers v. Howard, 33 Ark. 490; Hatcher v. Briggs, 6 Or. 31.

So, a subvendee was held entitled to maintain a suit in equity against the plaintiff in ejectment for so much of the purchase-money fund as came to her hands, and to hold the guardian personally responsible for the residue if the sale was set aside. Trousdale v. Maxwell, 6 Lea. 161. In this case a guardian's sale of infant's land was void because the county court ordering the sale had no jurisdiction. After the infant became of age she brought an action of ejectment against the subvendee. The court said: "The party ejected by the infant would be entitled, by right of subrogation, to the extent of the purchase money paid by him, with interest, to the original purchase money, and to have the amount used for the infant's benefit, or paid to the infant, declared a lien upon the land."

But in guardians' sales which are void some cases hold that the purchaser is not entitled to relief where the sale is unnecessary, or the guardian has wasted the proceeds; and others refuse relief where the money is not used for the benefit of the ward. It is held in Illinois that there is a difference in a suit in equity by an heir to set aside a sale and a suit in ejectment, as in the former the maxim that he who seeks equity must do equity is applied. This equitable doctrine is applied in Texas in common-law cases if the purchaser asserts an equitable lien.

So, in Reynolds v. McCurry, 100 Ill. 356, where a guardian, under a void decree of partition, sold the land of his ward and appropriated the money to his own use, it was held that the ward could maintain an action to set the sale aside without returning the purchase money. In this case there were ample assets to pay all the debts out of the personality, and there was no occasion for selling the land. The court said: "The land is sold, and the proceeds divided between the mother and guardian, and the guardian has long since squandered his share of the spoils. Not a cent of the money now remains to be returned to appellees, and no part of it was ever expended for appellant's benefit, and yet it is insisted that, unless this money is returned by appellant, equity will afford him no relief."

And it was held that the purchaser could not recover the purchase price in an action of ejectment brought by the ward, as it was not shown that the purchase money was used for the benefit of the ward, where a guardian's sale was void because it was not approved by the court. Bone v. Tyrrell, 113 Mo. 175, 20 S. W. 796.

Chambers v. Jones, 72 Ill. 275, held that an infant defendant in partition, who received a part of the proceeds, seeking to set aside a sale, must tender to the purchaser the purchase money, on the ground that he who seeks equity must do equity. Referring to the purchaser, the court said: "On the failure of the title, as in this case, he would have no right to relief, as against the heirs; nor could he have a decree against the land itself for the purchase money. This is settled by Bishop v. O'Conner, 69 Ill. 441, and need not now be discussed as a new question; but the defendant is asking no relief on a bill or otherwise."

At the suit of the holder of a life estate, a county court ordered the sale of the remainder estate. The judgment was void for want of jurisdiction, and the infant remainderman received no benefit. After coming of age, the infant recovered in ejectment. It was held that the purchaser could not maintain a bill in equity for the purchase money, and for a lien, where the infants had received no benefit. Abernethy v. Phillips, 82 Va. 709, 1 S. E. 113. The court said: "The record clearly shows that William H. Phillips, who was only seven years old when the land was sold under the decree of the county court, nor the then unborn child B. Phillips, ever made any contract, directly or indirectly, with either of the appellants in reference to the land in question, or ever received even one cent of the price paid. They cannot, therefore, on any principle of justice or equity, be called on to make restitution."

And a purchaser was denied a lien where he only pleaded estoppel against the wards.

A guardian's sale was void because the record failed to show that he had taken the required statutory oath, and no title passed by the deed. It was contended that the wards, who were infants at the time of the sale, and for whose benefit it was claimed the land was sold by the guardian and the proceeds applied for their support and education, were estopped from questioning the title. The appellate court affirmed the judgment of ejectment. The chief justice noted that since the opinion there were no cases found that minors could be estopped. Blason v. Filby, 24 Wis. 441.

Referring to this case in Blodgett v. Hitt, 29 Mo. 169, the court said: "The defendant offered to show that the purchase money, paid for the land to the guardian, was expended by him for the benefit of the plaintiffs. . . . It was held that, if such purchase money was used for their benefit, the plaintiffs were estopped to deny the validity of such sale and judgment. This court held, and in my opinion correctly, that such fact would not, of itself, constitute an estoppel upon the plaintiffs."

The principle to be gathered from the cases on the subject seems to be that some act of the ward after he reaches majority, such as receiving the purchase money or a portion of it, or the like, is essential to create an estoppel against him. This is the extent of the decision of this court in that case. No question was raised, considered, or decided, as to the right of a purchaser in good faith at a guardian's sale, which is void by reason of omissions or defects in the preliminary proceedings, to have the purchase money, paid to the guardian and used by him for the benefit of the ward, adjudged an equitable charge on the land, to be paid before the purchaser shall be dispossessed thereof. Had this question been made, we cannot say how it would have been decided."

Where a recovery was had by heirs in ejectment because a partition sale brought by their guardian was void, the court said: "Neither would the fact that he purchased the property for himself at the partition sale, and paid into the estates of these minors the full purchase money, effect a transfer of title to him. The equity which is administered by the courts upon void sales of this character is not that of decreeing them valid. The most that it can do is to decree a return of the purchase money, and order an account of rents, profits, and improvements, and adjudge the land subject to a lien for the difference; and this is done only when such equity is pleaded." Campbell v. Laclede Gaslight Co. 84 Mo. 352.

In Wichita Land & Cattle Co. v. Ward, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 307, 21 S. W. 128, where a vendor's lien was enforced against a guardian, and the ward had the sale set aside, it was held that the rents and profits were a proper offset against the amount paid by the purchaser.

A guardian's sale was void because of no notice given to the heirs, and the court had no jurisdiction. A petition by the heirs against the purchaser to quiet title was held sufficient, although the purchase money was not shown to have been tendered. Washburn v. Carmichael, 32 Iowa, 475. This was on the ground that the defendant might have received more than sufficient rents to reimburse him.

2. Administrators' sales.

The weight of authority holds that, if an administrator's or probate sale is void, in a proceeding to sell the land to pay debts, the purchaser is entitled to restitution or subrogation for the purchase money, where the same is used to pay debts against the estate. Neel v. Carson, 47 Ark. 421, 2 S. W. 107; Daquin v. Colron, 8 Mart. N. S. 674; Donaldson v. Winter, 1 La. 137; McGee v. Wallis, 57 Miss. 638, 34 Am. Rep. 484; Carey v. West, 139 Mo. 146, 40 S. W. 661; Cunningham v. Anderson, 107 Mo. 371, 28 Am. St. Rep. 417, 17 S. W. 972; Sharkey v. Bankston, 30 La. Ann. 891; Wille v. Brooks, 45 Miss. 542.

So purchasers were held entitled to maintain a bill against the administrator, in the nature of a creditor's bill, and were entitled to substitution for the debts which were paid by the money of the purchaser under a void decree. Hull v. Hull, 35 W. Va. 155, 29 Am. St. Rep. 800, 13 S. E. 49. The court said: "Principles of justice demand this, and courts of equity have raised up this principle, a being of their creation, called 'substitution,' unknown to common-law forums, to accomplish the ends of justice; and I know of no more signal instance to exemplify the disposition, as well as the power, of equity to adopt means to accomplish right, than this of substitution, accorded purchasers under void proceedings, whose money has gone to satisfy liens good against the debtor."

So, restitution was allowed the purchaser in an action brought by heirs to set aside and redeem from an execution sale because the executor, not having power to sell certain lands, used a judgment to effect their sale, and sold them en masse for less than their value. It was held that, as complainants were seeking relief in equity, and the purchase relieved the estate from an indebtedness, and gave a surplus to the executor for the benefit of the heirs, they were compelled to refund the purchase price as a condition precedent to their redeeming. Kinney v. Knoebel, 51 Ill. 112.

In Bishop v. O'Conner, 69 Ill. 431, the case of Kinney v. Knoebel, 51 Ill. 112, was distinguished, as subrogation in that case was placed on the ground that it was a bill filed to set aside a sale and to be permitted to redeem, and when equity was sought, relief would only be granted upon doing full equity. Also in that case the purchase was upon condition that he could use the debts against the estate for paying his bid.

In Smith v. Knoebel, 82 Ill. 392, which was a subsequent appeal of Kinney v. Knoebel, 51 Ill. 112, where the same doctrine was affirmed, it was held that the executor held the land as security for the debts, that the land sold for more than the debts, and that the heirs must pay the whole purchase money in a suit to redeem.

So it was held that the purchaser was entitled to an equity which would prevent a recovery in ejectment until reimbursed, where the record of the probate court failed to show an order authorizing the sale which had been made, but the land had been sold above its appraisal value, and the proceeds were applied to the relief of other lands of the heirs. Evans v. Snyder, 64 Mo. 516.

Heirs brought suit to recover land where the property of their ancestor was sold by the registrar of wills, but not under the order or by the direction of the judge. This sale was invalid, under La. "Old Code, p. 174, art. 127," providing that the judge shall cause the property to be sold. It was held that the plaintiff could recover, but should not have possession until the rents, profits, and improvements were determined. Elliott v. Labarre, 2 La. 326.

In a later report of this case (3 La. 541) it was held that, if the sum paid for the land by the party evicted extinguished a debt of the owner of the land, the latter must allow it, without interest, as this was compensated for by fruits.

And a purchaser was held entitled to a lien before he could be ejected, where the notice of administrator's sale failed to give time or place. There was no notice given of the petition to sell, and the sale was void. The purchase money paid was applied to the payment of mortgages, debts, and administration. Blodgett v. Hitt, 20 Wis. 169.

A sale to pay debts of an intestate, and for distribution, was held void for want of jurisdiction of the county court, as no process was served on the minors, or answer filed in their behalf. It was held that the purchaser, whose money was used by the administrator to pay debts, was entitled to have the value of the payment made by him refunded and, if not paid in a reasonable time, to be paid by a resale, es- timating the value of Confederate money at the time of the payment, with interest, after charging him with rents and allowing for improvements and repairs. Martin v. Turner, 2 Helsk. 384.
-69 L. R. A.

An administrator's sale was void, and the proceeds were applied to the debts, removing them as charges upon the personal estate, and maintaining an infant heir. Where restitution to the purchaser was not tendered, an action of ejectment by the heir was enjoined. Robertson v. Bradford, 73 Ala. 116.

In Bland v. Bowle, 53 Ala. 152, the court said: "We do not doubt that it is competent for the purchaser, at any time after he discovers that the proceedings for the sale are void, to resort to a court of equity to compel the heir or devisee to elect the ratification or the rescission of the contract of purchase. If the purchase money has been paid and distributed to the heirs, or applied by the personal representative to the payment of debts, a court of equity would compel a conveyance of title from the heirs, if they could not successfully impeach the fairness of the sale. Bell v. Craig, 52 Ala. 215. It is impossible that injury can result to the vigilant purchaser, and it cannot be allowed him to rescind at pleasure the contract of purchase, which the heirs may be willing to confirm."

In Dorman v. Lane, 6 Ill. 143, it was said that a sale under a void authority was also void, and the purchaser could recover back the purchase money. In this case, it was held that an application by an administrator to sell land could not be allowed where fifteen years had elapsed after an order allowing his claim, and the land had previously been sold under an act of the legislature to pay the same debt, and the proceeds had been received by him, but the act had been declared unconstitutional, and that sale was void.

In Woodstock Iron Co. v. Fullenwider, 87 Ala. 584, 13 Am. St. Rep. 73, 6 So. 197, it was said: "Where land of a decedent is sold by the probate court for the payment of debts, or for distribution, and the proceeding is void for want of jurisdiction, or otherwise, and the purchase money, being paid to the administrator, is applied by him to the payment of the debts of the decedent's estate, or is distributed to the heirs,—while the sale is so far void as to convey no title at law, the purchaser nevertheless acquires an equitable title to the lands, which will be recognized in a court of equity. And he may resort to a court of equity to compel the heirs or devisee to elect a ratification or rescission of the contract of purchase. It is deemed unconscionable that the heirs or devisees should reap the fruits of the purchaser's payment of money, appropriated to the discharge of debts, which were a charge on the lands, and at the same time recover the lands."

In Brandon v. Brown, 106 Ill. 519, the executor made a sale under an order of the county court to pay debts, and before the money was used the heirs recovered the property in ejectment on the ground of want of jurisdiction of the county court, and the executor refunded the money to the purchaser, but refused to charge himself with the same in the county court. It was held that, if the heirs disaffirmed the sale, they must return the purchase money.

An administrator's deed was supposed to be void in an action of ejectment brought by heirs. The defense was that the purchase money was used to pay debts. It was held that the answer should contain a prayer that an account be taken, and that the sum found to be due the defendant should be declared to be a lien upon the land; and the judgment of the court should be that the plaintiff should have possession upon paying the defendant the sum so found to be due. This was not done in the present case, and in this particular the answer of the defendant was defective. Sims v. Gray, 66 Mo. 613.

It is a general rule that where the debts paid from the proceeds of the sale were a charge on the land, and the administrator's sale is void, the purchaser will be held entitled to restitution or subrogation. McDonough v. Cross, 40 Tex. 251; Caldwell v. Palmer, 6 Lea, 652; Fisher v. Bush, 133 Ind. 315, 32 N. E. 924; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Blakeney, 73 Tex. 180, 11 S. W. 174; Mersells v. Vreeland, 8 N. J. Eq. 575.

So, where an administrator's sale was void, although one parcel of land sold for enough to discharge all debts, the purchaser was held entitled to a vendee's lien for money which he had paid on his bid, and which had gone to release land from the burden of the intestate's debts. Jones v. French, 92 Ind. 138.

So, the purchaser at an administrator's sale was held entitled to be subrogated to the extent of the purchase money applied in the extinguishment of a mortgage on the property. Vallé v. Fleming, 29 Mo. 152, 77 Am. Dec. 557. This was an action of ejectment by heirs. The court said: "It is immaterial under what form the equity in such cases is administered,—whether under the name of compensation, as it was done in the case of Bright v. Boyd, 1 Story, 478, Fed. Cas. No. 1,875, or under the name of substitution, as in the case of Hudgin v. Hudgin, 6 Gratt. 320, 52 Am. Dec. 124, or, as it is sometimes more conveniently effected, by reviving the encumbrance, which the purchase money has extinguished in permitting it to be used as a shield against a recovery at law. Peltz v. Clarke, 5 Pet. 482, 8 L. ed. 199."

And in an action of ejectment by heirs to recover from the purchaser at an administrator's sale on the ground that it was void, it was held error to strike out the defendant's answer, pleading, as in Vallé v. Fleming, 29 Mo. 152, 77 Am. Dec. 557, his equitable claim. Jones v. Manly, 58 Mo. 559.

In Bishop v. O'Conner, 69 Ill. 431, it was said that in the case of Vallé v. Fleming, 29 Mo. 152, 77 Am. Dec. 557, the purchase at administrator's sale was subject to a mortgage, and the purchase money was applied to the satisfaction, and the purchaser was subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee. The correctness of the decision was doubted.

A sale was void because the administrator failed to give bond. The purchaser had paid one third in cash, which was used to pay a judgment lien. There was no formal rescission, but a resale, and the first purchaser bought part of the land. In a suit by him to obtain a preference, it was held that the purchaser was entitled to be reimbursed, out of the estate, the sum of money which he had advanced and could recover by bill in equity. Short v. Porter, 44 Miss. 533. The court said: "But the equity of the complainant rests upon the further impregnable ground that he, supposing that he was acquiring the title of the heirs of intestate, at the sale made by the administrator, made a cash payment of—dollars, which was actually used and applied by the administrator to discharge a preferred lien on the land. As to 69 L. R. A.

the heirs, that application of the money exonerated their property pro tanto. It went to relieve an encumbrance on the land. They would not be permitted to recover back the land for the reason that the probate decree and sale were invalid, and, therefore, did not divest their title, except upon the condition that they restore to the purchaser his money, or, rather, to the extent of the cash payment."

And a purchaser of property under execution was held to have the right in equity, on the recovery of the property from him by a superior title, to be substituted for the creditor, and to have his purchase money refunded by the defendant in the execution, where the execution was against administrators, out of the assets of the estate. McLaughlin v. Daniel, 8 Dana, 182. The court said: "According to the principle repeatedly recognized by this court, he has an equitable right to be substituted in the place of the creditor, and to have the amount so paid refunded to him out of the estate. His equity rests not upon the ground of his want of knowledge as to the title of the slave, but on the ground of his having discharged a judgment against the estate, for which it stood chargeable, by a purchase of property made under the coercive process of the law; and, therefore, has equitable right to be reimbursed out of the estate."

And subrogation was allowed the purchaser where a guardian filed a bill against an executor to subject land devised to the payment of his debt, without making devisees parties. The sale did not pass a legal title. Hudgin v. Hudgin, 6 Gratt. 320, 52 Am. Dec. 124. This was on the equitable ground that the purchaser, on disaffirmance of the sale, was entitled to be substituted to the rights of the creditor, and that the land should be charged with the amount of the debt paid by him.

In Bishop v. O'Conner, 69 Ill. 431, the case of Hudgin v. Hudgin, 6 Gratt. 320, 52 Am. Dec. 124, was distinguished, as there the testator expressly charged the land with the payment of debts, and, the debts having been paid by the purchaser from funds arising from the sale by the executors, the heirs were required to refund to the purchaser the money he had paid the executor, and which had been applied to the encumbrance.

And the purchaser is held entitled to relief where it is shown that the purchase money had been applied for the benefit of the estate and heirs, and the sale was set aside.

An administrator, under an order of the probate court, made a void sale of the homestead to pay debts. It was held that the heirs, in an action against the purchaser to recover the land, should offer to restore the purchase money which they had received, and which had been applied for their benefit. Stephenson v. Marshall, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 162, 33 S. W. 383.

In Stults v. Brown, 112 Ind. 370, 2 Am. St. Rep. 190, 14 N. E. 230, it was said that a purchaser at an administrator's sale which had been set aside was held entitled to enforce a vendee's lien against the land for the amount of the purchase money which had been used for the benefit of the estate, and to an order requiring the administrator to resell the land for the payment of his debt. But relief was denied in this action, which was a suit for specific performance. The administrator then filed his claim against the estate for the amount paid, and was defeated. Thereafter he brought another suit on the same matter against the heirs.

The disallowance of his claim was held to be res judicata. Stults v. Forst, 135 Ind. 297, 34 N. E. 1125.

And the defendants in ejectment were held entitled to an equitable counterclaim to the extent of the purchase money and taxes. Schafer v. Causey, 76 Mo. 365. This was an action of ejectment by heirs against the purchaser at an administrator's sale, void because the notice was published in a German newspaper, and because the sale was approved at the term of court at which it was made. It was pleaded that a small part, only, of the purchase money had been used to pay the debts of the estate, and that the greater part had been paid over to the plaintiffs' guardian for their benefit.

But some cases hold that the purchaser is not entitled to relief where the sale was unnecessary, and where the purchaser had notice of the want of authority to make the sale, and where the sale was not confirmed. So where it was not shown that the proceeds of the sale were used to pay debts of the estate, and the administrator was the purchaser. In Illinois, Michigan, and Ohio it is held that if the debts paid are not a charge upon the land the purchaser is not entitled to reimbursement or subrogation on setting aside the sale. In the last state a statute has since provided relief in probate sales.

In Aronstein v. Irvine, 48 La. Ann. 301, 19 So. 131, where the natural tutor as administrator, unnecessarily caused the property in the succession to be sold to pay debts, and became the purchaser, it was held that the minors could maintain a suit against the purchaser under a mortgage made by the tutor, without tendering the purchase price. The court said: "But in a case like the instant one there is no requirement of antecedent legal tender, as 'there is no principle of equity requiring plaintiffs to tender to defendants before asserting their absolute title to property belonging to them and held by defendant as a mere possessor without title. All that equity could possibly require would be to permit him to set up his claim in reconvention, which would not be denied.'"

So, where an administrator's sale was void, and there were assets in the hands of the administrator sufficient to pay the claim of the purchaser, it was held that the purchaser was not entitled to a lien on the property for his purchase money in setting the sale aside. Bennett v. Coldwell, 8 Baxt. 483. The court said: "The law does not make the heirs securities for the administrator, nor make their rights dependent upon the integrity or negligence of the administrator. Hence, we are of the opinion that the decree of the chancellor declaring a lien, and ordering a sale of house and lot, was erroneous."

And a purchaser of personalty at an administrator's sale, having notice of the want of authority of the administrator to make the sale, where the sale was held void, was held not entitled to recover the price from an administrator de bonis non, and the payment was held to be voluntary. Beene v. Collenberger, 38 Ala. 647.

In Pool v. Ellis, 64 Miss. 555, 1 So. 725, where an administrator's sale was never confirmed, it was held the purchaser was under no obligation to pay to the administrator any portion of his bid before confirmation, and such payment was not binding upon the estate or the heirs at law. The court said: "The administrator held the money as a mere depository of the purchaser, and if it was wasted or misapplied by him the loss must be borne by the purchaser. . . . The chancellor, by subrogating the appellant to the rights of the creditor, to the payment of whose debt against the estate a part of the purchase money was applied, extended to him the full measure of relief to which he was entitled."

A purchaser of land at an administrator's sale, where the purchaser was one of the administrators and the sale was void for that reason, was held to have no equity against the land, where it was not shown that the purchase money had been applied to the debts of the estate. Jayne v. Bolsgerard, 30 Miss. 796.

In Illinois, Michigan, and Ohio the purchaser at a void administrator's sale was denied relief where the money was not used to pay debts which were a charge on the land.

In Bishop v. O'Conner, 69 Ill. 431, which was an action by the assignee of the purchaser for subrogation, it was held that a purchaser at an administrator's sale to pay debts, which was void for lack of service, would not be subrogated to the extent that money was paid for support of heirs or payment of debts. It was also held that, if it was an action against heirs, it was barred by limitation. But it is said that a volunteer is not entitled to subrogation, and that there is no implied agreement on the part of the heirs to refund.

After land was given to the devisee with the executor's consent, and she had conveyed it, the executor sold the land under an order of the probate court to pay debts. The sale was held void, the executor having no power to sell the land. On a bill to declare the purchase money a lien because the money paid the executor was used for the estate, it was held that the purchaser had no lien. Frost v. Atwood, 73 Mich. 67, 16 Am. St. Rep. 560, 41 N. W. 98. The court said: "It is difficult to see how the case can be affected by the use which the executor made of the money. In all probate sales, valid or invalid, the officer making the sale receives the money, and usually appropriates it. But it never has been supposed, and it is not legally true, that such use creates any lien on the premises unlawfully sold. What he receives without lawful authority does not concern the estate, and he can no more create a lien by spending that money than by spending any other. If the estate owes him, he must pursue his remedy as the law gives it, and his claim must first be established before he can get any remedy. The use, if made, is not made for the benefit of the particular piece of land that he attempted to sell, but for the whole estate; and, if it becomes a claim, it is a claim against the whole estate, and not against a part of it."

In the above case the executor had no power to dispose of the land under the will, and the action of the probate court in assessing and enlarging the amounts to be contributed by the devisee was without jurisdiction as there was no personal service. How. Stat. (Mich.) §§ 5818-5820, providing for issuing executions against the devisees in settling the amount of their liabilities, were held to be the only remedy, and they did not declare a lien, and would not bind any specific property. In this case there was no claim against the estate open to subrogation, and no money lent to the executor or to the estate. The court said: "In the present case, the record does not show that, if the executor had done his duty, the debts would not have been fully paid within the proper statutory period, without any deficiency arising.

And when he sees fit to allow all parties to rest on the idea that they can do what they will with their legacies and devises, the statute gives him no power to recall them."

So, in Nowler v. Colt, 1 Ohio, 519, 13 Am. Dec. 640. It was held that purchase money paid to an administrator upon a sale of intestate's land was not a charge upon the land where the sale was void and the heirs recovered the land. The court said: "The lands of the deceased were never legally charged with the payment. The administrator, from whom the defendant purchased, had no power over them. He paid his money upon a mistake as to the consideration. The present complainants are not the parties to whom he paid it, or with whom he made the contract; and his right to recover back his money cannot be litigated with them, neither at law nor in equity. We can therefore make no decree with respect to the purchase money."

So it was held that a purchaser could not set up an equity in the estate of the decedent by reason of the payment of the decedent's debts from his purchase, where a court in Virginia directed a sale of Ohio land to pay the debts of the estate in Virginia, and the sale was void as the court had no jurisdiction. Beall v. Price, 13 Ohio, 368, 42 Am. Dec. 204. The court said: "But no privity exists between the creditors of Duval and the estate of Price, which will justify them in reaching his assets, except as general creditors of Duval, pursuing his credits. Neither does the advance of money by a stranger, upon a defective sale of a decedent's lands, create an equity against his estate, although the money goes to pay his debts. It has been held by this court that the rule of caveat emptor operates on the purchaser at judicial sales, and cuts off all right to indemnity, except such as may arise from express warranty."

So in a suit in equity by the purchaser against heirs it was held that no lien was acquired by the purchaser, and that, if he had a right to recover, the administrator must be made a party. This was in Lieby v. Ludlow, 4 Ohio, 469, where a probate sale to pay debts was void because it was proved that the land sold was in a city, and the order to sell to pay debts related to land outside the city, and a recovery from the purchaser was had in ejectment. A subsequent statute now provides relief. See subdiv. III. e, Statutory relief.

e. Statutory relief.

In some states statutory relief for the purchaser is provided. The decisions under the Indiana statutes have all affirmed the purchaser's right under a void sale to reimbursement, and the same was held in many cases before the statute recognizing this right was passed, and some decisions since the statute affirm the rule without noticing the statute. In New York the Code providing for redemption, and that the title shall pass to the grantee unless the money is paid to him in twenty days from the time the sale is adjudged void, is held unconstitutional.

In Stevens v. Durrett, 49 Miss. 411, where a sale was void because made by an administrator without any order of court, it was said that Miss. act February 11, 1873, provides that where real estate has been sold under probate or chancery decrees for debts or distribution, and the money has been paid in good faith, and has been applied in good faith for debts or distribution, and such sales are void, the heirs or distributees recovering the same in ejectment shall hold such real estate subject to the payment of said purchase money to said purchaser or any party holding under him.

So a purchaser at a guardian's sale that was void was held entitled to an injunction against a judgment in ejectment obtained by the heirs, where the money was paid to the guardian, and the heirs who had become of age had received their shares. This was held to be on principles of equity and estoppel, as well as under Miss. act February 11, 1873, Pamph. 41, supra. Gaines v. Kennedy, 53 Miss. 103.

In an action of ejectment by heirs of the intestate to recover land sold at a void probate sale, it was held, under this statute, that the purchaser was entitled to an injunction to stay the ejectment suit until the purchase money was refunded, where it was shown to have been applied to the payment of the debts of the estate. Cole v. Johnson, 53 Miss. 94. The court said: "Certainly, the most appropriate, if not the only adequate, method of securing it would be by a chancery proceeding. Independently of this statute, however, a court of equity has the right to charge the purchase money on the land where it is shown to have been applied in exoneration of the liabilities of the estate, as was decided, before the enactment of the statute, in Short v. Porter, 44 Miss. 533; and it is well settled that the bestowal of jurisdiction on a common-law court does not deplete the jurisdiction of a court of equity, unless it is expressly so enacted."

In Montour v. Purdy, 11 Minn. 384, 88 Am. Dec. 88, Gil. 278, where a guardian's sale was attacked by the ward by an action of ejectment, it was held that a tender of the purchase money was not a condition precedent, as possession might be surrendered, and the lien allowed, under Minn. act March 3, 1864, protecting purchasers at executors', administrators', and guardians' sales, and providing that, if the sale shall be void or irregular, the purchaser shall have a lien on the real estate sold for the purchase money, taxes, and interest.

In Rely v. Burton, 71 Ind. 118, which was an action to recover possession of land where the sale was held not void because of defect in nunc pro tunc entry directing the sale without relief from appraisement laws, it was said that the judgment debtor could not recover possession until the purchase money had been refunded with interest, deducting the rents, under the Indiana Code (2 Rev. Stat. 1876, p. 257, § 625), providing that, when land sold by an executor, guardian, sheriff, or commissioner, is recovered by any person liable to pay the judgment, the plaintiff shall not be entitled to a writ of possession without having paid the amount justly due.

And under this statute a purchaser at an execution sale, where the property was misdescribed and the sale was void, was held entitled to be subrogated to the rights of a judgment creditor. Ray v. Detchon, 79 Ind. 56. In this case the foreclosure suit was commenced by publication, and the notice was void for want of sufficient affidavit, and the land was misdescribed in the decree, and the court had no jurisdiction over the person of one of the defendants.

And the same was held in Short v. Sears, 93 Ind. 505. In this case it was said that there was no warranty in judicial sales. "But this rule has no application to cases where the purchaser is asserting his rights against the execution debtor or his property. It was framed for and applies to a very different class of cases."

And in Walton v. Cox, 87 Ind. 104, which was an action on a covenant of warranty, it was said that the grantee holding under a void administrator's sale in a suit for eviction should have set up his claim under this statute.

A purchaser of school land defaulted, and the mortgage was foreclosed, and the land sold in 1876 to Sterne, against whom there was a judgment in 1875, on which an execution sale was had in September, 1877. Sterne had made a mortgage of this land in the interim. The grantee of the original purchaser redeemed from the sale under the school-fund mortgage. It was then held that the lien of the purchaser under the judgment related back to the time of the judgment, and was prior to the lien of the mortgage made in 1876 as against the redemption fund. Paxton v. Sterne, 127 Ind. 289, 28 N. E. 557. The court said: "That a purchaser at a sheriff's sale acquires by subrogation the rights of the judgment plaintiff, in the event that the sale is ineffective to convey title, is affirmed by our statute and asserted by our decisions."

And a purchaser at a sheriff's sale on foreclosure was held entitled to be subrogated to the right of the mortgagee, where the sheriff did not make sufficient written memorandum of sale, and the purchaser failed in a mandamus suit to acquire a deed. Bodkin v. Merit, 102 Ind. 298, 1 N. E. 625. The court said: "It is a familiar principle of equity, and is one fully recognized by our statute and decisions, that payment of a debt by a purchaser at an invalid sheriff's sale subrogates the purchaser to the rights of the creditor."

In Short v. Sears, 93 Ind. 505, it was said: "A purchaser at a sheriff's sale, who buys in good faith, and pays money which goes to the discharge of a judgment lien on the execution defendant's land, is entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the judgment creditor. This is a general principle of equity, and is not dependent alone upon statutory law. Our cases very early held that a purchaser might recover in equity from the execution defendant the amount paid on his bid, and a long line of decisions has maintained this doctrine. . . . The rule has not been confined to a right to a personal judgment against the debtor, but has been extended, as in justice and equity it should be, to a right to the lien of the judgment paid by the bid. . . . The statute declares in very broad terms this general rule. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 1084. . . . As the statute is a remedial one, and in furtherance of a salutary and long-recognized rule, it ought to receive a liberal construction."

Under Bates's Ohio Stat. §§ 5410, 5411, providing that the purchaser at execution, executors', guardians', and assignees' sales, which are set aside, should be subrogated to the rights of the creditor, and shall have a lien, it was held that a purchaser at an executor's sale under an order of the probate court, which was void, was entitled to be subrogated to the creditor's rights when the purchase money was used to pay debts, and the property should be sold to reimburse him. Wehrle v. Wehrle, 39 Ohio St. 365.

But in Gilman v. Tucker, 128 N. Y. 190, 13 L. R. A. 304, 26 Am. St. Rep. 404, 28 N. E. 1040, N. Y. Code (Civ. Proc. § 1440 (Amended Laws 1881, chap. 681), providing for redemption

tion, and that, if the title of the sheriff's grantee in sales under execution is adjudged void in an action brought by the judgment debtor, such judgment shall have no force unless within twenty days the plaintiff pay to such grantee the money paid on the sale with interest and costs; and that, if not paid, the title shall vest in the grantee,—was held to be unconstitutional. The court said: "The obvious intention of the act is to take away from the owner all remedy for the recovery of his property, except upon the payment by him to his adversary of a sum of money which must frequently be greater than the value of the property itself. If he remains in possession of the property, he is deprived of any remedy to protect his possession, and if his adversary has succeeded in obtaining possession, he is deprived of any remedy to recover it, except upon the condition that he pays as much, or more, than it is probably worth. An owner may, therefore, under this law, be stripped of his property under a void proceeding; be turned out of possession, and denied any affirmative relief in the courts, unless upon the condition that he pays for the property its value, as determined by a judicial sale, and, in addition thereto, a sum for costs and expenses, the amount of which he has no means of ascertaining, and which may also exceed the value of the property in litigation." This was an action by the judgment debtor to have the sale declared void because of void execution. After judgment in favor of the debtor the purchaser moved to set this aside because he had not been tendered the purchase money under the statute. See Meyer v. Farmer, 36 La. Ann. 785; McIntyre v. Sanford, 89 N. Y. 634; Lefevre v. Laraway, 22 Barb. 167,—subdiv. III. g; Elling to Harrington, 17 Mont. 322, 42 Pac. 851, subdiv. V.; Holt v. Bason, 72 N. C. 308, and Wood v. Genet, 8 Paige, 137, subdiv. V.

f. Proceedings against nonresidents.

The purchaser was held not entitled to relief where there was no lien, and the court had no jurisdiction, and the proceedings were by publication against nonresidents.

A judgment was rendered against a nonresident without service, appearance, or attachment, and no lien was asserted. A sale thereunder was void, and it was held that the purchaser under such sale did not acquire a lien for the amount of the debt paid by the sale. Grigsby v. Barr, 14 Bush, 330.

In an action of attachment against a nonresident no notice was given to defendant, and the papers contained a misnomer by transposing the initial letters of the Christian name. The conveyance was in the proper name. It was held that the proceedings were void, that the court had no jurisdiction, and the sale was void, of which the purchaser should have taken notice from the record. It was also held that the purchaser was not entitled, in equity, to retain possession of the land until he had been reimbursed. Buchanan v. Edmisten, 1 Herdman (Neb.) 429, 95 N. W. 620. The court said: "But it is insisted, . . . that is to say, conceding, for the sake of discussion, that the attachment proceedings are void from their beginning to their conclusion, that the threshing-machine company never had any lien, and that no title passed pursuant to the pretended judicial sale, still, by reason of this void proceeding, void sale, and void deed, the purchaser has acquired the right to take and retain possession of the premises until he shall be repaid the amount of his bid. In other words, that the unliquidated debt of the appellant has, by the means mentioned, been converted into an equitable mortgage upon his lands, and the purchaser has attained a position superior to that of a mortgagee in possession. Appellee cites no authority in support of this contention, which is indefensible in reason."

So it was held that, a judgment being void, the sheriff's sale did not divest the defendant of his title, and he was not bound to refund the purchase money paid to the sheriff. Stegall v. Huff, 54 Tex. 193. This was an action by the defendant in execution against the purchaser to recover land the purchaser held under an execution sale based on a judgment by publication, where the court had no jurisdiction. The court said: "Otherwise he might indirectly be forced to pay an indebtedness which he did not owe."

This case followed Edrlington v. Allsbrooms, 21 Tex. 186, which was an action for an injunction against a garnishment judgment, and it was held that a debtor who seeks an injunction against a void judgment is not obliged to bring the money into court before he can claim its interposition.

In Norcraft v. Oliver, 74 Tex. 162, 11 S. W. 1121, where the purchaser bought at an execution sale on a judgment void because rendered on publication against a nonresident, the heirs brought ejectment. The defendant pleaded that he should be reimbursed before losing the land, and also pleaded that the heirs could not maintain this action, as the right of action was in the administrator. This latter defense was sustained. As to his lien, the court said: "The right of the creditor of the estate is good to defend against the heirs taking and appropriating the property, but this right is no better to appropriate it exclusively to his own use than is that of the heirs to do the same thing. The creditor protects himself, and at the same time all other creditors and claimants of the estate, by surrendering the estate's property only to an administrator of the estate in whose hands our laws are so framed as to provide for its proper distribution."

See Boggs v. Fowler, 16 Cal. 559, 76 Am. Dec. 561, subd. V.

g. Fraudulent sales.

A large number of cases hold that a purchaser who was a participant in a fraudulent sale by procuring the property at a sacrifice, where competition was prevented, or who was a party to a fraudulent judgment, was not entitled to relief on the ground that "he that hath committed iniquity shall have no equity." Relief has been denied where an administrator purchased at his own sale. There are cases where relief was granted without discussing the question whether or not preventing bidding, or fraudulently co-operating in the sale, is sufficient to defeat his right. In some of these relief was granted because the sale was attacked in equity, and the complainant was required to do equity.

A bidder procured a purchase by fraudulently preventing other bids. It was held that he acquired no title, and the court refused to reimburse him, on the maxim that "he that hath committed iniquity shall have no equity." Goble v. O'Connor, 43 Neb. 49, 61 N. W. 131. The 69 L. R. A.

court said: "The sale to appellant was void because of his wrongful and fraudulent acts at the time of the sale, and he acquired no title as against appellees, and is not entitled to have the money paid out by him refunded; and this last, not by way of punishment, and not that the court would help or desire to aid appellees beyond the demands of justice and equity, but because, by his own wrong, the appellant has placed himself in such a position that the court is unable to grant him relief."

An administrator purchased land of an intestate at sheriff's sale on a judgment recovered for an alleged debt of the intestate. In ejectment brought by heirs of the intestate alleging the judgment to be fraudulent, it was held that, if the debt was not shown to be bona fide, and if the administrator had assets to pay it, the heirs could recover the land against the administrator on the ground of fraud, without tendering the money paid or the value of the improvements. Riddle v. Murphy, 7 Serg. & R. 230.

So, in an action of ejectment by devisees against the purchaser at sheriff's sale, where the purchaser had fraudulently misrepresented the land at the sale so as to acquire it at a low price, it was held that the plaintiff did not have to tender to the purchaser the money paid in order to recover. Gilbert v. Hoffman, 2 Watts, 66, 26 Am. Dec. 103. In this case the court said: "In the case at bar, Daniel Gilbert has a title to the land, as the devisee of his father Leonard, which is not in the slightest degree impaired by the deed of the sheriff, which is ab initio void, by reason of the fraud practised at the sale. . . . This opinion, it must be observed, is grounded on the assumption that the purchaser was guilty of such fraud as avoids the sheriff's sale. Whether there was actual fraud will be for the jury to decide on another trial."

So it was held that the purchaser could not hold the title as security for the purchase money advanced, or anything else, where he prevented bidding by fraudulently representing that he was buying the property for the family of the defendant in execution, and that the purchaser would take it charged with liens which he knew the sale would divest. McAskey v. Graff, 23 Pa. 321, 62 Am. Dec. 336. It was also held that the plaintiff in ejectment was not bound to tender the purchase money before trial, nor to take a conditional verdict by which he would be compelled to pay it afterwards.

Two lots amounting to 446 acres were struck off for $13. The sale was set aside as fraudulent on the part of the sheriff. The purchaser had assigned his bid, and the sheriff had conveyed to the assignee. It was held that he was not entitled to any protection in his purchase. Tiernan v. Wilson, 6 Johns. Ch. 411. The court made no disposition as regards the purchase money. The sheriff was decreed to pay the costs.

A sale was set aside for fraud. It was held that the purchaser was not entitled to equitable relief for the purchase money paid. Teas v. McDonald, 13 Tex. 349, 65 Am. Dec. 65. The court said: "But in this case, if Teas, the purchaser of the property, was chargeable with notice of the facts, as we think he was, he is to be deemed to have purchased with a knowledge of the fact that the judgment debtor, whose property he purchased, though legally liable to the plaintiff in execution, yet, as between him and his codefendant Cotton, was not equitably liable; for that he had paid his proportion of the debt, and really owed nothing; and that his codefendant Cotton, who pointed out the property, was the sole debtor, out of whose property the debt should have been collected; and that he was held so liable by the plaintiff in execution, who did not desire the property of the plaintiff in this suit to be sold in satisfaction of his judgment."

An administrator in a mortgage foreclosure was the purchaser. The purchaser had previously contracted to sell the land, and his vendee was to abstain from bidding, and his vendee subsequently paid him for the land. It was held that the combination not to bid rendered the sale void, and that the vendee could not claim a return of the price on setting aside the sale under La. Rev. Civ. Code, § 2505, providing that the seller, in case of eviction, was entitled to restitution of the price, except that this shall not be the case where the buyer, at the time of sale, was aware of the danger of eviction, and purchased at his peril. Meyer v. Farmer, 36 La. Ann. 785.

In Forniquet v. Forstall, 34 Miss. 87, where an administrator at his own sale had made a fraudulent combination with the purchaser to buy for the benefit of the administrator, and had sacrificed the property, and had colluded with subvendees to dispose of the same, it was held, in an action by the administrator de bonis non to recover the property, that he did not have to tender the purchase money, as such purchasers could not require that before the party entitled shall recover his just rights he should be compelled to pay them what they have knowingly seen fit to pay in order to deprive him of his property.

In Hampton v. Hampton, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 497, 29 S. W. 423, where a guardian's sale to his wife was set aside, under Tex. Rev. Stat. § 2582, providing that, if a guardian is the purchaser, directly or indirectly, the sale shall be void, and shall be set aside, as to whether or not the purchaser was entitled to a return of the purchase money was not decided. The court said: "Whether, under the terms of this statute, that character of decree could be entered, we need not decide. But it is not believed that such conditions should be imposed where the sale is one forbidden by law, and those who have become interested were informed of the fact when they purchased; and it does not appear that, assuming the guardian had received the purchase money, the minors derived any benefit from the sale. Conceding that plaintiffs may have had recourse on the guardian and his sureties, we conclude that this fact would not interfere with their prosecution of this remedy, if they so elected."

In other cases where bidding was prevented the purchaser was allowed a lien for his purchase money, without discussing the effect of fraud on the right of subrogation.

An assignee of a rent note went to a tax-foreclosure sale to procure the title for one of the heirs. A lessee was present, and made arrangements to buy the property and protect the assignee, and he procured the title, but failed to carry out his contract for the heirs. The lessee purchased a 140-acre lease for a period of seven years, fairly worth $1,500, for which he paid but $455. The sale was set aside, and the lessee who had paid the purchase price of the rental was held entitled to the equitable lien of a vendee to the extent of the sum he had paid. 60 L. R. A.

Stuart v. Brown, 135 Ind. 232, 34 N. E. 976. The court held that he was bound by his contract to purchase for the benefit of the heir, made with the heir's agent at the sale. This was a suit by the heirs to set aside the sale, and the purchaser contended that plaintiffs were not entitled to equity by reason of their fraudulent agreement to prevent competition, and he claimed, in the event of the sale being set aside, the right of subrogation. The court characterizes his purchase as fraudulent, but does not discuss the effect of that fraud upon his right of subrogation.

So, where a bidder prevented competition by his agent representing that the purchase was for a home for an aged and dependent mother of the purchaser, and the property was sacrificed, the sale was held void, and was set aside as fraudulent, because such a purchase was contrary to public policy. It was held that the purchaser was entitled to have the purchase money refunded which had been applied to pay on complainant's debt, and that a lien should be allowed on the land for the same. Bunts v. Cole, 7 Blackf. 265, 41 Am. Dec. 226. The court does not discuss the effect of such conduct on the right of the purchaser to subrogation.

So where an administrator bought real estate at his own sale, and a suit to set aside the sale was brought at the instance of the heirs. It was said that, where the administrator had been allowed to make lasting improvements without objection, "It may be good ground in equity for reimbursing him therefor out of the first moneys arising from resale of the property as was ordered by the court, but when this is done he cannot equitably claim anything more." Potter v. Smith, 36 Ind. 231.

A bill was filed by minors to set aside a guardian's sale where the purchaser had prevented bidding. The sale was set aside. It was held that the purchaser should be reimbursed the payment made, which had been applied to an existing mortgage and 6 per cent interest, but he was denied the right of subrogation to the mortgage bearing 10 per cent interest. Devine v. Harkness, 117 Ill. 145, 7 N. E. 52. The court said: "Paying the mortgage debt to the mortgagee was no more than paying the amount of it to the guardian, and was but paying appellant's bid for the land. The payment was one made in wrong, in the carrying out of a wrongful purchase, and presents no case for the application of the equitable doctrine of subrogation." The court does not discuss further than is stated above the effect on subrogation of the fraud of the purchaser; but the case seems to turn only on the proposition as to whether he was to get 6 per cent, or whether he was entitled to the 10 per cent carried for in the mortgage.

A sale under attachment of four lots in a body, which were divisible and worth eight times the amount of the debt, was held to be fraudulent and a breach of trust on the part of the auditors, who were authorized to sell only so much of the land as was necessary to satisfy the debts of the plaintiff. It was held that the sale should be set aside with liberty to the owners to apply for an injunction in case the plaintiff in attachment, who was the purchaser, upon being tendered the amount, refused to acknowledge satisfaction. Johnson v. Garrett, 16 N. J. Eq. 31.

A purchase by an executor at an orphan's court sale for the payment of debts was held voidable by the heir, and the purchaser was held entitled to be repaid the purchase money, which was applied to the payment of judgments against the cestui que trust, who was an habitual drunkard, where these payments were assented to by his committee. And this also applied to payments out of the purchase money, made by order of the orphans' court after the suit brought to set aside the sale. Beeson v. Beeson, 9 Pa. 279.

In McIntyre v. Sanford, 89 N. Y. 634, it was held that N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1440, as amended by Laws 1881, chap. 681, § 2, providing that, if the title of one claiming under a sheriff's deed sold on execution is adjudged void, a judgment shall have no force unless the plaintiff shall pay the amount paid on the sale, did not apply where the purchaser and the sheriff had fraudulently colluded; but in an equitable action to set aside the sale it was held that the plaintiff should refund to the purchaser the amount of the judgment with interest.

Under 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 326, § 62, providing that no guardian of any infant party to the suit shall purchase any lands except for the benefit of such infant, and that all sales contrary to this provision shall be void, a purchase of infant's property at a partition sale was held void, and the purchaser was held entitled to the purchase money paid and interest, but was denied costs or expenses and damages, as the purchase was void. Lefevre v. Laraway, 22 Barb. 167.

And in Mulford v. Bowen, 9 N. J. Eq. 797, where an administrator was a purchaser at his own sale through another party, and the heirs brought ejectment, it was held that the purchaser could maintain a bill in equity to restrain the ejectment suit until the equitable rights of the purchaser could be ascertained.

So, where an heir had recovered in ejectment property sold by an administrator under a decree of the orphans' court for the payment of debts, and the administrator was the purchaser through another party, and the sale was fraudulent and void as against the heir, and the heir brought a bill for an accounting and partition. It was held that the purchaser had no ground of complaint where he was allowed his advances with interest. Obert v. Obert, 12 N. J. Eq. 423.

In Barbour v. Morris, 6 B. Mon. 120, where land was sold under executions against the heirs and administrator, and the administrator colluded with the purchaser to prevent competition and to acquire the tract for their joint benefit, and the sale was set aside as fraudulent, in a suit in equity it was held that the complainant should only be granted equity upon the terms of doing equity, and that the purchaser should be reimbursed the amount of the judgments extinguished by the sale, deducting the amount of rents received.

A purchase by an administrator of a head right, under an order of the probate court allowing the administrator to take the land for his claim, was void, but it was held that the heirs must reimburse the purchaser before they could recover the land. Halsey v. Jones, 86 Tex. 488, 25 S. W. 696.

Purchase by guardian, see Campbell v. Laclede Gaslight Co. 84 Mo. 352, subd. III., d. 1; purchase by administrator, see Jayne v. Bolgerard, 39 Miss. 796, subd. III. d. 2.

IV. Relief by action against the debtor.

The weight of authority holds that the purchaser whose money has been used to extinguish the debt of the defendant may maintain against the latter a suit in equity in the nature of assumpsit, and may recover from him the money paid, on the sale being set aside. This rule is applied notwithstanding the purchaser may have paid the money under a mistake of law. But relief was denied in a purchase of chattels where the purchaser failed to obtain possession, and it was not shown that the sheriff had paid out the money.

So it was held that the purchaser could recover from the defendant in execution for whose benefit the purchase money had been paid, where property of defendant was sold at sheriff's sale, and the sale was invalid because the property was exempt as a homestead. It was further held that the purchaser had not waived his right by failing to plead in the ejectment suit, wherein he lost the property. Stone v. Darnell, 25 Tex. Supp. 430, 78 Am. Dec. 582. The court said: "Though a party may plead a demand in reconvention, he is not obliged to do so, nor is he precluded of his action by his failure so to plead."

In an action by a purchaser at a sheriff's sale against the defendant for failure of consideration, it was held that the purchaser was entitled to recover of the defendant the purchase money, where the sheriff had misdescribed the land, and the purchase money had been applied to the payment of the judgment. McLean v. Martin, 45 Mo. 393. The court said: "The plaintiff bought at a fair sale, and paid his money; that money was regularly paid to the creditor, and went to extinguish the judgment against the debtor. It was, then, so much paid for the use and benefit of the debtor. The debtor supposed that his land was sold, and surrendered it to the purchaser, who moved on it and made improvements. Afterwards, ascertaining the misdescription and finding the mistake, the debtor regains possession and now claims the land, and refuses to refund the money which the purchaser paid for his use, and which was applied to the discharge of his debts. In other words, he avails himself of the benefits of the payment, and holds onto the land besides. The claim is grossly inequitable and unjust, and ought not to be allowed, and I see no reason why the action is not maintainable."

So it was held that the purchaser could plead as an equitable set-off for damages the purchase money paid by him, where a purchaser under a void execution sale was sued in trespass by the defendant, who was insolvent. Geoghegan v. Ditto, 2 Met. (Ky.) 433, 74 Am. Dec. 413.

And it was held that the purchaser was entitled in equity to maintain an action against the judgment debtor for the amount of his purchase. Hawkins v. Miller, 26 Ind. 173. In this case a mortgage foreclosure was held void. The court said: "The judgment defendant was guilty of a wrong in refusing to pay his debt. He persisted in that wrong by allowing process to issue on the judgment against him. He stood by and took no steps to have the process set aside, and allowed the sheriff's sale to take place. The plaintiff in good faith paid his money, it is true, under a mistake of law, but the defendant got the benefit of that mistake; he remained in the possession of the land sold, and finally defeated the plaintiff in the suit to recover possession of the premises. Under such circumstances, this court is not inclined to look after fancied distinctions which have no foundation in reason."

A receiver of a partnership sued one of a firm, but before levy the property was fraudulently conveyed. Execution was levied upon the property, and the other partner became the purchaser. In a suit by him to set aside the fraudulent conveyance a decree was had setting it aside, and also the sheriff's sale to the plaintiff. On the question of subrogation, it was held that the purchaser was an ordinary vendee at sheriff's sale, and that the amount which he paid to the sheriff operated as a discharge pro tanto of the judgment, and that, the judgment being satisfied, there could be no substitution. It was further held that, as the money advanced on the void sale was paid to the use of the execution defendant, the administrator, and not the heir of plaintiff, was entitled to recover it. Richmond v. Marston, 15 Ind. 134. The court said: "The sheriff's sale being a nullity, the administrator of Marston may have the right, by suit against Richmond [the defendant], to recover the money paid to the sheriff on the void sale."

But a purchaser was held not entitled to maintain a suit against the debtor for the amount paid, where an execution levy was made on the interest of the defendant in slaves, and the sale was void because the property was not in the possession of the sheriff. Brown v. Lane, 19 Tex. 203. This was because the purchaser did not get such possession or title as ever could have been matured into a good right, and it was not shown that the sheriff had paid the money, and it did not appear whether the purchaser gave a fair value, or bought on speculation at an unconscionable price. This was an action by a purchaser to recover an undivided interest in certain slaves. The validity of the sale was attacked, and the plaintiff then claimed judgment against the defendant for the amount he had paid, and which he alleged had gone to discharge the indebtedness of the defendant in the execution. The court said: "The extent to which our decisions go, so far, is that a bona fide purchaser, who has been sued to vacate his title, will not be required to abandon his possession and title, until his purchase money is refunded to him. It is necessarily implied in this, that the sale is such as to vest the possession, either actually or constructively, in the purchaser; that he paid money which was applied to the use of defendant; that he paid a fair price,—such as would constitute a consideration in good conscience; and generally that he should not be a participant in any fraud connected with the sale."

Cases where the purchaser failed to secure the property because it was owned by a third person, and the purchaser sued the debtor, are not included in this note.

V. Relief by action against the creditor.

The weight of authority is that, in the event of the sale being set aside, and in the absence of other relief given by statute, the purchaser may recover the purchase money in an equitable action for money had and received against the creditor procuring the sale, on the ground of mistake and failure of consideration, and implied promise to return the same. The remedy against the creditor is also given in some states by statute. So where the creditor held another prior lien, and did not disclose it at the sale, the purchaser was held entitled to have the sale set aside, and the creditor was compelled to refund or release his lien. Relief was refused where the remedy of subrogation was sufficient.

So, the purchaser at a void execution sale was held entitled to recover, in an equitable action for money had and received, the amount of his purchase money from the party who procured the sale. Schwinger v. Illickok, 53 N. Y. 280. In this case on a foreclosure of a mortgage by publication a personal deficiency judgment was taken without jurisdiction. The court said that knowledge of the invalidity of process "will not be imputed to the purchaser at such sale in order to make out that the payment was voluntary."

And in Chapman v. Brooklyn, 40 N. Y. 372, which was a suit by the purchaser against the city under a judicial sale for taxes, which was void because the lots sold were not owned by the persons named as the owners, it was held that the purchaser could recover, applying the principle that, when the consideration appears to be valuable and sufficient, but turns out to be wholly false, then a promise resting on this consideration is no longer obligatory, and the party paying money can recover it back.

And in Ward v. Southerland, Peck (Tenn.) Appx., where the sale was void, the purchaser was held entitled to maintain a bill in equity against the plaintiff in execution to recover the purchase money on the ground of misstatements of the plaintiff in execution, and that the money was paid under a mistake. In this case the creditor obtained a judgment, and after the death of the debtor issued a sc. fa. against the heirs without any executor, and on return of the sc. fa. had the execution awarded against the heirs, and then sold the judgment to the purchaser on the representation that they acquired a good title, and the plaintiffs then purchased at the execution sale.

And where a sale was had in partition, and no guardian ad litem had been appointed for an infant defendant, the purchaser was discharged from his bid, and held entitled to his costs, as there was no fund out of which he could be paid. It was held to be proper practice to compel the complainants to pay them in the first instance. Kohler v. Kohler, 2 Edw. Ch. 69.

So a purchaser of land having paid the purchase money, and the sale having been set aside, was held entitled to a return of the money from the parties by whom it was received. Salter v. Dunn, 1 Bush, 311. The court said: "But in the case of Bowman v. Melton, 2 Bibb, 151, this court held, where a mortgagee obtained a judgment of foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged property, and it was afterwards ascertained that the mortgagor did not own the property and the purchaser lost it, that the mortgagee was bound to refund the money to the purchaser. In such cases the property is sold at the instance and by the procurement of the plaintiff, and by his proceedings for that specific purpose, which is not the case under execution, when the levy and sale is the act of the officer of the law."

After an administrator's sale the purchaser learned for the first time that a building on the land was partially on other land, and did not belong to the estate. The administrator retained $100, the first payment, and resold the land after acquiring a quitclaim deed for the land covered by the building. In an action by the purchaser against the administrator it was held to be no defense that the defendant had accounted for the money to the probate court as belonging to the estate where he had knowledge of plaintiff's claim. This was on the ground of mutual mistake. McKay v. Coleman, 83 Mich. 60, 48 N. W. 203. The court said: "Under this state of facts, the plaintiff cannot, in the language of the announcement made by the defendant, be held to be guilty of default in not paying his bid. It is clear that, under these circumstances, the defendant could not have enforced payment, because he could not himself fulfil the conditions of the sale as they were mutually understood between them. The forfeiture of the money paid must be determined by the ability of the defendant to perform the contract as mutually understood. The inability of the defendant to perform relieved the plaintiff from the forfeiture."

A sale under execution was made of the equity of redemption; but the fact that the judgment creditor held a mortgage also was not disclosed, although he was present at the sheriff's sale. It was held that the purchaser had a right to maintain an action to set aside the sale, and to require the creditor to refund the purchase money or release his mortgage. Wolford v. Phelps, 2 J. J. Marsh. 31.

And where the court required a bond conditioned for the repayment into court of the purchase money in the event of the confirmation of the sale being reversed, and on the execution of the bond the marshal paid the complainant from the purchase money received, and the case was reversed, it was held that the purchaser whose money had been wrongfully appropriated to the satisfaction of the judgment could maintain an action upon the bond. Lamb v. Ewing, 4 C. C. A. 320, 12 U. S. App. 11, 54 Fed. 269. In this case the judgment creditors were non-residents, and the court said: "When, under these circumstances, the court was asked to pay out the money in its hands, it was at once apparent that by so doing the court, in the event the judgment was held void, would be deprived of the power to cause restitution to be made to the proper parties, because both the fund and the parties might be beyond its control. To avoid this the court required the parties to execute the bond in question, whereby they became bound to repay the money in case the judgment against Lamaster should be held to be void, and thus the court continued its power to compel restitution to be made in case the right thereto should arise. We find nothing in the action of the circuit court in this particular which was illegal in itself, or which imposed upon the judgment creditors burdens of such a nature as to render the bond of no effect."

And where the order of confirmation was vacated the court said that, if the judgment creditor received $30 from the purchaser, respecting which there was no finding, he became the debtor to the purchaser to that amount, and the purchaser might have a right to be compensated out of the money collected upon the judgment. Deputron v. Young, 134 U. S. 241, 33 L. ed. 923, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539.

A judgment and execution were declared void in proceedings instituted by the judgment creditor. It was held that the purchaser under such execution sale could maintain an action against the creditor for the purchase money, under Mont. Comp. Stat. 1887, Code Civ. Proc. § 347, providing that, if a purchaser of real property sold under execution be evicted in consequence of irregularity in the proceeding concerning the sale, he may recover the purchase price paid, with interest, from the judgment creditor. Elling v. Harrington, 17 Mont. 322, 69 L. R. A.

42 Pac. 851. The court also held that the purchaser was entitled to recover irrespective of the statute.

Where a purchaser brought suit to rescind the sale, and ten years had elapsed in endeavoring to perfect the title, it was held that the sale should be set aside, and the purchaser relieved; and the case was remanded to the court below that an accounting be had and taken between the parties, of the sums due and chargeable to each on account of the said sale, and for every proceeding according to the principles of equity. Myers v. Nourse, 5 Fla. 516.

But in Holt v. Bason, 72 N. C. 308, a sale was made under an execution levied on lands of the testator on a judgment against an executor. A creditor by a prior judgment against the testator was the competing bidder. Thereafter an administrator de bonis non, by order of the court, sold the land for assets, and realized an insufficient amount to pay the prior judgment. The first purchaser sued the first judgment creditor for inducing a void purchase of land by his bidding. It was held that it was a question for the jury. The court said: "The plaintiff does not ask to be subrogated to the rights of Swepson, who has his money and is the only party benefited, for the obvious reason that prior judgments will exhaust the fund before the Swepson judgment is reached. Scott v. Dunn, 21 N. C. (1 Dev. & B. Eq.) 425, 30 Am. Dec. 174. Nor does he bring his action under Rev. Code, chap. 45, § 27, against the defendant in the execution, because the estate is insolvent, and can afford him no relief. Laws v. Thompson, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 104. Nor yet can he bring his case within Saunderson v. Ballance, 55 N. C. (2 Jones, Eq.) 322, 67 Am. Dec. 218, where the part owner of land stands by and sees it sold by a trustee as the land of another, and permits the purchaser to pay for it and take a deed, under the belief that he is getting a good title. But Holt is a purchaser at execution sale. The rule there is that the sheriff sells only the interest of the defendant in the execution. If the defendant has an interest, well and good; if he has none, it is the purchaser's own look out, for he buys at his peril, and, as a general rule, he is entitled to no relief as against creditors. In this case it would seem that the plaintiff, by his own showing, was guilty of gross neglect of a plain duty."

A foreclosure was had, to which the grantee owning the legal title was not a party, and a personal judgment was rendered against the mortgagor by publication. The sale was void, and it was held that the purchaser could not maintain an independent action against the plaintiffs in the foreclosure for money had and received, but that he must seek relief in the foreclosure suit, and on his application the court could direct the sale to be set aside, and satisfaction canceled, and authorize a supplemental bill for a resale to be filed and conducted in the names of the complainants in that suit for the plaintiff's benefit. Boggs v. Fowler, 16 Cal. 559, 76 Am. Dec. 561.

In Abadie v. Lobero, 36 Cal. 390, where it was held that a purchaser at a sheriff's sale was not entitled upon his own motion, made in his own name, to have the judgment upon which the order of sale was issued vacated, and himself substituted as plaintiff, it was said: "It is true a dictum is found in Boggs v. Fowler, 16 Cal. 566, 76 Am. Dec. 561, to the effect that, upon the application of a purchaser, the court may not only direct the sale to be set aside and the satisfaction canceled, but also 'authorize a supplemental bill for a resale of the premises to be filed and conducted in the names of the complainants in that suit,' for the benefit of the purchaser; but no authority is cited for the latter proposition, and none, going so far, has fallen under our observation."

In Wood v. Genet, 8 Paige, 137, which was an action by a purchaser against a feme covert for the surplus money received by her husband on a sale on a judgment against her as heir, and where it was held that she could not be made personally liable although the sale was found to be invalid, it was said that the bill was not framed to obtain relief under 1 N. Y. Rev. Laws 1813, p. 504, providing that, if any purchaser of lands upon any execution shall be evicted on account of any irregularity in the proceedings, such person may have a writ out of chancery to the supreme court, who shall warn the party or parties at whose suit, or for whose benefit, the lands were sold, as the party against whom the execution issued, or their heirs, executors, or administrators, to show cause, and may award the plaintiff judgment in execution against him who ought to repay the same. And the court further said that 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 376, §§ (68) 72, which was in force at this time, gave to the purchaser, who was evicted by reason of the reversal of the judgment upon which the real estate was sold, a remedy against the party for whose benefit the same was sold, in a suit at law to recover back the purchase money with interest.

VI. Relief by action against the sheriff.

It seems that the sheriff is liable to any party injured in consequence of a breach of any of the duties connected with his office. This is applied to the right of the purchaser, and it is held that he may recover from the sheriff the purchase money where the sale is avoided by reason of irregularities of the officer conducting the same: but, where the purchaser had actual knowledge of the irregularities, it is held that he cannot maintain the action.

In Hightower v. Handlin, 27 Ark. 20, a sale was set aside because the execution was void, and the sale was made six days after the execution should have been returned. The court said: "While it is not incumbent upon bidders and purchasers, at judicial sales, to inquire into any irregularity which may have been permitted by the court rendering the judgment, or the clerk in issuing the execution, if it is regular upon its face, yet, if for any cause the proceedings of either should be declared void, by competent authority, he could not take anything by reason of such sale, but would have recourse upon the sheriff, who made the sale, for the money he paid at it."

So, where property was not seized at all, and the purchaser was evicted on the ground that the sheriff's sale was a nullity, it was held that the sheriff must indemnify the purchaser. Friedlander v. Bell, 17 La. Ann. 42.

And a purchaser of a runaway slave sold by a sheriff was held entitled to recover damages where the sale was invalid because not advertised as required by law. Fleming v. Lockhart, 10 Mart. (La.) 308.

A purchaser at an execution sale under a judgment void because rendered against a deceased party was held entitled to recover from the sheriff so much of the purchase money as had not been paid to the plaintiff in the execution. Bragg v. Thompson, 19 S. C. 572.

A sheriff under execution sold real estate, and the purchaser paid into the sheriff's hands $620, and then refused to complete the purchase on the ground that the sale was irregular, and the sheriff resold the property to another party. The first sale having been set aside as irregular, an action was brought by the purchaser against the sheriff. This was held to be an action for the nonpayment of money collected upon execution, within N. Y. act 1871, chap. 733, § 2, excepting such actions from the operation of that statute which required actions against sheriffs to be brought within one year from the time the cause of action accrued. It was further held that the sheriff could not retain the expenses of the sale. Bowne v. O'Brien, 5 Daly, 474.

But where the purchaser had notice of the irregularities of the sale he was refused relief against the sheriff.

A sheriff held several executions of different priorities, and sold the property under the prior execution for enough to satisfy the first two executions, but, instead of satisfying the second execution, applied the money to a junior execution, and resold another piece of land under the execution which should have been satisfied. This sale was vacated in a suit brought by the execution defendant against the purchaser, and it was held that the purchaser could not maintain an action on the sheriff's bond to recover the purchase money of such second sale. State ex rel. Sage v. Prime, 54 Ind. 450. In this case the court said: "But in the case at bar the purchaser under the execution issued on the next to the oldest judgment, which was next to the oldest lien on the real estate of the judgment defendant, had actual and constructive notice of all the facts. He was the purchaser at the sales made by the sheriff under the execution issued on the oldest judgment, which was the oldest lien on said real estate. He knew, therefore, or had the means of knowing, and was bound to know, that the proceeds of such sale were sufficient to satisfy, not only the said oldest judgment, but also the said next oldest judgment. He knew, also, or had the means of knowing, and was bound to know, that the surplus of the said proceeds of such sales were in law applicable to, and by law satisfied, the said next oldest judgment. When, therefore, at the sheriff's sale under the execution issued on the said next oldest judgment, the said purchaser bid off and paid for the said parcel of said real estate sold thereunder, he knew, or had the means of knowing, and was bound to know, that the said next oldest judgment had been by law paid off and satisfied, and the said sale thereunder was an absolute nullity. In such a case as this, it is very clear to our minds that the purchaser cannot, nor can the assignee of his certificate of purchase, by any possibility, have any cause of action against the sheriff or his sureties, on his official bond, for the recovery of the purchase money. This conclusion is in entire harmony with the doctrine of the case of State ex rel. Wilber v. Salyers, 19 Ind. 432, although the facts of the two cases are somewhat dissimilar."

Cases where the purchase is by the creditor are not intended to be included in this note.

VII. Summary.

The purchaser is released from liability on the sale being set aside, and will be released where there is a resale to hold him liable for a deficiency on failure to comply with his bid, if he has been led to believe that the first sale was abandoned, or where proper steps are not taken to hold him liable. In England, Ireland, Canada, and in New York and some other states, the practice in judicial sales is to allow the purchaser to show before confirmation that the title is defective, and thereupon his deposit will be returned and the sale set aside. On setting a sale aside, or on a recovery in ejectment from the purchaser at a void sale, he is generally allowed reimbursement or subrogation. This is on the broad equitable principle that, having advanced money under a colorable right to pay the debt of another, he is entitled to be recompensed: and in working this out other equitable principles are applied,—“that he who seeks equity must do equity,” and what is called the doctrine of “compensation,” and “substitution,” which is commonly known as subrogation. In states which keep common-law and chancery practice distinct, the remedy is for the purchaser to have the judgment in ejectment enjoined until reimbursed. But where the relief is granted in common-law courts he should set up and claim a lien for the purchase money in the event of eviction. The remedy of reimbursement or subrogation is also usually allowed in cases where guardians' and administrators' sales are held void. Some states deny relief in this class of cases, unless the purchase money was used to pay claims which were a charge on the land, as in Illinois, Michigan, and Ohio. So relief is denied in some cases where the money is not traced to a use beneficial for the estate; but in others it is held that the purchaser is secure if the money is paid to the guardian. In some states relief is provided by statute; but in New York such a statute attempting to transfer the title to the purchaser on the nonreturn of the purchase money was held unconstitutional. It seems that where sales are had on personal judgments taken against nonresidents on publication service the purchaser is not entitled to restitution or subrogation. So where the purchaser is a party to a fraudulent combination to procure the property at a sacrifice by preventing bidding. But in the latter case relief has been granted in some cases without discussing the question of fraud, and without noticing the cases that refuse relief. The purchaser is held entitled to maintain an action in equity in the nature of assumpsit against the debtor where the purchase money was used to extinguish a debt of the defendant, and the sale is held void. And in the absence of statutory relief it seems that the purchaser may maintain an equitable action for money had and received, against the creditor procuring the sale. This remedy is given by statute in some cases. Where the sale is invalid by reason of negligence on the part of the sheriff, and the purchaser had no notice of the same, the sheriff may be liable to him in damages for the purchase money.

Cases where the creditor is the purchaser, and cases of ordinary tax sales, are not intended to be included in this note. I. T.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

BOARD OF TRADE of the City of Chicago, App't.,
v.

L. A. KINSEY COMPANY et al.

(64 C. C. A. 660, 130 Fed. 507.)

1. A property right in price quotations gathered by a board of trade is not destroyed by the facts that a large percentage of the business done under its auspices consists of gambling transactions, or that the news is susceptible of bad, as well as good, uses.
2. The fact that a board of trade permits gambling transactions within its exchange hall does not deprive it of the right to resort to equity to prevent wrongful dissemination of the quotations of prices at which sales are made, gathered and sent out by it.

(April 12, 1904.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Indiana dismissing a bill filed to enjoin defendants from making use of complainant's stock quotations. Reversed.

Statement by Baker, Circuit Judge:

On final hearing, appellant's bill to enjoin appellees from purloining its continuous quotations was dismissed for want of equity.

Appellees discuss the questions whether the quotations are property, and whether, if so, appellant lost its proprietary right by its method of giving them out; but that part of the case is ruled in this court by the decisions in Illinois Commission Co. v. Cleveland Teleg. Co. 56 C. C. A. 205, 119 Fed. 301, and Sullivan v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 61 C. C. A. 1, 123 Fed. 411.

There is, however, one further matter that requires presentation and decision. It pertains to the defense that appellant has no standing in a court of equity for either

NOTE.—As to property right in market quotations, see also, in this series, National Telegraph News Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 60 L. R. A. 805.

As to property right in compilation of facts with reference to contemplated buildings and improvements made for use of contractors, see 60 L. R. A.

F. W. Dodge Co. v. Construction Information Co. 60 L. R. A. 810.

As to property right in article capable of being used for gambling purposes, see also, in this series, Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnson, 1 L. R. A. 730, and Edwards v. American Exp. Co. 63 L. R. A. 467.

or both of two reasons: That the quotations are contraband, and may be seized by anyone with impunity; that appellant, even if the quotations themselves are not contraband, comes into court with unclean hands, in this: That it seeks to exclude all others from using property (the quotations) which might be put to good uses, in order that it may aid its members in maintaining the gambling in grains and provisions which it permits to be carried on in its exchange hall.

Respecting the facts of this defense, the master found as follows:

"The transactions conducted in the 'pits' of the complainant association, while they are of the same general character, are divisible into two classes, which are described by the members of the Board of Trade as 'hedging' transactions and 'speculating' transactions, respectively. Of the members of the complainant association who are engaged in business in the exchange hall, the number conducting speculative transactions is between one third and one half of the total, and practically all of such members conduct a hedging business.

"The principals who are engaged in hedging transactions are, generally speaking, either grain merchants, millers, or manufacturers of grain products. The method of such principals is this: When they have bought grain in the country, or in city warehouses, which they propose to hold for future sales to domestic or foreign purchasers, they at once sell in the pits of the complainant association an equal amount of grain; or, on the other hand, if they have sold to domestic or foreign purchasers grain or grain products for future delivery, they at once buy in the pits of the complainant association an equal amount of grain for future delivery at times corresponding with the times of their selling contracts. And thus, when they have contracts of purchase, they have contracts of sale, for future delivery in the pits, practically even with their purchases; and, if they have contracts of sale with domestic or foreign purchasers, they have contracts of purchase, for future delivery in the pits, practically even with such contracts of sale. The object of such hedging is to insure against loss by fluctuation in the market in the commodity which the principal is carrying, or which he has sold in advance of purchase and manufacture upon a time contract. A hedge must always be against a cash commodity.

"A speculative transaction is not based upon a cash commodity primarily. In effect, it is based upon the confidence which, on the one hand, the seller of the commodity for future delivery has in his personal opinion that the price of the commodity sold will by the time of delivery have so declined that he can purchase the commodity for less than his selling price, and thus make a profit, and which, on the other hand, the buyer has in his personal opinion that the price of the commodity bought will so advance by the time of delivery that the commodity bought will be worth more at the time of delivery than it was at the time of purchase, and that he will thus have a profit. It is possible, under the rules, usages, and practice of the complainant association, for the seller and the buyer, respectively, if either changes his opinion, to buy or sell in the 'pits' the commodity which he has previously sold or bought, as the case may be, for the same time of delivery. While this procedure is in form the same as hedging, it is not designated as 'hedging,' but is styled 'spreading.' It is also possible, under the rules, usages, and practices of the complainant association, for a member of the complainant association to make such counter contract of purchase or sale during the same day that he has made an original contract of sale or purchase, and thus, within the day or within a few days, to have his advantage of profit or to adjust his disadvantage of loss. Such a course of business is designated 'scalping.'

"The evidence does not contain sufficient data upon which to predicate an estimate of the aggregate volume of business conducted in said pits daily, monthly, or yearly. It does appear, however, that the volume of such business is enormous: one firm conducted transactions in wheat daily aggregating 1,500,000 to 2,000,000 bushels, and in corn 1,000,000 bushels daily; another firm's transactions in wheat daily amounted to 6,000,000 bushels; a third firm's transactions in wheat daily amounted to 4,000,000 bushels; a fourth firm's transactions amounted to 1,000,000 bushels daily; a fifth firm's transactions in all grain amounted to 1,800,000 bushels daily; and a sixth firm's transactions in all grain amounted to 2,000,000 bushels daily. While it is true that the business of these six firms in the pits is much larger than the business of any other six firms conducting transactions in the pits, and that it would not be proper to say that the average business is a proper average of each of the persons conducting transactions in the pits, it is nevertheless true that it is fairly deducible from the evidence that the aggregate business transaction in grain was largely in excess of the total wheat and corn production of the entire United States during either of the years 1900 and 1901, and was many times over the entire receipts in Chicago of grain during each of said two years of 1900 and 1901, and, of such receipts in Chicago, less than 20 per cent inspected up to grades of grain which could be delivered upon time contracts made by said sales and purchases in the pits. It is also true that a decrease in the total grain productions of the United States does not cause a proportionate decrease in the volume of business done in the 'pits' of the complainant association, but, on the contrary, such business is larger during a year in which there is a shortage in the grain crop.

"Under the rules, usages, and practice of the complainant association, all time contracts made in the 'pits' are carried until it is possible to close them as between members of the complainant association by either one of three methods of settlement, namely, the method called 'direct settlement,' the method called 'rings' or 'ringing out,' and the method of delivery by delivering warehouse receipts physically or 'by notice.'

"Most time contracts made in the 'pits' are adjusted as between members of the complainant association, before the specified time of delivery arrives, by either the first or the second of the above-named methods. Direct settlements are effected by offsetting similar contracts at the close of the business hours of each day in the following manner: As soon as is practicable after the close of business in the 'pits,' each broker (individual, firm, or corporation) conducting business in the 'pits' takes from the day's transactions on his books the contracts similar as to amount and time of delivery to counter contracts made with other members of the complainant association, and ascertains therefrom the difference of the aggregate prices of such similar contracts, and, if the difference be in his favor, the amount of such difference is charged to the other party in such counter contracts, and, if the difference is against him, such difference is credited to the other party to such counter contract. The following is a simple illustration: If, during the day, broker A. has sold to broker B 5,000 bushels of December wheat at 75 cents per bushel, and broker B has sold to broker A 5,000 bushels of December wheat at 76 cents per bushel, after offsetting the contracts at 75 cents per bushel, there is a difference in B's favor of 1 cent on each bushel, or $50. This offsetting difference in cash is placed as a debit or credit, as the case may be, upon the clearing-house sheet, hereinafter described, of the respective brokers, parties to said counter or offsetting contracts.

"The 'ring' method of settlement is as follow: Each broker (person, firm, or corporation) conducting business in the 'pits' has an employee who is called a 'settlement clerk,' who keeps a record of all his employer's transactions in the 'pits.' The complainant association furnishes a room wherein all of such settlement clerks meet at stated hours each day and compare their respective books, called 'settlement books,' which are required by the complainant association to be kept by each broker. Upon comparing their respective books, said settlement clerks ascertain what, if any, outstanding time contracts may be offset by some other corresponding time contract made by the parties with other members of the association, and which of such contracts are, by consent of the parties thereto, permitted to be offset, and thereupon, under the rules of the complainant association, are deemed to have been settled, provided the requirements of §§ 6, 7, 8, and 9 of rule 22 of the complainant association are met, as therein provided, with reference to the clearing-house sheet and other details of settlement therein specified. . . .

"Theoretically, and in bare outline, an illustration of the 'ringing out' method is as follows: Broker A sells to broker B 5,000 bushels May wheat; broker B sells to broker C the same amount; broker C sells to broker D the same amount; and broker D sells to broker A the same amount; by consent of brokers A, B, C, and D, all of these time contracts are deemed discharged, and by novation there is substituted a contract wherein broker A, the initial seller in the series of discharged contracts, sells to broker D, the last buyer in the series of discharged contracts. The clearing-house sheets of the complainant association in evidence in this suit show that the actual process of 'ringing out' time contracts by elimination and substitution is much more complicated than the outline illustration, but that illustration exhibits the principle of the process. Among the daily transactions in complainant's 'pits' there are 'hedging' contracts, 'spreads,' and 'scalping' contracts, and all of these forms of time contracts are adjusted by both the 'direct' method and the 'ring' method of settlement. Upon the question what part of all the transactions in the pits are adjusted by the 'direct' method and the 'ring' method of settlement, the evidence is not very satisfactory. It tends to show, however, and I accordingly so find, that at least three fourths of the total transactions in the pits are adjusted by the 'direct' and 'ring' method of settlement.

"In the event that said time contracts cannot be settled by either the 'direct' method or the 'ring' method, they are and must be closed by a third method, namely, delivery under the rules and usages of the complainant association. Said rules are as follows:

"Rule 21—Section 1. All deliveries upon contracts for grain or flaxseed unless otherwise expressly provided, shall be made by tender of regular warehouse receipts.' . . .

"The rules of the complainant association do not permit any persons other than members of said association to make 'time' contracts upon the floor of the exchange hall, and all 'time' contracts made in the pits are contracts between the members of the complainant association, who are in said transactions respectively sellers and buyers. The rules of the complainant association permit members of said association, as between themselves and nonmembers, to act as brokers in 'time' contracts made in the pits. In case a member of the complainant association, in making a 'time' contract in the pits, acts as a broker for an undisclosed principal, if such contract is settled by either the 'direct' method or the 'ring' method, such settlement does not discharge it, so far as such undisclosed principal is concerned, as between him and his broker, but the latter is required under complainant's rules to substitute a duplicate 'time' contract with the two elements of identity, namely, like amount of grain or other commodity, and like date of delivery, but not like price. If such substituted contract is not a duplicate, but differs from the original in price, the broker becomes principal as to difference in the prices between the original and the substituted contract, and, if it is impossible for such broker to substitute either a duplicate or a similar time contract, the broker becomes principal as to the entire time contract, instead of the original principal with whom he as broker, in behalf of his own undisclosed principal, entered into said original contract.

"The system of 'hedging' in the pits has a commercial influence which is favorable both to the interest of the producer and the consumer, in that the large cash grain houses, which conduct transactions in complainant's exchange hall, by reason of the risk to them from market fluctuations being decreased through 'hedges,' are able to take, and do take, a smaller margin of profit, and thus they pay to the producer a higher price and sell to the consumer at a lower price. The person taking the side of such hedging contract opposite of that to such grain house is the person who assumes the risk.

"The 'direct' method of settlement and the 'ring' method of settlement is not only an advantage to the members of the complainant association, in that it relieves them from the responsibility of carrying their contracts with other members of the complainant association, but they have, added to this advantage, the benefit of the margins deposited with them by the undisclosed principals for whom they act as brokers. . . .

69 L. R. A.

"Section 8 of rule 4 of the complainant association is as follows:

"Sec. 8. Any member of the association who shall be interested or associated in business with, or who shall act as the representative of, or who shall knowingly execute any order or orders for the account of, any organization, firm, or individual engaged in the business of dealing in differences on the fluctuations in the market price of any commodity,—without a bona fide purchase and sale of property for an actual delivery,—shall be deemed guilty of unmercantile conduct, which renders him unworthy to be a member of the association; and upon complaint to and conviction thereof by the board of directors, he shall be expelled from membership in the association.' . . .

"The complainant association has prescribed no method or means which shall be employed by members of said association for the purpose of ascertaining the intent of their respective customers with respect to the delivery or nondelivery of the commodity covered by any time contract.

"Every member of the complainant association acting in the pits as a broker for a nonmember customer requires from such customer a deposit as security in each transaction conducted by him, and this fact is within the knowledge of the directors and executive officers of the complainant association. The rules of the complainant association authorize the members of said association who act as brokers to charge broker's commissions in amounts fixed by such rules. One of such commission charges is expressed in part as follows:

"For the purchase or sale and for the purchase and sale of property for future delivery, whether the contract for purchase or for sale be first made as follows: . . .

"Using a member of the complainant association as his broker, a nonmember thereof may become a party to a time contract as buyer or seller, and at any time before the date of required delivery he may become a party to another contract in which he takes the opposite side to that held by him in the first-mentioned contract. Such counter or reverse time contract may be authorized in the same order which authorizes the first contract, by including in said order a so-called 'stop-loss' order. When such contracts are made they may be settled, and are often so settled, as between the member of the complainant association who acted as broker and his nonmember customer, by the payment of the difference between the contract prices. The fact that such is the custom is a fact well known to the directors and executive officers of the complainant association.

"The rules of the complainant association provide for settlements of time contracts made in the pits when the seller does not deliver the property on the last day of the month of the stipulated delivery—the rules and usages of the complainant association fix such last day of the month as final day of delivery—by allowing the purchasers the privilege of electing: First, to consider the contract forfeited; second, to purchase the property on the market for account of the seller at 1:15 o'clock of the next business day; or, third, by requiring a settlement with the seller at the average market price of the property sold on the last day of the month of delivery."

The master drew conclusions favorable to appellant, and recommended a decree in accordance with the prayer of the bill.

The court, reviewing the matter on exceptions, sustained the master's findings of fact, except that the percentage of transactions in which no actual deliveries were made was nearer 95 than 75; but disagreed with the master's conclusions (125 Fed. 72), and dismissed the bill for want of equity.

Argued before Jenkins, Grosscup, and Baker, Circuit Judges.

Mr. D. P. Williams, with Mr. Henry S. Robbins, for appellant:

The doctrine of clean hands is not applicable.

Fuller v. Berger, 65 L. R. A. 381, 56 C. C. A. 588, 120 Fed. 274; Chicago v. Union Stock Yards & Transit Co. 164 Ill. 224, 35 L. R. A. 281, 45 N. E. 430; Bateman v. Fargason, 2 Flipp. 660, 4 Fed. 32; Anslay v. Wilson, 50 Ga. 421; Langdon v. Templeton, 66 Vt. 173, 28 Atl. 866; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 399.

A court of equity cannot justify its refusal to protect appellant's property in its quotations upon the ground merely that it is violating a criminal statute by permitting illegal transactions to be made within its exchange hall. The stock quotations were property.

National Teleg. News Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 60 L. R. A. 805, 56 C. C. A. 198, 119 Fed. 294; New York & C. Grain & Stock Exchange v. Board of Trade, 127 Ill. 153, 2 L. R. A. 411, 11 Am. St. Rep. 107, 19 N. E. 855.

Messrs. Jacob J. Kern, John A. Brown, E. D. Crumpacker, Peter Crumpacker, A. G. Smith, Bernard Korbly, and Smiley N. Chambers, with Mr. Charles D. Fullen, for appellees:

The quotations in controversy immediately cease to be the property of the Board of Trade upon the publication thereof in the manner and form in which the same is shown to have been done.

69 L. R. A.

The Board of Trade has no property interest in the quotations made up of transactions in its pits when said transactions are not based upon actual bona fide contracts of purchase and sale of the commodity dealt in.

Counselman v. Reichart, 103 Iowa, 430, 72 N. W. 490; First Nat. Bank v. Oskaloosa Packing Co. 66 Iowa, 41, 23 N. W. 255.

After the trades are rung out or settled upon the Board of Trade, the customer of the member has no particular person to whom he can look for fulfilment of his contract, even if he has actually made a genuine, bona fide contract.

Higgins v. McCrea, 116 U. S. 671, 29 L. ed. 764, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 557.

It makes no difference that a bet or wager is made to assume the form of a contract. Gambling is none the less such because it is carried on in the form or guise of legitimate trade.

Irvine v. Williar, 110 U. S. 499, 28 L. ed. 225, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 160; Melchert v. American U. Teleg. Co. 3 McCrary, 521, 11 Fed. 193; Barnard v. Backhaus, 52 Wis. 593, 6 N. W. 252, 9 N. W. 595; Dows v. Glaspel, 4 N. D. 251, 60 N. W. 60; Whitesides v. Hunt, 97 Ind. 191, 49 Am. Rep. 441; Edwards v. Hocffinghoff, 38 Fed. 639; Embrey v. Jemison, 131 U. S. 336, 33 L. ed. 172, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 776; Mohr v. Miesem, 47 Minn. 228, 49 N. W. 862; Pickering v. Cease, 70 Ill. 328; Counselman v. Reichart, 103 Iowa, 430, 72 N. W. 490.

The Board of Trade in itself, in connection with its quotations, does not present such a party, or such a subject-matter, to the court as can appeal to the conscience of the chancellor.

Soby v. People, 134 Ill. 68, 25 N. E. 109; Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Clunie, 88 Fed. 160; Woodward v. Woodward, 41 N. J. Eq. 224, 4 Atl. 424; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. 399.

It is the evil practice and wrong conduct of the appellant in permitting and promoting transactions which go to make up its quotations, which is involved in this case.

Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Frank, 110 Fed. 689; Manhattan Medicine Co. v. Wood, 108 U. S. 18, 27 L. ed. 706, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 436; Lawrence Mfg Co. v. Tennessee Mfg. Co. 31 Fed. 776; Krauss v. Jos. R. Peebles' Sons Co. 58 Fed. 585; Symonds v. Jones, 82 Me. 302, 8 L. R. A. 570, 17 Am. St. Rep. 485, 19 Atl. 820; Joseph v. Macowsky, 96 Cal. 518, 19 L. R. A. 53, 31 Pac. 914.

Ex turpi causa non oritur actio.

Holman v. Johnson, 1 Cowp. 341; Fetridge v. Wells, 4 Abb. Pr. 144; Coppell v. Hall, 7 Wall. 542, 19 L. ed. 244.

The contentions of the appellees have been sustained in—

Board of Trade v. O'Dell Commission Co.

115 Fed. 574; Board of Trade v. Donovan Commission Co. 121 Fed. 1012; Board of Trade v. Ellis, 122 Fed. 319; Board of Trade v. Consolidated Stock Exchange, 121 Fed. 433; Board of Trade v. L. A. Kinsey Co. 125 Fed. 72; Christie Grain & Stock Co. v. Board of Trade, 61 C. C. A. 11, 125 Fed. 161.

Baker, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

1. We deem it unnecessary to determine from the evidence whether the percentage of trades in which actual deliveries were made was 5 or 25. The finding of the one figure or the other would not prove what proportion of the remaining no-delivery transactions were gambling. Of these, an indeterminate number were "hedging contracts." If we felt called upon by the necessities of this decision to give a definite opinion of hedging, the record might well lead us to find that hedging is a manufacturer's or merchant's insurance against price fluctuation of materials, and no more damnnatory than insurances of property and life, which in one sense are wagers that the property will not be destroyed during the term, and that the life will not fail in less than the expectancy in the actuaries' tables. The remainder of the no-delivery transactions were "speculative." But speculation is not unlawful. One may buy any sort of property to hold for a rise, one may contract to buy or sell property not in possession or in existence at the time, and lawful contracts may lawfully be canceled and settled in advance of the time of performance. If a contract, lawful in form, is entered into, it is lawful in fact, even though one of the parties never intended to perform his part of it; that is, the intent that the lawful form shall cover a sham must be mutual to make it a sham. We think the court's conclusion that, because in 95 per cent of the trades no deliveries were in fact made, it was intended that in those cases deliveries should not be made, and that the parties in nineteen instances out of twenty were using the forms of lawful contracts to cover mere wagers on the future prices of commodities, is not warranted by the facts in the record. The "direct" and "ring" methods of settlement between members might cancel out nine tenths of the bids back and forth between the members as agents, and yet every contract may have been perfectly legal and enforceable between the principals, and every principal satisfied by receiving a "substitute" contract. If a seller intended not to deliver, but to settle on differences if prices rose, the buyer who entered into the contract in good faith, and who desired to receive the property, could not force the seller to deliver. In every such case there would be no delivery, but the buyer would have a valid cause of action. Undoubtedly gambling was going on in the exchange hall, but it was contrary to appellant's by-laws. Appellant was chartered by Illinois for a lawful and useful purpose, and the association adopted and promulgated suitable by-laws and rules. We think the record fails to show that the dominant feature of the members' dealings was unlawful, much less that appellant, as a creature of the state, was violating its charter, or was particeps criminis in what gambling the members carried on.

69 L. R. A.

We do not, however, attach very much importance to the preponderating character of the transactions in the exchange hall, because, in our opinion:

2. The real subject-matter of the suit is the property right in the news, in the reports of prices. Even if it were true that 95 per cent of the dealings in the exchange hall were wagers, the prices are the same for the transactions that are not wagers, and the quotations sent out show the figures at which honest dealers may secure contracts. Millers, grain buyers, elevator companies, govern their dealings by the market prices made in appellant's exchange hall. The news therefore serves, or, at least, is capable of serving, a useful purpose. So it seems to us immaterial what proportion of the transactions are wagers, since the prices made in the transactions are the prices that farmers and shippers can get, and since the news of the prices and the dissemination thereof are valuable to the community. News may be an object of lawful ownership though nine tenths of the things reported be unlawful.

3. Nor should the property in this case (the news, the continuous quotation of prices) be adjudged contraband because it is susceptible of bad uses as well as good. Gamblers in Indiana may settle their bets on prices according to appellant's quotations and this quite irrespective of the fact, if it were the fact, that 95 per cent of the transactions in appellant's exchange hall were lawful; just as Indiana grain dealers may make and settle their honest contracts on the basis of appellant's quotations, regardless of the fact, if it were the fact, that 95 per cent of transactions reported were gambling. It seems to us, therefore, that the news, as news, is not without the pale of protection, and that the moral quality is chargeable solely to the user.

4. The property concerned in this suit not being contraband, should appellant be denied the writ of injunction, even if it were true that appellant permits gambling in its exchange hall? We think not. Suppose this noncontraband news were collected and disseminated by the Associated Press. If that company were complainant and "clean-handed," its right to an injunction, the case being proper in other respects, would not be doubted. But if complainant were a gambler or a thief, what then? We think our answer has been sufficiently stated in Fuller v. Berger, 65 L. R. A. 381, 56 C. C. A. 588, 120 Fed. 274: "Equity is not concerned with the general morals of a complainant; the taint that is regarded must affect the particular rights asserted in his suit. . . . If the defendant can do no more than show that the complainant has committed some legal or moral offense which affects the defendant only as it does the public at large, the court must grant the equitable remedy and leave the punishment of the offender to other forums."

In this case the appellees, citizens of Indiana, have never had any dealings with appellant respecting the quotations; they have not been misled or deceived by appellant in any way; and they certainly are no more concerned with or affected by appellant's violations of the common law or of the penal laws of Illinois than the general public.

In reaching our conclusion, we have given respectful consideration to the cases of Board of Trade v. O'Dell Commission Co. 115 Fed. 574; Board of Trade v. Donovan Commission Co. 121 Fed. 1012; Board of Trade v. Ellis, 122 Fed. 319; Christie Grain & Stock Co. v. Board of Trade, 61 C. C. A. 11, 125 Fed. 161,—and regret that we are unable to concur therein. We have been aided by the opinion of Judge Hook at circuit (116 Fed. 944) in support of his decree in the Christie Case, which was reversed in 61 C. C. A. 11, 125 Fed. 161.

The decree herein is reversed, with the direction to enter a decree in appellant's favor in conformity to the prayer of the bill.

Petition for rehearing denied May 27, 1904.

Affirmed by Supreme Court of United States May 8, 1905.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

KANSAS CITY, FORT SCOTT, &
MEMPHIS RAILROAD COMPANY,
Appt.,

v.

Josie WASHINGTON.

(.....Ark.....)

The checking of baggage to destination upon a through ticket to transport the passenger over roads of initial and connecting carriers will render the initial carrier liable for its loss on a connecting line.

(January 21, 1905.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Crittenden County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover for the loss of baggage delivered to defendant for transportation. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—As to liability of initial carrier generally for goods carried beyond its own line, see cases in notes to Fox v. Boston & M. R. Co. 1 L. R. A. 703; Crossan v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 3 L. R. A. 766, and Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Payne, 6 L. R. A. 849; also the later cases in this series of McCarn v. International & G. N. R. Co. 16 L. R. A. 39; McCann v. Eddy, 35 L. R. A. 110; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Carter, 36 L. R. A. 527; Colfax Mountain Fruit Co. v. Southern P. Co. 40 L. R. A. 78; Richmond & A. 69 L. R. A.

Mr. C. H. Trimble, for appellant:

The initial carrier is only liable for loss on its own line.

Mauritz v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 23 Fed. 765; Green v. New York C. R. Co. 4 Daly, 553; Milnor v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 363; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Mineral Springs Mfg. Co. 16 Wall. 318, 21 L. ed. 297; Myrick v. Michigan C. R. Co. 107 U. S. 106, 27 L. ed. 326, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 425; Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, p. 583.

A through ticket on three distinct lines of transportation on one piece of paper is to be regarded as a distinct ticket for each line.

Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, p. 525; Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Sprayberry, 9 Heisk. 852; Taylor v. Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. 32 Ark. 393, 29 Am. Rep. 1; Packard v. Taylor, 35 Ark. 410, 37 Am. Rep. 37;

R. Co. v. R. A. Patterson Tobacco Co. 41 L. R. A. 511; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Southern Seating & Cabinet Co. 50 L. R. A. 729; Courteen v. Kanawha Despatch, 55 L. R. A. 182; and Taffe v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 58 L. R. A. 187.

As to rights of passengers generally on connecting roads, and liability of initial carrier, see Harris v. Howe, 5 L. R. A. 777; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Looney, 16 L. R. A. 471; Atty. Gen. v. Old Colony R. Co. 22 L. R. A. 112; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Mulford, 35 L. R. A. 599.

Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Odom, 63 Ark. 326, 38 S. W. 339.

Mr. J. T. Coston, for appellee:

If the receiving carrier collects full fare from the passenger, issues a through ticket to him, and checks his baggage to his destination, it thereby contracts to deliver the passenger and his baggage to the place of his destination, and is liable for loss or damage to baggage occurring on its own, or connecting, lines.

4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1658; Schouler, Bailments & Carriers, 2d ed. § 696; Hailey v. Screven, 62 Ga. 347, 35 Am. Rep. 127; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Campbell, 36 Ohio St. 647, 38 Am. Rep. 617; Carter v. Peck, 4 Sneed, 203, 67 Am. Dec. 604; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Weaver, 9 Lea, 38, 42 Am. Rep. 657; Coward v. East Tennessee. V. & G. R. Co. 16 Lea, 225, 57 Am. Rep. 227; Candee v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 21 Wis. 582, 94 Am. Dec. 567; Nashua Lock Co. v. Worcester & N. R. Co. 48 N. H. 339, 2 Am. Rep. 242; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Copeland, 24 Ill. 332, 76 Am. Dec. 749; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Johnson, 34 Ill. 389; Foy v. Troy & B. R. Co. 24 Barb. 382; East Tennessee & V. R. Co. v. Rogers, 6 Heisk. 143, 19 Am. Rep. 589; Western & A. R. Co. v. McEluice, 6 Heisk. 208; Mobile & G. R. Co. v. Copeland, 63 Ala. 219, 35 Am. Rep. 13; St. John v. Southern Exp. Co. 1 Woods, 612, Fed. Cas. No. 12,228; Condict v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 54 N. Y. 500; Peet v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 19 Wis. 119; Ogdensburg & L. C. R. Co. v. Pratt, 22 Wall. 132, 22 L. ed. 830.

Battle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Josie Washington, in her own right and as next friend of her daughter, Nora Brown, brought this action against the Kansas City, Ft. Scott & Memphis Railroad Company to recover the value of a trunk and its contents. The defendant sold to Nora Brown a ticket over its railroad from Deckerville, Arkansas, by way of Memphis, and thence by a connecting railroad to Argenta, in this state, and checked her trunk over the same route to the same destination. She took passage on its train, and was transported as indicated by her ticket to Argenta, but her trunk was lost on the connecting railroad between Memphis and the place to which it was checked.

The question in the case is, Is the receiving carrier, in the absence of an express contract, liable for the loss of baggage by a connecting carrier; the receiving carrier having sold the passenger a through ticket, and checked her baggage through to her destination? The trial court held the former liable.

Courts differ as to what is sufficient to constitute a contract by a common carrier to transport property delivered to it to its destination, when that place is beyond its route. Some courts hold that, "when a carrier receives goods directed to a place beyond his line, he, in the absence of a stipulation to the contrary, by the very act of acceptance, engages to deliver them at their destination, wherever that may be. Other courts hold that the acceptance of the goods for shipment, so directed, implies nothing more than an agreement on the part of the carrier to transport them to the end of their route, and there deliver them to a connecting carrier to complete the carriage. The first of these views is sustained by the English courts and a few of the American states, and is known as the "English doctrine." The other is adopted by the decided weight of American authorities. As this court has not adopted either view, we are at liberty to adopt that which in our opinion is more reasonable.
69 L. R. A.

Mr. Lawson, in his treatise on the Contracts of Common Carriers, gives the reason for the two views as follows: "In support of the first doctrine, it is argued that a different rule would work a great inconvenience. A person delivering his goods to a carrier, to be sent to a certain place, will generally rely on him alone to perform the service. He cannot be supposed to know the particular portion of the transit which the first carrier controls, much less, the other owners or proprietors of the continuous line. He intends to make one contract, but not two or three or half a dozen. When he places his property in the hands of the carrier, he at once loses all control over it. If it is not delivered, how is he to discover at what particular portion of the route it was lost? He would be forced to rely on the statements of the carriers themselves, who would be little likely to aid him in his search. If he did succeed in fixing the responsibility, he might find himself obliged to assert his claim against a party hundreds of miles away, and under circumstances which might well discourage a prudent man, and induce him to bear his loss rather than incur the expense and trouble of pursuing his remedy against so distant a defendant. The first carrier, on the contrary, has facilities for tracing the loss not possessed by the public. He is in constant communication with his associates in the business. He has their receipts for the property delivered to them, and with no inconvenience at all could charge the loss to his negligent agent. In support of the second doctrine, it is simply answered that the extraordinary liabilities of common carriers cannot in justice be extended beyond their own routes, where alone they have an opportunity of choosing for themselves their servants, and of guarding the property intrusted to their care." Lawson, Contracts of Carr. §§

238-242, and cases cited. Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. §§ 145a, 149b, and cases cited.

We think the English doctrine more reasonable, and adopt it.

Judgment affirmed.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

W. H. HOLMES, Appt.,
v.

N. A. MARSHALL et al.
and

Annie J. JENKINS, Resp't.

(145 Cal. 777.)

1. The exemption from execution of the proceeds of insurance policies is not limited to claims against the insured, but extends to those against the beneficiary, under a statute providing that all moneys, benefits, privileges, or immunities accruing, or in any manner growing out of, life insurance, are exempt from execution; and the same rule applies where the policy is payable to the estate of the assured, and, being exempt from his debts, the proceeds are distributed to his widow under the statute as his next of kin.
2. The deposit by the beneficiary of the proceeds of a life-insurance policy, which are exempt from execution for her debts, in a bank, does not destroy the exemption.
3. The court may set aside the levy of an attachment upon exempt property.

(January 17, 1905.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the Superior Court for Los Angeles County setting aside an attachment of the proceeds of a life-insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Powers & Holland, for appellant:

As the statute of this state has prescribed a mode of procedure, and pointed out the circumstances under which an attachment may be dissolved, the statutory remedy is the length and breadth of the respondent's rights in the premises.

Waples, Attachm. p. 427.

The statutes of exemption are in derogation of the common-law principle that a man's property should be taken in payment and satisfaction of his indebtedness, and the exemption laws should not be expanded or enlarged to include persons not therein specifically mentioned.

2 Freeman, Executions, 3d ed. § 234b;

NOTE.—As to exemption of proceeds of life-insurance policy, see also, in this series, Brown v. Balfour, 12 L. R. A. 373.

60 L. R. A.

Bolt v. Keyhoe, 30 Hun, 619; Crosby v. Stephan, 32 Hun, 478; Millington v. Fox, 13 N. Y. Supp. 334; Commercial Travelers' Asso. v. Newkirk, 16 N. Y. Supp. 177; Re Brown, 123 Cal. 399, 69 Am. St. Rep. 74, 55 Pac. 1055.

Had the statute applied to the heirs or beneficiaries it would have so declared, and, in the absence of such designation, it would be giving the statute a broader scope than was intended by the legislature, by construing it to read in favor of persons not therein named.

Only money, and not a debt, is exempt from execution.

Phœnix Bank v. Risley, 111 U. S. 125, 28 L. ed. 374, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 322; Janin v. London & S. F. Bank, 92 Cal. 14, 14 L. R. A. 320, 27 Am. St. Rep. 82, 27 Pac. 1100; Pullen v. Placer County Bank, 138 Cal. 169, 94 Am. St. Rep. 19, 66 Pac. 740, 71 Pac. 83.

Where the debtor voluntarily parts with the ownership of exempt property, and acquires in lieu thereof property not exempt, he waives his right to the benefit of the exemption law.

2 Freeman, Executions, 3d ed. § 235; Harrier v. Fassett, 56 Iowa, 264, 9 N. W. 217; Connell v. Fisk, 54 Vt. 381; Dortch v. Benton, 98 N. C. 190, 2 Am. St. Rep. 331, 3 S. E. 638; Knabb v. Drake, 23 Pa. 489, 62 Am. Dec. 352; Drake, Attachm. § 244a; Cranz v. White, 27 Kan. 319, 41 Am. Rep. 408; State, Jardain, Prosecutor, v. Fairton Sav. Fund & Bldg. Asso. 44 N. J. L. 376; Rozelle v. Rhodes, 116 Pa. 129, 2 Am. St. Rep. 591, 9 Atl. 160; Martin v. Hurlburt, 60 Vt. 364, 14 Atl. 649; McIntosh v. Aubrey, 185 U. S. 122, 46 L. ed. 834, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 561.

The statute says "money accruing" out of life insurance, etc., shall be exempt. The word "money" has a well-defined meaning.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 701.

The word "accruing" does not apply to money already in hand.

Gross v. Partenheimer, 159 Pa. 556, 28 Atl. 370; Johnson v. Humboldt Ins. Co. 91 Ill. 95, 33 Am. Rep. 47; Kennedy v. Burrier, 36 Mo. 128; Cutcliff v. McAnally, 88 Ala. 509, 7 So. 331; Jones v. Thompson, 27 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 234; Dresser v. Johns, 6 C. B. N. S. 434.

Petition for rehearing in banc.

The legislature has no power to increase the amount of property which a debtor may claim as exempt, so as to affect existing creditors.

Gunn v. Barry, 15 Wall. 610, 21 L. ed. 212; Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 595, 24 L. ed. 793; Skinner v. Holt, 9 S. D. 435, 62 Am. St. Rep. 883, 69 N. W. 597; Johnson v. Fletcher, 54 Miss. 629, 28 Am. Rep. 388.

The law existing when a contract is made enters into and forms a part of it; and this is applicable as well to the remedy as to the right, so that the impairment or taking away of the remedy is an impairment of the obligations of a contract.

12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 167.

The burden of proof of showing that money claimed to be exempt under a life-insurance policy is so rests upon the party making such claim.

Briggs v. McCullough, 36 Cal. 542.

Messrs. Morton, Houser, & Jones, for respondent:

The power of the court over its process is essential to the administration of justice, and is coeval with the common-law courts, and does not by any means depend upon statutory enactments.

Sandburg v. Papineau, 81 Ill. 446; 8 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 579; Blair v. Compton, 33 Mich. 414; Palmer v. Gardiner, 77 Ill. 143; Jones v. Williams, 2 Swan, 105; Bryan v. Bridge, 6 Tex. 137.

If an execution is levied upon exempt property the levy may be quashed or vacated on motion in the court from which the execution issued.

12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 255; Totten v. Sale, 72 Ala. 488; Catron v. Lafayette County, 125 Mo. 67, 28 S. W. 331; Jacks v. Bigham, 36 Ark. 481; Farrell v. McKee, 36 Ill. 225; Finke v. Craig, 57 Mo. App. 393; Wilson v. Stripe, 4 G. Greene, 551, 61 Am. Dec. 138.

The money was exempt from the debts of the beneficiary.

Schillinger v. Boes, 85 Ky. 357, 3 S. W. 427; Brown v. Balfour, 46 Minn. 68, 12 L. R. A. 373, 48 N. W. 604; Re How, 61 Minn. 217, 63 N. W. 627; First Nat. Bank v. How, 65 Minn. 187, 67 N. W. 994; Minn. Gen. Stat. 1894, § 3312.

The estate of the deceased is held in trust only, by the executor or administrator for a limited period for purposes of administration; and the court in such cases will not regard the estate, or administrator, or executor, as the actual owner, but will look through and beyond this, limited and temporary right of possession of the administrator or executor to ascertain the real and intended beneficiary of the deceased.

Pace v. Pace, 19 Fla. 438.

Exemption statutes should be liberally construed.

69 L. R. A.

12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 75, 76, and notes; Re McManus, 87 Cal. 294, 10 L. R. A. 567, 22 Am. St. Rep. 250, 25 Pac. 413.

When a statute does not exempt specific articles, but exempts money within certain limits, property purchased with the exempt money is exempt.

Yates County Nat. Bank v. Carpenter, 119 N. Y. 550, 7 L. R. A. 557, 16 Am. St. Rep. 855, 23 N. E. 1108; Pool v. Reid, 15 Ala. 826; 2 Freeman, Executions, 3d ed. § 235, p. 1270.

Cooper, C., filed the following opinion:

This action is upon a promissory note for $1,000, dated October 5, 1899, signed by J. F. Jenkins and his wife, Annie J. Jenkins. J. F. Jenkins died intestate, and respondent, Annie J. Jenkins, is his surviving widow. After the action had been commenced, a writ of attachment was issued and levied upon $1,020.57 on deposit in the Citizens' National Bank of Los Angeles to the credit of respondent, Annie J. Jenkins. The court made an order, after notice, and on motion of respondents, setting aside the levy of said writ, and dissolving it as to the money so on deposit with said bank. This appeal is from the order so made.

The principal question is as to whether or not the said money was subject to the debts of respondent, Annie J. Jenkins, or exempt from execution against her. At the time of his death, J. F. Jenkins was the owner and holder of three full paid-up life-insurance policies upon his own life, two of which (one for $99 and one for $1,385) were payable to respondent, Annie J. Jenkins, and one of which (for $982.50) was payable to the estate of deceased, his administrators, or executors. The estate of said deceased was duly probated, and the $982.50 insurance collected, which constituted the entire estate, and of which there remained $539.45 after paying costs and expenses of administration. This was set apart to the surviving widow, Annie J. Jenkins, as exempt from execution, under § 1465, Code Civ. Proc. The proceeds of all said policies were deposited by respondent, Annie J. Jenkins, in one account, to her credit in said Citizens' National Bank of Los Angeles. She drew against this account from time to time until the date of the levy of the attachment, when there remained the sum of $1,020.27 to her credit in said bank.

"All moneys, benefits, privileges, or immunities accruing, or in any manner growing, out of any life insurance, if the annual premiums paid do not exceed $500," are exempt from execution. Code Civ. Proc. subdiv. 18, § 690. The main contention of appellant is that the exemption extends only against the debts of the person whose life was insured, and who paid the premiums requisite to procure the insurance and keep it in force; and that such exemption does not continue after his death, in favor of the beneficiary. In construing this statute, as in the construction of all statutes, it is the duty of the court to arrive at the intent of the legislature, if it can be done, from the language used in the statute. Statutes exempting property from execution are enacted on the ground of public policy, for the benevolent purpose of saving debtors and their families from want by reason of misfortune or improvidence. The general rule now is to construe such statutes liberally, so as to carry out the intention of the legislature and the humane purpose designed by the lawmakers. 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 75, 76, and cases cited; Re McManus, 87 Cal. 294, 10 L. R. A. 567, 22 Am. St. Rep. 250, 25 Pac. 413; Spence v. Smith, 121 Cal. 536, 66 Am. St. Rep. 62, 53 Pac. 653. Bearing this rule in mind, let us see what the legislature has said as to this matter. It has said that, where the annual premiums do not exceed $500, the insurance moneys shall be exempt from execution. Here the annual premium did not exceed $500. It has said that all moneys accruing, or in any manner growing, out of any life insurance shall be exempt from execution. The money here accrued and grew out of life insurance upon the life of deceased. After his death no execution could issue against him. The words "exempt from execution" were clearly intended to apply to the moneys coming from the life insurance to the hands of the beneficiary. It is exempt from execution as to all strangers or parties who have no claim to it, without any provision of statute. It was intended to exempt it from the debts of the party to whom it was payable, and who procured title to it by the death of the insured. It was not the intention that the insured might die, leaving a small insurance and a dependent family, and that the insurance money should be subject to execution for the debts of the wife, even if she is the beneficiary named in the policy. The words "exempt from execution" mean exempt from any execution. The legislature mentioned no class of executions, and we are not at liberty to judicially insert a class. "Exempt from execution" includes the defendant, Annie J. Jenkins, and applies to plaintiff. We have no decision of this court upon the question, and the decisions of other courts do not furnish much assistance, because the statute under which each decision was made is different from ours. In Kentucky and Minnesota the statutes declare, in effect, that certain insurance benefits, reliefs, etc., "shall be exempt from execution, and shall not be liable to be seized, taken, or appropriated, by any legal or equitable process, to pay any debt or liability of a member." In both these states the fund or relief is held to be exempt from execution, whether against the original member, or against any beneficiary who has been paid, or is entitled to be paid, any benefit falling within the class described in the statute. Schillinger v. Boes, 85 Ky. 357, 3 S. W. 427; Brown v. Balfour, 46 Minn. 68, 12 L. R. A. 373, 48 N. W. 604; First Nat. Bank v. How, 65 Minn. 187, 67 N. W. 994. It seems at least doubtful as to whether or not these decisions properly construe the statutes of these states. The decisions in other states—particularly in New York—hold similar language to create an exemption only as to the member or insured. In New York the language of the statute is that such funds shall be exempt "from execution, and shall not be liable to be seized, taken, or appropriated by any legal or equitable process to pay any debt or liability of such deceased member." Bolt v. Keyhoe, 30 Hun, 619. The Kentucky and Minnesota cases are criticised by Freeman in his work on Executions, 3d ed. vol. 2, § 234b. But the author says, in speaking of the language of the statutes in those states: "If these statutes stopped with the words 'exempt from execution,' there would be no doubt of the exemption in favor of the beneficiary; but the additional words in the statute indicate that the legislature had in mind merely the debts or other liabilities of members of the association in question, and hence that, after the benefit was received by a person other than a member, it would be subject to the usual laws relating to executions." In our Code the statute stops with the words "exempt from execution." Under our statute, necessary household and kitchen furniture is exempt from execution; and, if the wife succeeds to such furniture, it is equally exempt as to her debts. The farming utensils or implements of husbandry of the judgment debtor are exempt, and, if the son should take them under the will of his father, following his father's occupation, they would still be exempt as to the son's debts. Equally true as to the insurance money in controversy herein. If it had come to J. F. Jenkins in his lifetime, it is conceded that it would have been exempt as to his debts. It came to his wife as his beneficiary, and is equally exempt as to her debts.

As to the policy payable to and collected by the estate, the estate was the beneficiary, and the money was, for the reasons before stated, exempt from execution. It was therefore assets of the deceased exempt from execution, and was properly set apart to the widow as being so exempt. Code Civ. Proc.

§ 1465; Re Miller, 121 Cal. 353, 53 Pac. 906. The administrator or executor is not the owner of any part of the estate. He, in his official character, only holds it in trust for the parties entitled to it, subject to the purposes of administration. The title to the insurance money came to respondent, Annie J. Jenkins, through the estate, and under the order setting it apart, and vested the title in her as effectually as if she had been named as the beneficiary of the policy. We can see no reason why the insurance money coming to her directly as beneficiary should be exempt from execution, and not that coming to her indirectly through the estate and the order setting it apart. In either case it is exempt from execution. In one case the instrument of life insurance gives her the title; in the other, the law gives it to her. The statute provides that all property exempt from execution shall be set apart for the use of the surviving husband or wife. Code Civ. Proc. § 1465. If it is exempt from execution before being set apart, it does not cease to be so the moment it is set apart. The widow takes the family allowance by order of the court. After it is paid to her, it cannot be seized on execution for her prior debts and diverted from the support of the family. The principle is fully discussed in regard to a homestead set apart for the family in Keyes v. Cyrus, 100 Cal. 322, 38 Am. St. Rep. 296, 34 Pac. 722. It was there held that the provision for setting apart exempt property, including a homestead, was for the protection and support of the family. The court said: "The authority given to the court in the first part of § 1465 to set apart for the family 'all the property exempt from execution, including the homestead selected,' implies that the property, when set apart, is exempt from execution. . . . A homestead may be set apart to the widow, even though the estate be insolvent, and the property so set apart constitute the entire estate of the decedent; but, if the homestead thus set apart to her could be immediately taken in execution by one of her creditors, it would fail to be available for her use or support, and it might happen that her creditor would fare better than a creditor of the decedent whose money had perhaps been used to purchase the very property so set apart." In Barnum v. Boughton, 55 Conn. 117, 10 Atl. 514, it was held that money paid to the widow, as an allowance for her support, through the probate court, could not be taken or attached by one of her creditors. The court said: "She could neither ask nor receive it for the payment of her debts. The probate court could not grant it for that purpose. . . . If one allowance can be intercepted, so can every other, for, if the door is opened for one creditor, it cannot be closed against any, and the entire estate might thus be diverted from its legal destination. The law will not permit the instant necessities of the widow and the ultimate rights of the creditors of the estate to be postponed, in its name, to the demands of her creditors." So in this case the court will not allow the insurance money which is exempt from execution as to the creditors of the estate to be taken by the creditors of the widow. It is equally exempt as to them.

Appellant contends that by the deposit of the money in the bank the money lost its identity, and that thereafter the bank owed Annie J. Jenkins the money; that the debtor thus voluntarily parted with the money which was exempt, and acquired in lieu thereof a credit due by the bank. Such construction would seem to be unreasonable, and no authority is cited which supports it. It is true that, in one sense, by the deposit the relation of debtor and creditor was created as between the bank and Mrs. Jenkins; but she put the exempt money in the bank. She regarded it as money in the bank. She expected to, and did, draw it as she needed it. The bank did not give her the identical pieces of money that she deposited, but it gave her, as she drew upon it, money equal in value and kind. She was not required to keep the money buried, or in her stocking, in order to have it remain exempt. If the appellant's theory is correct, she could not have paid a $5 grocery bill with a $20 piece, receiving $15 in change, without the risk of having the $15 attached. The law does not require such absurdity. The cases cited by appellant arose under the United States pension laws, and are not in point. The section of the Revised Statutes construed provides: "No sum of money due, or to become due, to any pensioner, shall be liable to attachment," etc. The courts have correctly held that the section only protected the money while due or in course of transmission to the pensioner. Money due, or to become due, is designed to protect the amount of the pension until it reaches the hands of the pensioner. It is then no longer money due, or to become due. Our statute exempts the money, and, although deposited in the bank, it is still money and protected. It has not lost its identity because of the fact that the identical coins or bills deposited are not to be returned. Respondent probably never saw any coins or bills, but took the checks which the insurance company gave her as evidence that it had the money for her, and deposited them with the bank; having the amounts credited in her bankbook as evidence that she had the money in the bank. In Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc. v. San Francisco, 139 Cal. 205, 96 Am.

St. Rep. 100, 72 Pac. 920, it was held that the checks or orders drawn upon the Treasurer or Assistant Treasurer of the United States, payable on demand, are not merely obligations of the United States, but solvent credits, subject to taxation. The court said: "The orders were simply a convenient mode of payment of the obligation. They were, for all practical purposes, the money itself." So in the case at bar the credit in the bank is, for all practical purposes, under the exemption laws, to be regarded as the money itself. Respondent had the right to have the levy set aside upon the exempt property. Section 556, Code Civ. Proc., provides that the writ may be discharged when the same was improperly or irregularly issued. This was not a dissolution of the writ of attachment, but an order setting aside the levy as to the exempt property. It would be strange if a court were so impotent that it could not set aside the erroneous levy of its own writ upon exempt property. Any other rule would compel the injured party to bring a suit for damages, which not only would lead to delay, but might in the end prove futile. Courts have power over their own process, and to set aside a levy of a writ of attachment or execution upon exempt property. 2 Freeman, Executions, § 271; 8 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 579, and cases cited; Sandburg v. Papineau, 81 Ill. 446.

It follows that the order should be affirmed.

We concur: Gray, C.; Smith, C.

Per Curiam:

For reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order is affirmed.

McFarland, Henshaw, and Lorigan, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing in banc denied February 16, 1905.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, NINTH CIRCUIT.

Re PETITION OF PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY for Limitation of Liability Arising out of Loss of the City of Rio de Janeiro.

(64 C. C. A. 410, 130 Fed. 76.)

1. A steamship company is not entitled to a limitation of its liability for loss of passengers and baggage through the sinking of its vessel, where its crew could not understand the language of its officers, and were not drilled in the launching of the boats, so that after the accident but one boat was successfully launched, although there was time enough to launch them all had proper orders been given and obeyed, and the statute provides that no steamer carrying passengers shall depart from any port unless she shall have in her service a full complement of licensed officers, and a full crew sufficient at all times to manage the vessel.

2. The doctrine of fellow service will not defeat the liability of a steamship company for death of a member of the crew through the sinking of the vessel, although the cause of the accident was the negligence of the master and pilot, where the loss of life was due to inability to launch the boats because of insufficiency of the crew in that they could not understand the language of the officers, and had not been drilled in lowering the boats.

(May 2, 1904.)

NOTE.—For another case in this series as to when steamship company cannot take advantage of statute permitting limitation of liability, see Weisshaar v. Kimball 8, S. Co. 65 L. R. A. 84.

69 L. R. A.

CROSS-APPEALS from a decree of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California limiting the liability of petitioner for loss of life through the sinking of one of its steamships; the petitioner excepting to so much of the decree as held it liable for a greater sum than it contended for; and persons claiming damages excepting to so much as permitted a limitation of liability. Reversed on appeal of passengers.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Gilbert and Ross, Circuit Judges, and Hawley, District Judge.

Mr. William Denman, for passengers, appellants:

In order to limit its liability, the petitioner has resting upon it the burden of proving that the "damage or injury done, occasioned, or incurred," shall be done without the privity or knowledge of such owner or owners.

U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4283, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2943.

The words "sufficient at all times to manage the vessel" include the time when the lifeboats should be launched to save the passengers at the wrecking of the vessel; and the owners failed to supply a crew sufficient for such an occasion.

Kimball v. Tucker, 10 Mass. 195; The Lady Pike (Germania Ins. Co. v. The Lady Pike) 21 Wall. 12, 22 L.ed. 502; The Gentelman, Olcott, 115, Fed. Cas. No. 5,324; Tait v. Levi, 14 East, 482; Parsons v. Empire Transp. Co. 49 C. C. A. 302, 111 Fed. 208.

The burden of proof is on the owners to show that the loss of life could not possibly arise from the insufficiency of the crew.

The Pennsylvania (The Pennsylvania v. Troop) 19 Wall. 136, 22 L. ed. 151; Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co. 136 U. S. 415, 34 L. ed. 401, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934; The Guildhall, 58 Fed. 800; The Annie Faxon, 21 C. C. A. 366, 44 U. S. App. 591, 75 Fed. 319.

Messrs. Gavin McNab, Thomas & Gerstle, W. P. Humphrey, R. H. Countrymen, W. H. Willitt, Chickering & Gregory, R. H. Cross, Bien & Jackson, A. Morgenthal, Corget & Goodwin, Charles E. Snook, and Roger Johnson also for passengers, appellants.

Messrs. Charles Page and Ward McAllister for Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Ross, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The steamship City of Rio de Janeiro, whose home port was San Francisco, on entering the Bay of San Francisco on the 22d day of February, 1901, on one of her return trips from Hong Kong and intermediate ports, struck a reef of rocks near the Golden Gate, and within twenty minutes sank beneath the waters, carrying down a large number of her passengers and crew and all of her cargo. Shortly thereafter, to wit, March 19, 1901, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, owner of the ship, filed in the court below its petition for limitation of liability, alleging therein that the sinking of the ship occurred by reason of the perils of the sea, and praying for a limitation of liability, and for the privilege of contesting any liability for the losses that occurred. The court below directed a reference to its commissioner to ascertain and report the value of the ship and freight pending. Evidence was taken showing the amounts collected by the petitioner on the ship's outward voyage for passage money and freight and the amount received and agreed to be paid upon the return voyage. In respect to the question of freight pending, it was shown that all goods lost had been shipped under bills of lading containing these provisions: "Freight for the same to be paid in United States gold coin, said freight to be considered earned, steamer or goods lost or not lost at any stage of the entire transit. . . . The foregoing bill of lading is issued subject to the terms and conditions of an act of Congress of the United States of America, approved February 13, 1893, entitled 'An Act Relating to Navigation of Vessels, Bills of Lading, and to Certain Obligations, Duties, and Rights in Connection with the Carriage of Property' (Acts of 69 L. R. A.

52d Congress, 2d Session, page 445, chap. 105), the provisions of which are hereby made a part hereof, and are deemed to control and express the contract of the parties hereto in all cases where there may be (if there be any such cases) a difference between the expressed provisions of the bill of lading and the terms of such act of Congress."

Based upon evidence introduced before the commissioner, that officer reported to the court findings to the effect that the petitioner was, and still is, the sole owner of the steamship, the value of which, in its wrecked condition, was $150; that the voyage which terminated in the wreck and loss of the ship began at Hong Kong, China, on the 22d day of January, 1901; that the freight money collected at Hong Kong and way ports for the voyage to San Francisco, and that which was to have been collected at the latter place, "is earned and the freight pending in this cause," and appraising the value of the ship and her freight pending as follows:

Steamship City of Rio de Janeiro, and her tackle, apparel, machinery, and furniture. . . .	$ 150 00
Freight and passage money pending	24,827 93
Total	$24,977 93

The commissioner took no account of the freight or passenger money collected on the outward voyage of the ship.

To his report the claimant, Sarah Guyon, administratrix of the estate of Henry Guyon, deceased, filed these exceptions:

"(I.) Claimant excepts to the following finding of said report and appraisement: 'I do further find that the voyage which terminated in the wreck and loss of the aforesaid steamship at the entrance to San Francisco harbor on the 22d day of February, 1901, began at Hong Kong on the 22d day of January, 1901,' on the grounds: (a) That there is no evidence before the commissioner to show that the said voyage began at Hong Kong, China. (b) That the evidence conclusively established that the voyage for which the freight was pending at the time of the said wreck began at San Francisco on or about December 14, 1900, and extended through the ports of Honolulu, Yokohama, Kobe, Nagasaki, Shanghai, to Hong Kong, and return to San Francisco, touching at the same ports in the reverse order.

"(II.) Claimant excepts to the following finding: 'I do further find the freight and passage money pending for the aforesaid voyage to be the sum of $24,827.93,' on the grounds: (a) That the term 'aforesaid voyage' is ambiguous, and that it cannot be determined therefrom whether the said term applies to the voyage on which the City of Rio de Janeiro was wrecked, or whether it refers to the portion of the voyage beginning at Hong Kong January 22, 1901; claimant admitting the said sum to be the freight pending for the latter, but excepting to the said sum as a finding of the freight for the entire voyage. (b) That the evidence conclusively shows the freight pending for the voyage on which the City of Rio de Janeiro was wrecked to have been $55,412.05.

"(III.) Claimant excepts to the following finding and appraisal: 'I do further appraise the value of the said steamship and her freight pending as follows:

"Steamship City of Rio de Janeiro, her tackle, apparel, and furniture	$ 150 00
Freight and passage money pending	24,827 93
Total	$24,977 93

"—On the grounds: (a) That the evidence conclusively shows that the venture in which claimant was interested was the sending of the City of Rio de Janeiro on a voyage from San Francisco to Asiatic ports and return to carry for hire passengers, freight, and mails, and that the freight pending for the portion of the voyage from San Francisco to Hong Kong, amounting to $30,202.11, should be added to the $24,827.97 earned on the homeward trip of the voyage; making the total appraisal for the freight pending $55,040.04. (b) That the evidence shows conclusively that the value of the ship after the wreck was $500, and that this sum should be included in the said appraisal. (c) That the appraisal of the said vessel should be amended as follows:

"Freight pending for venture..	$55,040 04
Wreck $500.00; boats $150.00..	650 00
Total	$55,690 04

"Wherefore claimant prays that the said exceptions to the said report and appraisal be allowed, and that the said appraisal be recommitted to the said commissioner, with instructions to amend the same by adding thereto the item of $30,212.11 as for freight pending for the outward trip of the voyage on which the said steamship sank, and the item of $500 as for the value of the ship after the wreck."

The petitioners filed the following: "Petitioners except to the following finding of said report and appraisal: 'And that 69 L. R. A.

which was to have been collected at San Francisco.' Wherefore petitioners pray that the said appraisal be recommitted to the said commissioner, with instructions to amend the same by deducting the sum of $13,729.17 for freight which was to have been collected at San Francisco."

All of the exceptions were overruled.

Various claims having been filed for damage by reason of loss of life and for loss of goods, baggage, etc., the cause came on for trial before the court upon its merits. The court found and held that the sinking of the ship was not due to any peril of the sea, but to the gross negligence of her master and pilot; after which the petitioner moved for a reduction of the bond so far as it represented freight pending, which motion was denied.

In and by its final decree the court below awarded damages to various of the claimants who were representatives of lost passengers, or who had themselves suffered injury, in amounts aggregating $35,125, but limited the liability of the petitioner for such damages to the sum of $24,977.93, with interest thereon from March 19, 1901, which sum, with interest, was directed to be paid into the registry of the court within ten days, and to be apportioned among the various claimants to whom damages were so awarded after the payment out of such fund of all the costs of the proceeding except the cost incurred in the proceedings relating to the appraisal of the steamship and her freight pending, which the petitioner was directed to pay. The court held against the claims of Clara Barwick, and Ruth Miller as executrix of the estate of Sarah Wakefield, deceased.

From the decree various of the claimants, as also the petitioner, have appealed. The ground of the petitioner's appeal is that, inasmuch as the court below found and held that the loss occurred solely by reason of the negligence of the ship's officers, and not by reason of any peril of the sea, it erred in holding that pending freight included either any prepaid freight or prepaid passage money, or any uncollected and uncollectible or unearned freight, and that, instead of limiting the liability of the ship to $24,977.93, it should have been limited to the sum of $4,483.53, which latter sum, it is contended on the part of the petitioner, is the aggregate amount of the value of the ship and her freight pending. The main ground of the appeal of those of the claimants whose appeal is from that portion of the final decree adjudging "that the liability of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for said damages be and hereby is limited to the sum of $24,977.93 and interest thereon from March 19, 1901," is that the crew of the lost steamship "spoke and understood only the language of a race and nation different from the officers immediately in command over them in the launching of the lifeboats on said vessel, and that they could not speak or understand the commands of said officers, and that they had never been drilled in the launching of the lifeboats to train them to launch the same without commands, and that the said crew was therefore not sufficient at all times to man said steam vessel carrying passengers, and that the injury to claimants arose from said insufficiency," and "that the officers of said City of Rio de Janeiro in command of her eleven lifeboats could not speak any language which the members of the crew immediately under their command in launching said boats could understand, which said crew had not been trained in launching said boats, and therefore that said Pacific Mail Steamship Company has not supplied a full complement of officers sufficient at all times to manage a steam vessel carrying passengers, and that the injuries to the claimants arose through said insufficiency."

It is apparent that, if this position of the claimants is well founded, the petitioner is not entitled to any limitation of its liability, the questions presented on its appeal become immaterial, and the claimants to whom damages were awarded by the court below will be entitled to judgment for the full amounts so awarded them, together with their costs, whether the voyage on which the disaster occurred should include the round trip from San Francisco to Hong Kong and back, as contended on the part of the claimants, or is limited to the return trip from Hong Kong to San Francisco, as contended on the part of the petitioner. The record shows that the disaster occurred about half past 5 o'clock of the morning of February 22, 1901. The fog was so dense that the day afforded no light. It was very dark, but the water was smooth, and there was but little, if any, list to the ship as she sank, which she did in twenty minutes from the time of striking the rocks. She carried 211 persons and 11 lifeboats, 3 of which were swung by davits from the sides of the ship, and 8 of which were on skids on the roofs of the deckhouses. Their equipment and the apparatus for launching them was good. The evidence is that under such conditions five minutes was ample time for the lowering of the boats. It further shows that there was no panic among the passengers or crew; that the passengers behaved well; and that the captain, immediately upon the ship's striking the rocks, sounded the alarm, and called the crew to the boats. Each of the boats was commanded by a white officer, and manned by a part of the Chinese crew.

69 L. R. A.

Yet but three of the eleven boats were lowered into the water, one of which (the aft quarter boat No. 10) was lowered by Officer Coghlan and the ship's carpenter, and but three of the hundred and odd passengers that the ship carried were taken into any boat. There must, in the very nature of things, have been some paramount, controlling cause for all this. And that cause, we think, is very easily to be seen. It was not merely for the reason that the men depended upon to man the boats were Chinese. To the contrary, the evidence is that the Chinese make excellent sailors.

We extract the following from the testimony of Capt. Seabury, a most competent and experienced mariner, and who, at the time of giving his testimony in this cause, had completed his sixty-fifth round voyage from San Francisco to the Orient for the petitioner:

A. Every time I have been to sea on this side of the continent, and every time I have had a white crew, we have always had trouble with them getting drunk; especially sailing days. At times at sea—when I ran to Australia, where I made five voyages—twice we had a white crew, and there was scarcely a day but I did not have to go to the police court on account of some row that they made. I have always found the Chinese crew obedient, able to do their work, and always on hand in bad weather, and not eyeservants. You do not have to watch them in the ordinary run of work.

Q. During those sixty-five voyages, Captain Seabury, have you ever encountered any typhoons?

A. Yes, sir; two or three.

Q. And any bad weather?

A. Yes, sir; I had a very bad one last September.

Q. At the time did you have a Chinese crew?

A. Yes, sir; on this same ship.

Q. How did they behave in time of peril?

A. As well as any men could possibly behave. They never stow away in dark nights in bad weather. They are always right there, and you can always make sure of them.

Q. Have you ever seen them in time of wreck?

A. I have never been wrecked, not since I have been steamshipping. I have in sailing schooners. We had pretty nearly a wreck on the Alaska in 1879, and had to turn back.

Q. With a Chinese crew?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they behave well?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many men have you on the China now in your crew? By the word "crew" I mean sailors. I do not mean men in the steward's department, or men in the steerage department, or men in the fireroom. I mean crew—sailor men.

Mr. Denman: I object to the question as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and in no way referring to the City of Rio de Janeiro, the ship in issue.

A. Thirty-two.

Mr. McAllister: Q. Thirty-two men?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can any of those men speak English?

Mr. Denman: The same objection.

A. All of them can speak English. Some cannot speak quite so well as others, but all of them can understand when you give them an order about the ship.

Mr. McAllister: Q. Can you give to a majority of that crew yourself an order in English to haul this rope, or do this or that, whatever you saw fit?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And would they understand you?

A. Yes, sir.

But how about Chinese sailors, or sailors of any other class or race, who cannot understand the orders that become necessary in the course of their duties because of a lack of knowledge of the language in which they have to be given? That is the question we have to consider and determine here.* It is declared by § 4463 of the same statutes [U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901 p. 3045] that "no steamer carrying passengers shall depart from any port unless she shall have in her service a full complement of licensed officers and full crew, sufficient at all times to manage the vessel, including the proper number of watchmen. But if any such vessel . . . is deprived of the services of any licensed officer, without the consent, fault, or collusion of the master, owner, or any person interested in the vessel, the deficiency may be temporarily supplied, until others licensed can be obtained."

It is, as was said by Judge Hawley in Re Meyer, 74 Fed. 885, "the duty of the owners of a steamer carrying goods and passengers, not only to provide a seaworthy vessel, but they must also provide the vessel with a crew adequate in number, and competent for their duty with reference to all the exigencies of the intended route;" not merely competent for the ordinary duties of an uneventful voyage, but for any exigency that is likely to happen, such, for example, as unfortunately did happen in the present case,—the striking of the ship on a reef of rocks,—and the consequent imperative necessity for instant action to save the lives of passengers and crew. The duty rested upon the petitioner to be prepared for such an emergency, not only by reason of the statute cited, but by the general maritime law. In the case of The Gentleman, Olcott, 115, Fed. Cas. No. 5,324, it was held that the owners were liable for furnishing an inadequate crew, which they shipped at the Gambia river, West Africa, large enough in numbers, but sick with fever. In Tait v. Levi, 14 East, 482, it was held that, where the captain did not know the coast, and entered the enemy's port, and was captured, the vessel was "incompetently fitted out," because there was no proper master for the purpose of the voyage. In Parsons v. Empire Transp. Co. 49 C. C. A. 302, 111 Fed. 202, 208, we held that, where the owners appointed an incompetent superintendent to manage ships in Alaskan waters, they were not entitled to a limitation of liability for loss arising from sending out a barge in wintry and stormy weather. There can, in our opinion, be no doubt that the crew of a ship must be not only sufficient in numbers, but also competent for the duties it may be called upon to perform. The case shows that the City of Rio de Janeiro left the port of Honolulu, on the voyage under consideration, with a crew of 84 Chinamen, officered by white men. The officers could not speak the language of the Chinese, and but two of the latter—the boatswain and chief fireman—could understand that of the officers. Consequently, the orders of the officers had to be communicated either through the boatswain or chief fireman, or by signs and signals. So far as appears, that seems to have worked well enough on the voyage in question, until the ship came to grief, and there arose the necessity for quick and energetic action in the darkness. In that emergency the crew was wholly inefficient and incompetent, as the sad results proved. The boats were in separate places on the ship. The sailors could not understand the language in which the orders of the officers in command of the respective boats had to be given. It was too dark for them to see signs (if signs could have been intelligibly given), and only one of the two Chinese who spoke English appears to have known anything about the lowering of a boat; and there had been no drill of the crew in the matter of lowering them. Under such circumstances it is not surprising that but three of the boats were lowered, one of which was successfully launched by the efforts of Officer Coghlan and the ship's carpenter, another of which was swamped by one of the Chinese crew letting the after fall down with a run, and the third of which was lowered so slowly that it was swamped as the ship went down. We have no hesitation in holding that the ship was insufficiently manned, for the reason that the sailors were unable to understand and execute the orders made imperative by the exigency that unhappily arose, and resulted so disastrously to life, as well as to property. It results from what has been said that the court below also erred in denying the appellant Clara Barwick's claim made on her own behalf and that of her minor children, for damages for the death of her husband, on the ground that he was a fellow servant of the master and pilot of the ship.

*Section 4493 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3058), provides that "whenever damage is sustained by any passenger or his baggage from explosion, fire, collision, or other cause, the master and the owner of such vessel, or either of them, and the vessel, shall be liable to each and every person so injured, to the full amount of damage if it happens through any neglect or failure to comply with the provisions of this title, or through known defects or imperfections of the steaming apparatus or of the hull."

The action of the court in respect to the claim of Ruth Miller, executrix of the estate of Sarah Wakefield, deceased, was, in our opinion, correct.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to enter judgment against the petitioner denying its application for a limitation of liability, and in favor of the respective claimants for the full amount of damages it has heretofore awarded them, with interest and costs, and in favor of the claimant Clara Barwick for such amount of damages as the court shall find from the evidence already taken, or that may be taken, she is entitled to by reason of the death of her husband, and by reason of the loss of his personal effects; and against the claim of Ruth Miller, as executrix of the estate of Sarah Wakefield, deceased, in so far as it is based upon her death.

Petition for writ of certiorari denied November 7, 1904.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

Samuel D. SMITH, Trustee, etc., of Alfred Smith, Deceased,
v.

C. Bates DANA et al.

(..... Conn.)

1. Investment of the profits of a corporation in permanent works does not capitalize them, so that upon the sale of the works the directors cannot distribute them as a cash dividend, which will belong to life tenants, and not to remaindermen, of the stock.
2. Cash dividends upon corporate stock belong to the life tenants notwithstanding they were derived from the sale of permanent property in which profits had been invested.
3. The rule that cash dividends on corporate stock go to life tenants, and stock dividends to the remaindermen, will not yield whenever an investigation might appear to indicate its failure in a given case to accomplish what might be conceived to be exact justice, upon the basis of some theoretical view of the ultimate rights of persons asserting conflicting successive stock interests.
4. Withdrawal from certain incidental branches of business which a corporation has been carrying on does not make the distribution of the money invested in them as dividends a partial liquidation which will carry the dividends to the remaindermen as against life tenants, where the capital stock is not impaired, and its value remains above par, and practically the same after the dividends as before.

(March 9, 1905.)

CROSS-APPEALS by the respective defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court for Hartford County in an interpleader proceeding to determine the rights of life tenants and remaindermen to certain corporate dividends. Reversed on the appeal of the life tenants.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles E. Gross, for I. C. Bates Dana, life tenant, appellant:

Cash dividends are income, and go to the life tenant, and stock dividends are capital, and go to the remainderman.

2 Thomp. Corp. chap. 35, art. 5, §§ 2193, 2199, 2201, 2207, 2208, 2211, 2212, 2222.

The law of Connecticut follows the general rule.

Mills v. Britton, 64 Conn. 12, 24 L. R. A. 536, 29 Atl. 231; Terry v. Eagle Lock Co. 47 Conn. 141; Brinley v. Grou, 50 Conn. 66, 47 Am. Rep. 617; Hotchkiss v. Brainerd Quarry Co. 58 Conn. 120, 19 Atl. 521; Spooner v. Phillips, 62 Conn. 62, 16 L. R. A. 461, 24 Atl. 524.

This rule is based upon the absolute necessities of the case.

NOTE.—As to rights of life tenants and remaindermen with respect to stock dividends, see also, in this series, Spooner v. Phillips, 16 L. R. A. 461; and note; Hite v. Hite, 19 L. R. A. 173; Mills v. Britton, 24 L. R. A. 536; 61 L. R. A.

Pritchett v. Nashville Trust Co. 33 L. R. A. 856; McLouth v. Hunt, 39 L. R. A. 230; Quinn v. Safe Deposit & T. Co. 53 L. R. A. 169; and De Koven v. Alsop, 63 L. R. A. 587.

Brinley v. Grou, 50 Conn. 76, 47 Am. Rep. 617; Spooner v. Phillips, 62 Conn. 74, 16 L. R. A. 461, 24 Atl. 524; Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 34 L. ed. 525, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1057; Hotchkiss v. Brainerd Quarry Co. 58 Conn. 137, 19 Atl. 521.

The law presumes that a dividend made by a going concern is made from profits.

2 Thomp. Corp. § 2193.

The stockholders of the Holyoke Water Power Company never had any title to, or interest in, the earnings, property, or surplus (as such) of the incidental plants.

Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 34 L. ed. 525, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1057.

They were the sole property of the water power company, when received were merged with its other assets, and whether they were spent or set aside, invested or paid out in cash dividends, it is impossible, as well as immaterial, to decide.

2 Thomp. Corp. § 2207.

The fact that these plants have been income producing does not make the proceeds thereof, when sold, capital. The capital of the company must be increased to take up such invested accumulations.

Messrs. Grosvenor Calkins and Robert M. Washburn, for life tenants, appellants:

Cash dividends are income, and belong to the life tenant.

Vinot v. Paine, 99 Mass. 101, 96 Am. Dec. 705; Brinley v. Grou, 50 Conn. 66, 47 Am. Rep. 617; Mills v. Britton, 64 Conn. 4, 24 L. R. A. 536, 29 Atl. 231; Bouch v. Sproule, L. R. 12 App. Cas. 385; Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 34 L. ed. 525, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1057; Re Brown, 14 R. I. 371, 51 Am. Rep. 397; Richardson v. Richardson, 75 Me. 570, 46 Am. Rep. 428; Lord v. Brooks, 52 N. H. 72; Re Kernochan, 104 N. Y. 618, 11 N. E. 149.

It is the well-settled policy of all courts to interfere as little as possible with the management of corporate affairs, an' to establish plain and uniform rules to guide persons in fiduciary positions in the management of their trusts.

Bouch v. Sproule, L. R. 12 App. Cas. 385; Minot v. Paine, 99 Mass. 101, 96 Am. Dec. 705; Richardson v. Richardson, 75 Me. 570, 46 Am. Rep. 428; Lyman v. Pratt, 183 Mass. 58, 66 N. E. 423.

The only exception to the rule is that cash dividends declared in liquidation are principal, and belong, not to the life tenant, but to the remaindermen.

Gifford v. Thompson, 115 Mass. 478.

The courts are willing to be guided by a clear expression of intention in the form of a vote of the directors of a corporation in declaring a dividend.

Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 34 L. 69 L. R. A.

ed. 525, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1057; Bouch v. Sproule, L. R. 12 App. Cas. 385; Hemenway v. Hemenway, 181 Mass. 406, 63 N. E. 919.

This dividend of 65 per cent is not a dividend in liquidation, but is income, and should be paid to the life tenants.

Harvard College v. Amory, 9 Pick. 446; Balch v. Hallet, 10 Gray, 402; Reed v. Head, 6 Allen, 174; Gifford v. Thompson, 115 Mass. 478; Hemenway v. Hemenway, 181 Mass. 406, 63 Atl. 919; Second Universalist Church v. Colegrove, 74 Conn. 79, 49 Atl. 902; Davis v. Jackson, 152 Mass. 58, 23 Am. St. Rep. 801, 25 N. E. 21.

Mr. Charles Welles Gross for plaintiff.

Mr. Edward I. Baker, for John M. Steele, Gertrude D. Steele, and C. Bates Dana, remaindermen, appellants:

The gas plant was a part of the original capital of the corporation. When the corporation invested its money in the construction of the electric-light plant, and later in its purchase, the corporation permanently capitalized that money, and the plant became a part of the permanent capital of the corporation just as the gas plant had always been; and a distribution of that permanent capital was not a dividend of earnings.

The rule that ordinary cash dividends are income, and stock dividends are principal, does not apply to a distribution of capital.

Hotchkiss v. Brainerd Quarry Co. 58 Conn. 120, 19 Atl. 521; Spooner v. Phillips, 62 Conn. 62, 16 L. R. A. 461, 24 Atl. 524; Heard v. Eldredge, 109 Mass. 258, 12 Am. Rep. 687; Gifford v. Thompson, 115 Mass. 478; Hemenway v. Hemenway, 181 Mass. 406, 63 N. E. 919; D'Ooge v. Leeds, 176 Mass. 558, 57 N. E. 1025; Wheeler v. Perry, 18 N. H. 307; Walker v. Walker, 68 N. H. 407, 39 Atl. 432; Re Skillman, 2 Connolly, 161, 29 N. Y. S. R. 217, 9 N. Y. Supp. 469; Vinton's Appeal, 99 Pa. 434, 44 Am. Rep. 116; Bouch v. Sproule, L. R. 12 App. Cas. 385.

Prentice, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The will of Alfred Smith, who died in Hartford, the place of his residence, on August 12, 1868, was on August 16th following admitted to probate in the court of probate for the district of Hartford. By the will the testator gave to trustees the sum of $100,000. By the terms of the trust the trustees were required to pay over the income to certain persons designated during the lives of three grandchildren and the survivor of them, and upon the death of the last survivor to divide and distribute the corpus in the manner provided. Each of the three grandchildren was made the beneficiary of a share of said income during his life. The defendant I. C. Bates Dana is the only one of them surviving. Certain of the other defendants are his children and the husband of one of them. The remaining defendants are the children of Alfred F. Dana, another of said grandchildren. The third died childless. It is assumed and conceded by all parties that these defendants embrace all who, under the provisions of the will, are, or can become, entitled to share in the income of the trust estate, and all who are, or can become, entitled to participate in the division of the corpus upon the termination of the trust to pay over income, unless it be persons representing them or hereafter born children of said Bates Dana. The children of Alfred occupy the position of both life tenants and remaindermen. The claim which they here assert is made in the former capacity.

The will provided that, in setting apart said trust fund of $100,000, there should be included therein 300 shares of the stock of the Holyoke Water Power Company, which the testator owned; the same to be taken for that purpose at their par value. That was done. The capital stock of said corporation was then $350,000. July, 1877, said capital was increased to $600,000 by the issue of new stock subscribed and paid for at par. The right to subscribe for this new issue was accorded to existing stockholders pro rata. The trustees sold the rights attaching to said 300 shares. In 1893 the capital stock was again increased to $1,200,000, in the same manner as before. At this time the trustees subscribed for and took 200 shares, making their trust holdings 500 shares, and sold the remaining rights. December 20, 1902, the directors declared a cash dividend of 65 per cent payable December 24th to stockholders of record December 20th. The plaintiff, who is the only survivor of the trustees, received the sum of $32,500 as the amount of said dividend upon said 500 shares. This sum he now holds. The defendants Bates Dana and the children of Alfred Dana claim the whole thereof as income to which they are entitled. The children of Bates Dana claim that the whole, or at least the bulk, of said sum belongs to the corpus of the trust estate, and should be held by the trustee as an accretion thereto. The trial court sustained this claim with respect to approximately two thirds of the dividend, and adjudged that the balance be divided as income. This conclusion, and the reasons which the court gave in support of it, as well as those which counsel for said children of Bates Dana urge in support of their broader contention, require for their understanding and examination a statement of some of the facts which enter into the history of the corporation in question, and which serve to indicate the source and character of the corporate assets which formed the basis of the 65 per cent dividend. Previous to 1859 the Hadley Falls Company, a Massachusetts corporation, had acquired a large tract of land where the city of Holyoke is now located, and had constructed a dam across the Connecticut river, extending from South Hadley, on the northeasterly shore, to Holyoke, on the southwesterly shore, of the Connecticut river, and had built locks and canals at Holyoke, and had laid out streets, sites for manufactories, tenements, and residences; and several factories, residences, and other buildings had been erected. Among other buildings, said Hadley Falls Company had constructed a small gas plant, which it operated. Subsequently said company went into a receiver's hands, and the Holyoke Water Power Company, hereinafter referred to as the Holyoke company, was, in 1859, organized with a capital stock of $350,000 to purchase and take over said property of said Hadley Falls Company. The purchase was made, the entire capital of the Holyoke company being paid as the consideration therefor. The purpose of the Holyoke company, as defined in the act creating it, was "of upholding and maintaining the dam across the Connecticut river heretofore constructed by the Hadley Falls Company and one or more locks and canals in connection with the said dam, and of creating and maintaining a water power to be used by said corporation for manufacturing and mechanical purposes, and to be sold or leased to other persons or corporations to be used for like purposes." The charter gave the corporation "full power and authority to purchase, take, hold, receive, sell, lease, and dispose of all or any part of the estate, real, personal, or mixed, with all the water power, water courses, water privileges, dams, canals, rights, easements, and appurtenances thereto pertaining or belonging, or therewith connected, or which have at any time heretofore belonged unto, or been the property of, the said Hadley Falls Company, and any other real estate that may be required for the use of said corporation for the purposes contemplated by this act." The Holyoke company continued the manufacture, sale, and distribution of gas by the usual means and methods, to supply the needs of the growing community which came into existence upon the site of its property, and which in time became the city of Holyoke, without other authority therefor than was contained in those portions of the charter recited until 1873, when special legislative authority was obtained. In 1880 the company was, as required by law of all persons engaged in the generation and sale of electricity, duly authorized to engage in that business by an order of the board of gas commissioners. From that date down to December, 1902, it generated electricity for sale and distribution, erecting and maintaining a plant for that purpose. As the result of proceedings instituted under the provisions of chapter 370, p. 949, of the acts of the legislature of Massachusetts of the year 1891, which are in the main similar to those in force in this state regulating the establishment of gas and electric plants by municipalities within which there are existing public service plants of that character owned by private corporations, the city of Holyoke on December 15, 1902, acquired both the gas and electric plants of the Holyoke company; paying therefor the sum fixed by the commission appointed for that purpose by the court under the provisions of said act. Upon such acquisition the right of the Holyoke company to engage in the business of manufacturing and distributing gas or electricity ceased by virtue of the provisions of said act. The amount so paid by said city to said company was $721,043. By the use of said sum and other moneys of the corporation on hand, which at the time did not exceed $150,000 in amount, the dividend in question, requiring the disbursement of $780,000, was paid. The actual cost to the company of the electric-light plant was $243,776.34. Previous to the declaration of said dividend of 65 per cent the market value of the shares of said company was from $380 to $385 per share. At the time of its declaration the company held real and personal property amounting in value to more than $4,000,000 over and above all of its obligations. At the date of the commencement of this action the market value of the shares of the company, as evidenced by the sale of a few shares of said stock, appeared to be from $315 to $325 per share. All sums derived from the issue of stock have gone into the general treasury, and there become mingled with the other funds of the company. No separation of funds has been made, and it is impossible to trace the funds derived from any one source so as to follow them into any distinct investments. For many years the company has paid regular dividends of 10 per cent per annum. Between February 1, 1899, and January 15, 1901, it paid extra dividends amounting to 90 per cent of the capital stock.

The present contention between those who stand in the relation of life tenants and remaindermen to trust funds invested in stocks presents the oft-recurring question as to the rights of persons occupying those relations to participate in the benefits of a distribution to stockholders of the assets, or some portion of the assets, of the corporation. In the present case a solvent and going corporation, whose capital was undergoing no reduction in amount, declared a dividend payable and paid in cash. Life tenants of stock held in trust claim to be entitled to the dividend payment as income. Remaindermen claim that it should go to augment the capital account of the trust estate. In Minot v. Paine, 99 Mass. 101, 96 Am. Dec. 705, the necessity of some plain and simple rule which in situations like the present, frequently arising, should serve to guide trustees in the discharge of their duties, and cestuis que trust in the determination of their rights, without a resort to harassing and expensive litigation, was expressed, and such a rule formulated. This rule made the character of the dividend the test. Cash dividends, it was said, should be regarded as income, and stock dividends as capital. It was not pretended that this rule, which has been commonly known as the Massachusetts rule, was the ideal rule of reason; nor have the courts of high authority which have given their approval of it ever claimed it to be such, or one which would accomplish exact justice under all circumstances. What has been claimed for it is that its general application—at least if due regard be had for the substance and intent of the transaction—would prove more beneficent in its consequences, and, on the whole, lead to results more closely approximating to what was just and equitable, than would the application of any other rule, or any attempt to go behind the declaration of the dividend to search out and discover the equities of each case according to some theoretical ideal. Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 34 L. ed. 525, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1057; Richardson v. Richardson, 75 Me. 570, 46 Am. Rep. 428; Rand v. Hubbell, 115 Mass. 461, 15 Am. Rep. 121; D'Ooge v. Leeds, 176 Mass. 558, 57 N. E. 1025; Lyman v. Pratt, 183 Mass. 61, 66 N. E. 423. The necessity for a rule which should serve as a guide and protection to trustees in the performance of their duties is apparent. The advantages of one which would make ceaseless litigation, with its attendant harassment and expense, unnecessary, are no less so. The uncertainty and difficulties attending any attempt at arriving at the true equities between parties respectively asserting income and capital interests in the proceeds of a dividend declared are not so readily appreciated. It requires, however, but slight reflection to discover the magnitude of the obstacles to be surmounted, and the impossibility which must oftentimes be met, whereby the judicial search for precise equities necessarily becomes resolved into a speculation and a guess. There exists the ever-present difficulty of tracing financial results to their source, and of distinguishing between what of increased assets rightfully represents profits, and what increase of value to appropriate to capital. Above all, there enters into most situations, to render courts powerless to arrive at any certain results, a controlling factor arising from the discretionary power which directors rightfully exercise to determine at all times, within reasonable limits, the destiny of profits and of accumulated profits represented by surplus. Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 34 L. ed. 525, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1057. Profits may be distributed as earned. They may be, in whole or part, retained and utilized for the corporate advantage. They may be used for a time, and later distributed. They may never be distributed, but permanently used in the business. Whether they will inure to the benefit of stockholders, in the way of a dividend, may ever remain uncertain. Whether, in the ordinary course, they will fall to the lot of the life tenant, as profits declared, or remain to enhance the value of the stock, will depend in part upon the action of the directorate, and in part upon the term of the trust. They, as we shall have occasion to notice later on, can never acquire a status which must remain a fixed and abiding one unless they are formally capitalized. Their future is ever an uncertain one, and none save one who can foretell the action of boards of directors can discover it. The rights of stock are involved in this maze of doubt. Absolute rights there are not. Rights which are superior to those which may at any time be created by corporate management may not exist. In the presence of such conditions, courts must oftentimes find themselves powerless to ascertain and determine rights, since there may be nothing which lies without the domain of conjecture to act upon. The more the matter is studied, the more apparent it becomes that the Maine court, speaking of the Massachusetts rule through Chief Justice Peters, was justified in its expression: "We are satisfied that this can be the only safe, sound, just, and practicable rule, and that any attempt to engraft refined and nice distinctions upon such rule will be productive of much more evil than any good that can come from it." Richardson v. Richardson, 75 Me. 570, 46 Am. Rep. 428. This court has heretofore given its adhesion to the doctrine of Minot v. Paine as the one to be ordinarily applied. Mills v. Britton, 64 Conn. 4, 24 L. R. A. 536, 29 Atl. 231; Brinley v. Grou, 50 Conn. 66, 47 Am. Rep. 618.

69 L. R. A.

An application of this principle would prima facie, at least, quickly resolve the present contention in favor of the life tenants. The trial court, however, has regarded the rule as it has been adopted in this jurisdiction, at least, as a decidedly flexible one. The logical conclusion of the position taken in its exhaustive memorandum of decision, although not stated in precise terms, is that the rule is such a tentative one that it will yield where it appears upon inquiry that justice will not be accomplished by it. Starting with this premise, the court arrived at the conclusion that in this case justice would not be done by its application, and the rule was therefore disregarded. An inquiry was then made into the sources of the funds out of which the dividend was paid, to discover what was conceived to be the true nature of the transaction, and the real equities of the parties claimant. The court thus arrived at three vital conclusions which dictated the judgment as rendered, to wit: (1) That the accepted general rule must yield where it fails to accomplish just and equitable results; (2) that such results would not be reached in this case by its application; and (3) that the results established by the judgment were the just and equitable ones.

Let us first consider the last two of these conclusions, since they furnish the key to the court's action. It is said that the operation of the rule would be inequitable, because it would, under the circumstances, result in the diversion to the life tenants, under the guise of income, of that which of right belongs to the stock, as capital, and therefore is the remainderman's. It is said that the distribution made by the court is equitable, because it prevents that diversion, and gives the remaindermen what is equitably theirs, and that only. The same conception underlies both conclusions. They are, however, reached upon mistaken premises. These mistaken premises arise from a failure to properly distinguish between the different qualities which attach to the various assets of a private corporation, and between the different characters which these assets may assume.

A citation from the memorandum of decision will indicate the nature of the misconception which lies at the foundation of the trial court's argument and position, to wit: "All of the subject-matter of these awards was properly appropriated to the uses of these plants, and hence permanently made a part of the capital of the company. . . . Corporate profits undistributed belong to the corporation. . . . When such profits are expended upon the property of the corporation used in its business, or devoted to the acquisition of new property or to the creation of a new business, these constitute a permanent addition to capital, beyond the recall of the directors. Once capital always capital. It makes no difference whether such augmentation of capital resulted from the proceeds of increase of stock, or from profits appropriated to capital. It is the thing done with the funds which determines. Did it go to the increase or addition to the property of the corporation, and has it become permanently devoted as such to its uses? This is the test." The misconception embodied in this statement was not a new one. It appears in the opinion in Hemenway v. Hemenway, 181 Mass. 406, 63 N. E. 919, from which source the trial court apparently derived it. As that opinion was the utterance of the same court which promulgated the rule in Minot v. Paine, and which has since repeatedly affirmed that rule, its expressions in argument were naturally accepted as authoritative without careful analysis. They will not, however, bear such analysis.

"Capital" is a term which, as applied to private corporations as ordinarily constituted, is used with widely varying significations. In one sense—the strict sense—it is employed to designate specifically the fund, property, or other means contributed, or agreed to be contributed, by the share owners as the financial basis for the prosecution of the business of the corporation; such contribution being made either directly through stock subscriptions, or indirectly through the declaration of stock dividends. As thus used, the term signifies those resources whose dedication to the uses of the corporation is made the foundation for the issuance of certificates of capital stock, and which, as the result of the dedication, become irrevocably devoted to the satisfaction of all the obligations of the corporation. State v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 30 Conn. 290; Bailey v. Clark, 21 Wall. 284, 22 L. ed. 651; Christensen v. Eno, 106 N. Y. 97, 60 Am. Rep. 429, 12 N. E. 648; Iron R. Co. v. Lawrence Furnace Co. 49 Ohio St. 102, 30 N. E. 616; Reid v. Eatontown Mfg. Co. 40 Ga. 103, 2 Am. Rep. 563; Com. v. Charlottesville Perpetual Bldg. & L. Co. 90 Va. 790, 44 Am. St. Rep. 950, 20 S. E. 364; Thomp. Corp. § 1660. Sometimes the term "capital" is used when what is meant to be designated is that portion of the assets of a corporation, regardless of their source, which are utilized for the conduct of the corporate business and for the purpose of deriving therefrom gains and profits. Iowa State Sav. Bank v. Burlington, 98 Iowa, 739, 61 N. W. 851; People ex rel. Lemmon v. Feitner, 56 App. Div. 280, 67 N. Y. Supp. 893; Hemenway v. Hemenway, 181 Mass. 406, 63 N. E. 919. Frequently the term is employed in a still wider sense, as descriptive of all the assets, gross or net, of a corporation, whatever their source, investment, or employment. Security Co. v. Hartford, 61 Conn. 89, 23 Atl. 699; Batterson's Appeal, 72 Conn. 374, 14 Atl. 546; People ex rel. Union Trust Co. v. Coleman, 126 N. Y. 433, 12 L. R. A. 762, 27 N. E. 818; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Weber, 96 Ill. 443; State ex rel. Batz v. Lewis, 118 Wis. 432, 95 N. W. 388.

In Hemenway v. Hemenway, 181 Mass. 406, 63 N. E. 919, the court drew a distinction between those undistributed profits which have been applied to and invested in the increase and improvement of the property used in the business of the corporation, and those profits which may have been set aside for use in the conduct of the business, but not invested in permanent works. The former, it said, was capital; the latter, "floating capital." The former, it said, was as effectually capitalized as they would have been through the declaration of a stock dividend. The trial court accepted this principle as a sound one, and thereon based its argument and conclusions, as witness its language already recited, to wit: "When such profits are expended upon the property of the corporation used in its business, or devoted to the acquisition of new property, or to the creation of a new business, these constitute a permanent addition to capital, beyond the recall of the directors. Once capital always capital." This proposition contains a fundamental error. The quality and incidents of surplus, however invested or employed, are not the same as those of capital, within the strict meaning of that word. Capital, in that sense, constitutes a fund so set apart and devoted to the corporate uses and the security of creditors that the law jealously guards it from the encroachment of directors in the declaration of dividends. It is placed beyond their reach for that purpose, and no way is open to them to return it to the share owners. Its dedication is irrevocable, and it must ever remain a fund held in trust for creditors, unless some judicial or other process authorized by legislation intervene. Of it, it may well be said, "Once capital, always capital." It is not so of undistributed profits or surplus in any form. They may be effectually dedicated to corporate uses through the processes of a stock dividend, but until so dedicated they are not removed from the reach and control of directors. The manner of utilization may be changed, investments altered, permanent property sold and turned into cash, and experimental or other enterprises abandoned, with a realization upon the investments therein, all at the discretion of directors, with no such artificial consequence that the assets thus employed change their character as the result of the process. Investment in permanent works does not, and ought not to, capitalize. Directors can, in their discretion, fairly exercised, withhold profits, and employ them in the conduct or enlargement of the business. By the same right they ought to be able to, and can, withdraw from any action which will enable the assets thus employed to be returned to their original condition, as funds available for distribution to those to whom they might have been originally divided as dividends. Capital of this kind does not bear the perpetual stamp of capital. It simply constitutes a portion of the corporate assets which are within the discretionary control of the directors, which they may use for the corporate advantage in such ways as have the approval of their judgment, or, if that course seem wiser, cease using, and by proper action withdraw from the corporate resources.

It follows that the court's second and third conclusions, in so far as they rest upon the mistaken proposition that undistributed profits which may become invested in permanent works, property, improvements, or acquisitions or business extensions, become, by their very nature, a permanent addition to capital, beyond the recall of directors, and possessing the quality of capital, in the strict sense, are unjustified. There is nothing growing out of the corporate relation, or any of the incidents of corporate estate, which can support the argument which is made to rebut the presumption that, when a solvent, going concern declares a lawful dividend, it is one to be paid out of profits, since capital cannot be impaired. 2 Thomp. Corp. § 2192.

We have thus far pursued the line of argument of the trial court. There is another aspect of the question which possibly requires attention. While invested assets do not become capital in such sense that they thereafter have the quality and incidents of strict capital, it might be suggested that the character of such assets, by their investment in permanent works, improvements, or extensions, becomes such that, as between owners of successive stock interests, they ought, in justice, to be regarded as capital, in the general sense that it should thereafter belong to the capital rather than the income side of those interests. 1 Cook, Corp. § 8. The reason for this is not apparent. Their source is presumptively and for the most part in fact profits. 2 Thomp. Corp. § 2192, and his article on Corporations, 10 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 502. In so far as such is the case, their status as invested surplus has been created by the lawful fiat of directors, through the withholding and appropriation for use of what might have gone out as income. Gib- bons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 34 L. ed. 525, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1057; Bouch v. Sproule, L. R. 12 App. Cas. 385; Pratt v. Pratt, 33 Conn. 446. It would seem fair that its return by the same means to its original status should be as possible as its first transition, and as fair that when it has been transformed back into cash, and a cash dividend declared and paid therefrom, the benefit of that dividend should be dependent upon the final act of the directorate thereon. as upon some arbitrarily chosen intermediate act. Our adopted rule rests upon that proposition. It sees no injustice in its general application, and therefore admits of no relaxation when other conditions are not shown.
69 L. R. A.

There remains to be considered still another aspect of the case: The court finds justification for its conclusions, and counsel for the remainder interests attempt to support the judgment, upon a line of reasoning which differs in form, at least, from those already considered, although it may appear that in its ultimate analysis it rests upon the same fundamental erroneous conception. We have therefore to return to a consideration of the first of the court's conclusions, as we have classified them. The memorandum of decision discloses that the trial court accorded to the rule as adopted in this jurisdiction too much elasticity. We have already had occasion to discuss its importance and beneficent character when reasonably interpreted and applied. If our observations were well made, and the commendations of eminent authorities justified, the conclusion would follow that it was not only a safe and sane one upon occasions, but also a rule which, if used with a proper regard for the substance and intent of the vote of declaration, would be a judicious one for general application, and to which few, if any, exceptions should be admitted. In that spirit and to that effect it has been accepted by this and other courts. We have no occasion to make the academic inquiry as to whether, the rule being interpreted as suggested, any, or what, circumstances would justify a suspension of its operation. Certain it is that it ought not to be, and is not, one which yields whenever an investigation might appear to indicate its failure in a given case to accomplish what might be conceived to be exact justice, upon the basis of some theoretical view of the ultimate rights of persons asserting conflicting successive stock interests. One of the purposes of the rule is to put an end to all such investigations under all ordinary conditions, at least. The prohibition of inquiry naturally and properly extends to all that field of investigation which we have thus far had under consideration in this case.

There remains, however, another aspect of the situation before us, which is relied upon as satisfying the conditions of what is termed an approved exception. As nothing else is pointed out as justifying a departure from the literal enforcement of the rule, we may well confine our discussion to the claim which is made. In Second Universalist Church v. Colegrove, 74 Conn. 83, 49 Atl. 902, we held that, where the assets of a corporation were distributed to the share owners in liquidation, they were, as between life tenants and remaindermen, to be treated as principal or capital, and not income, although the distribution was made in the form of a cash dividend. See also, to the same effect, Gifford v. Thompson, 115 Mass. 478. It is needless to inquire whether or not the principle involved in these cases constitutes a true exception to the general rule, as properly interpreted. Whether it does or not, it is plain that it is a just and sound one. On the behalf of the remaindermen it is contended that this principle is as applicable to partial as to complete liquidations. By "partial liquidations" we understand to be meant proceedings involving the surrender by the corporation of portions of its capital. The contention may, for the purposes of this case, be conceded. But there has been no liquidation, complete or partial, of the Holyoke company, or anything tantamount thereto. The company has withdrawn from certain incidental branches or departments of its business, as it was formerly, in the discretion of its directors, conducted, and converted what had been the investment of some of its assets in those departments into cash. The amount of the company's capital stock after the dividend remained unchanged. It was not only unimpaired, but continued to represent an ownership of net assets amounting to nearly three times the par value of its stock. The shares continued to be worth $300 or more each. The business of the corporation remained the same, in its general character and purposes, and the inception of these proceedings found it a prosperous, going concern,—the same, in all essentials, it was before the city of Holyoke's threatened competition made a change in the scope of its operations an apparently wise act of corporate management. Clearly, there was nothing in the nature of liquidation or a return of capital in the transactions under consideration.

The remaindermen claim that they will be aggrieved if the life tenants are permitted to take this dividend. That must depend upon the view which is taken of their rights and equities. The advocates of judicial investigation for the purpose of ascertaining and establishing in each case the rights of the parties have most commonly and confidently asserted that the rule which alone could lead to exact justice was one which recognized the right of remaindermen to have the capital and those profits which had accumulated prior to the inception of the trust retained in the corpus, and that of life tenants to receive subsequent accumulations. Earp's Appeal, 28 Pa. 368; Smith's Estate, 140 Pa. 344, 23 Am. St. Rep. 237, 21 Atl. 438; 2 Thomp. Corp. § 2196; 2 Cook, Corp. § 552. Even if this rule, which of all rules professes to be most mindful of strict equities, were accepted for application to the present situation, we should look in vain through this record to discover any suggestion that a disposition of this dividend as income would operate to the injury of those asserting the remainder interest in the corpus, which, after the dividend, remained worth three times what it was worth when the trust took effect.

It is conceded that the decision of the case is to be governed by the law of Connecticut. Massachusetts law would lead to the same result.

There is error. The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for the rendition of judgment in accordance with the views herein expressed.

The other Judges concur.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COURT OF APPEALS.

Abraham WOLFF, Appt.,
v.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

(21 App. D. C. 464.)

1. A horse block or stepping stone of ordinary size, placed on the edge of the sidewalk to facilitate access to and egress from carriages in the street, is not an obstruction to the walk, so as to render the municipality liable for injuries caused by a traveler falling over it.

2. A municipal corporation is not liable for injuries caused to a traveler by falling over a horse block on the sidewalk because sufficient light is not main-

NOTE.—As to liability of city for injury caused by rise in sidewalk, see, in this series, Watertown v. Greaves, 56 L. R. A. 865.

As to liability for fall caused by step in sidewalk, see Teagar v. Flemingsburg, 53 L. R. A. 791, with note as to liability of municipal corporations generally for defects in streets.
69 L. R. A.

tained near it to render it visible to passers-by.

(April 7, 1903.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Supreme court in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by obstructions which defendant unlawfully allowed to be upon a sidewalk. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. D. W. Baker and John C. Gittings, for appellant:

This carriage block in question was an unlawful obstruction of the street, and it was the clear duty of the District to see that all sidewalks were free from obstructions of every kind and character.

D. C. Rev. Stat. §§ 222, 225-227, 229; United States v. Cole, 7 Mackey, 504; District of Columbia v. Libbey, 9 App. D. C. 321; Curry v. District of Columbia, 14 App. D. C. 423.

There being an unlawful obstruction in the streets of a municipal government, of which it has knowledge, it is certainly its duty to cause the same to be removed.

Scranton v. Catterson, 94 Pa. 203; Davis v. Austin, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 460, 54 S. W. 927; Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 540, 23 L. ed. 440; District of Columbia v. Woodbury, 136 U. S. 450, 34 L. ed. 472, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 990.

Messrs. Andrew B. Duvall and E. H. Thomas, for appellee:

A pedestrian has no right to assume that the portion of a public sidewalk ordinarily occupied by steps and inner-line projections, or the outer portion commonly occupied by carriage steps and the like, can be passed over with freedom; and it is negligence in him to use such portions of the sidewalk without at least casual observation of their condition.

Howes v. District of Columbia, 2 App. D. C. 188.

The use on the curb line of such a common article or thing as a carriage step was not of itself notice that it was necessarily hazardous or dangerous.

District of Columbia v. Moulton, 182 U. S. 581, 45 L. ed. 1237, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840; Allis v. Columbian University, 8 Mackey, 270; District of Columbia v. Ashton, 14 App. D. C. 579.

The immediate cause of the plaintiff's accident in this case was the reckless speed with which, without looking, he approached the wagon, and not the existence of the carriage step alone.

Swart v. District of Columbia, 17 App. D. C. 412; District of Columbia v. Brewer, 7 App. D. C. 113. Reaffirmed in Mosheuvel v. District of Columbia, 17 App. D. C. 401; 60 L. R. A.

Quimby v. Filter, 62 N. J. L. 766, 42 Atl. 1051.

If one, in passing over a sidewalk, fails to exercise ordinary care, he is not entitled to recover.

Moore v. Richmond, 85 Va. 538, 8 S. E. 387; Dubois v. Kingston, 102 N. Y. 219, 55 Am. Rep. 804, 6 N. E. 273; Robert v. Powell, 168 N. Y. 415, 55 L. R. A. 775, 85 Am. St. Rep. 673, 61 N. E. 699; Vincennes v. Thuis, 28 Ind. App. 523, 63 N. E. 315; District of Columbia v. Moulton, 182 U. S. 582, 45 L. ed. 1237, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840.

A stepping stone upon a sidewalk in front of a house, which does not interfere to an unreasonable extent with the use of the sidewalk, is not an unlawful obstruction, nor a nuisance, nor does it constitute negligence which will render a municipality liable to one who is injured by falling over it.

Howes v. District of Columbia, 2 App. D. C. 188; Dubois v. Kingston, 102 N. Y. 219, 55 Am. Rep. 804, 6 N. E. 273; Robert v. Powell, 168 N. Y. 414, 55 L. R. A. 775, 85 Am. St. Rep. 673, 61 N. E. 699; Cincinnati v. Fleischer, 63 Ohio St. 229, 58 N. E. 568; Macomber v. Taunton, 100 Mass. 255; Rockford v. Tripp, 83 Ill. 247, 25 Am. Rep. 381; Tiesler v. Norwich, 73 Conn. 199, 47 Atl. 161; Vincennes v. Thuis, 28 Ind. App. 523, 63 N. E. 315; Canavan v. Oil City, 183 Pa. 611, 38 Atl. 1096; Horner v. Philadelphia, 194 Pa. 542, 45 Atl. 330; Cushing v. Boston, 124 Mass. 434.

Alvey, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from the supreme court of the District of Columbia. The action was brought by the appellant, Abraham Wolff, against the District of Columbia to recover damages suffered by the plaintiff, occasioned, as alleged, by what is contended to be a nuisance or an unlawful obstruction allowed to exist in C street N. W., in the city of Washington, by the defendant, the municipal corporation of the District of Columbia.

The cause of action, as set forth in the amended declaration of the plaintiff, is stated to be that the defendant, as a municipal corporation, was in duty bound to keep the sidewalks of the streets in the city of Washington free from obstruction, nuisances, or encumbrances, so as to be safe for all travelers thereon, including the plaintiff; and the breach of duty of the defendant, as alleged in the declaration, was, that the defendant wrongfully and negligently allowed "a certain large stone, several inches high above the surface of the sidewalk, usually termed a carriage step, to impede travel and encumber that part of said sidewalk which was opposite to and in front of a certain house known as the Saengerbund Hall, between Third and Four-and-a-half streets on C street northwest," during the night of the 27th day of October, 1895, while said street was enveloped in darkness, without fixing any light or sign at or near said stone, and without placing any watchman or other person to warn plaintiff of its existence, position, and location, and without placing any guard or screen around said stone, by means of which the plaintiff stumbled and tripped against and fell over said stone and was injured, without any neglect on his part, and he claims $25,000 damages.

The defendant pleaded the general-issue plea of not guilty, and the case was tried and resulted in a verdict and judgment for the defendant.

There was considerable proof taken at the trial, both as to the occurrence of the accident, and as reflecting upon the question of contributory negligence of the plaintiff, assuming that it might be shown that there was negligence on the part of defendant. But, in the view that we take of this case, the question of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, in producing the injury complained of, is not an element in the case, and therefore is not a matter for consideration. The carriage block or step over which the plaintiff fell and injured himself is shown to have been of the ordinary size and character, a block of brown stone a little more than 2 feet long, about 15 inches wide, and about 8 inches high from the surface of the pavement, and occupied a position in or at the curb dividing the street from the sidewalk, immediately in front of the door of the Saengerbund building, No. 312 C street N. W., on the south side thereof; and that this block of stone or carriage step had been there from the time the building was erected, many years prior to the time of the accident, and without question by anyone. It was similar in size and character to the one set in the curb in front of the adjoining building, No. 314, and which had been used for many years, according to the testimony in the case. The plaintiff, in coming out of the Saengerbund building, by a quick and rapid gait, and intending to go to the vehicle awaiting him in the street in front of the door of the Saengerbund, stumbled over the carriage block at the curb, and was thrown down, and fractured his leg. He swears that he did not see the carriage block in his way, and that there was not sufficient light to enable him to detect his danger.

At the close of the evidence the court below, being of opinion that there was no case made out for the plaintiff, instructed the jury to render their verdict for the defendant, which was accordingly done, and the 69 L. R. A.

plaintiff excepted; and from the judgment the plaintiff has appealed.

The error assigned is, that the court below committed error in directing the verdict for the defendant.

It is contended by the plaintiff that the carriage block in question was an unlawful obstruction of the sidewalk, and consequently a public nuisance, and that, being so, it was the plain duty of the municipal authorities of the District to see that all sidewalks were kept free from obstruction of every kind and description; and §§ 222, 225, 226, 227, and 229 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia are cited and relied on in support of the proposition.

By § 226, D. C. Rev. Stat., it is provided that "it shall be the duty of the chief of engineers, in charge of the public buildings and grounds, to cause obstructions of every kind to be removed from such streets, avenues, and sidewalks in the city of Washington as have been, or may be, improved, in whole or in part, by the United States, and to keep the same, at all times, free from obstructions." And by § 229 it is provided that, "if any person shall place any obstruction on the streets, avenues, or sidewalks so improved by the United States, such persons shall pay the costs of removing the same, and shall be subject to a penalty of $10, to be recovered as other debts are recovered in said District, for each and every day the obstruction may remain after the chief of engineers shall have given notice for its removal."

Without stopping to inquire what duty these sections of the Revised Statutes imposed, if any, upon the commissioners of the District, the question here presented is, whether an ordinary carriage block or step, such as we have in this case, and such as has been in use from time immemorial, as an incident or appurtenant of convenience, if not of necessity, to places of business and residences in cities, constitutes an obstruction within the meaning of the sections of the statute quoted. It is clear, the provisions of the statute do not apply to many things that may, in a sense, be regarded as obstructions to the sidewalks of a city. They certainly do not apply to the shade trees growing along the sidewalks, nor to lamp posts, water hydrants, awning posts, telegraph or telephone poles, that we find everywhere, in the city, along the sidewalks. All these things may be regarded, in a particular sense, as obstructions, but they are not such within the meaning of the statute. They are objects allowed and authorized, by immemorial custom and usage, as being necessary to the health, convenience, protection, and enjoyment of the homes and lives of the inhabitants of the city. Where these objects of convenience and comfort have been subject to proper regulation, as they always are and should be, they have never been regarded as nuisances, either public or private. And, in the case of a carriage step or block, it is of such reasonable convenience and such a necessary appurtenant to dwellings and places of business on the streets of a city that the right to maintain it, of a proper size and in a proper position, has seldom been attempted to be questioned. The legal existence of carriage steps or blocks was fully recognized in this city long before the occurrence of the accident, the subject of the present action, and they have been regulated by both the building and police regulations prescribed by municipal authority. Their legal existence has been explicitly recognized by this court in the case of Hovcs v. District of Columbia, 2 App. D. C. 188, and that case is in accordance with decisions of the highest authority elsewhere.

In the case of Dubois v. Kingston, 102 N. Y. 219, 55 Am. Rep. 804, 6 N. E. 273, it was the unanimous opinion of the court of appeals of New York that a stepping stone in the front of a public building, just inside the curb of the sidewalk, was not such an obstruction as would render a city liable for an injury sustained by a person falling over it, even though others had been previously injured by falling over the step. It appeared that the plaintiff was injured while running to a fire, which appeared to be in the direction of his own house, in the city of Kingston, by falling over a stepping stone lying in the sidewalk in one of the streets of the city. The stone was 3 feet 4 inches in length, 20 inches wide, and 14 inches high. It lay lengthwise with the curb and on the side thereof, in front of the building containing the postoffice, a music hall, and several stores. In the opinion, the court said: "Actions against municipal corporations for injuries sustained by individuals while using or passing along its streets are founded upon the ground of negligence of its officers in the performance of their official duties, and cannot be maintained without evidence showing that they have been derelict in this respect, by means of which the injury has been sustained. We think there was no such proof upon the trial of this action. The stepping stone over which the plaintiff fell and was injured was not of unusual size or of an improper construction, nor was it located at an improper place. It was placed in a position on the sidewalk most convenient for persons who should alight from a wagon or carriage or get into the same from the sidewalk, and thus it was a means of accommodation to those who had business at the postoffice, or in the building in front of which it was located. It was not any more exposed than was essential for its proper and useful location." And in the conclusion of the opinion it was said: "It would be extending the rule of the liability of municipal corporations far greater than has yet been done in any decided case, to hold that they are liable for assenting to the placing of stepping stones on the edge of sidewalks in front of hotels, stores, public buildings, and private residences. The courts have gone quite far in holding such corporations to a very strict responsibility in reference to accidents caused by a failure of their officers to keep the streets and sidewalks in a proper and safe condition; but it would be adding to the corporate liability beyond reasonable limits to hold that stepping stones, which are almost a necessity in providing for the interest, comfort, and convenience of the public in the maintenance of walks, avenues, and streets, constitute a nuisance or obstruction, and that [municipal] corporations are liable for damages by reason of accidents caused thereby."

In the more recent case of Robert v. Powell, 168 N. Y. 414, 55 L. R. A. 775, 85 Am. St. Rep. 673, 61 N. E. 699, the same principle is very fully laid down. In this latter case the action was brought against the owner of the dwelling in front of which the carriage block was placed. It was held by the unanimous opinion of the court that the block, being of an ordinary size, and placed in the usual position at the curb, was not an unlawful obstruction of the sidewalk, and the plaintiff could not recover for injuries received by stumbling over the step. In that case, on the night of the accident, the plaintiff, while walking rapidly on Fifty-eighth street, crossed the street diagonally from the defendant's house, in order to take a cab, and stumbled over a stepping stone or carriage block maintained by the defendant in front of her residence. The stone over which the plaintiff fell was 18 inches high, 13 inches long, and 16 inches wide. In the opinion the court said: "The stepping stone in this case, located upon the sidewalk in front of a private house, was a reasonable and necessary use of the street, not only for the convenience of the owner of the house, but for other persons who desired to visit or enter the house for business or other lawful purpose. It did not interfere in the least with the use of the roadway or bed of the street; nor did it interfere to any appreciable or unreasonable extent with the use of the sidewalk. There were 8 feet of a clear, open space upon the sidewalk for the use of travelers, and the fact that the plaintiff, while hurrying in the nighttime to take a cab, stumbled over the stone, when the place was well lighted and the object plainly visible, does not prove, or tend to prove, that the defendant was guilty of any wrong or breach of duty in maintaining the stepping stone in front of her house. It is true that the plaintiff was injured, but that was the result of an accident, due, possibly, to his own fault, but at all events not to any fault on the part of the defendant, or to any unlawful obstruction by the defendant of the street. The question involved in the case is, we think, well settled by authority. Dubois v. Kingston, 102 N. Y. 213, 55 Am. Rep. 804, 6 N. E. 273; Dougherty v. Horseheads, 159 N. Y. 154, 53 N. E. 799. While it is said that these cases involved only the question of liability on the part of a municipality for negligence, they also decided that the existence of objects of this character in the streets is lawful. If the city could not be held liable for permitting them to be there after notice, neither can the defendant be held liable for placing them there. The question involved in this class of cases is whether the object complained of is usual, reasonable, or necessary in the use of the street by the owner of the premises, or anyone else."

There are other courts than those of New York that have maintained the same principle. Cincinnati v. Fleischer, 63 Ohio St. 229, 58 N. E. 568; Macomber v. Taunton, 100 Mass. 255; Cushing v. Boston, 124 Mass. 434; Horner v. Philadelphia, 194 Pa. 542, 45 Atl. 330.

Upon general principle, as well as upon authority, we are clearly of opinion the carriage block or stepping stone in question was not an unlawful obstruction of the street or sidewalk, and that the defendant is not liable for the injury received by the plaintiff in stumbling and falling over the stone.

But the plaintiff contends that, even conceding that the carriage block in question was not an unlawful obstruction, and did not constitute a public nuisance, yet the street in that particular section was defectively and insufficiently lighted, and, because of such defective and insufficient lighting of the street and sidewalk, the plaintiff ran against and stumbled over the block or stepping stone and was injured, and that the defendant corporation is liable for such injury, because of the neglect to properly light and keep lighted the street and sidewalk where the accident occurred. But, whatever insufficiency may have existed in the light upon the occasion of the accident (if any insufficiency did in fact exist), such an action as the present is not the remedy for the consequences of such defect. Money is annually appropriated by Congress for lighting the streets of the city; but whether such appropriation be sufficient or insufficient, the courts cannot determine: nor can they determine how the lights shall be distributed through the city; or how any particular street or section of a street shall be lighted,—whether by few or many lights, or whether by gas or electricity. These are matters that are confided exclusively to the judgment and discretion of the municipal authorities.

Finding no error in the ruling of the court below directing the verdict for the defendant, we must affirm the judgment, and it is so ordered.

Judgment affirmed.

Affirmed by Supreme Court of United States January 3, 1905.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

Hattie H. MORRISON, Plff. in Err.,
v.

James L. DICKEY.

(..... Ga.)

"1. Mutual confidence being the foundation of the partnership relation, the mere fact that a member of a partnership is not the owner of property which he has embarked in the partnership enterprise—the same belonging to a third person, who has consented that it may be so used for his benefit, but whose interest is not disclosed to the other member of the partnership—does not cause a partnership relation to arise between the other partner and the concealed principal of his copartner.

2. A partner may make an agreement with a third person for a division of the profits coming to him from the partnership enterprise, and, if the character of the agreement is such as to disclose the essentials necessary to a partnership, a subpartnership is thereby formed between the partner and the third person; but such person does not become a member of the first partnership, nor is he liable for the debts of that partnership.

3. Husband and wife may, in this state,

*Headnotes by COBB, J.

NOTE.—As to business partnership between husband and wife, see also, in this series, Glickerson-Sloss Commission Co. v. Salinger, 16 L. R. A. 526, and note; Fuller & F. Co. v. McHenry, 18 L. R. A. 512; Vall v. Winterstein, 18 L. R. A. 515; Haggett v. Hurley, 41 L. R. A. 362; and Hocaglin v. Henderson, 61 L. R. A. 756. 69 L. R. A.

lawfully transact business as copartners, and therefore there may be a subpartnership between a husband and wife in reference to the profits of a business in which the husband is a partner.

4. In a subpartnership of the character above referred to, where the members are husband and wife, a gift by the wife to the husband of a portion of her interest in the profits which the husband would derive from the first partnership is valid; and the use by him, or by his copartner, of such profits to discharge a debt of the husband would not render his partner liable to the wife on account of having used her money for the purpose of paying her husband's debt.
5. The verdict for the defendant was demanded by the evidence, and any errors that may have been made by the judge in his instructions to the jury did not require the granting of a new trial.

(March 7, 1905.)

ERROR to the City Court of Atlanta to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover money alleged to have been wrongfully appropriated by defendant to the payment of a debt of plaintiff's husband. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. R. Hammond, for plaintiff in error:

The debt was that of the husband, and his alone, both morally and legally; and plaintiff is absolutely disqualified by the statute from making any contract to assume it or pay it.

Code, § 2488.

The mere fact that Mr. Morrison was the agent of his wife in the conduct of her business, he being in possession of the property and the apparent owner, would not make Dickey her partner.

2 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. p. 1190, ¶ 635.

Partnership, as between the partners, is a contractual relationship, and cannot arise in any other way, though a liability as to third parties may arise, by estoppel, on the part of one who is not a partner.

Ibid.; Civil Code, § 2626. See also § 2629; Huggins v. Huggins, 117 Ga. 151, 43 S. E. 759.

The law of concealed agency, which makes the principal liable, when discovered, at the election of the other party, operates alone for the protection of the other party to the contract.

Williams v. Merle, 11 Wend. 80, 25 Am. Dec. 605; Ga. Civ. Code, §§ 3024, 3539; Maddox v. Wilson, 91 Ga. 40, 16 S. E. 213; Rosser v. Darden, 82 Ga. 219, 14 Am. St. Rep. 152, 7 S. E. 919.

The mere fact of the purchase of this machine by Morrison, even though it may have been intended for use in connection with his wife's business, would not render her liable for it.

Blount v. Dugger, 115 Ga. 109, 41 S. E. 270.

Messrs. Felder & Rountree, for defendant in error:

It is not material that the contract of purchase was signed "J. L. Dickey, President, and J. J. Morrison." The partners were liable, at least inter se, for the debt.

Maddox v. Wilson, 91 Ga. 40, 16 S. E. 213; Lenney v. Finley, 118 Ga. 718, 45 S. E. 593.

Mrs. Morrison was originally liable for the debt. She was liable upon the principle of ratification and estoppel.

Code, §§ 2626, 5150; Murray v. Walker, 44 Ga. 58.

A party who has received the benefit of a contract made by a husband concerning property owned by the wife cannot resist performance on the ground of the wife's coverture and the absence of her statutory assent to the contract.

Texas & St. L. R. Co. v. Robards, 60 Tex. 545, 48 Am. Rep. 268; Hathaway v. Payne, 34 N. Y. 92; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Flanagan, 113 Ind. 488, 3 Am. St. Rep. 674, 14 N. E. 370.

The creation of a partnership by an agent without authority may be ratified and made valid by the principal, notwithstanding that intervening rights are thereby cut off, where such rights rest on an inferior equity to that of the principal.

Williams v. Butler, 35 Ill. 544.

Cobb, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action by Mrs. Morrison against Dickey to recover a sum of money which she alleged had been wrongfully appropriated by Dickey to the payment of her husband's debt. The jury found in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff assigns error upon the overruling of her motion for a new trial.

Mrs. Morrison was the owner of a business which was conducted by her husband in his name. Her ownership was not disclosed to the world, nor was there anything to indicate to those who dealt with Morrison that he was not the owner of the business. Dickey, while ignorant of Mrs. Morrison's ownership, bought from Morrison a half interest in the business. This sale was made, if not with the approval, certainly without the disapproval, of Mrs. Morrison. Morrison and Dickey purchased a machine, which, if not necessary, was adapted to and useful in the business they were carrying on, and was actually used in that business. The contract for the purchase price was signed, not by the partnership, but by Morand Dickey individually. Suit was brought upon this contract, and judgment obtained against Morrison and Dickey as individual joint promisors. Up to this point it seems that Dickey was still in ignorance of the fact that the business into which he had been admitted as a partner with Morrison was in reality the business of Morrison's wife, but this fact was subsequently disclosed to him. Dickey, having ascertained that Mrs. Morrison was the real owner of the business, negotiated with her for the purchase of her remaining one-half interest; and an agreement was reached by which Mrs. Morrison sold this interest to Dickey for the sum of $2,500, $1,000 of which was to be paid in cash. The stipulation in the contract with reference to the remaining $1,500 was in the following words: "The balance of the amount, being fifteen hundred dollars, I hereby give and convey to him, my said husband, J. J. Morrison, for the affection I have for him, together with some compensation for his long service in it. Of course he can do as he pleases with that, provided I get one thousand dollars or its equivalent." Dickey assumed all debts and liabilities of the firm. Morrison agreed with Dickey that the $1,500 above referred to should be left in the latter's hands, to be appropriated first to the payment of one half of the judgment against Dickey and Morrison above referred to, and the remainder, so far as necessary, to the payment of one half of the other debts of the firm. Dickey subsequently paid the balance due on the judgment, and it is claimed by Mrs. Morrison that this payment was made from the proceeds of the business in which her money had been placed by her husband, and therefore that one half of this money paid on this judgment was hers, and should have been paid to her, and the payment of it by Dickey on her husband's debt was illegal, and she was entitled to recover the amount from him; it being also claimed that the arrangement by which $1,500 of the purchase money of her remaining interest in the business should be left in the hands of her husband, and the subsequent arrangement between Dickey and her husband that this sum should be appropriated in part to the payment of the judgment, was merely a scheme or device to use her money for the purpose of paying her husband's debt. No partnership relation existed between Mrs. Morrison and Dickey prior to the time that he knew that the business was owned by her. The partnership up to that time was one composed of Dickey and Morrison. The relation created by a partnership agreement is one founded so essentially upon mutual confidence that there can be no such thing in the law as a partnership between persons unless the persons are known to each other, and each has an opportunity to determine whether that relation shall be formed between them. Partnership is founded upon agreement and consent, and there can be no consent to the formation of a partnership with a person who is not known. 1 Bates, Partn. § 158; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 15. The relation which existed between Morrison and his wife after Dickey had been admitted as a partner into the business carried on by Morrison was in the nature of a subpartnership, which made Morrison and his wife partners as between themselves; and as such they assumed all of the responsibilities that would be incident to a partnership created between two persons, where one furnished the capital, and the other the skill and labor, necessary in carrying out the enterprise. 1 Bates, Partn. §§ 164, 169. How profits between themselves as members of this subpartnership would be divided would be immaterial, and therefore the mere fact that Mrs. Morrison was to receive the entire profits of the business thus carried on in her husband's name for her benefit would not deprive the business relationship between them of the essential elements of a subpartnership. It is now the settled law of this state that husband and wife may lawfully engage in business as partners. Ellis v. Mills, 99 Ga. 490, 27 S. E. 740. But this relation existing between Morrison and his wife as to each other would not make the wife a partner in the business carried on by Dickey and Morrison, nor would she be liable for the debts of that partnership; but she would be liable for any debts which might be considered as debts of the subpartnership existing between herself and her husband. 1 Bates, Partn. §§ 168, 169; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 17. Mrs. Morrison therefore could not have been held bound on the contract for the purchase of the machine above referred to, as this purchase was made before the fact of her interest in the business came to the knowledge of Dickey, and therefore before there could have been, in law, any partnership relation existing between them. But Morrison was bound, not only by virtue of the partnership relation existing between himself and Dickey, but by the express terms of the contract itself. When Dickey discovered that Mrs. Morrison was the real owner of the business which he had formerly carried on as a partner of her husband, he had a right to deal with her as such owner, by either admitting her into the partnership, or by purchasing from her her interest therein. The contract, therefore, between Dickey and Mrs. Morrison, by which he purchased her remaining one-half interest in the business, was valid and lawful, and after this purchase he became the owner of the entire business. It was lawful for him to pay her $1,000, and agree to pay her $1,500 in the future, and it was also lawful for her to make a gift of the latter amount to her husband. This is the legal effect of the contract upon its face, and, if the gift became complete, it was immaterial for what purposes her husband used the money which was the subject of the gift. He might use it for the purpose of paying his debts, and the subsequent agreement between him and Dickey that a portion of the money given to him should be applied by Dickey to the judgment against Morrison and himself was a transaction free from legal infirmity. Morrison would then be paying his own debt with his own money, and not with the money of his wife. In addition to this, while Mrs. Morrison was not at all bound by the judgment against Morrison and Dickey, and not in any way liable upon the contract which was the foundation of that judgment, this liability of Morrison and Dickey was one of the liabilities of the partnership between them; and, when Mrs. Morrison saw fit to disclose her ownership of the business, and Dickey saw proper to recognize her as a partner, she then took her position for the first time as a partner in the business with Dickey, and she then became liable, upon an accounting as to the affairs of the partnership, to account to her partner for all claims or demands which, as between the partners, would be lawful charges against the partnership business; and, if the partnership had gone into liquidation, there would have been, in an accounting between the partners, no legal obstacle in the way of Dickey insisting that the money expended for the machine should be treated, as between him and Mrs. Morrison, as a liability of the firm, and one for which she should account for one half. This is true notwithstanding the fact that at the time the machine was purchased, when her ownership of the business was not known to Dickey, she gave her husband special instructions not to purchase the machine; it appearing that the machine was actually purchased and used in carrying on the business of the partnership. Take still another view of the matter. The subpartnership, or relation in the nature thereof, existing between Mrs. Morrison and her husband, rendered her liable to account to her husband for all legitimate and necessary expenses incurred in realizing, or attempting to realize, profits from the partnership between him and Dickey; and, if the purchase of the machine was necessary or proper for the conduct of the business, and was actually used in the business, before Mrs. Morrison could demand from her husband the profits of the 69 L. R. A.

business she would have to account to him for the amount for which he rendered himself liable on account of such purchase. Her protest against its purchase would not avail her as an excuse for not so accounting, if the profits claimed by her were the result of the business in which the machine had been actually used.

So that it seems to us that, under any view of the law and facts of the case, no other legal judgment could have been rendered than one in favor of the defendant. There is nothing in the case to authorize a finding that the transaction was a mere scheme or device to use Mrs. Morrison's money for the purpose of paying her husband's debt. It was either the use of her money to pay a liability which Dickey would have a right to claim against her when she admitted her ownership, and accepted position as a partner with him, or it was a payment by Morrison of his debt with his money, title to which he had derived by a voluntary gift from his wife, or the payment of a sum which Mrs. Morrison would have been bound to pay in an accounting with her husband. While the instructions of the judge are not at all in accord with some of the principles above laid down, still, under the undisputed facts of the case, the verdict for the defendants was demanded, and any errors committed in charging the jury were harmless.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

EMPLOYING PRINTERS' CLUB et al.,
Plffs. in Err.,
v.

DOCTOR BLOSSER COMPANY.

(..... Ga.)

- *1. A combination of two or more persons to injure one in his trade by inducing his employees to break their contract with him, or to decline to longer continue in his employment, is, if it results in damage, actionable.
- *2. A former member of an illegal combination, whose connection with it was severed before the filing of the suit, will not be denied the protection of a court of equity

*Headnotes by EVANS, J.

NOTE.—As to conspiracy by trade union to procure discharge of nonunion men, see, in this series, Flaccus v. Smith, 54 L. R. A. 640, and Erdman v. Mitchell, 63 L. R. A. 534.

As to boycott or conspiracies by trade unions or strikers generally, see Casey v. Cincinnati Typographical Union, No. 3, 12 L. R. A. 193, and note; Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Penn- against an illegal act of such combination because of his previous connection therewith.

3. The malicious procurement of a breach of contract of employment resulting in damage, where the procurement was during the subsistence of the contract, is an actionable wrong.

4. A court of equity will interpose by injunction to prevent the several members of an illegal combination from enforcing an illegal agreement to the hurt and injury of one engaged in competitive business.

(March 25, 1905.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Fulton County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enjoin defendants from interfering with plaintiff's employees. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Smith & Wright, for plaintiffs in error:

Where parties are concerned in illegal agreements or transactions, whether they are mala prohibita, or mala in se, courts of equity, following the rule of law as to participation in crime, will not grant relief to either party in accordance with the maxim, in pari delicto, etc.

Harrington v. Bigelow, 11 Paige, 349; Warburton v. Aken, 1 McLean, 460, Fed. Cas. No. 17,143; Atwood v. Fisk, 101 Mass. 363, 100 Am. Dec. 124; Swartz v. Gillett, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 207; Davies v. London & Provincial Marine Ins. Co. L. R. 8 Ch. Div. 469; Bromley v. Smith, 2 Hill, 517; Vanduyck v. Hewitt, 1 East, 96; Hewson v. Hancock, 8 T. R. 575.

When the scheme is malum in se, and the parties to it are in pari delicto, the law refuses to aid either of them against the other, but leaves them where they have placed themselves by their own act.

Thomas v. Richmond, 12 Wall. 349, 20 L. ed. 453; Smith v. Hubbs, 10 Me. 71; Schermerhorn v. Talman, 14 N. Y. 94; Knowlton v. Congress & E. Spring Co. 57 N. Y. 518; Vellis v. Clark, 20 Wend. 24; Smith, Contr. 3d Am. ed. 187; Burt v. Place, 6 Cow. 431; LeWarne v. Meyer, 38 Fed. 191; Keel v. Larkin, 83 Ala. 146, 3 Am. St. Rep. 702, 3 So. 296.

Blosser is bound, as a member of the club, by its rules; and he is bound by the decision on complaint. He is also bound to have the remedy of arbitration exhausted before appealing to the law.

National Protective Asso. v. Cumming, 170 N. Y. 321, 58 L. R. A. 135, 88 Am. St. Rep. 648, 63 N. E. 309; Parks v. Andrews, 56 Hun, 393, 10 N. Y. Supp. 344.

The plaintiffs in error and the labor unions had a legal right to agree and act in harmony with each other, and they had a perfect right to make it a part of this agreement, and stipulate that the members of the unions should not work for any printer in Atlanta except the parties to this agreement.

Willis v. Muscogee Mfg. Co. 120 Ga. 597, 48 S. E. 177; National Protective Asso. v. Cumming, 170 N. Y. 321, 58 L. R. A. 135, 88 Am. St. Rep. 648, 63 N. E. 369.

Messrs. Kontz & Austin and Howard Van Epps, for defendant in error:

The case discloses an illegal combination conducting its operations squarely in the teeth of the law.

Brown v. Jacobs' Pharmacy Co. 115 Ga. 429, 57 L. R. A. 547, 90 Am. St. Rep. 126, 41 S. E. 553; Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555.

Defendant in error was not in pari delicto.

Whenever the plaintiff can make out his case without invoking the illegal contract to his aid, he is entitled to recover.

Equitable Loan & Secur. Co. v. Waring, 117 Ga. 633, 62 L. R. A. 93, 97 Am. St. Rep. 177, 44 S. E. 320; Civil Code. § 3937; Ingram v. Mitchell, 30 Ga. 547; Clarke v. Brown, 77 Ga. 606, 4 Am. St. Rep. 98; Holleman v. Bradley Fertilizer Co. 106 Ga. 163, 32 S. E. 83; Raleigh & G. R. Co. v. Swanson, 102 Ga. 761, 39 L. R. A. 275, 28 S. E. 601.

The club could not enforce against defendant in error the rules and regulations of its illegal constitution and by-laws.

Ertz v. Produce Exchange, 82 Minn. 173, 51 L. R. A. 825, 83 Am. St. Rep. 419, 84 N. W. 743; Martell v. White, 185 Mass. 255, 64 L. R. A. 260, 102 Am. St. Rep. 341, 69 N. E. 1085; Boutwell v. Marr, 71 Vt. 1, 43 L. R. A. 803, 76 Am. St. Rep. 746, 42 Atl. 607.

If one maliciously interferes in a contract between two parties, and induces one of them to break that contract, to the injury of the other, the party injured can maintain an action against the wrongdoer.

Pennsylvania Co. 19 L. R. A. 395; Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co. 19 L. R. A. 387; Waterhouse v. Comer, 19 L. R. A. 403; Our D'Alene Consol. Min. Co. v. Miners' Union, 19 L. R. A. 382; Lucke v. Clothing Cutters' & T. Assembly No. 7,507 K. of L. 19 L. R. A. 408; Macaulay Bros. v. Tierney, 37 L. R. A. 455; Beck v. Railway Teamsters' Protective Union, 42 L. R. A. 407; Marx Hass J. Clothing Co. v. Watson, 56 L. R. A. 951; and 59 L. R. A.

Gray v. Building Trades Council, 63 L. R. A. 753.

As to liability for inducing breach of contract generally, see, in this series, Boysen v. Thorn, 21 L. R. A. 233, and note; Raycroft v. Tayntor, 33 L. R. A. 225; Gore v. Condon, 40 L. R. A. 382; Doremus v. Hennessy, 43 L. R. A. 797; West Virginia Transp. Co. v. Standard Oil Co. 56 L. R. A. 804; and Raymond v. Yarrington, 62 L. R. A. 962.

Angle v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 13, 38 L. ed. 62, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Lumley v. Gye, 2 El. & Bl. 216; Bigelow, Torts, 1st ed. p. 108; Jones v. Blocker, 43 Ga. 331; Salter v. Howard, 43 Ga. 601; Smith v. Goodman, 75 Ga. 198; Bixby v. Dunlap, 56 N. H. 456, 22 Am. Rep. 475; Huff v. Watkins, 15 S. C. 82, 40 Am. Rep. 680; Daniel v. Swarengen, 6 S. C. N. S. 297, 24 Am. Rep. 471; Haskins v. Royster, 70 N. C. 601, 16 Am. Rep. 780; Hewitt v. Ontario Copper Lightning Rod Co. 44 U. C. Q. B. 287.

It is only necessary that the relation of master and servant exist. It matters not whether the contract is valid or not, or whether the employee is employed at will or for a definite period of time.

16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 1111, note 8, 1114, note 8; Webb's Pollock, Torts, Am. ed. pp. 278, 279; Gunter v. Astor, 4 J. B. Moore, 12, 21 Revised Rep. 733; Moran v. Dunphy, 177 Mass. 485, 52 L. R. A. 115, 83 Am. St. Rep. 289, 59 N. E. 125; Noice v. Brown, 39 N. J. L. 569; Haskins v. Royster, 70 N. C. 611, 16 Am. Rep. 780; Chiple v. Atkinson, 23 Fla. 206, 11 Am. St. Rep. 367, 1 So. 934; Salter v. Howard, 43 Ga. 601; Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555; Benton v. Pratt, 2 Wend. 385, 20 Am. Dec. 623.

Lumley v. Gye is now the law of England.

Quinn v. Leathem [1901] A. C. 495; Read v. Friendly Soc. [1902] 2 K. B. 738; Bowen v. Hall, L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 333.

The doctrine is generally recognized in America.

Ames, Lead. Cas. on Torts, pp. 608, 612; Heaton Peninsular Button-Fastener Co. v. Dick, 55 Fed. 23, 52 Fed. 667; Lally v. Cantwell, 30 Mo. App. 524.

As respects enticing away servants, the authorities all seem to agree that a right of action lies.

Read v. Friendly Soc. [1902] 2 K. B. 732; Temperton v. Russell [1893] 1 Q. B. 715; Bowen v. Hall, L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 333; Angle v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 55, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Moran v. Dunphy, 177 Mass. 485, 52 L. R. A. 115, 83 Am. St. Rep. 289, 59 N. E. 125; Carew v. Rutherford, 106 Mass. 1, 8 Am. Rep. 287; Plant v. Woods, 176 Mass. 492, 51 L. R. A. 339, 79 Am. St. Rep. 330, 57 N. E. 1011; Doremus v. Hennessy, 176 Ill. 608, 43 L. R. A. 797, 68 Am. St. Rep. 203, 52 N. E. 924, 54 N. E. 524; Chiple v. Atkinson, 23 Fla. 206, 11 Am. St. Rep. 367, 1 So. 934; Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. McKenna, 30 Fed. 48; Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555; Rogers v. Evarts, 17 N. Y. Supp. 264; State v. Stewart, 59 Vt. 273, 59 Am. Rep. 710, 69 L. R. A.

9 Atl. 559; Curran v. Galen, 2 Misc. 553, 22 N. Y. Supp. 826; Sherry v. Perkins, 147 Mass. 212, 9 Am. St. Rep. 689, 17 N. E. 307; Van Horn v. Van Horn, 52 N. J. L. 284, 10 L. R. A. 184, 20 Atl. 485; Hopkins v. Oxley Stave Co. 28 C. C. A. 99, 49 U. S. App. 709, 83 Fed. 912; State v. Glidden, 55 Conn. 46, 3 Am. St. Rep. 23, 8 Atl. 890; Delz v. Winfree, 80 Tex. 400, 26 Am. St. Rep. 755, 16 S. W. 111; Thomas v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 788, 62 Fed. 803; Crump v. Com. 84 Va. 927, 10 Am. St. Rep. 895, 6 S. E. 620.

Conspiracies to induce the business of another by inducing employees or others under contract to quit work and break contracts, and by otherwise maliciously interfering, are unlawful and actionable.

Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co. 19 L. R. A. 387, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 522, 54 Fed. 730; Murray v. McGarrigle, 69 Wis. 483, 34 N. W. 522; Barr v. Essex Trades Council, 53 N. J. Eq. 101, 30 Atl. 881; State v. Dyer, 67 Vt. 690, 32 Atl. 814; Cour D'Alene Consol. Min. Co. v. Miners' Union, 19 L. R. A. 382, 51 Fed. 260; O'Neil v. Behanna, 182 Pa. 236, 38 L. R. A. 382, 61 Am. St. Rep. 702, 37 Atl. 843; Jones v. Stanly, 76 N. C. 355; Re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 39 L. ed. 1092, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900; Boyson v. Thorn, 21 L. R. A. 233, note, 98 Cal. 578, 33 Pac. 492; Wabash R. Co. v. Hannan, 56 Cent. L. J. 314, note; Walsh v. Master Plumbers' Assn. (Mo.) 56 Cent. L. J. 253, note; 1 Jaggard, Torts, §§ 204-207; 2 Addison, Torts, pp. 739 et seq.

Contracts in restraint of competition and trade are void and against the policy of this state.

Brown v. Jacobs' Pharmacy Co. 115 Ga. 429, 57 L. R. A. 547, 90 Am. St. Rep. 126, 41 S. E. 553; Rakestraw v. Lanier, 104 Ga. 188, 69 Am. St. Rep. 154, 30 S. E. 735; Atlanta v. Stein, 111 Ga. 789, 51 L. R. A. 335, 36 S. E. 932; United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. 46 L. R. A. 122, 29 C. C. A. 141, 54 U. S. App. 723, 85 Fed. 271; Bailey v. Master Plumbers' Assn. 102 Tenn. 99, 46 L. R. A. 561, 52 S. W. 853; People v. Sheldon, 139 N. Y. 251, 23 L. R. A. 221, 36 Am. St. Rep. 690, 34 N. E. 785; Anti-monopoly Legislation from the Days of Elizabeth to the Anti-Trust Act of 1890, 55 Cent. L. J. 144; United States v. Northern Securities Co. 120 Fed. 721; Jackson v. Stanfield, 137 Ind. 592, 23 L. R. A. 588, 36 N. E. 345, 37 N. E. 14; Gregory v. Brunswick, 6 Mann. & G. 205.

Any combination the object of which is to attempt by force, or threats, or intimidation, to control an employer in the determination as to whom he will employ or the wages he will pay is an unlawful conspiracy.

Eddy, Combinations, p. 506: Brown v. Jacobs' Pharmacy Co. 115 Ga. 429, 57 L. R. A. 547, 90 Am. St. Rep. 126, 41 S. E. 553.

Evans, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Doctor Blosser Company, a corporation, brought an action against a number of printing concerns using the club or trade name of the "Employing Printers' Club of Atlanta," and composed of individuals, firms, and corporations engaged in the book and job printing trade in the city of Atlanta, and whose names are set out in the record, asking an injunction and praying damages. The court granted the injunction, and exception is taken to this order. On the interlocutory hearing the defendants urged by demurrer the insufficiency of the facts pleaded to authorize the relief prayed. Notwithstanding the demurrer admitted the truth of all the facts which were well-pleaded, the plaintiff submitted proof tending to sustain all the essential allegations.

1-3. The complaint is that the defendants formed a combination among the employing printers to control and fix the price of printing done in the city of Atlanta, and, because the plaintiff refused to affiliate with the combination, they wrongfully interfered with the plaintiff's business, and maliciously induced its employees to break their contracts with it, and refuse to continue in its employment, to its injury and damage. A combination of individuals engaged in a particular line of business to compel one engaged in a similar business to sell his product at prices fixed by it is contrary to public policy, and void; and the members of such a combination, individually, and collectively, may, by appropriate injunction, be restrained from wrongfully interfering with the business of the one who is not a member of the combination. This principle is laid down in the well-considered case of Brown v. Jacobs' Pharmacy Co. 115 Ga. 429, 57 L. R. A. 547, 90 Am. St. Rep. 126, 41 S. E. 553, is supported both by reason and authority, and its application to the case in hand is readily apparent.

The facts alleged in the petition were as follows: The plaintiff was engaged in the city of Atlanta in the general business of a printer for the public, enjoying a large trade and doing a prosperous business. The defendants were also engaged in the printing business, and formed a combination or trust, called the "Employing Printers' Club of Atlanta, Georgia." This combination embraced nearly the entire printing and publishing fraternity of Atlanta except the newspapers, and its organization was "for the single and sole purpose of restraining trade, of absolutely defeating and destroying competition among bidders for printing of any sort to be done in the city of Atlanta, and for maintaining an arbitrary and extortionate scale of prices upon any contracts that might be received for work done in the city." This combination or club had a written constitution and by-laws, a copy of which was appended to the petition. Among the objects of the club, as recited in its constitution, were "the maintenance of legitimate prices, the suppression of undue rivalry, and mutual protection from abuses or infringement upon our rights by others." The rules provided for a fixed minimum scale of prices, that no member should give any rebate or concession to a customer, and for a uniform discount only to other members of the association. Rule 8 was: "Never give customer an itemized estimate." The scheme of the defendants, who confederated under the name of the "Employing Printers' Club," was as follows: If a customer desiring to have printing or publishing done made application for a bid to any one of the members constituting the club, it was the understanding and agreement among all of the members thereof that the printer receiving the bid for work should name the price for which he was willing to undertake it, and thereupon should list the application, the name of the customer, and the proposition for doing the work, giving a complete description of the job to a manager appointed for that very purpose, and salaried by the members of the combination; and they in turn were bound severally to each other that, if they were also invited to make competitive bids, they would fix the price for such equal to or higher than that proposed by the first printer receiving the application and listing the bid. It was alleged that the combination enforced a rule between themselves, establishing a systematic way of handling the public printing for the city of Atlanta, under the operation of which each printer was to have his turn; the manager to keep track of this branch of the business, and notify the different members, when the city of Atlanta asked for bids, whose turn it was to do the work. They were to make the price and add 10 per cent, and charge the city, not only the fixed, arbitrary price, but also the additional 10 per cent on the fixed price. It was alleged that a committee from the Employing Printers' Club, who also represented the defendants, as members of the club, waited on the plaintiff, and advised its officers that it could not continue to employ union labor in its shop unless it became a member of the club. Plaintiff inquired of the committee the purpose and scope of the club, and was informed that it was a secret institution, and that it was necessary to become a member before its secrets could be imparted. To prevent being deprived of union labor, which was the only labor obtainable, and ignorant of the real purposes of the club, the plaintiff became a member thereof. About October 1, 1901, plaintiff made a contract with the managers of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate to publish that periodical, and was proceeding to execute the contract, when it was notified by the Employing Printers' Club that it had violated the rules of the club in accepting such contract, and was fined $468 for taking the contract. The club decided that the right to print that periodical belonged to the Foote & Davies Company, one of the defendants, and that the plaintiff should not have underbid that company. In addition to imposing the fine, the club ruled that at the end of the year 1902 the publication price of the Advocate for the year 1903 should be fixed by the Foote & Davies Company. The plaintiff was dissatisfied with this ruling, and resigned its membership in the club, whereupon plaintiff was notified by a committee from the club that, unless it paid the fine and came back into the club, all union labor would be called out of its shop. The plaintiff, persisting in its refusal to resume relationship with the club, was assured by a committee from the club that it had been reorganized on a legal basis. Upon this assurance the plaintiff resumed its membership in the club, and the fine was reduced to $125. The major part of this fine was paid, and plaintiff resumed its membership because of the threat to call out the union labor from its shop, and to avoid the damages incident to the loss of this class of labor. In October, 1902, the Wesleyan Christian Advocate's managers applied to the plaintiff to print that paper during the year 1903, stating that they were aware of the existence of the printers' combination, but before they would pay more than they were paying they would withdraw their work from Atlanta, and place it elsewhere. Thereupon the plaintiff made them a bid which afforded a reasonable net profit on the proposed work. The Employing Printers' Club then met and sat in judgment on the plaintiff's action in taking the contract for the second time for the publication of this periodical, and adjudged that the plaintiff pay the Foote & Davies Company $300 in cash to partly reimburse it for the loss of the profit on the publication of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, and that the naming of the price for the publishing of this periodical "revert irrevocably" to the Foote & Davies Company at the expiration of the present contract. Several attempts were made to induce the plaintiff to comply with this edict, and it was threatened that, if it did not comply, the club would cause all union labor to leave its employment. The plaintiff refused to comply with the club's demand, and declined to affiliate longer with the club as a member, notifying it of this resolve. Then the club caused the pressmen, feeders, printers, and binders employed by the plaintiff to quit work, thereby shutting down the plaintiff's establishment, and rendering it impossible for it to conduct its business, or to execute existing contracts, or to undertake further employment in the line of its trade. Actual damages were alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff in the sum of $10,000. On the interlocutory hearing it appeared that some of the employees returned to the work, and that their respective unions refused to call a strike in the plaintiff's shop. The defendants then threatened that, unless the unions would call out its labor from the plaintiff's shop they would no longer observe the union regulations. In pursuance of this threat, some of the defendants had posted their respective businesses as "open shops," and the plaintiff's petition was filed at this juncture of affairs.

69 L. R. A.

There can be no doubt that the facts alleged in the petition, if true (and the demurrer admits their truth), establish, not only a conspiracy to fix and control the price of printing in the city of Atlanta, but also a malicious interference with the business of the plaintiff. The scope and purpose of the Employing Printers' Club was to create a monopoly and stifle competition in the printing business. A mere agreement to do wrong is not actionable; but when the parties to such agreement do an overt act in furtherance of the illegal combination, resulting in injury to a third person, the conspiracy becomes actionable, and the conspirators are liable to the injured party for damages proximately flowing from their illegal conduct.

It is contended by the plaintiffs in error that, conceding that the combination among the defendants was an illegal one, the plaintiff in the court below was a party to it, and cannot be heard to complain in a court of equity. It is true that at one time the plaintiff was a member of the trust, but, when the trust essayed to discipline it, it repudiated the club, and informed its officers that it would no longer affiliate with the club. It was then that the club was proceeding to punish it by calling out its employees. The maxim that one must come into a court of equity with clean hands means that he must do equity as respects the defendant's rights in the particular matter of the suit. 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 397. "The rule that a complainant must come into equity with clean hands does not go so far as to prohibit a court of equity from giving its aid to a bad or a faithless man. The dirt upon his hands must be his bad conduct in the transaction complained of. All complainants in equity are human beings, full of faults and sin, and I doubt if there is one case in ten in which the complainant is not somewhat to blame. If the complainant does equity himself, or offers to do it (except in those cases where the rule in pari delicto, etc., comes in), his hands are as clean as the court can require." Ansley v. Wilson, 50 Ga. 421. The plaintiff is not seeking to obtain any relief by virtue of his former connection with the club, and is not, therefore, in pari delicto with the defendants relatively to the cause of action which it brings against them. Its connection with the club ceased before filing the suit, and it has repudiated the club as an unholy alliance. Even in criminal law the locus penitentiae is recognized. The aggressor may repent, and abandon his felonious enterprise, and place himself in a position where he may rightfully invoke the law of self-defense in a subsequent occurrence. Besides, an unlawful combination in restraint of trade is a wrong to the public, as well as to the injured individual. If a man confederates with a burglar to break and enter a house, but abandons the criminal project, his agreement to join in the burglary will not justify an infliction of an injury upon his person by the burglar, and deprive him of his right of self-defense, merely because of the prior agreement to do a criminal act and the abandonment of his unlawful intention.

Independently of the conspiracy, the petition states a case of malicious interference with the plaintiff's contract of employment with its employees. At common law the remedies for breach of contract were confined to the contracting parties, and limited to direct damages and consequential damages proximately resulting from the act of him who is sued. This general rule admitted of one exception, and that was the right of action against a stranger for wrongfully enticing away a servant in violation of his contract of service with his master. The exception is said to have been based on the ancient statute of laborers. The early English cases limited the action to the enticement of menial servants, but the later cases, beginning with Lumley v. Gye, 2 El. & Bl. 216, have extended the doctrine beyond menial servants; and by the modern interpretation of this doctrine by the English courts the rule is extended to a malicious interference with any contract. A brief reference to a few English cases will serve to present the evolution and extension of 69 L. R. A.

the old common-law doctrine of malicious interference with a contract. Lumley v. Gye, 2 El. & Bl. 216, was a suit for the malicious procuring of an opera singer, who had agreed with the plaintiff to perform and sing at his theater, and nowhere else, for a certain time, to break her contract, and not perform or sing at the plaintiff's theater during the time for which she was engaged. It was there held that an action would lie for maliciously procuring a breach of contract to give exclusive personal service, provided the procurement was during the subsistence of the contract and produced damage; and that to sustain such an action it was not necessary that the employer and employee should stand in the strict relation of master and servant. The opinion was by a divided court. The majority of the judges were inclined to the opinion that an action would lie for the malicious procurement of the breach of any contract, though not for personal services, if by the procurement damage was intended to result, and did result, to the plaintiff. This case was followed in Bowen v. Hall, L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 333. In 1893 the same question was before the court of appeal of the Queen's bench division (Temperton v. Russell [1893] 1 Q. B. Div. 715), and the cases of Lumley v. Gye and Bowen v. Hall were examined and approved; and these cases were there said to rest upon the principle that to maliciously procure a person to break a contractual relation, which all are bound by law to respect, is actionable; and that a right of action for maliciously procuring a breach of contract is not confined to contracts of personal service. By many it was thought that the House of Lord's case of Allen v. Flood [1898] A. C. 1, conflicted with the doctrine announced in Temperton v. Russell, or at least materially curtailed its scope. But in the later case of Quinn v. Leatham [1901] A. C. 495, both cases—Temperton v. Russell and Allen v. Flood—were elaborately reviewed and analyzed; and, after stating the scope and effect of the latter case, it was ruled that "a combination of two or more, without justification or excuse, to injure a man in his trade, by inducing his customers or servants to break their contracts with him, or not to deal with him or continue in his employment, is, if it results in damage to him, actionable." The Supreme Court of the United States approvingly cited the English cases of Lumley v. Gye and Bowen v. Hall, and reached the conclusion that, if one maliciously interferes with a contract to the injury of the other, the party injured may maintain an action against the wrongdoer.

Angle v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 55, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240. Though this rule is not universal in all the courts of last resort of our sister states, it is believed to have been followed in most of them. In the carefully prepared opinion in Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555, the court decided that a manufacturer is entitled to maintain an action against a third person, who, with the unlawful purpose of preventing him from carrying on his business, willfully induced many of his employees to leave his employment, whereby the manufacturer lost their services, and the profits and advantages which he would have derived therefrom. See also Moran v. Dunphy, 177 Mass. 485, 52 L. R. A. 115, 83 Am. St. Rep. 289, 59 N. E. 125. And the supreme court of North Carolina held in two cases (Haskins v. Royster, 70 N. C. 601, 16 Am. Rep. 780; Jones v. Stanly, 76 N. C. 355) that, if a person maliciously entices laborers or croppers to break their contract with their employer and desert his service, the employer may recover damages against such person.

In this state it has been held that when one man employs a laborer to work on his farm, and another man, knowing of such contract of employment, entices, hires, or persuades the laborer to leave the service of the first employer during the time for which he was so employed, the law gives to the party injured a right of action to recover damages. Salter v. Howard, 43 Ga. 601. From the reasoning of McCay, J., in Barron v. Collins, 49 Ga. 580, it would appear that he was inclined to the opinion that an action for the malicious breach of contract was limited to cases of servants. The declaration in that case alleged that A, having contracted with one Charles Barron that he, the said Charles, should furnish himself and his two daughters and one George Barron to work as laborers on the plaintiff's land for the year 1872, the plaintiff to furnish the land and mules, and the said Charles to receive one third and plaintiff two thirds of the crop, and that the defendant, knowing the said contract had not been abandoned, but still existed, employed the said Charles, his two daughters, and the said George to work for him for the year 1872. It was held on demurrer that no good cause of action was set forth. In the opinion it was said that the gist of the action was enticing away plaintiff's servants; and that the contract between the plaintiff and Charles Barron did not create the relation of master and servant, but that Charles Barron was a contractor, and not a servant. However, within the limits of a 69 L. R. A.

very brief opinion, it was pointed out that the declaration was defective in many other particulars. It was defective in not setting forth the nature of the damages. It was said, also, that perhaps the contract, resting in parol, was not binding, as it was not to be performed within a year. Nor did it appear that Charles Barron was authorized to contract for the service of the others. Inasmuch as the petition was defective in other vital particulars, the judgment of the court was not confined to the question of the malicious procurement of the breach of the contract. Attention is also called to the fact that this case was decided in 1873, when the principle under discussion was in its evolutionary stage. Speaking for myself, I believe the same reasons which support the principle that an action will lie for the malicious procurement of a breach of contract of personal service will cover every case where one person maliciously persuades and induces another to break any legal contract. In the case at bar the relation of master and servant did exist between the plaintiff and his employees, and, even applying the common-law rule of liability, the defendants would be answerable in damages to the plaintiff for a malicious procurement of the breach of contract by its employees. The term "malicious," used in this connection, is to be given a liberal meaning. The act is malicious when the thing done is with the knowledge of the plaintiff's rights, and with the intent to interfere therewith. It is a wanton interference with another's contractual rights. Ineffective persuasion to induce another to violate his contract would not, of itself, be actionable, but, if the persuasion be used for the purpose of injuring the plaintiff, or benefiting the defendant at the expense of the plaintiff, with a knowledge of the subsistence of the contract, it becomes a malicious act, and, if injury ensues from it, a cause of action accrues to the injured party. Bowen v. Hall, L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 333. As was said by Crompton, J., in Lumley v. Gye, 2 El. & Bl. 216: "It must now be considered clear law that a person who wrongfully and maliciously, or, which is the same thing, with notice, interrupts the relation subsisting between master and servant, by procuring the servant to depart from the master's service, . . . is responsible at law." See Doremus v. Hennessy, 176 Ill. 608, 43 L. R. A. 797, 802, 68 Am. St. Rep. 203, 52 N. E. 924, 54 N. E. 524.

4. From the proof submitted it appeared that means other than persuasion were employed by the defendants to induce the plaintiff's employees to quit work. They threatened the various labor unions that, unless the union labor of the plaintiff was called out, they would no longer exclusively employ union men, but would run what is known as an "open shop." This threat was being carried into execution when the plaintiff applied for the writ of injunction. The plan of attack on the plaintiff was to force the various labor unions to call out their members from the plaintiff's shop, under the threat that upon their refusal to do so the defendants would run their respective businesses under what is known as an open shop; that is, they would employ their labor without reference to their connection with the various unions. The several defendants had the undoubted right to employ any character of labor they might prefer. If they desired to supplant the union labor and substitute therefor nonunion labor, such action would be strictly within their legal right. But the record shows that practically all the skilled labor in this branch of business in the city of Atlanta belonged to the various labor unions, which had an agreement with the defendants that the defendants would hire only union employees, and that the unions would not permit their members to work for any employer who was not a party to the agreement. This agreement was incidental to the main purpose of the organization. It was a part of the plan to force all employing printers to become members of the Employing Printers' Club. The defendants were insisting on the observance of this agreement by the labor unions, and, upon their refusal to live up to the agreement, they were threatened with the dête noire of unionism,—the open shop. An injunction may be granted against the enforcement of an illegal agreement of dealers to injure the business of another person. Jackson v. Stanfield, 137 Ind. 592, 23 L. R. A. 588, 36 N. E. 345, 37 N. E. 14.

A court of equity will interpose by injunction to prevent the several members of an illegal combination from enforcing an agreement to the hurt and injury of one engaged in a competitive business. Brown v. Jacobs' Pharmacy Co. 115 Ga. 429, 57 L. R. A. 547, 90 Am. St. Rep. 126, 41 S. E. 553.

Under the facts in the record, the court properly enjoined the defendants from interfering with the plaintiff's business as a printer engaged in competitive trade, and from unlawfully influencing the labor organization from obstructing its business.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

69 L. R. A.

May C. WILSON, Impleaded, etc., Plff. in Err.,

v.

EXCHANGE BANK.

(..... Ga.)

- *1. In an action against the maker and indorser of a promissory note, joined in the same suit, the indorser may set off an individual claim against the plaintiff growing out of the transaction which gave rise to the execution of the note.
2. After a valid plea of set-off has been filed, the plaintiff is not entitled to dismiss his action so as to interfere with the rights of the defendant, except upon sufficient cause shown.

(March 25, 1905.)

ERROR to the City Court of Atlanta to review orders striking out defendant's plea of set-off, and dismissing, without her consent, an action brought to enforce payment of certain promissory notes. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Frank A. Arnold for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Rosser & Brandon for defendant in error.

Candler, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Exchange Bank brought suit against Frank Williams, as maker, and May C. Wilson, as indorser, on a number of promissory notes. The petition alleged that the notes were made by Williams to the J. C. Wilson Coal & Lumber Company, under which name May C. Wilson was at the time doing business, and were indorsed by May C. Wilson. The defendants filed a plea in which they denied that at the time the notes were executed May C. Wilson was doing business under the name of the J. C. Wilson Coal & Lumber Company, and averred that that company was a corporation under the laws of Georgia. They also denied indebtedness on the notes, and averred that "plaintiff has received from defendant, May C. Wilson, $874 on account of the transaction sued upon, and said plaintiff is indebted to defendant, May C. Wilson, the difference, $474, which she pleads in recoupment, and asks judgment against plaintiff for said sum." Subsequently Mrs. Wilson offered an amendment to her plea, which the court, on objections of counsel for the plaintiff, disallowed. The court also, on oral motion, struck the plea of set-off, and later passed another order, "without the knowledge or consent of defendant, May C. Wilson," permitting the plaintiff to dismiss the case at its cost. Mrs. Wilson excepts to the refusal of her amendment, the order striking her plea, and the order allowing the plaintiff to dismiss.

*Headnotes by CANDLER, J.

NOTE.—As to the right of a surety jointly bound with his principal to offset against such joint indebtedness his individual claim against the creditor, see, in this series, Clark v. Sullivan, 13 L. R. A. 233, and note.

1. As no reference is made in the brief of counsel for the plaintiff in error to the refusal of the amendment offered by Mrs. Wilson, the assignment of error on this ruling will be treated as having been abandoned, and we will pass to the controlling question in the case, viz., whether, in a suit on a promissory note, where both maker and indorser are joined in the suit, the indorser may set off an individual demand against the plaintiff's cause of action. This question is not without considerable difficulty. In the case of Threlkeld v. Dobbins, 45 Ga. 144, it was held broadly that "a debt due by the plaintiff to one of several defendants in a suit cannot be pleaded by the defendants as a set-off, unless there be some special cause shown." That case, however, was decided by only two judges, and hence is not binding upon us as authority; but, aside from that consideration, an examination of the facts upon which it was based will show that the headnote, from which the foregoing quotation was taken, is much broader than the actual question decided. It appeared that Threlkeld and another had executed to Dobbins their joint promissory note; that Dobbins owed Threlkeld a sum of money for cotton which he had sold for him, and for which he had not accounted; and that Dobbins had agreed that this sum should be entered as a credit on the joint note. It was held that this agreement was "such special claim" as could be set off against the plaintiff's demand on the note. The cases cited by counsel for the defendant in error as being in harmony with the decision in Threlkeld v. Dobbins are also cases where a joint demand was the subject of the suit, and one of the defendants sought to set off an individual claim. With one exception, they were suits against partnerships, the exception being a suit against joint makers of a promissory note. It seems to be well settled in Georgia, as in most of the states, that in a suit against two or more persons on a joint obligation set-off is not available to less than the entire number of defendants. The reason of this rule is plain. A joint obligation is indivisible. Each one of the obligors is bound to the same extent and in the same manner as all the others. A separate judgment against less than the entire number would be impossible; and in this very fact of indivisibility lies the security to the obligee of accepting a joint obligation. That, however, is not this case. The maker and the indorser of a negotiable promissory note are severally, not jointly, bound by the instrument. Their contracts are essentially different. That of the maker is to pay the note when due, according to the terms of the writing. That of the indorser is that he will pay only on certain well-defined conditions precedent. Owing to the several nature of the contract, a suit against the maker and indorser in one action was not known to the law merchant; and it was necessary to obtain a judgment against the maker before the liability of the indorser was established. The suit against maker and indorser in one action is entirely of statutory origin. (14 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 452, and authorities cited in note), and the Georgia statute on the subject was not enacted until 1826. Beckwith v. Carleton, 14 Ga. 693. And see generally on this subject, Johnson v. Platt, 21 Ga. 135; Lamar v. Cottle, 27 Ga. 265; Davis v. Bank of Fulton, 31 Ga. 69; Ware v. City Bank, 59 Ga. 844. The defense of set-off was also unknown to the common law, because "the primitive notion of an action did not admit the possibility of a defendant being an actor and interposing a claim against the plaintiff to be tried in the one suit." Pomeroy, Code Remedies, 3d ed. § 729; Waterman, Set-off, 2d ed. § 10. By the statute of 2 Geo. II., chap. 27, § 13, it was enacted that, "where there are mutual debts between the plaintiff and defendant, . . . one debt may be set off against the other," etc. The different states of this country have all passed statutes the practical effect of which is the same as that of the English statute, though varying somewhat in phraseology. In Georgia it is provided that "between the parties themselves any mutual demands existing at the time of the commencement of the suit may be set off;" and that "set-off must be between the same parties, and in their own right." Civil Code 1895, §§ 3746, 3747. The exact meaning to be given to the expressions "mutual demands" and "same parties," as used in the statute, is the important question now to be decided. It seems to us nothing more than reasonable to hold that in a case like the present, where two or more defendants are joined in an action to which they are severally liable, and in which a separate judgment may be taken against them, a cross-demand in favor of any one of the defendants against the plaintiff would come within a fair construction of the requirement of mutuality; nor can we see the necessity, in such a case, of construing the words "same parties" to mean "all the parties." We are aware that this view is in conflict with the English rule on the subject, and with the decisions of many of the courts of last resort of this country; but it is also in harmony with many American authorities of eminent respectability.

In Pomeroy's Code Remedies, 3d ed. § 755, the author says: "The provision found in nearly all the Codes that the counterclaim must exist 'in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff between whom a several judgment might be had in the action,' implies that whenever the single defendant, or all the defendants jointly, may recover against one or some of the plaintiffs, and not against all, or whenever one, or some, of the defendants, and not all, may recover against the single plaintiff, or all the plaintiffs jointly, or whenever both of these possibilities are combined, a counterclaim may be interposed against the one or some of the plaintiffs, and not against all, and by the one or some of the defendants, and not by all. Such a severance in the recovery is possible when the right sought to be maintained on the one side and the liability to be enforced on the other are not originally joint." After a full discussion of numerous cases bearing on the subject, the author, in § 761, lays down the following rules: "First, when the defendants in an action are joint contractors, and are sued as such, no counterclaim can be made available which consists of a demand in favor of one, or some, of them. Secondly, when the defendants in an action are jointly and severally liable, although sued jointly, a counterclaim, consisting of a demand in favor of one, or some, of them, may, if otherwise without objection, be interposed. Thirdly, since it is possible, pursuant to express provisions of all the Codes, for persons severally liable to be sued jointly under certain circumstances in a legal action,—that is, in an action brought to recover a common money judgment,—a counterclaim in favor of one or more of such defendants may be pleaded and proved." In Roberts v. Donovan, 70 Cal. 108, 9 Pac. 180, 11 Pac. 599, it was held that one of two joint obligors could not set off an individual claim against the plaintiff's demand on the action; but in the opinion (p. 114 of 70 Cal., p. 182 of 9 Pac.) the following language was used: "The action is brought upon the joint bond of all the defendants. Were it a joint and several bond, no difficulty could arise; for where the cause of action is several, as well as joint, a several judgment may be entered without reference to the mere form of action." In some of the states it is held flatly that the defense of set-off is not available to less than the entire number of defendants. See Lemon v. Stevenson, 36 Ill. 49; Ryan v. Barger, 16 Ill. 28; Woods v. Harris, 5 Blackf. 585; Gordon v. Swift, 46 Ind. 208; Warren v. Wells, 1 Met. 80; Brooks v. Stackpole, 168 Mass. 537, 47 N. E. 419; Jones v. Gilreath, 28 N. C. (6 Ired. L.) 338; Corbett v. Hughes, 75 Iowa, 282, 39 N. W. 500; Banks v. Pike, 15 Mo. 268. In Trammell v. Harrell, 4 Ark. 602, the supreme court of Arkansas, by a divided bench, held: "A defendant, or defendants, cannot set off a claim due to him or them by only one or a part of several plaintiffs; nor can one defendant of several set off a claim due to him alone from the plaintiff or plaintiffs; and whether the claim sued on, or that attempted to be set off, or both, are joint, or joint and several, makes no difference." Chief Justice Ringo, in a strong opinion, dissented from the judgment rendered; and so pertinent are the views expressed by him in the dissenting opinion to the point now under discussion that we quote therefrom as follows: "It is well understood that no set-off was allowed by the common law; and that the whole right of set-off in actions at law had its origin in certain statutes of England, the first of which gave it only in respect to a single class of demands; but it has been considerably enlarged and extended by subsequent acts of Parliament so as to embrace generally all liquidated damages or demands upon which an action of debt or indebitatus assumpsit would lie, but only where the demand to be set off is due in the same right from all of the plaintiffs to all of the defendants. And this I understand to be one of the most prominent and distinct features in all of the acts of Parliament upon the subject, and it is one which appears to have been introduced into the statutes of set-off of a majority of the states of the United States; and in such states there can be no doubt that a demand not due from all of the plaintiffs to all of the defendants cannot be admitted as set-off, because it is not within the provisions of law allowing such defense to be made. . . . The first section of our statute of set-off (Ark. Rev. Stat. chap. 139, p. 726), declares that, 'if two or more persons are mutually indebted to each other, by judgments, bonds, bills, notes, bargains, promises, or the like, and one of them commence an action against the other, one debt may be set off against the other, although such debts may be of a different nature. . . . The language here quoted, it will be perceived, does not in any way make the right of set-off to depend upon the number of the defendants, . . . but makes it depend solely upon the existence of a mutual indebtedness between one or more of the persons suing and one or more of the persons sued. To illustrate my view of the statute, suppose A, B, and C indebted to E in $1,000, and E at the same time indebted to A in the like sum of $1,000. A sues E for the debt. Can E set off the debt due to him from A, B, and C? Certainly. Why? Because there exists between him and the plaintiff a mutual indebtedness. Each owes the other a debt, and, the law having made the debt of A, B, and C several as well as joint, E has an election to treat it as the individual debt of A, and, so regarding it, there is certainly, in the most strict understanding of the term, a mutuality of indebtedness between the parties A and E. But suppose the suit brought by E against A, B, and C, would not the same mutuality of indebtedness exist between A and E? I answer that it would, and that, according to the letter as well as the spirit of the statute, A would have a legal right to set off the debt due to him from E." Attention is directed to the similarity of the Arkansas statute under discussion by the learned chief justice and our own, and to the fact that in both the requirement of the law is that the demands shall be mutual. And in the subsequent case of Loach v. Lambeth, 14 Ark. 668, the principle laid down by the majority in Trammell v. Harrell was overruled, and by a unanimous decision the views expressed by the chief justice in his dissenting opinion in that case were adopted as the law applicable to the subject under discussion. See also Burke v. Stillwell, 23 Ark. 294. And for decisions of other states to a like effect, see Pitcher v. Patrick, Minor (Ala.) 321, 12 Am. Dec. 54; Carson v. Barnes, 1 Ala. 93; Sledge v. Swift, 53 Ala. 110; Huddleston v. Askey, 58 Ala. 218; Riley v. Stallworth, 56 Ala. 481; Locke v. Locke, 57 Ala. 475; Childerston v. Hammon, 9 Serg. & R. 68; Robinson v. Beall, 3 Yeates, 267; Miller v. Kreiter, 76 Pa. 78; Dunn v. West, 5 B. Mon. 377. In Locke v. Locke, 57 Ala. 475, the following language is used: "If, as the verdict tends to show, the set-off was due to only one of the defendants, this would constitute a good defense to plaintiff's action, but would not authorize a recovery for the excess, for the reason that such recovery would require a change, to that extent, of the parties to the judgment. In fact, it would, in effect, require two judgements; one in favor of one defendant for the certified balance, and the other in favor of all the defendants for the costs of the suit. This cannot be done in legal proceedings." Under the liberal provisions of our law as to judgments in legal proceedings, the objection urged by the Alabama court to a judgment for one of the defendants for the excess of his set-off would not apply. Once the facts are definitely ascertained, a judgment to fit those facts can easily be framed. And to the possible objection that the allowance of individual set-offs of one or more defendants would give rise to difficulty in the framing of a judgment to fit the facts it may be replied that the difficulty is one more of arithmetic than of law. Say that A is plaintiff in an action on a promissory note for $100 executed by B and indorsed respectively by C, D, and E. A owes C $100, D $200, and E $300. Each of the defendants answers separately or jointly, as the case may be, setting off his individual demand against the plaintiff, and the verdict of the jury is in favor of their contentions. The cross-demand of only one of the defendants could be applied to the extinguishment of the note sued on, for the application of a set-off is in the nature of a payment, and, of course, the original claim could only be legally paid once. But the other defendants, having been haled into court, and having, under the law, set up their counterclaim, would have the right to stay in court until their rights were adjudicated. And so judgment might be entered generally in favor of the defendant C, thus releasing the maker of the note, B and the other indorsers, D and E, and in favor of D and E, against the plaintiff respectively for $200 and $300.

69 L. R. A.

In Threlkeld v. Dobbins, 45 Ga. 144, relied on as authority by counsel for the defendant in error, Judge McCay said: "Independently of the settled rule, under the English statutes of set-off, our Code provides that set-off must be between the same parties, and in their own right. Code, § 2850. This section of the Code, however, recognizes some special exceptions. Two are mentioned, to wit, the case of a surviving partner, and a debt due to the principal in a suit against the principal and security." Tracing back the latter of the two called exceptions to its origin, we have reached the conclusion that, instead of being an exception to the rule, it is within the rule recognized in Georgia from the beginning in regard to the law of set-off. The original act allowing set-off under the law of Georgia was passed in 1799, being part of the judiciary act. Prince's Dig. 425. It contained no reference whatever to suits against principal and security. The provision of the Code referred to by Judge McCay, which is now a part of Civil Code 1895, § 3747, made its appearance for the first time in Code 1863, § 2842, and was evidently codified from the decision of this court in the early case of Harrison v. Henderson, 4 Ga. 198. It was there held that in an action against principal and surety the principal might set off his individual demand against the plaintiff. In the opinion (p. 199) Judge Warner, after discussing the act of 1799, authorizing the plea of set-off, and quoting therefrom, said: "The objection urged against the set-off is that the demand of the plaintiff is a joint demand, and the debt offered to be set off is the separate demand of Harrison against the plaintiff. It is true, as a general rule, that a separate demand cannot be set off against a joint demand; but the plaintiff's demand here is several as well as joint. We must look to the original character of the contract; for the plaintiff, by pursuing his remedy against them as joint contractors, does not alter the original character of the contract itself. When we look at the contract, we see it is the separate contract of Harrison with the plaintiff, secured by the joint security of Sims." It will thus be seen that under the statute of set-off as originally enacted, which has not been amended in this respect, it was recognized that in a suit on a several obligation the defense was available to any one or more of the defendants; and the subsequent codification of this decision certainly did not operate to alter its effect. It will thus be seen that it is quite erroneous to argue that, because the codifiers have named two specific instances in which one or more of several codefendants may plead set-off, the plea cannot be interposed in any other case where more than one defendant is sued in the same action.

We have discussed this question at such great length, not only because of the apparent doubt cast upon it by the decision in the case of Threlkeld v. Dobbins, but also on account of its far-reaching importance to the commercial world. Applying what has been said to the facts of this case, our conclusion is that, the contract of Williams and that of Mrs. Wilson being several, it was competent for the latter to set off her individual claim against that of the plaintiff.

2. The defendant, May C. Wilson, having filed a valid plea of set-off, the plaintiff could not, without making some sort of showing, dismiss its action so as to prejudice her right to a hearing on the claim set up in her plea. Civil Code 1895, §§ 3754, 4970; Simon v. Myers, 68 Ga. 76. Judgment reversed.

All the Justices concur.
69 L. R. A.

Paolo PAVESICH, Plff. in Err.,
v.
NEW ENGLAND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY et al.

(..... Ga.)

- *1. The absence, for a long period of time, of a precedent for an asserted right is not conclusive evidence that the right does not exist. Where the case is new in principle, the courts cannot give a remedy, but, where the case is new only in instance, it is the duty of the courts to give relief by the application of recognized principles.
2. A right of privacy is derived from natural law, recognized by municipal law, and its existence can be inferred from expressions used by commentators and writers on the law as well as judges in decided cases.
3. The right of privacy is embraced within the absolute rights of personal security and personal liberty.
4. Personal security includes the right to exist, and the right to the enjoyment of life while existing, and is invaded, not only by a deprivation of life, but also by a deprivation of those things which are necessary to the enjoyment of life according to the nature, temperament, and lawful desires of the individual.
5. Personal liberty includes, not only freedom from physical restraint, but also the right "to be let alone," to determine one's mode of life,—whether it shall be a life of publicity or of privacy; and to order one's life and manage one's affairs in a manner that may be most agreeable to him so long as he does not violate the rights of others or of the public.
6. Liberty of speech and of the press, when exercised within the bounds of the constitutional guaranties, are limitations upon the exercise of the right of privacy.
7. The Constitution declares that the liberty of speech and of the press must not be abused, and the law will not permit the right of privacy to be asserted in such a way as to curtail or restrain such liberties. The one may be used to keep the other within lawful bounds, but neither can be lawfully used to destroy the other.
8. The right of privacy may be waived, either expressly or by implication, except as to those matters which law or public policy demands shall be kept private, but a waiver authorizes an invasion of the right only to such an extent as is to be necessarily inferred from the purpose for which the waiver is made. A waiver for one purpose, and in favor of one person or class, does not authorize an invasion for all purposes, or by all persons and classes.
9. One who seeks public office, or any person who claims from the public approval or patronage, waives his right of privacy to such an extent that he cannot restrain or impede the public in any proper investigation into the conduct of his private life which may throw light upon the question as to whether the public should bestow upon him the office which he seeks, or accord to him the approval or patronage which he asks. The holder of public office makes a waiver of a similar nature, and subjects his life at all times to closest scrutiny, in order that it may be determined whether the rights of the public are safe in his hands.

*Headnotes by COBB, J.

NOTE.—As to the right of privacy, see also, in this series, Roberson v. Rochester Folding Box Co. 59 L. R. A. 478, and footnote thereto.

10. The conclusion and reasoning of the majority in the case of Roberson v. Rochester Folding Box Company, 64 N. E. 442, 59 L. R. A. 478, 89 Am. St. Rep. 828, 171 N. Y. 540, criticized and disapproved; and the reasoning of Judge Gray, in his dissenting opinion, adopted and followed.
11. The publication of a picture of a person, without his consent, as a part of an advertisement, for the purpose of exploiting the publisher's business, is a violation of the right of privacy of the person whose picture is reproduced, and entitles him to recover, without proof of special damage.
12. The publication of one's picture, without his consent, for such a purpose, is in no sense an exercise of the liberty of speech or of the press, within the meaning of those terms as used in the Constitution.
13. Words which are harmless in themselves may be libelous in the light of extrinsic facts.
14. A publication which imputes to one language which is known to those among whom he lives to contain statements which are false is libelous.
15. A publication of an advertisement of an insurance company, containing a person's picture, and a statement that the person has policies of insurance with the company, and is pleased with his investment, when in fact he has no such policies, is libelous, as having a tendency to create the impression among those who know the facts that the person whose picture is reproduced has told a wilful falsehood, either gratuitously, or for a consideration.
16. The petition was good as against a general demurrer, and the objections raised in the special demurrer were without merit.

(March 3, 1905.)

ERROR to the City Court of Atlanta to review a judgment in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged infringement of plaintiff's right of privacy by the unauthorized publication of his portrait and alleged libelous matter in connection therewith. Reversed.

Statement by Cobb, J.:

Paolo Pavesich brought an action against the New England Mutual Life Insurance Company, a nonresident corporation, Thomas B. Lumpkin, its general agent, and J. Q. Adams, a photographer, both residing in the city of Atlanta. The allegations of the petition were, in substance, as follows: In an issue of the Atlanta Constitution, a newspaper published in the city of Atlanta, there appeared a likeness of the plaintiff, 69 L. R. A.

which would be easily recognized by his friends and acquaintances, placed by the side of the likeness of an ill-dressed and sickly looking person. Above the likeness of the plaintiff were the words: "Do it now. The man who did." Above the likeness of the other person were the words: "Do it while you can. The man who didn't." Below the two pictures were the words: "These two pictures tell their own story." Under the plaintiff's picture the following appeared: "In my healthy and productive period of life I bought insurance in the New England Mutual Life Insurance Co., of Boston, Mass., and to-day my family is protected and I am drawing an annual dividend on my paid-up policies." Under the other person's picture was a statement to the effect that he had not taken insurance and now realized his mistake. The statements were signed, "Thomas B. Lumpkin, General Agent." The picture of the plaintiff was taken from a negative obtained by the defendant Lumpkin, or some one by him authorized, from the defendant Adams, which was used with his consent, and with knowledge of the purpose for which it was to be used. The picture was made from the negative without the plaintiff's consent, at the instance of the defendant insurance company, through its agent, Lumpkin. Plaintiff is an artist by profession, and the publication is peculiarly offensive to him. The statement attributed to plaintiff in the publication is false and malicious. He never made any such statement, and has not, and never has had, a policy of life insurance with the defendant company. The publication is malicious, and tends to bring plaintiff into ridicule before the world, and especially with his friends and acquaintances, who know that he has no policy in the defendant company. The publication is a "trespass upon plaintiff's right of privacy, and was caused by breach of confidence and trust reposed" in the defendant Adams. The prayer was for damages in the sum of $25,000. The petition was demurred to generally, and specially on the grounds that there was a misjoinder of defendants and causes of action, that no facts were set forth from which malice can be inferred, and that no special damages were alleged. The court sustained the general demurrer, and the plaintiff excepted.

Messrs. Westmoreland Brothers and M. M. Hirsch for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. John L. Hopkins & Sons, for defendants in error:

To charge one with doing a thing which the law authorizes to be done can never be the subject-matter of a libel.

Hollenbeck v. Hall, 103 Iowa, 214, 39 L.

R. A. 734, 64 Am. St. Rep. 175, 72 N. W. 518.

A libel must be, first, a false and malicious defamation, and, secondly, the reputation of the individual libeled must be injured by exposing him to public hatred, contempt, and ridicule.

Code, 3832.

So the word "defamation" implies, first, that the individual possessed good fame, and, secondly, that the thing written of him withdrew from him a portion of this, leaving him upon the whole with less than he had at first.

False statements which tend to promote the good character of a man, and do not in fact defame or injure, are not actionable.

Legg v. Dunleavy, 80 Mo. 558, 50 Am. Rep. 512; Dun v. Maier, 27 C. C. A. 100, 52 U. S. App. 381, 82 Fed. 169.

An innuendo cannot introduce new matter, nor change the natural meaning of the words.

Watters v. Retail Clerks' Union, No. 479, 120 Ga. 424, 47 S. E. 911.

The publication must have a personal, and not an impersonal, application.

Stewart v. Wilson, 23 Minn. 449.

The right of privacy has been repudiated by every court of last resort that has considered the subject-matter.

Schuyler v. Curtis, 27 Abb. N. C. 387, 15 N. Y. Supp. 787, 64 Hun, 594, 19 N. Y. Supp. 264, 30 Abb. N. C. 376, 24 N. Y. Supp. 509, 147 N. Y. 434, 31 L. R. A. 286, 49 Am. St. Rep. 671, 42 N. E. 22; Marks v. Jaffa, 6 Misc. 290, 26 N. Y. Supp. 908; Murray v. Gast Lithographic & Engraving Co. 8 Misc. 36, 28 N. Y. Supp. 271; Roberson v. Rochester Folding Box Co. 171 N. Y. 540, 59 L. R. A. 478, 89 Am. St. Rep. 828, 64 N. E. 442; Atkinson v. John E. Doherty & Co. 121 Mich. 372, 46 L. R. A. 219, 80 Am. St. Rep. 507, 80 N. W. 285.

Cobb, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1-12. The petition really contains two counts,—one for a libel, and the other for a violation of the plaintiff's right of privacy. There was no special demurrer raising the objection that the counts were not properly arranged, as there was in Cooper v. Portner Brewing Co. 112 Ga. 894, 38 S. E. 91; and hence the petition is to be dealt with in relation to its substance, without reference to its form.

We will first deal with the general demurrer to the second count, which claimed damages on account of an alleged violation of the plaintiff's right of privacy. The question therefore to be determined is, whether an individual has a right of privacy which he can enforce, and which the courts will protect against invasion. It is to be conceded that prior to 1890 every adjudicated case, both in this country and in England, which might be said to have involved a right of privacy, was not based upon the existence of such right, but was founded upon a supposed right of property, or a breach of trust or confidence, or the like, and that therefore a claim to a right of privacy, independent of a property or contractual right, or some right of a similar nature, had, up to that time, never been recognized in terms in any decision. The entire absence for a long period of time, even for centuries, of a precedent for an asserted right should have the effect to cause the courts to proceed with caution before recognizing the right, for fear that they may thereby invade the province of the law-making power; but such absence, even for all time, is not conclusive of the question as to the existence of the right. The novelty of the complaint is no objection, when an injury cognizable by law is shown to have been inflicted on the plaintiff. In such a case, "although there be no precedent, the common law will judge according to the law of nature and the public good." Where the case is new in principle, the courts have no authority to give a remedy, no matter how great the grievance; but where the case is only new in instance, and the sole question is upon the application of a recognized principle to a new case, "it will be just as competent to courts of justice to apply the principle to any case that may arise two centuries hence as it was two centuries ago." Broom's Legal Maxims, 8th ed. 193. This results from the application of the maxim, Ubi jus ibi remedium, which finds expression in our Code, where it is declared that "for every right there shall be a remedy, and every court having jurisdiction of the one may, if necessary, frame the other." Civil Code 1895, § 4929.

The individual surrenders to society many rights and privileges which he would be free to exercise in a state of nature, in exchange for the benefits which he receives as a member of society. But he is not presumed to surrender all those rights, and the public has no more right, without his consent, to invade the domain of those rights which it is necessarily to be presumed he has reserved, than he has to violate the valid regulations of the organized government under which he lives. The right of privacy has its foundation in the instincts of nature. It is recognized intuitively, consciousness being the witness that can be called to establish its existence. Any person whose intellect is in a normal condition recognizes at once that, as to each individual member of society, there are matters private, and there are matters public so far as the individual is concerned. Each individual as instinctively resents any encroachment by the public upon his rights which are of a private nature as he does the withdrawal of those of his rights which are of a public nature. A right of privacy in matters purely private is therefore derived from natural law. This idea is embraced in the Roman's conception of justice, which "was not simply the external legality of acts, but the accord of external acts with the precepts of the law, prompted by internal impulse and free volition." Mackeldey's Roman Law, by Dropsie, § 123. It may be said to arise out of those laws sometimes characterized as "immutable," because they are natural, and so just at all times and in all places that no authority can either change or abolish them." 1 Domat's Civil Law, by Strahan, Cushing's ed. p. 49. It is one of those rights referred to by some law writers as "absolute,"—"such as would belong to their persons merely in a state of nature, and which every man is entitled to enjoy, whether out of society or in it." 1 Bl. Com. 123. Among the absolute rights referred to by the commentator just cited is the right of personal security and the right of personal liberty. In the first is embraced a person's right to a "legal and uninterrupted enjoyment of his life, his limbs, his body, his health, and his reputation," and in the second is embraced "the power of locomotion, of changing situation, or moving one's person to whatsoever place one's own inclination may direct, without imprisonment or restraint, unless by due course of law." 1 Bl. Com. 129, 134.

While neither Sir William Blackstone nor any of the other writers on the principles of the common law have referred in terms to the right of privacy, the illustrations given by them as to what would be a violation of the absolute rights of individuals are not to be taken as exhaustive, but the language should be allowed to include any instance of a violation of such rights which is clearly within the true meaning and intent of the words used to declare the principle. When the law guarantees to one the right to the enjoyment of his life, it gives to him something more than the mere right to breathe and exist. While, of course, the most flagrant violation of this right would be deprivation of life, yet life itself may be spared, and the enjoyment of life entirely destroyed. An individual has a right to enjoy life in any way that may be most agreeable and pleasant to him, according to his temperament and nature, provided that in such enjoyment he does not invade the rights of his neighbor, or violate public law or policy. The right of personal security is not fully accorded by allowing an individual to go through life in possession of all of his members, and his body unmarred; nor is his right to personal liberty fully accorded by merely allowing him to remain out of jail, or free from other physical restraints. The liberty which he derives from natural law, and which is recognized by municipal law, embraces far more than freedom from physical restraint. The term "liberty" is not to be so dwarfed, "but is deemed to embrace the right of a man to be free in the enjoyment of the faculties with which he has been endowed by his Creator, subject only to such restraints as are necessary for the common welfare. 'Liberty,' in its broad sense, as understood in this country, means the right, not only of freedom from servitude, imprisonment, or restraint, but the right of one to use his faculties in all lawful ways, to live and work where he will, to earn his livelihood in any lawful calling, and to pursue any lawful trade or avocation." See Brannon, Fourteenth Amendment, 111. Liberty includes the right to live as one will, so long as that will does not interfere with the rights of another, or of the public. One may desire to live a life of seclusion; another may desire to live a life of publicity; still another may wish to live a life of privacy as to certain matters, and of publicity as to others. One may wish to live a life of toil, where his work is of a nature that keeps him constantly before the public gaze, while another may wish to live a life of research and contemplation, only moving before the public at such times and under such circumstances as may be necessary to his actual existence. Each is entitled to a liberty of choice as to his manner of life, and neither an individual nor the public has a right to arbitrarily take away from him this liberty. See, in this connection, Cyc. Law Dict. (Shumaker & Longsdorf), and Bouvier, Law Dict., title Liberty. All will admit that the individual who desires to live a life of seclusion cannot be compelled, against his consent, to exhibit his person in any public place, unless such exhibition is demanded by the law of the land. He may be required to come from his place of seclusion to perform public duties,—to serve as a juror, and to testify as a witness, and the like; but, when the public duty is once performed, if he exercises his liberty to go again into seclusion, no one can deny him the right. One who desires to live a life of partial seclusion has a right to choose the times, places, and manner in which and at which he will submit himself to the public gaze. Subject to the limitation above referred to, the body of a person cannot be put on exhibition at any time or at any place without his consent. The right of one to exhibit himself to the public at all proper times, in all proper places, and in a proper manner is embraced within the right of personal liberty. The right to withdraw from the public gaze at such times as a person may see fit, when his presence in public is not demanded by any rule of law, is also embraced within the right of personal liberty. Publicity in one instance, and privacy in the other, are each guaranteed. If personal liberty embraces the right of publicity, it no less embraces the correlative right of privacy: and this is no new idea in Georgia law. In Wallace v. Georgia, O. & N. R. Co. 14 Ga. 732, 22 S. E. 579, it was said: "Liberty of speech and of writing is secured by the Constitution, and incident thereto is the correlative liberty of silence, not less important nor less sacred." The right of privacy within certain limits is a right derived from natural law, recognized by the principles of municipal law, and guaranteed to persons in this state both by the Constitutions of the United States and of the state of Georgia, in those provisions which declare that no person shall be deprived of liberty except by due process of law.

While, in reaching the conclusion just stated, we have been deprived of the benefit of the light that would be shed on the question by decided cases and utterances of law writers directly dealing with the matter, we have been aided by many side lights in the law. The injuria of the Roman law, sometimes translated "injury," and at other times "outrage," and which is generally understood at this time to convey the idea of legal wrong, was held to embrace many acts resulting in damage for which the law would give redress. It embraced all of those wrongs which were the result of a direct invasion of the rights of the person and the rights of property which are enumerated in all of the commentaries on the common law, and which are so familiar to everyone at this time. But it included more. An outrage was committed, not only by striking with the fists or with the club or lash, but also by shouting until a crowd gathered around one, and it was an outrage or legal wrong to merely follow an honest woman or young boy or girl; and it was declared in unequivocal terms that these illustrations were not exhaustive, but that an injury or legal wrong was committed "by numberless other acts." Sanders, Justinian, Hammond's ed. 499; Poste's Inst. of Gaius, 3d ed. 449. The punishment of one who had not committed any assault upon another, or impeded in any way his right of locomotion, but who merely attracted public attention to the other as he was passing along a public highway or standing upon his private grounds, evidences the fact that the 69 L. R. A.

ancient law recognized that a person had a legal right "to be let alone," so long as he was not interfering with the rights of other individuals or of the public. This idea has been carried into the common law, and appears from time to time in various places; a conspicuous instance being in the case of private nuisances resulting from noise which interferes with one's enjoyment of his home, and this, too, where the noise is the result of the carrying on of a lawful occupation. Even in such cases where the noise is unnecessary, or is made at such times that one would have a right to quiet, the courts have interfered by injunction in behalf of the person complaining. See 2 Wood, Nuisances, 3d ed. pp. 827 et seq. It is true that these cases are generally based upon the ground that the noise is an invasion of a property right, but there is really no injury to the property, and the gist of the wrong is that the individual is disturbed in his right to have quiet. Under the Roman law, "to enter a man's house against his will, even to serve a summons, was regarded as an invasion of his privacy." Hunter, Roman Law, 3d ed. p. 149. This conception is the foundation of the common-law maxim that "every man's house is his castle;" and in Semayne's Case, 5 Coke, 91, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 228, where this maxim was applied, one of the points resolved was "that the house of everyone is to him as his castle and fortress, as well for his defense against injury and violence as for his repose." "Eavesdroppers, or such as listen under walls or windows or the eaves of a house to hearken after discourse, and thereupon to frame slanderous and mischievous tales," were a nuisance at common law, and indictable, and were required, in the discretion of the court, to find sureties for their good behavior. 4 Bl. Com. 168. The offense consisted in lingering about dwelling houses and other places where persons meet for private intercourse, and listening to what is said, and then tattling it abroad. 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 440. A common scold was at common law indictable as a public nuisance to her neighborhood. 4 Bl. Com. 168. And the reason for the punishment of such a character was not the protection of any property right of her neighbors, but the fact that her conduct was a disturbance of their right to quiet and repose; the offense being complete even when the party indicted committed it upon her own premises. Instances might be multiplied where the common law has both tacitly and expressly recognized the right of an individual to repose and privacy. The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, which is so fully protected both in the Constitutions of the United States and of this state (Civil Code 1895, §§ 6017, 5713), is not a right created by these instruments, but is an ancient right, which, on account of its gross violation at different times, was preserved from such attacks in the future by being made the subject of constitutional provisions. The right to search the papers or houses of another for the purpose of enforcing a claim of one individual against another in a civil proceeding, or in the maintenance of a mere private right, was never recognized at common law, but such search was confined entirely to cases of public prosecutions; and even in those cases the legality of the search was formerly doubted, and it has been said that it crept into the law by imperceptible practice. 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 145. The refusal to allow such search as an aid to the assertion of a mere private right, and its allowance sparingly to aid in maintaining the rights of the public, is an implied recognition of the existence of a right of privacy, for the law on the subject of unreasonable searches cannot be based upon any other principle than the right of a person to be secure from invasion by the public into matters of a private nature, which can only be properly termed his right of privacy.

The right of privacy, however, like every other right that rests in the individual, may be waived by him, or by anyone authorized by him, or by anyone whom the law empowers to act in his behalf, provided the effect of his waiver will not be such as to bring before the public those matters of a purely private nature which express law or public policy demands shall be kept private. This waiver may be either express or implied, but the existence of the waiver carries with it the right to an invasion of privacy only to such an extent as may be legitimately necessary and proper in dealing with the matter which has brought about the waiver. It may be waived for one purpose, and still asserted for another; it may be waived in behalf of one class, and retained as against another class; it may be waived as to one individual, and retained as against all other persons. The most striking illustration of a waiver is where one either seeks or allows himself to be presented as a candidate for public office. He thereby waives any right to restrain or impede the public in any proper investigation into the conduct of his private life which may throw light upon his qualifications for the office, or the advisability of imposing upon him the public trust which the office carries. But even in this case the waiver does not extend into those matters and transactions of private life which are wholly foreign, and can throw no light whatever upon the question as to his competency for the office, or the propriety of bestowing it upon him. One who holds public office makes a waiver of a similar character,—that is, that his life may be subjected at all times to the closest scrutiny in order to determine whether the rights of the public are safe in his hands,—but beyond this the waiver does not extend. So it is in reference to those belonging to the learned professions, who by their calling place themselves before the public, and thereby consent that their private lives may be scrutinized for the purpose of determining whether it is to the interest of those whose patronage they seek to place their interests in their hands. In short, any person who engages in any pursuit, or occupation, or calling, which calls for the approval or patronage of the public submits his private life to examination by those to whom he addresses his call, to any extent that may be necessary to determine whether it is wise and proper and expedient to accord to him the approval or patronage which he seeks.

It may be said that to establish a liberty of privacy would involve in numerous cases the perplexing question to determine where this liberty ended, and the rights of others and of the public began. This affords no reason for not recognizing the liberty of privacy, and giving to the person aggrieved legal redress against the wrongdoer, in a case where it is clearly shown that a legal wrong has been done. It may be that there will arise many cases which lay near the border line which marks the right of privacy, on the one hand, and the right of another individual or of the public, on the other. But this is true in regard to numerous other rights which the law recognizes as resting in the individual. In regard to cases that may arise under the right of privacy, as in cases that arise under other rights where the line of demarcation is to be determined, the safeguard of the individual, on the one hand, and of the public, on the other, is the wisdom and integrity of the judiciary. Each person has a liberty of privacy, and every other person has, as against him, liberty in reference to other matters, and the line where these liberties impinge upon each other may in a given case be hard to define; but that such a case may arise can afford no more reason for denying to one his liberty of privacy than it would to deny to another his liberty, whatever it may be. In every action for a tort it is necessary for the court to determine whether the right claimed has a legal existence, and for the jury to determine whether such right has been invaded, and to assess the damages if their finding is in favor of the plaintiff. This burden which rests upon the court in every case of the character referred to is all that will be imposed upon it in actions brought for a violation of the right of privacy. No greater difficulties will be encountered in such cases in determining the existence of the right than often will be encountered in determining the existence of other rights sought to be enforced by action. The courts may proceed in cases involving the violation of a right of privacy as in other cases of a similar nature, and the juries may in the same manner proceed to a determination of those questions which the law requires to be submitted for their consideration. With honest and fearless trial judges to pass in the first instance upon the question of law as to the existence of the right in each case, whose decisions are subject to review by the court of last resort, and with fair and impartial juries to pass upon the questions of fact involved, and assess the damages in the event of a recovery, whose verdict is, under our law, in all cases subject to supervision and scrutiny by the trial judge, within the limits of a legal discretion, there need be no more fear that the right of privacy will be the occasion of unjustifiable litigation, oppression, or wrong than that the existence of many other rights in the law would bring about such results.

The liberty of privacy exists, has been recognized by the law, and is entitled to continual recognition. But it must be kept within its proper limits, and in its exercise must be made to accord with the rights of those who have other liberties, as well as the rights of any person who may be properly interested in the matters which are claimed to be of purely private concern. Publicity in many cases is absolutely essential to the welfare of the public. Privacy in other matters is not only essential to the welfare of the individual, but also to the well-being of society. The law stamping the unbreakable seal of privacy upon communications between husband and wife, attorney and client, and similar provisions of the law, is a recognition, not only of the right of privacy, but that, for the public good, some matters of private concern are not to be made public, even with the consent of those interested.

It therefore follows from what has been said that a violation of the right of privacy is a direct invasion of a legal right of the individual. It is a tort, and it is not necessary that special damages should have accrued from its violation in order to entitle the aggrieved party to recover. Civil Code 1895, § 3807. In an action for an invasion of such right the damages to be recovered are those for which the law authorizes a recovery in torts of that character, and, if the law authorizes a recovery of damages for wounded feelings in other torts of a similar nature, such damages would be recoverable in an action for a violation of this right.

The stumbling block which many have encountered in the way of a recognition of the existence of a right of privacy has been that the recognition of such right would inevitably tend to curtail the liberty of speech and of the press. The right to speak and the right of privacy have been coexistent. Each is a natural right, each exists, and each must be recognized and enforced with due respect for the other. The right to convey one's thoughts by writing or printing grows out of, but does not enlarge in any way, the natural right of speech. It simply authorizes one to take advantage of those mediums of expression which the ingenuity of man has contrived for broadening and making more effective the influences of that which was formerly confined to mere oral utterances. The right to speak and write and print has been at different times in the world's history seriously invaded by those who, for their own selfish purposes, desired to take away from others such privileges, and consequently these rights have been made the subject of provisions in the Constitutions of the United States and of this state. The Constitution of the United States prohibits Congress from passing any law "abridging the freedom of speech or of the press." Civil Code 1895, § 6014. The Constitution of this state declares: "No law shall ever be passed to curtail or restrain the liberty of speech or of the press." Civil Code 1895, § 5712. Judge Cooley says: "The constitutional liberty of speech and of the press, as we understand it, implies a right to freely utter and publish whatever the citizen may please, and to be protected against any responsibility for so doing, except so far as such publications, from their blasphemy, obscenity, or scandalous character, may be a public offense, or as by their falsehood and malice they may injuriously affect the standing, reputation, or pecuniary interests of individuals. Or, to state the same thing in somewhat different words, we understand liberty of speech and of the press to imply, not only liberty to publish, but complete immunity from legal censure and punishment for the publication, so long as it is not harmful in its character, when tested by such standards as the law affords. For these standards we must look to the common-law rules which were in force when the constitutional guaranties were established, and in reference to which they have been adopted." Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. p. 521. In King v. St. Asaph, 3 T. R. 428, note, Lord Mansfield said: "The liberty of the press consists in printing without any previous license, subject to the consequence of law." Chancellor Kent, while judge of the supreme court of New York, 394, People v. Croswell, 3 Johns. Cas. 337, 394, Appx., adopted as a definition of the phrase "liberty of the press" what was said by Gen. Hamilton in his brief in that case, where it was set forth that "the liberty of the press consists in the right to publish, with impunity, truth, with good motives, and for justifiable ends, whether it respects government, magistracy, or individuals;" and the learned jurist declared that this definition was perfectly correct, comprehensive, and accurate. Mr. Justice Story defined the phrase to mean "that every man shall have a right to speak, write, and print his opinions upon any subject whatsoever, without any prior restraint, so, always, that he does not injure any other person in his rights, person, property, or reputation, and so, always, that he does not thereby disturb the public peace or attempt to subvert the government." 2 Story, Const. § 1880. See also 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1125.

The Constitution of this state declares what is meant by "liberty of speech" and "liberty of the press" in the following words: "Any person may speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty." Civil Code 1895, § 5712. The right preserved and guaranteed against invasion by the Constitution is therefore the right to utter, to write, and to print one's sentiments, subject only to the limitation that in so doing he shall not be guilty of an abuse of this privilege, by invading the legal rights of others. The Constitution uses the word "sentiments," but it is used in the sense of thoughts, ideas, opinions. To make intelligent, forceful, and effective an expression of opinion, it may be necessary to refer to the life, conduct, and character of a person; and, so long as the truth is adhered to, the right of privacy of another cannot be said to have been invaded by one who speaks, or writes, or prints, provided the reference to such person, and the manner in which he is referred to, is reasonably and legitimately proper in an expression of opinion on the subject that is under investigation. It will therefore be seen that the right of privacy must in some particulars yield to the right of speech and of the press. It is well recognized that slander is an abuse of the liberty of speech, and that a libel is an abuse of the liberty to write and print; but it is nowhere expressly declared in the law that these are the only abuses of such rights. And that the law makes the truth in suits for slander and in prosecutions and suits for libel a complete defense may not necessariety make the publication of the truth the legal right of every person, nor prevent it from being in some cases a legal wrong. The truth may be spoken, written, or printed about all matters of a public nature, as well as matters of a private nature in which the public has a legitimate interest. The truth may be uttered and printed in reference to the life, character, and conduct of individuals whenever it is necessary to the full exercise of the right to express one's sentiments on any and all subjects that may be proper matter for discussion. But there may arise cases where the speaking or printing of the truth might be considered an abuse of the liberty of speech and of the press, as in a case where matters of purely private concern, wholly foreign to a legitimate expression of opinion on the subject under discussion, are injected into the discussion for no other purpose and with no other motive than to annoy and harass the individual referred to. Such cases might be of rare occurrence, but, if such should arise, the party aggrieved may not be without a remedy. The right of privacy is unquestionably limited by the right to speak and print. It may be said that to give liberty of speech and of the press such a wide scope as has been indicated would impose a very serious limitation upon the right of privacy, but, if it does, it is due to the fact that the law considers that the welfare of the public is better subserved by maintaining the liberty of speech and of the press than by allowing an individual to assert his right of privacy in such a way as to interfere with the free expression of one's sentiments, and the publication of every matter in which the public may be legitimately interested. In many cases the law required the individual to surrender some of his natural and private rights for the benefit of the public, and this is true in reference to some phases of the right of privacy as well as other legal rights. Those to whom the right to speak and write and print is guaranteed must not abuse this right; nor must one in whom the right of privacy exists abuse this right. The law will no more permit an abuse by the one than by the other. Liberty of speech and of the press is and has been a useful instrument to keep the individual within limits of lawful, decent, and proper conduct; and the right of privacy may be well used within its proper limits to keep those who speak and write and print within the legitimate bounds of the constitutional guaranties of such rights. One may be used as a check upon the other, but neither can be lawfully used for the other's destruction.

There is nothing in the ruling made in the present case to conflict with the decision in Chapman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 88 Ga. 783, 17 L. R. A. 430, 30 Am. St. Rep. 183, 15 S. E. 901. It was held in that case that in an action against a telegraph company for a failure to deliver a message in due time, and thereby preventing the sender from going to bedside of his sick brother, damages on account of mental pain and suffering could not be recovered. The effect of that decision is simply that in an action upon a contract, or in an action sounding in tort for a breach of duty growing out of the contract, damages for mental pain and suffering cannot be recovered, when no other damages have been sustained. Mr. Justice Lumpkin, in his opinion, distinctly recognizes that where there has been an invasion of a right, from which the law would presume damages to flow, additional damages for pain and suffering might be recovered.

It seems that the first case in this country where the right of privacy was invoked as the foundation for an application to the courts for relief was the unreported case of Manola v. Stevens, which was an application for injunction to the supreme court of New York, filed on June 15, 1890. The complainant alleged that while she was playing in the Broadway Theatre, dressed as required by her role, she was, by means of a flash light, photographed surreptitiously and without her consent, from one of the boxes, by the defendant, and she prayed that an injunction issue to restrain the use of the photograph. An interlocutory injunction was granted ex parte. At the time set for a hearing there was no appearance for the defendant, and the injunction was made permanent. See 4 Harvard Law Rev. 195, note 7. The article in this magazine which refers to the case above mentioned appeared in 1890, and was written by Samuel D. Warren and Louis D. Brandeis. In it the authors ably and forcefully maintained the existence of a right of privacy, and the article attracted much attention at the time. It was conceded by the authors that there was no decided case in which the right of privacy was distinctly asserted and recognized, but it was asserted that there were many cases from which it would appear that this right really existed, although the judgment in each case was put upon other grounds when the plaintiff was granted the relief prayed. The cases especially referred to were Yovatt v. Wingard (1820) 1 Jac. & W. 394; Abernethy v. Hutchinson (1825) 3 L. J. Ch. 209; Prince Albert v. Strange (1849) 2 De G. & S. 652; Tuck v. Priestler (1887) L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 639; Pollard v. Photographic Co. (1888) L. R. 40 Ch. Div. 345. The first three of these cases related respectively to the publication of recipes, writings, and etchings, which the complainant in each case alleged were either published, or about to be published, without his consent; and an injunction was granted in the first case upon the ground that the publication of the recipes was the result of the breach of trust and confidence, and in the other two cases upon this ground as well as upon the ground that the complainant had a property right in the writings and etchings. The Tuck and Pollard Cases dealt with the publication of pictures; the former being where one was employed to make copies of a picture owned by the plaintiff, and the latter where a photographer was employed to take a photograph of the complainant; the defendant in each instance being about to use the copies in his possession without the consent of the plaintiff. An injunction was granted in the Tuck Case on the ground that the sale of the copies would be a breach of contract, and in the Pollard Case the decision was rested upon the right of property, although a finding that the publication would be a breach of contract and of trust was authorized. Attention is called to the fact that in Prince Albert's Case [1 Macn. & G. 25] while the decision was put upon the ground above stated, Lord Cottenham declared that, with respect to the acts of the defendants, "privacy is the right invaded."

It must be conceded that the numerous cases decided before 1890 in which equity has interfered to restrain the publication of letters, writings, papers, etc., have all been based either upon the recognition of a right of property, or upon the fact that the publication would be a breach of contract, confidence, or trust. It is well settled that, if any contract or property right or trust relation has been violated, damages are recoverable. There are many cases which sustain such a doctrine. Cases involving the right of privacy that have arisen since 1890 will now be considered:

In Mackenzie v. Soden Mineral Springs Co. (1891) 27 Abb. N. C. 402, 18 N. Y. Supp. 240, an injunction was granted by the New York supreme court, special term, at the instance of a physician, to restrain the publication of an unauthorized recommendation of a medicinal preparation under his name, upon the grounds that such publication would be injurious to his professional reputation, and "an infringement of his right to the sole use of his own name," and prejudicial to public interest. While this case was not based upon the right of privacy, that right was impliedly recognized.

The first reported case in which the right of privacy was expressly recognized was the case of Schuyler v. Curtis (1891) 27 Abb.

N. C. 387, 15 N. Y. Supp. 787, where Justice O'Brien, of the supreme court of New York, granted an injunction to restrain the making and public exhibition of a statue of a deceased person, upon the ground that it was not shown that she was a public character. This judgment was affirmed by the supreme court, general term, by Van Brunt and Barrett, JJ., in an opinion by the former, in which the rule was laid down that a person, whether a public character or not, has a right to enjoin the making and placing on exhibition of his statue, and, he being dead, a relative has this right. 64 Hun, 594, 19 N. Y. Supp. 264. When the case came before the supreme court, special term, in 1893, the judgment of the general term was followed, and in an opinion by Ingraham, J., the rule was announced that a court of equity, at the instance of one of the relatives of a deceased person, will enjoin the making and placing on public exhibition of a statue of the deceased by unauthorized persons, which the complaining relatives unite in alleging will cause them pain and distress, and will be considered by them a disgrace; and this, too, whether or not the court be of the opinion that the proposed representation should produce the alleged effect, and that such unauthorized act is not within the provision of the state Constitution which secures to each person the right to freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects. 30 Abb. N. C. 376, 24 N. Y. Supp. 509. The statue which it was proposed to exhibit was in no sense a caricature, and the exhibition of the same would not have been a libel upon the deceased.

In 1893, in Marks v. Jaffa, 6 Misc. 290, 26 N. Y. Supp. 908, an injunction was granted by the superior court of New York city, special term, to restrain the publication of a picture of the plaintiff in the defendant's newspaper, with an invitation to the readers of the paper to vote on the question of the popularity of the plaintiff, as compared with another person, whose picture was also published in such newspaper. McAdam, J., in the opinion said: "No newspaper or institution, no matter how worthy, has the right to use the name or picture of anyone for such a purpose without his consent." The decision was apparently based upon the case of Schuyler v. Curtis, above referred to.

In 1893 an application was made to Judge Colt, of the United States circuit court for the district of Massachusetts, by the widow and children of George H. Corliss, to enjoin the publication and sale of a biographical sketch of Mr. Corliss, and from printing and selling his picture in connection therewith. The bill did not allege that the publication contained any matter which was scandalous, libelous, or false, or that it affected any right of property, but the relief was prayed upon the ground that the publication was an injury to the feelings of the plaintiffs, and against their express prohibition. An injunction was refused as to the biography on the ground that Mr. Corliss was a public man, in the same sense as authors or artists are public men; but an injunction was granted as to the publication of the picture upon the ground that the publisher had obtained a copy of the photograph upon certain conditions, and the publication would be a violation of those conditions. Subsequently a motion was made to dissolve the injunction on the ground that the photograph from which the copies were made was not obtained in the manner above referred to, but from a copy which was obtained in a lawful way; and the injunction was dissolved upon the ground that neither a public character, nor his family after his death, has a right to enjoin the publication of his portrait, when the publication would not be a violation of a contract or a breach of trust or confidence. Judge Colt, in the opinion, uses this language: "Independently of the question of contract, I believe the law to be that a private individual has a right to be protected in the representation of his portrait in any form, that this is a property, as well as a personal, right, and that it belongs to the same class of rights which forbids the reproduction of a private manuscript or painting, or the publication of private letters, or of oral lectures delivered by a teacher to his class, or the revelation of the contents of a merchant's books by a clerk." Corliss v. E. W. Walker Co. 31 L. R. A. 283, 57 Fed. 434, 64 Fed. 280. It is to be noted that the ruling in this case goes no further than that a public character has so waived his right of privacy, if he ever had it, as to authorize the publication of his life and his picture, not only without his consent, but also without the consent of his family after his death, when there is nothing in the biography or the picture which will reflect discredit upon the subject.

In 1894, in Murray v. Gast Lithographic & Engraving Co. 8 Misc. 36, 28 N. Y. Supp. 271,—a case decided by the court of common pleas of New York city and county,—it was held that a person cannot sue to enjoin the publication of a portrait of his infant child, or for damages caused thereby. This decision was undoubtedly correct, for, if there was any right to sue for a violation of the right of privacy, the cause of action was in the child, and not in the parent.

In 1895 the case of Schuyler v. Curtis reached the court of appeals of New York, and the judgment of the lower court was reversed. 147 N. Y. 436, 31 L. R. A. 286, 49 Am. St. Rep. 671, 42 N. E. 22. It was held that, if any right of privacy, in so far as it includes the right to prevent the public from making pictures or statues commemorative of the worth and services of the subject, exists at all, it does not survive after death, and cannot be enforced by the relatives of the deceased. The opinion was delivered by Judge Peckham, in the course of which he uses this language: "If the defendants had projected such a work in the lifetime of Mrs. Schuyler, it would, perhaps, have been a violation of her individual right of privacy, because it might be contended that she had never occupied such a position towards the public as would have authorized such action by anyone so long as it was in opposition to her wishes." Judge Gray dissented, saying in his opinion: "I cannot see why the right of privacy is not a form of property, as much as is the right of complete immunity of one's person." This case settles nothing as to the existence of a right of privacy, but merely rules that, if it exists at all, it is a personal right, and dies with the person.

In Atkinson v. John E. Doherty & Co. 121 Mich. 372, 46 L. R. A. 219, 80 Am. St. Rep. 507, 80 N. W. 285,—a case decided in 1899,—the supreme court of Michigan held that the use of the name and likeness of a deceased person as a label for a brand of cigars cannot be restrained by injunction, so long as they do not constitute a libel. Many, if not at all, the cases above referred to, in reference to the right of privacy, are mentioned and reviewed in this case. While this decision apparently lays down the broad proposition that the right of privacy does not exist to such an extent as to prohibit one from publishing the picture of another without his consent, in reality the only question necessary to have been decided was whether this right of privacy was personal, and died with the person; and therefore the decision, on its facts, is authoritative no further than the decision of the New York court of appeals in Schuyler v. Curtis. While the right of privacy is personal, and may die with the person, we do not desire to be understood as assenting to the proposition that the relatives of the deceased cannot, in a proper case, protect the memory of their kinsman, not only from defamation, but also from an invasion into the affairs of his private life after his death. This question is not now involved, but we do not wish anything said to be understood as committing us in any way to the doctrine that, against the consent of relatives, the private affairs of a deceased person may be published, and his picture or statue exhibited. We call attention to the ruling in Jacobus v. Congregation of Children of Israel, 107 Ga. 518, 73 Am. St. Rep. 141, 33 S. E. 853, that damages may be recovered by the relative of a deceased person, who is the owner of an easement of burial in a cemetery lot, for the disinterment of the dead body, and that, if the injury has been wanton and malicious, or the result of gross negligence and a reckless disregard of the rights of others, exemplary damages may be awarded, in estimating which the injury to the natural feelings of the plaintiff may be taken into consideration. If damages for wounded feelings can be recovered in such a case for the wanton removal of the bleaching bones of the deceased relative, it would seem, for a stronger reason, that such damages ought to be allowed to be recovered when those matters which the deceased had jealously guarded from the public during his lifetime, and his portrait, which was likewise protected from the public gaze, are made public property after his death.

In Roberson v. Rochester Folding Box Co. (1901) 64 App. Div. 30, 71 N. Y. Supp. 876, decided by the appellate division of the supreme court of New York, it appeared that lithographic likenesses of a young woman, bearing the words "Flour of the Family," were, without her consent, printed and used by a flour-milling company to advertise its goods. The declaration alleged that in consequence of the circulation of such lithographs the plaintiff's good name had been attacked, and she had been greatly humiliated and made sick, and been obliged to employ a physician, and prayed for an injunction against the further use of the lithographs, and for damages. It was held that the declaration was not demurrable. It was also held that, if a right of property was necessary to entitle the plaintiff to maintain the action, the case might stand upon the right of property which everyone has in his own body. This case came before the court of appeals of New York in 1902, and the judgment was reversed. 171 N. Y. 540, 59 L. R. A. 478, 89 Am. St. Rep. 828, 64 N. E. 442. This is the first and only decision by a court of last resort involving the existence of a right of privacy. The decision was by a divided court; Chief Judge Parker and three of the associate judges concurring in a ruling that the complaint set forth no cause of action, either at law or in equity, while Judge Gray, with whom concurred two of the associate judges, filed a dissenting opinion, in which it was maintained that the injunction should have been granted. While the ruling of the majority is limited in its effect to the unwarranted publication of the picture of another for advertising purposes, the reasoning of Judge Parker goes, to the extent of denying the existence in the law of a right of privacy, "founded upon the claim that a man has the right to pass through this world . . . without having his picture published, his business enterprises discussed, . . . or his eccentricities commented upon, . . . whether the comment be favorable or otherwise." The reasoning of the majority is, in substance, that there is no decided case, either in England or in this country, in which such a right is distinctly recognized; that every case that might be relied on to establish the right was placed expressly upon other grounds, not involving the application of this right in any sense; that the right is not referred to by the commentators and writers upon the common law or the principles of equity; that the existence of the right is not to be legitimately inferred from anything that is said by any of such writers; and that a recognition of the existence of the right would bring about a vast amount of litigation; and that in many instances where the right would be asserted it would be difficult, if not impossible, to determine the line of demarcation between the plaintiff's right of privacy and the well-established rights of others and of the public. For these reasons the conclusion is reached that the right does not exist, has never existed, and cannot be enforced as a legal right. We have no fault to find with what is said by the distinguished and learned judge who voiced the views of the majority as to the existence of decided cases, and agree with him in his analysis of the various cases which he reviews,—that the judgment in each was based upon other grounds than the existence of a right of privacy. We also agree with him so far as he asserts that the writers upon the common law and the principles of equity do not in express terms refer to this right. But we are utterly at variance with him in his conclusion that the existence of this right cannot be legitimately inferred from what has been said by commentators upon the legal rights of individuals, and from expressions which have fallen from judges in their reasoning in cases where the exercise of the right was not directly involved. So far as the judgment in the case is based upon the argument ab inconvenienti, all that is necessary to be said is that this argument has no place in the case if the right invoked has an existence in the law. But if it were proper to use this argument at all, it could be said with great force that as to certain matters the individual feels and knows that he has a right to exercise the liberty of privacy, and that he has a right to resent any invasion of this liberty, and, if the law will not protect him against invasion, the individual will, to protect himself and those to whom he owes protection, use those weapons with which nature has provided him, as well as those which the ingenuity of man has placed within his reach. Thus the peace and good order of society would be disturbed by each individual becoming a law unto himself to determine when and under what circumstances he should avenge the outrage which has been perpetrated upon him or a member of his family. The true lawyer, when called to the discharge of judicial functions, has in all times, as a general rule, displayed remarkable conservatism; and, wherever it was legally possible to base a judgment upon principles which had been recognized by a long course of judicial decision, this has been done, in preference to applying a principle which might be considered novel. It was for this reason that the numerous cases, both in England and in this country, which really protected the right of privacy, were not placed upon the existence of this right, but were allowed to rest upon principles derived from the law of property, trust, and contract. Any candid mind will, however, be compelled to concede that, in order to give relief in many of those cases, it required a severe strain to bring them within the recognized rules which were sought to be applied. The desire to avoid the novelty of recognizing a principle which had not been theretofore recognized was avoided in such cases by the novelty of straining a well-recognized principle to cover a state of facts to which it had never before been applied. This conservatism of the judiciary has sometimes unconsciously led judges to the conclusion that, because the case was novel, the right claimed did not exist. With all due respect to Chief Judge Parker and his associates who concurred with him, we think the conclusion reached by them was the result of an unconscious yielding to the feeling of conservatism which naturally arises in the mind of a judge who faces a proposition which is novel. The valuable influence upon society and upon the welfare of the public of the conservatism of the lawyer, whether at the bar or upon the bench, cannot be overestimated; but this conservatism should not go to the extent of refusing to recognize a right which the instincts of nature prove to exist, and which nothing in judicial decision, legal history, or writings upon the law can be called to demonstrate its nonexistence as a legal right.

We think that what should have been a proper judgment in the Roberson Case was that contended for by Judge Gray in his dissenting opinion, from which we quote as follows:

"The right of privacy, or the right of the individual to be let alone, is a personal right, which is not without judicial recognition. It is the complement of the right to the immunity of one's person. The individual has always been entitled to be protected in the exclusive use and enjoyment of that which is his own. The common law regarded his person and property as inviolate, and he has the absolute right to be let alone. Cooley, Torts, p. 29. The principle is fundamental and essential in organized society that everyone, in exercising a personal right and in the use of his property, shall respect the rights and properties of others. He must so conduct himself, in the enjoyment of the rights and privileges which belong to him as a member of society, as that he shall prejudice no one in the possession and enjoyment of those which are exclusively his. When, as here, there is an alleged invasion of some personal right or privilege, the absence of exact precedent, and the fact that early commentators upon the common law have no discussion upon the subject, are of no material importance in awarding equitable relief. That the exercise of the preventive power of a court of equity is demanded in a novel case is not a fatal objection. . . .

"As I have suggested, that the exercise of this peculiar preventive power of a court of equity is not found in some precisely analogous case furnishes no valid objection at all to the assumption of jurisdiction, if the particular circumstances of the case show the performance, or the threatened performance, of an act by a defendant which is wrongful, because constituting an invasion, in some novel form, of a right to something which is, or should be, conceded to be the plaintiff's, and as to which the law provides no adequate remedy. It would be a justifiable exercise of power, whether the principle of interference be rested upon analogy to some established common-law principle, or whether it is one of natural justice. . . .

"Instantaneous photography is a modern invention, and affords the means of securing a portraiture of an individual's face and form in invitum their owner. While, so far forth as it merely does that, although a species of aggression, I concede it to be an irremediable and irrepressible feature of the social evolution. But if it is to be permitted that the portraiture may be put to commercial or other uses for gain, by the publication of prints therefrom, then an act of invasion of the individual's privacy results, possibly more formidable and more painful in its consequences than an actual bodily assault might be. Security of person is as necessary as the security of property, and for that complete personal security which will result in the peaceful and wholesome enjoyment of one's privileges as a member of society there should be afforded protection, not only against the scandalous portraiture and display of one's features and person, but against the display and use thereof for another's commercial purposes or gain. The proposition is to me an inconceivable one that these defendants may unauthorizedly use the likeness of this young woman upon their advertisement as a method of attracting widespread public attention to their wares, and that she must submit to the mortifying notoriety, without right to invoke the exercise of the preventive power of a court of equity. Such a view, as it seems to me, must have been unduly influenced by a failure to find precedents in analogous cases, or some declaration by the great commentators upon the law of a common-law principle which would precisely apply to and govern the action, without taking into consideration that, in the existing state of society, new conditions affecting the relations of persons demand the broader extension of those legal principles which underlie the immunity of one's person from attack. I think that such a view is unduly restricted, too, by a search for some property which has been invaded by the defendants' acts. Property is not necessarily the thing itself which is owned. It is the right of the owner in relation to it. The right to be protected in one's possession of a thing, or in one's privileges belonging to him as an individual, or secured to him as a member of the commonwealth, is property, and, as such, entitled to the protection of the law. The protective power of equity is not exercised upon the tangible thing, but upon the right to enjoy it, and so it is called forth for the protection of the right to that which is one's exclusive possession, as a property right. It seems to me that the principle which is applicable is analogous to that upon which courts of equity have interfered to protect the right of privacy in cases of private writings, or of other unpublished products of the mind. . . .

"I think that this plaintiff has the same property in the right to be protected against the use of her face for defendants' commercial purposes as she would have if they were publishing her literary compositions. The right would be conceded if she had sat for her photograph, but, if her face or her portraiture has a value, the value is hers exclusively until the use be granted away to the public. Any other principle of decision, in my opinion, is as repugnant to equity as it is shocking to reason. . . .

"The right to grant the injunction does not depend upon the existence of the property which one has in some contractual form. It depends upon the existence of property in any right which belongs to a person. . . .

"It would be, in my opinion, an extraordinary view, which, while conceding the right of a person to be protected against the unauthorized circulation of an unpublished lecture, letter, drawing, or other ideal property, yet would deny the same protection to a person whose portrait was unauthorizedly obtained and made use of for commercial purposes. The injury to the plaintiff is irreparable, because she cannot be wholly compensated in damages for the various consequences entailed by defendants' acts. The only complete relief is an injunction restraining their continuance. Whether, as incidental to that equitable relief, she should be able to recover only nominal damages, is not material, for the issuance of the injunction does not, in such a case, depend upon the amount of the damages, in dollars and cents."

The effect of the reasoning of the learned judge whose words have just been quoted is to establish conclusively the correctness of the conclusion which we have reached, and we prefer to adopt as our own his reasoning, in his own words, rather than to paraphrase them into our own.

The decision of the court of appeals of New York in the Roberson Case gave rise to numerous articles in the different law magazines of high standing in the country,—some by the editors and others by contributors. In some the conclusion of the majority of the court was approved, in others the views of the dissenting judges were commended, and in still others the case and similar cases were referred to as apparently establishing that the claim of the majority was correct, but regret was expressed that the necessity was such that the courts could not recognize the right asserted. An editorial in the American Law Review (volume 36, p. 636) said: "The decision under review shocks and wounds the ordinary sense of justice of mankind. We have heard it alluded to only in terms of regret." There were also articles referring to other cases cited which deal with the question as to the existence of a right of privacy. See 36 Am. Law Rev. 614, 634; 34 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 134; 41 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 669; 1 Col. Law Rev. 491; 2 Col. Law Rev. 437; 44 Alb. L. J. 428; 55 Cent. L. J. 123; 57 Cent. L. J. 361. See also North American Review (September, 1902), 361; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1311; note to Roberson 69 L. R. A.

v. Rochester Folding Box Co. 89 Am. St. Rep. 844; note to Corliss v. E. W. Walker Co. 31 L. R. A. 283. Articles on the subject of the right of privacy have also appeared in 12 Yale L. J. 35; 24 Nat. Corp. Rep. 709; 25 Nat. Corp. Rep. 183, 415; 6 Law Notes, 79; and Case and Comment; 36 Chicago Legal News, 126 (July, 1902); but these articles were not accessible to us at the time this opinion was written.

As we have already said, cases may arise where it is difficult to determine on which side of the line of demarcation which separates the right of privacy from the well-established rights of others they are to be found; but we have little difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that the present case is one in which it has been established that the right of privacy has been invaded, and invaded by one who cannot claim exemption under the constitutional guaranties of freedom of speech and of the press. The form and features of the plaintiff are his own. The defendant insurance company and its agent had no more authority to display them in public for the purpose of advertising the business in which they were engaged than they would have had to compel the plaintiff to place himself upon exhibition for this purpose. The latter procedure would have been unauthorized and unjustifiable, as everyone will admit, and the former was equally an invasion of the rights of his person. Nothing appears from which it is to be inferred that the plaintiff has waived his right to determine himself where his picture should be displayed in favor of the advertising right of the defendants. The mere fact that he is an artist does not of itself establish a waiver of this right, so that his picture might be used for advertising purposes. If he displayed in public his works as an artist, he would, of course, subject his works and his character as an artist, and possibly his character and conduct as a man, to such scrutiny and criticism as would be legitimate and proper to determine whether he was entitled to rank as an artist, and should be accorded recognition as such by the public. But it is by no means clear that even this would have authorized the publication of his picture. The constitutional right to speak and print does not necessarily carry with it the right to reproduce the form and features of man. The plaintiff was in no sense a public character, even if a different rule in regard to the publication of one's picture should be applied to such characters. It is not necessary in this case to hold—nor are we prepared to do so—that the mere fact that a man has become what is called a public character, either by aspiring to public office, or by holding public office, or by exercising a profession which places him before the public, or by engaging in a business which has necessarily a public nature, gives to everyone the right to print and circulate his picture. To use the language of Hooker, J., in Atkinson v. John E. Doherty & Co. 121 Mich. 372, 46 L. R. A. 219, 80 Am. St. Rep. 507, 80 N. W. 285: "We are loath to believe that the man who makes himself useful to mankind surrenders any right to privacy thereby, or that, because he permits his picture to be published by one person and for one purpose, he is forever thereafter precluded from enjoying any of his rights." It may be that the aspirant for public office, or one in official position, impliedly consents that the public may gaze, not only upon him, but upon his picture, but we are not prepared now to hold that even this is true. It would seem to us that even the President of the United States, in the lofty position which he occupies, has some rights in reference to matters of this kind which he does not forfeit by aspiring to or accepting the highest office within the gift of the people of the several states. While no person who has ever held this position, and probably no person who has ever held public office, has even objected, or ever will object, to the reproduction of his picture in reputable newspapers, magazines, and periodicals, still it cannot be that the mere fact that a man aspires to public office or holds public office subjects him to the humiliation and mortification of having his picture displayed in places where he would never go to be gazed upon, at times when, and under circumstances where, if he were personally present, the sensibilities of his nature would be severely shocked. If one's picture may be used by another for advertising purposes, it may be reproduced and exhibited anywhere. If it may be used in a newspaper, it may be used on a poster or a placard. It may be posted upon the walls of private dwellings or upon the streets. It may ornament the bar of the saloon keeper or decorate the walls of a brothel. By becoming a member of society neither man nor woman can be presumed to have consented to such uses of the impression of their faces and features upon paper or upon canvas. The conclusion reached by us seems to be so thoroughly in accord with natural justice, with the principles of the law of every civilized nation, and especially with the elastic principles of the common law, and so thoroughly in harmony with those principles as molded under the influence of American institutions, that it seems strange to us that not only four of the judges of one of the most distinguished and learned courts of the Union, but also lawyers of learning and ability, have found 69 L. R. A.

an insurmountable stumbling block in the path that leads to a recognition of the right which would give to persons like the plaintiff in this case and the young woman in the Roberson Case redress for the legal wrong, or what is by some of the law writers called the outrage, perpetrated by the unauthorized use of their pictures for advertising purposes.

What we have ruled cannot be in any sense construed as an abridgment of the liberty of speech and of the press as guaranteed in the Constitution. Whether the reproduction of a likeness of another which is free from caricature can in any sense be declared to be an exercise of the right to publish one's sentiments, certain it is that one who, merely for advertising purposes, and from mercenary motives, publishes the likeness of another without his consent, cannot be said, in so doing, to have exercised the right to publish his sentiments. The publication of a good likeness of another, accompanying a libelous article, would give a right of action. The publication of a caricature is generally, if not always, a libel. Whether the right to print a good likeness of another is an incident to a right to express one's sentiments in reference to a subject with which the person whose likeness is published is connected, is a question upon which we cannot, under the present record, make any authoritative decision; but it would seem that a holding that the publication of a likeness under such circumstances without the consent of the person whose likeness is published would be giving to the word "sentiment" a very extended meaning. The use of a pen portrait might be allowable in some cases where the use of an actual portrait was not permissible. There is in the publication of one's picture for advertising purposes not the slightest semblance of an expression of an idea, a thought, or an opinion, within the meaning of the constitutional provision which guarantees to a person the right to publish his sentiments on any subject. Such conduct is not embraced within the liberty to print, but is a serious invasion of one's right of privacy, and may in many cases, according to the circumstances of the publication and the uses to which it is put, cause damages to flow which are irreparable in their nature. The knowledge that one's features and form are being used for such a purpose, and displayed in such places as such advertisements are often liable to be found, brings not only the person of an extremely sensitive nature, but even the individual of ordinary sensibility, to a realization that his liberty has been taken away from him; and, as long as the advertiser uses him for these purposes, he cannot be otherwise than conscious of the fact that he is for the time being under the control of another, that he is no longer free, and that he is in reality a slave, without hope of freedom, held to service by a merciless master; and if a man of true instincts, or even of ordinary sensibilities, no one can be more conscious of his enthrallment than he is.

So thoroughly satisfied are we that the law recognizes, within proper limits, as a legal right, the right of privacy, and that the publication of one's picture without his consent by another as an advertisement, for the mere purpose of increasing the profits and gains of the advertiser, is an invasion of this right, that we venture to predict that the day will come that the American bar will marvel that a contrary view was ever entertained by judges of eminence and ability, just as in the present day we stand amazed that Lord Coke should have combated with all the force of his vigorous nature the proposition that the court of chancery had jurisdiction to entertain an application for injunction to restrain the enforcement of a common-law judgment which had been obtained by fraud, and that Lord Hale, with perfect composure of manner and complete satisfaction of soul, imposed the death penalty for witchcraft upon ignorant and harmless women.

13-15. It is now to be determined whether what may be called the first count in the petition set forth a cause of action for libel, as against a general demurrer. The publication did not mention the plaintiff's name, but it did contain a likeness of him that his friends and acquaintances would readily recognize as his, and the words of the publication printed under the likeness were put into the mouth of him whose likeness was published. It was, so far as his friends and acquaintances were concerned, the same as if his name had been signed to the printed words. In these words he was made to say, in effect, that he had secured insurance with the defendant company; that on this account his family were protected, and he was receiving an income from an annual dividend on paid-up policies. These words are harmless in themselves. Standing alone, they contain nothing, and carry no inference of anything that is disgraceful, to be ashamed of, or calculated to bring one into reproach. When, in an action for libel, the words declared on are harmless in themselves, and the petition alleges no extrinsic fact which would show that the words might be taken in other than their ordinary sense, a cause of action for a libel is not sufficiently set forth. Stewart v. Wilson, 23 Minn. 449. If, in the light of extrinsic facts, words apparently harmless are such as to convey to the mind of the reader who is acquainted with the extrinsic facts a meaning which will be calculated to expose the person about whom the words are used to contempt or ridicule, then such harmless words become libelous, and an action is well brought, although no special damages may be alleged. Behre v. National Cash Register Co. 100 Ga. 213, 62 Am. St. Rep. 320, 27 S. E. 986; Holmes v. Clisby, 118 Ga. 823, 45 S. E. 684; Central R. Co. v. Sheftall, 118 Ga. 865, 45 S. E. 687.

It is alleged that the plaintiff did not have, and never had had, a policy of insurance with the defendant company, and that this fact was known to his friends and acquaintances. In the light of these allegations, the words attributed to the plaintiff become absolutely false, and those who are acquainted with the facts, upon reading the statement, would naturally ask, "For what purpose was this falsehood written?" It was either gratuitous, or it was for a consideration; and, whichever conclusion might be reached, the person to whom the words were attributed would become contemptible in the mind of the reader. He would become at once a self-confessed liar. If he lied gratuitously, he would receive and merit the contempt of all persons having a correct conception of moral principles. If he lied for a consideration, he would become odious to every decent individual. See Colvard v. Black, 110 Ga. 643, 36 S. E. 80. It seems clear to us that a jury could find from the facts alleged that the publication, in the light of the extrinsic facts, was libelous, and the plaintiff was entitled to have this question submitted to the jury. Beazley v. Reid, 68 Ga. 380; Holmes v. Clisby, 121 Ga. 241, 104 Am. St. Rep. 103, 48 S. E. 934.

16. Having reached the conclusion that each count in the petition set forth a cause of action as against a general demurrer, it remains now to be determined whether any of the objections raised in the special demurrer were well taken. It is said that there was a misjoinder of parties in that Adams should not be joined with the other defendants, or either of them, in the count for libel or the count for a violation of the right of privacy. The allegations of the petition are sufficient to show that the three defendants were joint wrongdoers, and were therefore not improperly joined in the same action. A further objection was that there was a misjoinder of causes of action, in that there was an attempt to join a cause of action ex delicto (the libel) with a cause of action ex contractu (the violation of the right of privacy). While the petition does allege that the violation of the right of privacy was the result of a breach of trust or confidence reposed in Adams, still it is distinctly charged that it is a trespass upon his right of privacy; and, construing the petition as a whole, it is manifest that the pleader intended to bring an action for a tort. It was further objected that no facts were alleged from which the charge of malice can be legally drawn, and that it did not appear from the allegations of the petition that any ridicule befell petitioner by reason of the publication. The publication, in the light of the extrinsic facts, being a libel, the law would infer malice, and it was not necessary to allege that any ridicule actually befell the petitioner; all that is necessary to constitute the publication a libel being that the statements should be of such a character as had a tendency to bring the plaintiff into contempt or ridicule. • The court erred in dismissing the petition.

Judgment reversed.

All the Justices concur.

Willis HOPKINS, Impleaded, etc., Plff. in Err.,
v.

STATE of Georgia.

(.....Ga.....)

Playing pool under an agreement among the players that the one losing the game shall pay for the use of the table is betting at a pool table, within the meaning of Penal Code 1895, § 401, providing that, "if any person shall . . . bet . . . at any . . . pool table, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." The fact that the state imposes a specific tax on the keeper of a pool table does not affect the question.

(March 25, 1905.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Bartow County to review a judgment convicting defendant of gaming. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. M. Graham and W. I. Heyward, for plaintiff in error:

That the rules of the game require the party beaten to pay the table fee does not constitute playing for money.

Williams v. State, 12 Smedes & M. 58; Pryor v. Com. 2 Dana, 298; McAulry v. State, 7 Yerg. 526; Garner v. State, 5 Yerg.

Headnote by FISH, P. J.

NOTE.—For a case in this series holding that an agreement by the owners of race horses to divide equally all premiums and stake money offered on races, awarded to any of the horses, is not void as a wagering contract, see Hankings v. Ottinger, 40 L. R. A. 76.

As to legality of betting generally, see Bernard v. Taylor, 18 L. R. A. 859, and note.
69 L. R. A.

160; Anthony v. State, 4 Humph. 85; Iseley v. State, 8 Blackf. 403; Hale v. State, 8 Tex. 171; Jackson v. State, 4 Ind. 560; Harbaugh v. People, 40 Ill. 294; Blewett v. State, 34 Miss. 606; People v. Sergeant, 8 Cow. 140.

To constitute gaming one must expect profit by the game.

Blewett v. State, 34 Miss. 614.

Mr. Sam P. Maddox, for defendant in error:

Playing for the price of the game is gambling.

Desty, Criminal Law, § 101 B; State v. Book, 41 Iowa, 550, 20 Am. Rep. 609; Ward v. State, 17 Ohio St. 32; Mount v. State, 7 Ind. 654; State v. Bishel, 39 Iowa, 42.

That such tables were licensed makes no difference.

State v. Doon, R. M. Charl. (Ga.) 1.

Fish, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Willis Hopkins, Mose Reed, and Creek Kincaid were indicted for playing and betting "together for money or other things of value at a pool table." On the trial of Hopkins, the witness introduced in behalf of the state testified that he saw Hopkins and the other two defendants play several games of pool together, at the time and place charged in the indictment, "The price of each game being 15 cents; the same being 5 cents a cue for each player using a cue. Under an agreement between the players, the one losing the game—that is, the one putting the least number of balls in the pockets—was to pay for the game. Several games were played in this way, the losing party always paying for the game. The pool table was run and owned by Henry Kay, but he was not playing." Hopkins was found guilty. His motion for a new trial being overruled, he excepted.

The question whether playing a game such as billiards, pool, tenpins, etc., under an agreement among the players that the loser is to pay the rent or charge imposed by the keeper of the table or alley for its use, is gaming, has never been decided by this court. There is an irreconcilable conflict of authority among the courts of other states where this question has arisen. In State v. Records, 4 Harr. (Del.) 554, it was held to be betting, where the players at tenpins risked only the price of the game. In State v. Leighton, 23 N. H. 167, the defendants were indicted for unlawfully keeping a gaming place "for money, hire, gain, and reward." At the trial it appeared that it was contrary to the rules of the room to play for money, but that it was the general custom for the party defeated in a game to pay for the use of the table, for which the defendants charged a shilling per game. It was held that this was a gaming for money. The court said: "The defendants in this case made a profit from the use of the billiard tables. For the 'hire' of them they were paid a shilling a game. The persons who resorted there played for the hire. In substance, they played for a shilling a game. The loser paid and the owner received the sum. By an understanding among the players, the money won was to be applied towards defraying the expenses of the tables, but still it was money won at play, and upon the chance of the play, and not on any collateral matter." In Mount v. State, 7 Ind. 654, the accused was charged with the violation of an act which provided that "every person who shall, by playing or betting at or upon any game or wager whatever, either lose or win any article of value, shall be fined," etc. The information charged that Groff owned and kept a tenpin alley for hire; that Mount and Miller hired of him the use of the alley to play one game of tenpins, for which they agreed to pay him 10 cents; "and that, in pursuance of said hiring," Mount and Miller played a game, by which Mount won of Miller 5 cents, the half of the hire of the alley, by then and there unlawfully betting and wagering with him the 5 cents on the result of the game. In the opinion in the case, Davison, J., said: "It is insisted that the information does not show a case within the statute. To constitute unlawful gaming, there must be a game played, and upon its result some article of value must be lost and won. Here was such game, and the only point of inquiry is, Was any article of value won by the defendant? His liability to Groff was paid by Miller, because, in the event of being unsuccessful, he had stipulated to pay it. This payment, though made to Groff, was for the use of the defendant; and the transaction was, in effect, the same as if the amount lost and won had been paid to the defendant instead of Groff, and he had received it from the defendant." In Hamilton v. State, 75 Ind. 586, it was held that suffering parties to play upon a billiard table, where nothing is risked but the hire of the table, came within the purview of a statute providing that any person who should keep or suffer his building, etc., to be used for gaming, should be fined, etc. In Alexander v. State, 99 Ind. 450, it was held: "A charge in an indictment that the defendant played a game of pool upon a pool table with another person, and thereby won money from him, is sustained by proof that the parties played under an arrangement that the losing party should pay the owner of the table the amount charged for the use of it, and that 69 L. R. A.

the defendant won the games, and the other party paid for them." The court said: "To whom the money was directly paid was not so material as the fact that the game decided who should pay it, and who should profit by the payment. If appellant had lost the games, he would have lost the amount charged for them. He won the games, and thereby won the amount charged for them, or at least one half of that amount. At the end of each game he was 10 cents better off than if he had lost the game, and he was 5 cents better off than he would have been if, without any chance or hazard, each party had paid for his cue. That he did not actually handle the money, it seems to us, can make no difference." To the same effect, see Ward v. State, 17 Ohio St. 32; State v. Book, 41 Iowa, 550, 20 Am. Rep. 609; State v. Miller, 53 Iowa, 154, 4 N. W. 900; Tuttle v. State, 1 Tex. App. 364; State v. Howery, 41 Tex. 506; Hall v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 34 S. W. 122; Mayo v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 82 S. W. 515; Murphy v. Rogers, 151 Mass. 118, 24 N. E. 35. Cases in which rulings to the contrary have been made are People v. Sergeant, 8 Cow. 139; Harbaugh v. People, 40 Ill. 294; Blewett v. State, 34 Miss. 606; People ex rel. Healey v. Forbes, 52 Hun, 30, 4 N. Y. Supp. 757; State v. Hall, 32 N. J. L. 165; State v. Quaid, 43 La. Ann. 1076, 26 Am. St. Rep. 207, 10 So. 183. These rulings were put mainly on the ground that, to constitute gaming or betting, one or the other of the parties must expect to profit by the game, and that in playing billiards, pool, etc., the loser to pay the table hire, neither of the parties expected a profit. Section 401 of the Penal Code of 1895 declares: "If any person shall play and bet for money, or other thing of value, at any game played with cards, dice, or balls; or shall play and bet for money, or other thing of value, at any table of whatever name, kind, or description, for gaming; or shall bet at any game of ninepins, or any other number of pins, or at any billiard or pool table—he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." The question, therefore, is, Did the evidence in the case under consideration show that the accused bet at a pool table; that is, that he laid a wager or staked money or anything of value at such table? We are of opinion that he did. He hazarded the payment of 10 cents, for the other two players, to the keeper of the table, and took the chance of relieving himself of his own obligation to such keeper. It is uniformly held that playing games to determine which of the players shall pay for drinks, food, or cigars, etc., for the use of the players, is gaming. 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 670, and citations. The use of the table for the purpose of amusement and recreation, when such use must be paid for, is as much a thing of value as the drinks, food, or cigars. The players enjoy the drinks, food, or cigars, and they enjoy the use of the table, cues, and balls. For each of these things money must be paid, and, without the arrangement among the players by which the loser of the game must pay for what they all enjoy, each player would have to pay for his own share thereof, unless someone made him a gift of the same. If three men were to play a game of pool to decide which one of them should pay for the hire of a horse and vehicle for the temporary use of the three, would not each of them be engaged in betting with the other two upon the result of the game? Would not the loser lose, and the winners win, something of value? We think so. The hire of the horse and vehicle would be a thing of value wagered on the result of the game. And under the circumstances disclosed by the evidence in this case, so was the hire of the pool table for the use of the players while they played a game thereon. If two men were to each owe the keeper of a pool or billiard table $1, and were to play a game upon the table under an agreement that the loser should pay both debts, the effect would be the same as if each bet the other $1 on the result of the game. We can see no difference in principle between such a case and one in which the playing of the game creates the debt or debts to the keeper of the table, which the players agree the loser of the game must pay. The evident purpose of the statute was to prohibit all forms of gambling with cards, dice, or balls, or at any table, of whatever name, and the fact of the insignificance of the amount wagered is immaterial. As the accused introduced no evidence, and his statement was, in substance, the same as the testimony of the witness for the state, the verdict was demanded. The charge of the court excepted to—being, in effect, that, if the jury believed the facts of the case to be as stated by the witness for the state, they should find the accused guilty—was in accordance with the law of the case.

The fact that the state imposes a tax upon every keeper of a pool table does not affect the case. The licensing of a pool or billiard table does not authorize betting at such table. In State v. Doon, R. M. Charl. (Ga.) 1, it was held that "the fact that a tax is imposed upon a faro table does not authorize the use of it for gaming."

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.
69 L. R. A.

CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RAILWAY COMPANY

v.

AUGUSTA BROKERAGE COMPANY.

(.....Ga.....)

*1. The rule promulgated by the railroad commission of this state, that carriers, "in the conduct of their intrastate business, shall afford to all persons equal facilities in the transportation and delivery of freight," prohibits discrimination against shippers, not against commodities.

a. As to issuing through bills of lading, or furnishing its cars to connecting carriers, in order that shipments may be carried to ultimate destination without reloading at terminal points, a carrier may discriminate against cotton seed, provided all shippers of that commodity are treated alike.

b. That such discrimination is dictated by the business interests of the carrier, and really affects but a single shipper, because he is the only person at a terminal point who is engaged in shipping cotton seed out of the state, cannot alter the matter.

c. The carrier may at any time change its policy as to furnishing shippers of a certain commodity privileges which, under the law, it is not bound to extend to them.

d. That a case on trial has been before the supreme court, and that court has held that the plaintiff's petition sets forth a cause of action, is of no concern to the jury; nor should they be instructed as to the law upon abstract propositions wholly disconnected with the issues of fact they are called on to determine.

2. The operation of rule 36 of the railroad commission of Georgia is, by its own terms, limited to intrastate shipments; and unjust discrimination against shippers engaged in interstate commerce, as to the matter of issuing through bills of lading or furnishing reshipping facilities at terminal points within this state, does not constitute a violation of that rule.

3. Where a plaintiff sues to recover punitive damages for a particular wrongful act, and relies, as evidencing the animus with which that act was committed, upon the commission of a wholly independent act, done at a different time and place, the defendant should be advised by the plaintiff's pleadings of the case he is expected to meet.

(March 27, 1905.)

*Headnotes by EVANS, J.

NOTE.—As to right of carrier to fix lower rate for petroleum carried in tank cars than for petroleum in barrels, see State ex rel. Kohler v. Cincinnati, W. & B. R. Co. 7 L. R. A. 319.

As to right to fix lower rate for carrying coal to be used for manufacturing purposes than for coal to be sold by dealers, see Hoover v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 22 L. R. A. 263.

ERROR with cross bill of exceptions to review a judgment of the Circuit Court for Richmond County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for alleged violation of a statute against discrimination by railway carriers; defendant excepting to a refusal to grant a new trial after judgment against it; and plaintiff excepting to rulings made during the trial. Reversed on defendant's exception.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Lawton & Cunningham and J. C. C. Black, for plaintiff in error:

A railroad company is not bound to ship beyond the terminus of its own line. If it does engage in such a contract, it is entirely a voluntary contract.

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Denver & N. O. R. Co. 110 U. S. 667, 28 L. ed. 291, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; Post v. Southern R. Co. 103 Tenn. 184, 55 L. R. A. 481, 52 S. W. 306; Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 762, 41 Fed. 559; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co. 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 360; Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 454; Capehart v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 278; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Platt, 7 Inters. Com. Rep. 324; Diamond Mills v. Boston & M. R. Co. 9 Inters. Com. Rep. 315; Railroad Commission v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 10 Inters. Com. Rep. 173; Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 2 L. R. A. 289, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 351, 37 Fed. 567; St. Louis Drayage Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 137, 65 Fed. 39; Gulf, O. & S. F. R. Co. v. Miami S. S. Co. 30 C. C. A. 142, 52 U. S. App. 732, 86 Fed. 407; Coles v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. 86 Ga. 251, 12 S. E. 749; State v. Wrightsville & T. R. Co. 104 Ga. 437, 30 S. E. 891.

A common carrier is not bound to issue a bill of lading for the transportation of freight beyond its terminus.

Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Shomo, 90 Ga. 500, 16 S. E. 220.

There cannot be any unjust discrimination against cotton seed as a commodity of traffic, unless the denial of the privilege to cotton seed gives some competitive traffic some advantage in the markets over cotton seed.

Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. 7 Inters. Com. Rep. 513; Pennsylvania Millers' State Asso. v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 8 Inters. Com. Rep. 531; Railroad Commission v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 10 Inters. Com. Rep. 173.

Mr. William H. Fleming, for defendant in error:

Where the law requires a jury to give 60 L. R. A.

exemplary damages, a verdict should not be set aside unless it is grossly excessive.

13 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 105; Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 326, 37 L. ed. 468, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622.

Evans, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

When this case was before this court on a former occasion, it was held that the plaintiff's petition set forth a cause of action, and that the special demurrers urged against it were not well taken. 121 Ga. 48, 48 S. E. 714. A trial upon the merits was had in the court below, and resulted in a verdict for $3,005 in favor of the plaintiff. A motion for a new trial, presented in behalf of the defendant railway company, was overruled, and it excepted. By a cross bill of exceptions the plaintiff brings under review various rulings made during the progress of the trial which were adverse to it.

1. The gravamen of the brokerage company's complaint was that the railway company had, in violation of a rule promulgated by the railroad commission of this state, providing that carriers, "in the conduct of their intrastate business, shall afford to all persons equal facilities in the transportation and delivery of freight," wrongfully refused to place a car loaded with cotton seed on a side track in the rear of its warehouse, refused to allow reshipment of its cars at Augusta, and that the company's refusal so to do was in pursuance of a predetermined plan to drive the plaintiff out of the business of buying cotton seed at points along the railway company's line of road. As evidencing that such was the purpose of the railway company, the plaintiff alleged that it had also refused to issue through bills of lading from a station in Burke county to points beyond its line, notwithstanding the common practice of the railway company was to issue such bills of lading to other patrons. The evidence, however, disclosed that the railway company, while issuing through bills of lading on shipments of general merchandise, declined to do so on shipments of cotton seed, and in this respect there was no discrimination against the plaintiff. It further appeared that, although the plaintiff had asked that a through bill of lading on a shipment of cotton seed at the Burke county station should be issued to one of two points in Georgia beyond the railway company's line, the request was not made in good faith, and the plaintiff would not have accepted the bills of lading if the railway company had signified its willingness to issue them. The trial judge nevertheless instructed the jury that, should they believe the defendant company discriminated against the plaintiff as to issuing through bills of lading on intrastate shipments, this would be a violation of rule 36 of the railroad commission, and the plaintiff would be entitled to recover such damages as resulted, and the jury could visit upon the railway company exemplary damages if they found its refusal to issue to the plaintiff through bills of lading was wilful. The court further instructed the jury as follows: "If it is the common practice of a railroad company to allow reshipping privileges or through bills of lading for all classes of merchandise generally, it cannot arbitrarily select any one class of merchandise, and refuse such privileges to dealers in that class of merchandise. In order to justify such discrimination, there would have to be differences in the circumstances and conditions of shipment." These and other instructions of similar import are excepted to on the ground that they were not authorized either by the law or the evidence, and were highly prejudicial to the railway company.

The first of these instructions certainly ought not to have been given. The plaintiff was not suing for damages resulting from the refusal of the railway company to issue a through bill of lading from the station in Burke county. The plaintiff could not, in the city court of Richmond county, recover damages for a tort committed in Burke county; and, moreover, had the plaintiff sued in the latter county, no recovery of damages because of such refusal would have been authorized, for the evidence shows that the application for a through bill of lading on an intrastate shipment was not bona fide. The plaintiff really wanted a through bill of lading to some South Carolina point. Had the railway company issued through bills of lading to other shippers of cotton seed at the Burke county station, but declined to accord like privileges to the plaintiff, this fact would, as was held when this case was here before, afford competent evidence touching the alleged purpose of the railway company to break up the plaintiff's business. However, the plaintiff failed to establish any such unjust discrimination, and therefore what occurred at that station really had no bearing on the case, unless the court was right in the view of the law expressed in the charge which we have above quoted.

The rule of the railroad commission alleged to have been violated prohibits discrimination against shippers, not against commodities. All shippers of a given commodity must be treated alike, but the carrier is not bound to have fixed and unvarying rules applicable alike to each and all kinds of freight, or to any given class of freight when shipped in car-load lots. In the first place, it was optional with the railway company whether or not it would adopt the custom of issuing any through bills of lading or delivering its cars at Augusta to connecting carriers in order that freight might, without reloading on cars furnished by them, be reshipped in bulk. Coles v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. 86 Ga. 251, 12 S. E. 749. It could, without committing itself to any duty of so handling raw commodities, issue through bills of lading, or afford such reshipping facilities to shippers of manufactured articles or any other kind of freight it might choose to handle in that way. In the absence of any duty imposed by law, it could even arbitrarily so conduct its business in this respect as to discriminate between cotton seed and grain, lumber, or other products. Counsel for the railway company very frankly concede that it had a "policy" which governed its decision in not issuing through bills of lading on shipments of cotton seed from points along its line, or allowing facilities at Augusta for the reshipment of that product in bulk over competing lines. This policy was doubtless a purely selfish one, inasmuch as the railway company looked to its own material business interests, rather than to those of the plaintiff or other brokers engaged in handling cotton seed. But the plaintiff also had a "policy." It was not a philanthropic one. The situation may thus be summarized: The oil mills at Augusta depended largely for a supply of cotton seed upon the territory through which ran the defendant railway company's line. They delivered to it their manufactured products for shipment, so the railway company got a short haul on the raw cotton seed, and also a long haul on the reshipments made over its line of the manufactured products. It was not to the business interests of the railway company that cotton seed grown at local stations on its Augusta & Savannah branch should be shipped to oil mills located in South Carolina, for none of the manufactured products could then be secured for reshipment, at a high rate, over its road. Its interests dictated that the cotton seed should stop at Augusta, and be manufactured into oil and by-products by the mills located at that point. The railway company therefore determined that it would not, by voluntarily granting facilities to shippers which it was under no legal duty to afford, supply the means of diverting from its road profitable shipments which it otherwise would receive. On the other hand, the material business interests of the brokerage company demanded that it should be granted such facilities. It was a free lance, in open competition with the oil mills at Augusta in the buying of cotton seed at the lowest price possible, and all the seed purchased by it was shipped from Augusta over the Southern Railway to South Carolina mills. To reload shipments at Augusta for the South Carolina trip was expensive. To get through bills of lading, or to secure the consent of the defendant company that its loaded cars be delivered to the Southern Railway at Augusta, so that the seed might be carried to its ultimate destination without reloading, would render the business of the brokerage company profitable, the business of the Augusta oil mills less remunerative. Their interests and those of the defendant railway company were coincident. Its interests and those of the brokerage company conflicted. The railway company acted as the average business man would have done; that is all. In declining to grant the privileges which the brokerage company wished to enjoy, the railway company merely adopted a policy which was within its legal rights as a carrier. State v. Wrightsville & T. R. Co. 104 Ga. 437, 30 S. E. 891. That the brokerage company may have been the only broker in Augusta or elsewhere affected by this policy cannot alter the case. As a shipper, it was not discriminated against, though one of the commodities it handled was, incidentally. The railway company had the undoubted right to refuse to make through shipments of any freight, or to permit its cars to leave its line of road, however they might be loaded. To compel it to adopt a policy whereby no discrimination against a particular commodity would result would not necessarily benefit the brokerage company, but might react to its disadvantage, and be inimical to the interests of shippers of other commodities, for it would then be within the power of the carrier to decline to deliver its cars for carriage over other lines under any circumstances. It may be that for this reason our railroad commission has not deemed it wise to attempt to prohibit any discrimination between different commodities belonging to a general class of freight.

If, as the evidence discloses, none of the patrons of the defendant company were granted the privilege, at Augusta, of having shipments of cotton seed in its cars turned over to connecting lines for transportation in bulk without reloading, then the plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages because of the railway company's refusal to accord it this privilege, and the evidence bearing upon the "policy" of the carrier in this regard was not competent for the purpose of sustaining the plaintiff's contention that the purpose of the defendant was to drive it out of business. Animus cannot be inferred from what one does while acting strictly within his legal rights. That during the previous cotton season the carrier had granted the privilege sought by the brokerage company cannot affect the matter at all. The carrier could change its policy at any time it saw fit, and the plaintiff had timely notice of its intention to withdraw this privilege at the close of that season.

What is said above disposes of a number of assignments of error made upon the charge of the court, and also of exceptions taken to the refusal of the court to give in charge pertinent requests which were in accord with the law as herein announced. The only contention of the plaintiff which the evidence tended to sustain was that the defendant had wrongfully refused to place a car loaded with cotton seed on the side track in the rear of plaintiff's warehouse, and that the purpose of the railway company in refusing to do so was to put the plaintiff to unnecessary expense in reloading at a different place, and thus discourage its engaging in the buying and shipping of cotton seed. There was proof of aggravating circumstances attending this discrimination against the plaintiff and in favor of the local oil mills, and the jury were warranted in reaching the conclusion that the conduct of the railway company was wilful, and in pursuance of a predetermined plan to throw every obstacle in the way of the plaintiff to prevent shipment of seed into South Carolina. But the case was not fairly or correctly presented to the jury, and a new trial must result.

At the request of plaintiff's counsel, the court informed the jury that, in a decision on one branch of this case, the supreme court had settled the law of it in favor of the plaintiff, holding that, if the plaintiff sustained by evidence the allegations of the declaration as to the conduct of the railway company with regard to intrastate business, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover. Complaint is made of this instruction on the ground that it was prejudicial to the defendant, in that it conveyed the impression to the jury that the supreme court had practically decided the case against the defendant, and it had no valid defense. Suffice it to say that the charge was at least irrelevant to any issue before the jury, and could serve no legitimate purpose in their determination of the case. Two other instructions are justly complained of as being inapplicable to the facts of the case, and therefore inappropriate and misleading. One was to the effect that, while it was no proper business of a common carrier to facilitate particular enterprises or to build up new industries, yet, as the carrier depended for its very existence upon the will of the people, it was bound to deal fairly with the public, furnish reasonable transportation facilities, and to put all of its patrons upon an absolute equality. The other instruction, was as follows: "A railroad company cannot discriminate in favor of a shipper who is able to furnish a large amount of freight over one engaged in the same business who is unable to furnish the same quantity; at least, where both ship in car-load lots."

2. Another question presented for determination, both by the main bill and the cross bill of exceptions, is whether or not the court correctly interpreted and presented to the jury the meaning and effect of rule 36 of the railroad commission, in so far as interstate shipments were concerned. The operation of that rule is, by its own terms, limited to intrastate shipments, and therefore cannot be held to apply to shipments originating in this state but destined for points beyond its borders. A bill of lading issued from a station in Georgia to one in South Carolina would evidence an interstate shipment, whether it was to be carried all the way by the initial carrier or was to be delivered by it at some intermediate point to a connecting carrier for transportation to ultimate destination. The ultimate destination of a shipment intended to take one continuous journey would determine its character in this respect. Facilities afforded for carrying through a cargo in bulk, without reloading at an intermediate point, would attach, according to the circumstances, to either interstate or to intrastate commerce. A failure to afford equal facilities to all shippers engaged in interstate commerce would not be a violation of rule 36. The instructions of the court to this effect were correct, but might properly have been more specifically applied to the facts by giving the request to charge on this subject presented by counsel for the railway company. The plaintiff appears to have been engaged altogether in making interstate shipments of cotton seed, no delivery being made to the plaintiff in Augusta except for the purpose of reloading on Southern Railway cars, in order that the seed might make one continuous journey from Georgia into South Carolina.

3. The plaintiff, in its petition, complained of a refusal by the railway company, on December 9, 1903, to deliver one car of the cotton seed on a side track in the rear of the plaintiff's warehouse, and for this alleged tort both actual and punitive damages were claimed. At the trial the plaintiff offered to prove that shortly before and shortly after that date the defendant refused to deliver other car-load lots of cotton seed on that side track; the evidence being offered, counsel announced, for the purpose of proving plaintiff's contention that the defendant had a predetermined plan to drive plaintiff out of the cotton-seed business, and for the further purpose of showing aggravating circumstances. Upon the objection of the railway company that the plaintiff had not alleged any of these matters of aggravation, the court excluded the evidence. The plaintiff also offered to prove by a witness that about January 12, 1904, he had seen certain bills of lading covering shipments of cotton seed from Midville, Georgia, to Manning, South Carolina, issued by the defendant to Allan W. Jones, in whose name the shipments had been made, although the seed was the property of the brokerage company. On the ground that the bills of lading were the best evidence of what were their contents, this testimony was excluded. Plaintiff then attempted to prove by the same witness that these shipments came through Augusta, and witness knew of his own knowledge that the cotton seed was not there reshipped or transferred to other cars, and had duly reached Manning, South Carolina. Counsel stated that the purpose of this testimony was to show that through bills of lading must have been issued, for otherwise the shipments could not, without reshipment at Augusta, have reached Manning, South Carolina. The defendant objected to the introduction of this testimony, and the court excluded it on the ground that it related to transactions which took place after the filing of the suit. To all of these rulings exception is taken in the cross bill. Each of them was, we think, correct.

"The assessment of damages is usually governed by the situation or condition of affairs existing at the time the action is brought." 13 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 177. The general rule as to the recovery of special damages is, where they are not such as naturally flow from the wrongful act complained of, that "it is necessary, in order to prevent surprise to the defendant, that the declaration state specifically and in detail the damages sought to be recovered," which involves making a statement of the facts upon which the plaintiff relies for a recovery thereof. Id. p. 176. Where "a wilful wrong is committed, evidence of matters tending to aggravate the damages, when necessarily or legally arising from the act complained of, is admissible without special averment." Id. pp. 175, 176. But it is apparent that, where a plaintiff sues for a given wrongful act, and relies, as evidencing the motive with which that act was committed, upon another wholly independent act, done at a different time and place, the defendant should be advised by the plaintiff's pleadings of the case he is expected to meet. A case bearing directly upon this proposition is that of Leavitt v. Cutler, 37 Wis. 46, which was a suit for damages because of a breach of a contract of marriage. The court held: "In such an action the fact that plaintiff has been seduced by defendant by means of the alleged promise of marriage may be shown to enhance the damages, if it is alleged in the complaint, but not otherwise." See also Klopper v. Bromme, 26 Wis. 372, 376. In the present case the defendant company could hardly have been expected to be prepared to meet charges that, after suit was commenced, it had committed certain specific acts which were wrongful, and which tended to prove that the acts complained of in the petition were wilfully committed; nor was the defendant put upon notice that the plaintiff would attempt to prove, as an aggravating circumstance, that on given occasions prior to the commencement of the action the defendant had wrongfully refused to place on plaintiff's side track cars other than the one described by number in the petition. Had the plaintiff undertaken to amend its pleadings, the defendant could have claimed surprise. Certainly, the testimony offered was not admissible under the pleadings as they stood.

Judgment on main bill of exceptions reversed; on cross bill affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

Catharine R. GRIFFITH et al., Appts.,
v.
BLACKWATER BOOM & LUMBER COM-PANY et al.

Albert THOMPSON, Appt.,
v.
SAME.

(55 W. Va. 604.)

*1. When an executory contract with a corporation, necessitating, in its execution, work, labor, and the expenditure of money for materials, machinery, tools, and appliances, and the construction of roads and other improvements, as well as in carrying on the work, is termi-

*Headnotes by POFFENBARGER, P.

NOTE.—Recovering for services and expenses under a running contract with a corporation ended by its insolvency and dissolution.

- I. Scope of note, 124.
- II. Breaches of contracts in general, 125.
- III. The measure of damages in such cases, 126.
- IV. How corporations are dissolved, 128.
- V. When dissolution is not effected, 129.
- VI. The earlier common-law doctrine concerning the effect of dissolution, 130.
- VII. Comment and criticism concerning it, 132.
- VIII. The trust-fund, or "American," doctrine, 134.
- IX. The effects of corporate dissolution according to modern views
 - a. Civil death, 137.
 - b. Upon litigation, 138.
 - c. Upon property and assets, 139.
 - d. Upon debts and credits, 141.
 - e. Upon contracts in general, 142.
 - f. Upon employment contracts.
 1. With officers, 144.
 2. With superintendents, 145.
 3. With agents, 146.
 4. With ordinary employees, 150.

nated by dissolution of the corporation in consequence of its insolvency, the contractor is entitled to compensation for services rendered by him in pursuance of the contract until the date of its termination, and to reimbursement for his actual and necessary outlay and expenses as aforesaid, subject to a deduction of all sums paid to him by the corporation, and of the value of such materials, machinery, and other property on hand.

2. When such a contract between a corporation and one of its directors has been entered into openly and without fraud, and the disinterested directors and stockholders are fully informed of its terms, and permit it to be partly executed without disapproval or notice of an intention on their part to annul it, the same rule of compensation and reimbursement to the contractor applies upon the subsequent abrogation of the contract by a court of equity at the instance of the stockholders and creditors of the corporation.

3. When, in such case, large expendi-

X. Remedies.

a. Abstract, 151.

b. Concrete, 152.

XI. Construction and effect of statutes, 153.

XII. Conclusion, 155.

I. Scope of note.

It is purposed, by this note, to display the cases wherein one who had a running contract with a corporation, which was in process of execution and required him to perform services and make outlays, was rendered unable to go on and complete his contract in consequence of the insolvency of the corporation, with its resulting dissolution.

To elucidate the subject, enough cases have been gathered to show what, as a general rule, constitutes a breach of such a contract, and is the measure of damages when a contract of this character is broken by the party requiring the services.

The effect of the death of one of the parties to such a contract upon its continuance is barely alluded to here and there, not treated, for the reason that this branch of the subject is sufficiently covered by two earlier notes in tures have been made by the contractor in the construction and repair of river dams, bridges, and roads belonging to the corporation, for the driving and hauling of timber, and upon timber partially prepared for delivery under the contract, and a sale of the corporate property, free and discharged from the contract, is made under a decree of the court, directing it to be offered for sale both subject to and free from the contract, the contractor is entitled to compensation and reimbursement as aforesaid out of the assets of the company, although he afterwards purchases the corporate property and obtains the benefit of such improvements.

4. When a contract is broken, it is the duty of the injured party to minimize the loss and injury, when it is practicable to do so, by a reasonable outlay of money;

this series, to wit, the note on Recovery for services on contract interrupted by sickness or death, appended to the case of Parker v. Macomber, 16 L. R. A. 858, and the note on Effect on contract of the death of a party thereto, appended to the case of Drummond v. Crane, 23 L. R. A. 707.

In addition to these notes, the reader also should consult the note to Lenoir v. Linville Improv. Co. 51 L. R. A. 146, on Effect of the appointment of a receiver or an assignee for creditors of a corporation on the compensation of officers, agents, or employees for unexpired term of employment, to which this note is, in a sense, supplementary.

II. Breaches of contracts in general.

If a survey of the decisions as to what in general constitutes a breach of contract calling for the performance of services with incidental expenditure on the part of the employing party, ignoring the circumstance that such employer was a corporation and the contract came to an end by its insolvency and civil death, be made, the following citations will exemplify the current of the authorities, and disclose the underlying principles which prevail.

It is familiar law that "if, at the time of making the contract, the thing promised be possible in itself, it is no excuse for nonperformance that its performance became subsequently impossible from causes beyond the control of the promisor." Southern Bldg. & L. Assn. v. Price, 88 Md. 155, 42 L. R. A. 206, 41 Atl. 53.

Where the obligation of a contractor requires an expenditure of a large sum in preparation to enable him to perform his contract, and a continuous readiness to perform it, the law implies a duty in the other party to do whatever is necessary to enable him to comply with his promise or covenant. United States v. Speed, 8 Wall. 77, 19 L. ed. 449.

If a construction contract requires payments to be made on account from time to time as the work progresses, and such payments are not made, the contractor is justified in stopping work, and may recover for what he has done. Stringtown & B. Turnp. Road Co. v. Riley, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 267.

Where one agrees to perform a service or work for another, which necessarily requires time and progress in its performance, and is to but such outlay is to be allowed him as a part of his damages.

5. When a contractor, by reason of the termination of a partly executed contract, is entitled to compensation for services and outlay, part of which have been made in executing permanent improvements, the services and expenditures relating to such improvements are not apportioned between the executed and unexecuted parts of the contract.

6. When, in the prosecution of work under his contract for cutting logs and hauling and driving them to a mill by means of a railroad, tramroads, and booms and dams in a river, constructed by him for the purpose, the contractor puts in timber to the same mill, by means of the same improvements, for others, not keeping separate accounts of the expenditures, it is not error to allow him, upon an inquiry as to receive compensation therefor if that other puts an end to the performance either before it begins or while it is in progress, the first party, though able and willing to proceed, cannot recover the stipulated compensation, but only damages for a breach of the contract; and such damages will, in general, consist of his outlay already incurred and the profits he would have realized had he been permitted to finish the work; or, in case the compensation is divisible, he may recover for the work already performed, and damages for being prevented from completing his contract. Hambly v. Delaware, M. & V. R. Co. 21 Fed. 541.

It is a misapprehension of law to suppose that the death of one of the contracting parties puts an end to a contract in course of performance. For a breach after, as well as before, the death of such party, his estate will be liable to respond in damages. Smith v. Wilmington Coal Min. & Mfg. Co. 83 Ill. 498.

Generally speaking, contracts bind executors and administrators, though not named. Where, however, personal considerations are of the foundation of a contract, as in cases of principal and agent, master and servant, the death of either party puts an end to the relation, and, in respect of service after death, the contract is dissolved, unless there is a stipulation to the contrary. Farrow v. Wilson, L. R. 4 C. P. 744.

It is the general rule that death does not absolve one from his contracts; but an exception to this rule is that, when performance of a contract depends upon the continued existence of a person or thing, if such person or thing perish before the contract is performed, the impossibility of performance terminates the contract. Yerrington v. Greene, 7 R. I. 589, 84 Am. Dec. 578.

Where a contract creates between the parties to it merely a personal relation, the death of either party dissolves that relation. Howe Sewing Mach. Co. v. Rosensteel, 24 Fed. 583.

When the performance of a contract depends upon the continued existence of a person or thing, and such continued existence is assumed as the basis of the agreement, the death of the person, or destruction of the thing, terminates the obligation. People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 1, 2 L. R. A. 266, 7 Am. St. Rep. 684, 18 N. E. 692; Lorillard v. Clyde, 142 N. Y. 456, 24 L. R. A. 113, 37 N. E. 489.

Death, or a disability which renders perform-the amount necessary to compensate him for his services and outlay, when he has been prevented from completing his contract, to charge up his entire outlay on all the work done, and credit all sums received on account thereof, when it is shown that all the work was profitable so far as executed, and that the accounts cannot be separated.

(Dent, J., dissents.)

(April 1, 1904.)

APPEALS by plaintiffs and defendant Thompson from a decree of the Circuit Court for Tucker County overruling exceptions to a commissioner's report settling the amounts which should be allowed under a contract of the defendant corporation, which ance impossible, discharges a contract to capitalize an enterprise and look to it for reimbursement when the capitalist is to manage the undertaking, since it involves his personal service and skill. Marvel v. Phillips, 162 Mass. 399, 26 L. R. A. 416, 44 Am. St. Rep. 370, 38 N. E. 1117.

Contracts for personal services must be treated as entire, and not divisible; hence, there can be but one breach and one recovery upon default, no matter if the wages are payable by instalments or at stated periods. Barnes Bros. v. Black Diamond Coal Co. 101 Tenn. 354, 47 S. W. 498.

A servant wrongfully dismissed in the middle of his term may either treat his contract of employment as rescinded and bring indebitatus assumpsit, or he may sue on the contract; but he cannot do both. Goodman v. Pocock, 15 Q. B. 576.

One employed by a mercantile firm for a year upon a fixed salary, and whose employment is terminated within the year by the insolvency and bankruptcy of his employers, is entitled to prove his claim for damages against the estate in bankruptcy, and to participate in the distribution thereof, for his right of action is immediate upon the breach of his contract, and the bankruptcy is no defense. Re Silverman, 101 Fed. 219.

For admission to proof in bankruptcy a claim need not arise before the adjudication, nor need the contract upon which it arises be broken before the bankruptcy; it is sufficient that the breach and the bankruptcy be coincident. To some extent, bankruptcy operates as a breach of the bankrupt's contracts. Bankruptcy may be treated as a breach of the bankrupt's contracts analogous to a complete repudiation of a contract before the time to perform arises, or to a complete disablement from performing the contract. The test of provability is this: If the bankrupt at the time of his bankruptcy, by disabling himself from performing the contract, or by repudiating its obligation, could give the other party the right to sue at once for damages, to be assessed either at law or in equity, then such other party may prove his damages in bankruptcy on the ground that the bankruptcy is equivalent to disablement and repudiation. Re Pettingill, 137 Fed. 143.

An assignment by an insolvent contractor to trustees for creditors of all his effects, including the contract, is not per se an abandonment 60 L. R. A.

had been annulled by the court. Modified and affirmed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.

Messrs. C. W. Dailey, Taylor Morrison, Benjamin A. Richmond, P. J. Crogan, W. B. Maxwell, and L. D. Strader for appellants.

Messrs. Hubbard & Hubbard, A. G. Dayton, Ira F. Robinson, and William C. Clayton for appellees.

Poffenbarger, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a somewhat complicated and a hotly contested case, which has been in this court on a former appeal. As then passed upon it is reported in 46 W. Va. 56, 33 S.

of such contract, so as to justify the other party thereto in treating it as at an end without an attempt to put the contractor in default by performing on its part. New England Iron Co. v. Gilbert Elev. R. Co. 91 N. Y. 153.

A contract with an author to write a book for publication in a particular series of works issued periodically by the publishers is not abrogated by the abandonment of the series before the work is completed, when the author is able and willing to perform. Planché v. Colburn, 5 Car. & P. 58, 8 Bing. 14.

III. The measure of damages in such cases.

It is frequently difficult, in administering the law, to apply a proper rule of damages, and the decisions upon the subject are not harmonious. The cardinal rule undoubtedly is that the one party shall recover all the damages which have been occasioned by the breach of the contract by the other party. But this rule is modified by two others: The damages must flow directly and naturally from the breach, and they must be certain both in their nature and in respect of the cause from which they proceed. Speculative, contingent, and remote damages, not directly traceable to the breach, are excluded,—damages only are allowed which the parties are fairly supposed to have contemplated on contracting as naturally flowing from its violation. Rochester Lantern Co. v. Stiles & P. Press Co. 135 N. Y. 209, 31 N. E. 1018.

The safest rule of damage, and the one supported by the general current of authorities, in cases where a contractor is prevented by the acts of the other party from performing his contract, is the difference between the cost of doing the work and what the contractor was to receive for it, making reasonable deduction for the less time engaged, and for release from the care, trouble, risk, and responsibility attending a full execution of the contract. United States v. Speed, 8 Wall. 77, 19 L. ed. 449.

But this rule is but one aspect of a more general one. The primary measure of damages is the amount of the contractor's loss, and that loss falls under two heads,—actual outlay and anticipated profits. United States v. Behan, 110 U. S. 338, 28 L. ed. 168, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 81.

Where a contractor injured by the stoppage of a contract elects to rescind it, he can recover only the value of his services actually performed as upon a quantum meruit, not dam-

E. 125, where the nature of the controversy and the history of the transactions out of which it arose are substantially set forth. It was impossible there, as it is here, to give in detail, or even enumerate, all that is contained in the old record of more than 700 pages, to which nearly 300 pages have since been added.

After the case was remanded to the circuit court for further proceedings according to the principles announced by this court upon the former appeal, it was referred to a commissioner with directions to report, first, what would be a just and reasonable compensation to Albert Thompson for labor and money necessarily expended in part performance of his contract; second, upon the request of any interested party, to make a statement of such expenditures under the contract until the entry of the decree of August 4, 1893, showing allowances to him for his time, labor, and all sums paid by him for the time and labor of others, and expended by him in equipment and material necessary to carry out such contracts, all sums paid for cutting, hauling, skidding, and driving logs, timber, and tanbark, all reasonable sums paid subcontractors by reason of the obligation of their contract, and all other items reasonably and necessarily paid by him in part performance of the contract, allowing him interest upon the sums so expended, and crediting said account with all sums paid to him by said company or its receiver, or realized from the sale of any materials or equipments; and, third, the ages for a breach of the contract either for outlay or loss of profits; but, when he elects to go for damages for the breach of the contract, the first and most obvious damage to be shown is the amount which he has expended on the faith of the contract, including a fair allowance for his own time and services. If he chooses to go further, he may claim for the loss of anticipated profits, subject to the rules of law as to the character of the profits which may be thus claimed. Ibid.

The general rule is well settled that a party to a contract where labor is to be performed, upon the breach of that contract by the other party, has two remedies open to him. He may sue upon the contract and recover damages for its breach, or he may ignore the contract and sue for labor and services rendered and expenses incurred from which he has derived no benefit. Hemminger v. Western Assur. Co. 95 Mich. 355, 54 N. W. 949.

When by the act of the other party one who has contracted to cut, haul, and deliver logs is prevented from proceeding with his contract, the rule of damages for the breach is to ascertain the profits he would have earned had he gone on and completed his contract. If, however, this rule cannot be applied from the peculiar nature of the contract, as, for instance, where a fixed time for its continuance is not agreed upon, nor is a definite quantity of logs to be delivered under it, a different rule of damage applies. In such a case preparatory work, done as a necessary preliminary to the performance of the contract, may be allowed for to the extent of its reasonable cost. Brent v. Parker, 23 Fla. 200, 1 So. 780.

In what was pronounced a leading case upon the subject of damages for breach of contract by preventing performance (Vide, United States v. Speed, 8 Wall. 77, 19 L. ed. 449; United States v. Behan, 110 U. S. 338, 28 L. ed. 168, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 81) Beardsley, J., stated the rule of damage in the case of a construction contract where the defendants stopped the work in the midst of its performance from lack of funds to pay. I think, he says, the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the amount they would have realized had they been allowed fully to execute their contract. The defendants are not to gain by their wrongful act, nor is that to deprive the plaintiffs of the advantages they had secured by the contract, and which would have resulted to them from its performance. The jury must, therefore, ascertain what it would probably have cost them to complete the contract over and above the materials on hand; including the value of the marble required, the labor of quarrying and preparing it for use, the expense of transportation, superintendence, and insurance against all hazards, with every other expense incident to the fulfilment of the undertaking. The aggregate of these expenditures is to be deducted from the amount which would be payable for the performance of this part of the contract according to the prices therein stipulated, and the balance will be the damages which the jury should allow. Master-ton v. Brooklyn, 7 Hill, 61, 42 Am. Dec. 38.

The rule which precludes the allowance of profits by way of damages for the breach of an executory contract is not a primary rule, but a deduction from the more general and fundamental rule which requires damages in all cases to be shown by clear and satisfactory evidence to have been actually sustained. By the common law damages for a breach of contract must be proved to a certainty, not left to speculation or conjecture; and this excludes anticipated profits, although there is nothing in their nature which per se prevents their allowance. Profits which would certainly have been realized but for the breach are recoverable; those which are contingent or speculative are not. Griffin v. Colver, 16 N. Y. 489, 69 Am. Dec. 718.

A plaintiff is entitled to recover the expenses incurred by him in preparing to perform a contract which without his fault the defendant has put an end to, where the expected profits under the contract are too speculative to admit of clear and direct proof. O'Connell v. Rosso, 56 Ark. 603, 20 S. W. 531.

The general rule in regard to damages which may be recovered for a breach of a contract is that remote or consequential damages are not allowed if not traceable solely to the breach, or if incapable of exact computation; but any necessary expense which one of the contractors incurs in complying with the contract is recoverable. Bryan v. Southwestern R. Co. 41 Ga. 71.

Where two parties lawfully contract upon good consideration, and one is ready and willing, and makes preparation, to perform on his part, but is prevented from so doing by the other, he can recover all damages sustained in consequence of that other's default, including his necessary expenses in making preparation.

amount due Thompson for work and labor performed and money expended in the prosecution of the contract under the direction of the receiver until June 23, 1893, when the work was suspended by order of the court, and the amount due him for expenditures, work, and labor from the 23d day of June, 1893, until the 4th day of August, 1893, when the sale of the property of the Black-water Boom & Lumber Company was confirmed.

The commissioner reported that there was due Thompson as of the 12th day of June, 1901, $85,642.02, returning with his report a full statement of all sums paid out and expended by Thompson in the prosecution of said work, and all sums paid to him on account thereof, as well as the proceeds of the sales of property used by him in the performance of said work as equipments, such as horses, wagons, locomotives, cars, steel rails, etc. Upon exceptions sustained by the court, the amount so found was reduced to $84,794.91 and a decree entered therefor. Of this amount, about $48,000 is principal, and the balance interest. Numerous exceptions to the report, urged in the court below and overruled, are insisted upon here, and there is much difference of opinion as to the true interpretation of the former decision of this court. For the appellants it is insisted that, under the principles so announced, the item of $14,749.34, mentioned in the opinion at page 65 of 46 W. Va., page 128, 33 S. E., which, without interest, was originally $12,399.63, for work done on Kenwood Bridge Co. v. Dunderdale, 50 Ill. App. 581.

Where loss of profits cannot be proved, the plaintiff in an action upon the breach of a contract is entitled to recover the expenses and outlay he incurred in preparing to perform on his part. Athletic Baseball Asso. v. St. Louis Sportsman's Park & Club Asso. 67 Mo. App. 653.

One who contracts with another to furnish materials and build therewith a structure at a stipulated price, and who is prevented from completing his work by the acts of the other, is entitled to recover, inter alia items of damage, the expense of preparing such materials for their destined places in the structure. Shulte v. Hennessy, 40 Iowa, 352.

Where anticipated profits are too speculative and uncertain to be shown by competent proof, he who is entitled to recover for the breach of a contract to furnish an ample supply of natural gas wherewith to run his enterprise is entitled to recover his expenses in attempting to run it and the rental value, or, in lieu thereof, the interest on the cost of his plant. Paola Gas Co. v. Paola Glass Co. 56 Kan. 614, 54 Am. St. Rep. 598, 44 Pac. 621.

Where one contracts with a railroad to provide a water supply at a designated station at a stipulated monthly compensation, he undertaking to build and maintain a tank and apparatus for the purpose, upon a breach of the contract by the railroad by abandoning its station at that point, he may recover as damages the difference between the cost of such tank and apparatus and their actual value after the departure of the road, if he retains the property, or the difference between such cost and the sum realized, if he sells for the best obtainable price. New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Echols, 54 Miss. 264.

When, by the terms of a contract for work and labor, the full price is not to be paid until the completion of the work, and that becomes impossible by the act of the law, the contractor is entitled to recover for the amount of his labor. Jones v. Judd, 4 N. Y. 411, Approved in Wolfe v. Howes, 20 N. Y. 197, 75 Am. Dec. 388.

Referring to the case of a person who has contracted to labor for a definite term and is prevented by sickness from fulfilling his contract, Balcom, J., of the New York court of appeals, says: He should have the amount of his 69 L. R. A.

recovery reduced from the contract price by the damages sustained by the employer in consequence of his inability to complete the full term of service. This rule, he says, is equitable, and should be applied in such cases. The servant is not to be regarded as violating his contract because sickness or death prevents his fulfilling it. His failure is his misfortune, not his fault. The employer should neither gain nor lose by it. The rule is just to both. It needs no vindication, for it is so well grounded in good sense as to commend itself. It is a common-sense rule, and common sense is the basis of all just law. Clark v. Gilbert, 26 N. Y. 279, 84 Am. Dec. 180.

If the performance of a building contract be suspended by the financial embarrassment of the owner, and not afterwards resumed, the contractor may recover, among other items of damage, the expense he has incurred in making articles necessary to enable him to perform his contract. O'Connell v. Main & T. Streets Hotel Co. 90 Cal. 515, 27 Pac. 278.

A contractor for the construction of a road, whose contract entitles him to payment in installments from time to time as his work progresses, is justified, upon default in paying the installments, in stopping further work, and has a right to recover in quantum meruit for the work he has performed. Porter v. Arrowhead Reservoir Co. 100 Cal. 500, 35 Pac. 146.

IV. How corporations are dissolved.

A corporation may go out of existence in one of four ways: (1) By expiration of its term of life as limited in its charter; (2) by act of the legislature repealing or annulling its charter; (3) by the judgment or decree of a court of competent jurisdiction dissolving it for non-user or misuse of its franchise, or because of some act or omission working a forfeiture; and (4) by voluntary surrender of its charter.

When the time limited by the charter of a corporation expires the corporation is dead de facto, and no judicial determination of the fact is needful; the dissolution in such a case is declared by the act of the legislature itself. Sturges v. Vanderbilt, 73 N. Y. 384.

It is a well-settled principle that a dissolution by forfeiture is effected only by judicial proceedings against the corporation, taken for the purpose, followed by a hearing, or an opportunity to be heard, and a judgment rendered logs cut by Thompson, but not delivered so as to entitle him to demand payment therefor at the time the decree of sale was entered, is the only sum that can now be allowed him.

Counsel for the appellee say this court regarded and treated the contract as having been rescinded, and declared it to be so, and ordered that Thompson be put in statu quo,—reimbursed for all his outlay, and made whole. The court say, in the opinion: "A partly executed executory contract could be avoided before its final execution, but the executing party thereto should be placed in statu quo, in absence of fraud, by compensation in the nature of a quantum meruit for money and labor expended under such contract." In conclusion the court said: "Having partly executed his contracts, Albert Thompson is entitled to recover a just and reasonable compensation for the necessary expenditure of labor and money under his stocking contract, less the sums paid him; but he is not entitled to recover the large profits claimed by him. As the sum of $14,749.34 is an alleged part of such expenditure, it should not have been decreed until the true amount thereof had been ascertained and determined. This amount, when ascertained and determined by reason of the adoption of the stocking contract by the receiver, under direction of the court, and thereby preventing Albert Thompson from perfecting his statutory lien therefor, under § 8, chap. 75, Code [1899], will be a prior lien thereon. National Pabluoque Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 36 Conn. 325, 4 Am. Rep. 80.

In cases of dissolution of a corporation as a consequence of insolvency, nonuser, misuser, or some other cause of forfeiture of the corporate franchises, it is well settled that dissolution does not take effect until judicially decreed. Sturges v. Vanderbilt, 73 N. Y. 884.

In the absence of a governing statute a corporation aggregate, chartered for an unlimited time, may, by the concurrent consent of the state which created it and its stockholders, be dissolved. Revere v. Boston Copper Co. 15 Pick. 351.

A company not incorporated for any determinate time, and in its nature perpetual, cannot dissolve itself, and terminate its own existence at its own will, by a bare notice to the executive department of the state which chartered it. Ibid.

A corporation does not cease to exist until its dissolution is effected in a manner provided by law. Taylor v. Holmes, 14 Fed. 498.

A corporation may surrender its charter to the sovereign power, but there must be some definite act of surrender and an acceptance by the sovereign. Mere nonuser of its powers is no surrender of them, nor does it warrant a court in presuming an abandonment of its franchise. Ibid.

The adoption by stockholders of a resolution that the corporation be dissolved does not terminate the corporate existence. New York Marble Iron Works v. Smith, 4 Duer, 362.

To effect the dissolution of a corporation by resolution of stockholders, either the state must accept a surrender of the charter, or else a court must decree dissolution. Ibid.

A corporation may dissolve itself and end its corporate existence by voluntarily surrendering its franchise to the state, but the state must accept to complete the dissolution. Combes v. Keyes (Combes v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co.) 89 Wis. 297, 27 L. R. A. 369, 46 Am. St. Rep. 839, 62 N. W. 89.

The dissolution of a corporation is not voluntary when, becoming embarrassed and unable to continue business, its creditors force a receivership, and the corporate assets turn out to be insufficient to meet its liabilities, merely because its officers consent to such dissolution. Griffith v. Blackwater Boom & Lumber Co. 46 W. Va. 56, 33 S. E. 125.

The mortgaging of all the property, assets, 99 L. R. A.

and franchisees of a corporation by consent and authority of the legislature, and the subsequent foreclosure of such mortgage, and sale of the mortgaged property and franchise, work a dissolution of the corporation. Combes v. Keyes (Combes v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co.) 89 Wis. 297, 27 L. R. A. 369, 46 Am. St. Rep. 839, 62 N. W. 89.

A transfer by a corporation, although it is not shown to be insolvent, of all its property, which suspends and terminates the regular business of the grantor, and is made and accepted with that purpose and intention, has the practical effect to dissolve such corporation, and subject it to a forfeiture of its charter at the instance of the state, since it voluntarily strips itself of all its property and assets, and becomes incapable, and intends to be and stay unable, to perform its corporate duties. Cole v. Millerton Iron Co. 133 N. Y. 164, 28 Am. St. Rep. 615, 30 N. E. 847.

When the charter of a corporation gives its creditors a direct action against its stockholders, but only after its dissolution, the courts will treat such dissolution as effected so as to give a creditor his remedy against a shareholder if the stockholders have done all in their power to dissolve the corporation. Slee v. Bloom, 19 Johns. 475, 10 Am. Dec. 273.

After a corporation has been stripped of all its property, and for a quarter of a century has failed to exercise any corporate franchise, elect any officers, or maintain any office, a surrender of its franchise will be presumed. Combes v. Keyes (Combes v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co.) 89 Wis. 297, 27 L. R. A. 369, 46 Am. St. Rep. 839, 62 N. W. 89, Citing Brandon Iron Co. v. Gleason, 24 Vt. 228.

V. When dissolution is not effected.

The only modes known to the common law of dissolving a corporation were, by the death of all its members; by the act of the legislature; by a surrender of the charter accepted by the government; or by a forfeiture of the franchise, which could only take place upon a judgment of a competent tribunal in a proceeding in behalf of the state. Neither a court of law, nor a court of equity, had jurisdiction to decree the forfeiture of a corporate charter, or the dissolution of a corporation at the suit of an individual. Folger v. Columbian Ins. Co. 99 Mass. 267, 96 Am. Dec. 747.

on the assets of the corporation in the hands of the receiver." The substance of this conclusion is incorporated in points 3 and 4 of the syllabus. In the opinion of the court, the contract was voidable on the part of the Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company, and the court, having succeeded to its rights in the administration of its affairs, abrogated it by selling the property of said company free from the obligation of Thompson's contract; but it held, nevertheless, as stated, that he is entitled to compensation, and the only question to determine is the amount thereof.

The termination of Thompson's contract, as decided on the former appeal, rests upon two grounds. The first is that the corporation was unable, because of financial embarrassment, to further proceed with its business; and the other that, as Thompson was a director of the company at the time the contract was entered into, it was voidable at the election of the stockholders. It is not, therefore, the ordinary case of a wrongful prevention of the performance of a contract, nor is it a case of settlement of the equities or legal rights of the parties upon the rescission of a contract.

The principle of law underlying the first ground upon which the contract was declared to have terminated is announced in People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 174, 1 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 586. This doctrine is that, where performance of a contract by a corporation is prevented by its dissolution at the instance of the state or Neither the insolvency of a corporation, nor its failure to elect officers, operates as a dissolution, or as a virtual surrender of its charter. Taylor v. Holmes, 14 Fed. 498.

The mere fact that a corporation has failed to pay its debts, and has ceased to carry on its lawful and ordinary business for such a length of time as, according to a statute of the state which created it, warrants its dissolution, does not, per se, in the absence of an act of the legislature or the judgment of a court dissolving, work a dissolution so as to prevent or abate ordinary legal proceedings against it by its creditors. Ibid.

The resignation of all its officers does not, per se, operate to destroy the existence of a corporation. Officers and agents are necessary to manage the affairs of a corporation, but the corporation may exist so as to maintain succession, and hold and preserve its franchises, though its functions be for the time suspended for want of means of action. Muscatine Turn Verein v. Funck, 18 Iowa, 469.

It is a settled rule that, although the neglect of a corporation to reappoint its officers may in certain cases suspend its existence, it cannot be thus extinguished to the injury of creditors. Brown v. Union Ins. Co. 3 La. Ann. 177.

An exception to the rule that failure to elect officers does not work a dissolution of a corporation appeared in Slee v. Bloom, 19 Johns. 475, 10 Am. Dec. 273. It was said that, as the shareholders had done all they could to dissolve the company, the court would to give a creditor his remedy against a shareholder, and treat the dissolution as effected. It was upon this ground that the Louisiana supreme court distinguished the case in applying the general rule. Ibid.

The mere insolvency of a corporation, and an assignment of all its property to trustees for the benefit of creditors, followed by a suspension of its ordinary business, are not equivalent to a dissolution. New England Iron Co. v. Gilbert Elev. R. Co. 91 N. Y., 153.

A corporation is not dissolved by the mere bringing of a suit alleging insolvency, and obtaining the appointment of a receiver. Kinsman v. Flisk, 37 App. Div. 443, 56 N. Y. Supp. 33.

Insolvency, suspension of business, and a receivership, alone, do not extinguish corporate life in New Jersey. They may justify the chancellor in declaring the charter forfeited and void, but the assets may, on the other hand, prove sufficient to pay creditors in full, and 69 L. R. A.

justify the discharge of the receiver and the resumption of the corporate business. This falls short of the civil death of the corporation until the final decree, and consequently the rule that the death of the master terminates the servant's contract does not apply to bar a corporate employee's claim for damages for breach of his contract by the insolvency of the corporation. Spader v. Mural Decoration Mfg. Co. 47 N. J. Eq. 18, 20 Atl. 378.

The mere appointment and qualification of a receiver of a national bank at the instance of the comptroller of the currency for failure to redeem its notes does not work a forfeiture of the franchise and a dissolution of the banking corporation, so as to bar a creditor from maintaining suit against the bank to establish the validity of his claim. National Pahuloque Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 86 Conn. 325, 4 Am. Rep. 80.

The mere insolvency and the appointment of a receiver of a corporation are not equivalent to its dissolution, even though it is restrained by judicial order from transacting any more business. City Ins. Co. v. Commercial Bank, 68 Ill. 348.

The appointment of a receiver to take and distribute among creditors and stockholders all the property of a corporation, while sometimes spoken of as a virtual dissolution, does not extinguish the franchise, terminate the legal existence, or render the corporation incapable of being sued at law or in equity. Folger v. Columbian Ins. Co. 99 Mass. 267, 96 Am. Dec. 747.

The fact that a foreign building and loan association has been put in the hands of a receiver in its home state, and forbidden to continue business, does not relieve it from liability to pay back his investment to a resident member, who has given due notice of his withdrawal as required by the corporate by-laws, notwithstanding the association is unable to make collections, only after which, according to its by-laws, it is bound to pay. Southern Bldg. & L. Assn. v. Price, 88 Md. 155, 42 L. R. A. 206, 41 Atl. 53.

VI. The earlier common-law doctrine concerning the effect of dissolution.

"The text-books and cases decided are uniform in their language,—that the real estate held by the corporation at its civil death reverts to the grantor and his heirs; that the power creating it, it may annul its contracts, and, in doing so, does not commit any breach of the contract. The act of annulment is deemed to be that of the state, and not of the corporation, and gives the contractor no right to claim damages as for a breach of his contract. Whether, in such case, the contractor is entitled to be reimbursed for his outlay and expenses is not determined in that case, for the reason that no such question was involved. The demand set up and denied was founded upon a contract of employment as agent, and the damages claimed were for anticipated profits. Such termination of the contract does not imply that it was not a valid contract, imposing obligations and conferring rights up until the moment of the dissolution. The contract in such case cannot be considered to have been void ab initio. A long list of cases turning upon this principle will be found in the note to the case above cited, as reported in 1 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas., holding that the parties to an entire contract of such a nature as indicates that they, in entering into it, must have contemplated the possibility of its termination by act of the law or of God, or by some cause beyond their power, are, upon the happening of such event, relieved from its obligations, so far as it remains unexecuted, upon the theory that though, in form, it was an entire and indivisible contract, yet, as the parties must have had in view the contingency which rendered it impossible of further execution, or gave right to terminate it, it was in fact personal estate vests in the people, or, in England, in the Crown; and that the debts due to and from the corporation are totally extinguished; so that neither the stockholders, nor the directors or trustees, of the corporation can recover, or be charged with, them in their natural capacity." Commercial Bank v. Lockwood, 2 Harr. (Del.) 8.

At common law an absolute and unqualified dissolution of a corporation by a decree of forfeiture or legislative repeal extinguishes all debts due to or from it, puts an end to all its rights of action and property, and it can no longer sue or be sued, or do any lawful act. National Pabuloque Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 36 Conn. 325, 4 Am. Rep. 80.

The doctrine of the common law, that, upon the dissolution of a corporation, debts due to or from it are extinguished, results necessarily from the fact that, the corporation having expired, whether by its own limitation, by surrender or abandonment of its members, or judgment of dissolution, there is no one in law to sue or be sued. Hightower v. Thornton, 8 Ga. 486, 52 Am. Dec. 412.

The elementary writers, both in England and in the United States, everywhere assert distinctly that debts due to and from a corporation are extinguished by its dissolution, unless prevented by the terms of the charter itself, or by aliunde legislation; that in the courts of both countries this doctrine is too well settled to be overthrown or shaken; and that such debts are so totally extinguished that the members of the corporation cannot recover or be charged with them in their natural capacities. Moultrie v. Smiley, 16 Ga. 289.

Upon the dissolution or civil death of a corporation all its real estate, by the strict rule of the common law, reverts to the original owners or their heirs, and all its personal estate vests in the Crown, in England, and the state here, and all debts due to or from it are, by operation of law, extinguished. Life Asso. of America v. Fassett, 102 Ill. 315.

At common law dissolution implied that the corporation had wholly ceased to exist for any purpose, so that suits brought by or against it abated, and a judgment thereafter rendered against it was a nullity; that its title to property ceased to exist, and all legal remedies to enforce debts due by or to it became extinguished. Bowe v. Minnesota Milk Co. 44 Minn. 470, 47 N. W. 151.
69 L. R. A.

The rule of the common law in respect of the reversion to the grantor of real estate, vesting in the Crown of personal property, and extinguishment of debts and credits of corporations when they were dissolved, had its origin when corporations were either municipal, ecclesiastical, or eleemosynary, and business corporations were unknown. There were no stockholders or natural persons entitled to the assets of dead corporations, and, as in the case of an individual dying without heirs, the personality went to the King, and to prevent the realty from escheating to the King it reverted to the donor, upon the ground that, the grant being made to a body corporate for public or charitable uses, it was made only for life. Shayne v. Evening Post Pub. Co. 168 N. Y. 70, 55 L. R. A. 777, 85 Am. St. Rep. 654, 61 N. E. 115.

At common law every grant of land to a corporation was a grant for life of the body politic, conferring a power of alienation, but coupled with a reservation of the reversion if the land should not be aliened during the life of the corporation. And as, by statute, the common law of England in all its parts, where not inconsistent with constitutional and statutory law, was adopted and continued in force in South Carolina the legal title to the real estate of a private corporation (not a moneyed or trading company) reverted upon its dissolution to, and vested in, the grantor or his heirs, although the conveyance to the corporation was in fee. St. Philip's Church v. Zion Presby. Church, 23 S. C. 297.

The common-law rule, whereby, upon the civil death of a corporation, all its unsold real estate reverted to its grantor, all its personal estate vested in the state, and all debts due to or from it were extinguished, so that neither the stockholders, directors, nor trustees, could recover or be charged with the debts in their natural capacity, was applied by the supreme court of Tennessee, to prevent a recovery upon a note secured by a deed of trust executed to the Bank of Tennessee after the charter of that corporation had expired. White v. Campbell, 5 Humph. 38.

The court there held both deed and note inoperative and void, saying, in answer to the argument that the maker fairly owed the debt, and intended to secure the stockholders: "We cannot recognize the existence of stockholders of a defunct corporation, and we cannot . . . go behind the note and deed to hunt for a difand in law a divisible contract, contrary to its form, and recovery is allowed for such part of the contract as has been performed, but profits which would have arisen from further and future performance are denied and refused. Mumma v. Potomac Co. 8 Pet. 286, 8 L. ed. 947; Fenton v. Clark, 11 Vt. 557; Fuller v. Broxon, 11 Met. 440; Ryan v. Dayton, 25 Conn. 188, 65 Am. Dec. 560; Willington v. West Boylston, 4 Pick. 101; Yerrington v. Greene, 7 R. I. 589, 84 Am. Dec. 578; Stewart v. Loring, 5 Allen, 306, 81 Am. Dec. 747; Knight v. Bean, 22 Me. 531; Merrill v. Suffolk Bank, 31 Me. 57, 50 Am. Dec. 649; Read v. Frankfort Bank, 23 Me. 321; Farrow v. Wilson, L. R. 4 C. P. 744; Tasker v. Shepherd, 6 Hurlst. & N. 575; Charnley v. Winstanley, 5 East, 266;

ferent payee and a different cestui que trust from that mentioned in the instrument." Ibid.

On the dissolution of a Tennessee corporation its real estate reverts back to the original grantor or his heirs. Acklin v. Paschal,* 48 Tex. 147, Citing White v. Campbell, 5 Humph. 38.

At common law, upon the death or dissolution of a corporation its real property reverted to the donors, and its personal property escheated to the King, while the debts due to and from it were thereby extinguished, and all actions pending for or against it abated. Wallamet Falls Canal & Lock Co. v. Kittredge, 5 Sawy. 44.

The doctrine of the common law as to the effect of the dissolution of a corporation upon its real and personal property, debts and credits, had its origin when corporations were either municipal or ecclesiastical, and were dissolved for abuse or nonuse of their powers. Their real estate, which usually was acquired as a donation to public or pious uses, was held to revert, upon the cessation of the use, to the donors, and their personal property to escheat to the King for want of owners. In these cases there were no stockholders who were entitled, equitably or otherwise, to the assets of dead corporations, and, as in the case of a natural person dying without heirs, the personality went to the King; but, to prevent the real estate from escheating to the Crown, it was held to revert to the donor, upon the theory that it was made over to the corporation only for its life. Ibid.

VII. Comment and criticism concerning it.

According to the old settled law of the land, says Kent (Com. § 33, p. 307), where there is no special statute provision to the contrary, upon the civil death of a corporation all its real estate, remaining unsold, reverts back to the original grantor and his heirs. The debts due to and from the corporation are all extinguished. Neither the stockholders, nor the directors or trustees of the corporation, can recover those debts, or be charged with them in their natural capacity. All the personal estate of the corporation vests in the people as succeeding to this right and prerogative of the Crown at common law.

It is observed, in the appended note to the 10th edition, the rule of the common law has in fact become obsolete and odious. It has never been applied to insolvent or dissolved moneyed

Taylor v. Caldwell, 3 Best & S. 826; Rhodes v. Forwood, L. R. 1 App. Cas. 256; Thurnell v. Balbernie, 2 Mees. & W. 786; Brogden v. Marriott, 2 Scott, 703; Worsley v. Wood, 6 T. R. 710; Davison v. Mure, 3 Dougl. 28; Milner v. Field, 5 Exch. 829; Morgan v. Birnie, 9 Bing. 672; People v. Manning, 8 Cow. 297, 18 Am. Dec. 451; Carpenter v. Stevens, 12 Wend. 589; Wolfe v. Howes, 24 Barb. 174; Fahy v. North, 19 Barb. 341; Spalding v. Rosa, 71 N. Y. 40, 27 Am. Rep. 7; Sturges v. Vanderbilt, 73 N. Y. 390; Smith v. Brady, 17 N. Y. 173, 72 Am. Dec. 442; Walker v. Tucker, 70 Ill. 527; Orr v. Ward, 73 Ill. 318; Hercules Mut. Life Assur. Soc. v. Brinker, 77 N. Y. 435. By far the greater number of these cases involve contracts for compensation to agents and serv-corporations in England. The sound doctrine now is, as shown by statutes and judicial decisions, that the capital and debts of banking and other moneyed corporations constitute a trust fund and pledge for the payment of creditors and stockholders; and a court of equity will lay hold of the fund, and see that it is duly collected and applied.

And in Hightower v. Thornton, 8 Ga. 486, 52 Am. Dec. 412, Lumpkin, J., quotes Chancellor Kent approvingly as having given his professional opinion, which was read on the argument of Nevitt v. Bank of Port Gibson, 6 Smiles & M. 513, in which "he asserts that there is not an instance in the English law in which the funds of an insolvent or forfeited moneyed institution have been permitted to be abandoned, and creditors denied redress and payment out of them; and he adds that, to permit the odious and obsolete doctrine of ancient date, before moneyed institutions were introduced, to be now applied to the dissolution of a bank, perhaps by its own mismanagement and abuse, so that all its assets were to be considered as dispersed to the wind, without any owner or power any where to collect and justly apply them, would be a disgrace to any civilized state."

Of the doctrine of the common law as stated in the text-books, Campbell, J., of the United States Supreme Court, remarked that "the consequences are visited without any discrimination; the losses are imposed upon those who are not blameworthy, and the benefits are accumulated upon those who are without desert." Bacon v. Robertson, 18 How. 480, 15 L. ed. 499.

According to common-law principles the debts of a corporation either to it or from it are extinguished by its dissolution; nor are its members liable in their individual characters for any part of its debts. Its lands revert to the donors. Its personality goes to the commonwealth. "If these things be so (and there is no reasonable doubt about it), they are grossly unjust," said Tucker, P., for the Virginia court of appeals, in 1836. "It cannot be just that the members of a joint-stock company should forfeit their property to the commonwealth by the expiration of their charter. It cannot be just that the land which they have purchased and paid for should revert to the grantor, who has already received value for it. It cannot be just that those who are indebted to the corporation ants, in which no demand for money laid out and expended in preparation for, and execution of, the contract was made or could have been set up. Hence in none of them is that question passed upon. The doctrine of the case of People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 174, is examined, and repudiated as unsound, and at variance with the principles of law in Rosenbaum v. United States Credit System Co. 61 N. J. L. 543, 40 Atl. 591. Speaking for the court, Chancellor McGill said: "It appears to us that the material fact that the corporation defendant is a stock company, and that its capital stands as a trust fund for the payment of its debts, is lost sight of. Such a company may become insolvent, and its charter may be forfeited, when its assets may be more than sufficient to pay its debts. Everyone who deals with such a corporation does so in view of the trust fund its capital provides, and the security that fund is intended to afford. The stockholders who provide the fund invite confidence because of it, that through such confidence their venture may be profitable to them. The mere statement of this situation makes conspicuous the injustice of any course of reasoning which will return to the stockholders their capital before satisfaction of all losses induced by faith in it shall be made. The state creates corporations, and requires of them the provision of such a trust fund, and, when it destroys their corporate existence, natural justice requires that it shall provide for distribution of the fund, so that no part of it

(a bank, for instance) should be absolved from their engagements; and still less that, by a forfeiture of its charter, those to whom it is indebted should lose their just demands." Rider v. Nelson & A. Union Factory, 7 Leigh, 154, 30 Am. Dec. 495.

The doctrine that the debts of a corporation both to and from it are extinguished by its dissolution is odious. A majority of the American states have, by enlightened legislation, interposed to prevent, to ward off, the iniquitous consequence of this common-law rule, the existence of which is a disgrace to a civilized state. Such is the rule, however, but a court is not called upon to extend it one jot or tittle beyond the reason which gave it birth. Thornton v. Lane, 11 Ga. 459.

When a corporation is dissolved by having lived out its term, and there is no saving statute, following the rule of the common law its real estate reverts to the grantor, its personal property goes to the state, and its choses in action, debts, etc., are extinguished. Fox v. Horah, 36 N. C. (1 Ired. Eq.) 358, 36 Am. Dec. 48.

Judge Thompson (5 Thomp. Corp. § 6720) referred to this decision as being "in accordance with the barbarous rule of the common law;" and said it was "probably the last case of its kind."

But its doctrine was reiterated and applied more than twenty years later (1863) in the case of Malloy v. Mallett, 59 N. C. (6 Jones, Eq.) 345.

Later, however (1879), the court virtually repudiated the doctrine. Speaking of these decisions, it said that they were made, and their conclusions were reached, after full discussion and careful consideration by able jurists, and its reluctance to disturb them after so long an acquiescence by the profession could be overcome only by the clearest convictions of their error. But, it was added, they rested upon strictly legal principles, well settled by authority, and carried to logical results; and a remedy existed in calling in to exercise, in behalf of creditors and others interested, the equitable jurisdiction of the court. And, regarding the debts and other property of the dissolved corporation as the property of its creditors, a court of equity would reach forth and rather up and collect the assets though there were no legal owner, and would distribute them 69 L. R. A.

to creditors first and stockholders afterwards. Von Glahn v. De Rosset, 81 N. C. 467.

And finally (1897) the doctrine was emphatically repudiated, and the decision in Fox v. Horah, 36 N. C. (1 Ired. Eq.) 358, 36 Am. Dec. 48, supra, expressly overruled; and it was questioned whether the common law ever really sanctioned a rule so plainly "not founded upon justice and reason, nor approved by experience." Wilson v. Leary, 120 N. C. 90, 38 L. R. A. 240, 58 Am. St. Rep. 778, 26 S. E. 630.

The case of Fox v. Horah, 36 N. C. (1 Ired. Eq.) 358, 36 Am. Dec. 48, was fully analyzed, explained, distinguished, and circumscribed in Moultrie v. Smiley, 16 Ga. 289.

Mr. Cook (2 Corp. 5th ed. § 641), advertising to the alleged common-law doctrine that, upon the dissolution of a corporation, all its assets belonged to the state, and all its debts were canceled, and its acceptance in text-books and decisions for more than a century, says that, nevertheless, the courts uniformly refused to apply it, and resorted to various devices and fictions to avoid doing so; and finally, in 1899, an English court, in the case of Re Higginson [1899] 1 Q. B. 325, denied that such doctrine ever was the common law, and showed that in the 17th and 18th centuries many corporations were dissolved, and in no single case was such doctrine ever applied.

The authorities for the proposition that, on the dissolution of a corporation, aggregate debts due to or from it are extinguished, says Wright, J., of the English Queen's bench, in the case to which Mr. Cook referred, are by no means clear or satisfactory. In 1 Bl. Com. 484, and in 2 Kyd, Corporations, 510, and in Grant, Corporations, 303, such a proposition is stated, but in terms which suggest that no more is meant than that after the dissolution the individuals who were members or officers of the corporation cannot sue or be sued in respect of its rights or obligations; and this is all that is established by the cases there cited. The American decision in the case of Bank of Vincennes v. State, 1 Blackf. 267, 12 Am. Dec. 234, relies on these authorities as supporting the general proposition, but it does not advert to this qualification, or add new references to authority, and the authorities cited do not in any way support the proposition, except as qualified. Grant is explicit in the same case, but does not refer to any authority which, so far as I can see, has any bearing on the matter. Nor do the old au-shall be returned to those who offer it as security for the action of others, until the latter shall have all the protection against loss in their undertaking that it is capable of affording."

Other cases more analogous to the one now under consideration hold that the effect of the dissolution of a corporation upon unexpired or executory contracts is to excuse further performance and render them nugatory as to so much as remains unperformed, but to entitle the obligee to damages for the breach of the contract to be paid out of the assets of the dissolved corporation. 10 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1312. Thus, in Schleider v. Dielman, 44 La. Ann. 463, 10 So. 934, the court held the dissolution of the corporation to be a breach of the contract, giving the other party the right to recover what he has already expended toward the performance of it and the profits which he would have realized by performance. Re Wiltshire Iron Co. L. R. 3 Ch. 443, holds that where a sale of personal property has been made by a corporation which is dissolved before delivery of the property, the purchaser has a valid claim for damages for the breach of the contract, payable out of the assets of the company. In Spader v. Mural Decoration Mfg. Co. 47 N. J. Eq. 18, 20 Atl. 378, it is held that where a person was employed by a corporation for a term of years for a fixed salary, and before the expiration of the term the corporation became insolvent, and a receiver was appointed to wind up its affairs, the employee was enthorities as to the effect of dissolution of municipal and other corporations add anything decisive to the question. In the 17th and 18th centuries corporations aggregate constituted by charter or letters patent were numerous, and questions frequently occurred as to the effect upon their rights and obligations of dissolution, revival, and reincorporation with or without change of name or constitution. I cannot find that in any case the rights or obligations of a corporation were held to be affected by a technical dissolution. Nor, on the other hand, can I find a case in which such a question has been decided where the corporation had not been revived, or some provision made by statute or charter with reference to its obligations. Re Illeginson [1899] 1 Q. B. 325.

There is in the opinion of Lumpkin, J., in Moultrie v. Smiley, 16 Ga. 289, a very full and learned examination into the origin, reason for, extent and limitations of the rule that debts due to and from a corporation are extinguished by its dissolution. It is too long to give here in extenso, and cannot, without sacrifice, be abstracted. The reader will do well to supplement this note by perusing it.

VIII. The trust-fund, or "American," doctrine.

The trust-fund doctrine, called frequently the "American" doctrine, was formulated by Mr. Justice Story.

"It appears to me," said that jurist in Wood v. Dummer, 3 Mason, 308, Fed. Cas. No. 17,944, "very clear upon general principles, as well as the legislative intention, that the capital stock of banks is to be deemed a pledge or trust fund for the payment of the debts contracted by the bank. . . . To me this point appears so plain upon principles of law, as well as common sense, that I cannot be brought into any doubt that the charters of our banks make the capital stock a trust fund for the payment of all the debts of the corporation."

And, in conformity with these views, he held that the capital stock of a bank is a trust fund for creditors, and, upon the division of it, the stockholders take it subject to all the equities attached to it. They are privies to the trust, and receive it cum onere. Ibid.

And, on the dissolution of a banking corporation, the bill holders and the stockholders have each equitable claims, but those of bill holders possess a prior exclusive equity. Ibid.

69 L. R. A.

The idea that the property of insolvent corporations is held by them in trust for creditors,—is a trust estate in their hands,—and to be administered by chancery as such, is said to have originated in a dictum of Story, J., in Wood v. Dummer, 3 Mason, 308, Fed. Cas. No. 17,944, and to have no existence at common law. It has not been adopted in England, but is distinctly a creature of some courts in this country, and is styled the "American doctrine." O'Bear Jewelry Co. v. Volfer, 106 Ala. 205, 28 L. R. A. 707, 54 Am. St. Rep. 31, 17 So. 525.

The trust-fund doctrine is usually stated in the decisions in terms quite broad and general. Thus:—

The property of an insolvent trading corporation while under the control of its officers being a trust fund in their hands for the benefit of its creditors, a court of equity, which never allows a trust to fail for want of a trustee, will see to the execution of the trust, although by the dissolution of the corporation the legal title to its property has been changed. Curran v. Arkansas, 15 How. 304, 14 L. ed. 705.

In contrast to the rule of the common law, the rule in equity was that while, upon dissolution, a corporation ceased to exist, yet its property was impressed with a trust in favor of its creditors and stockholders as beneficiaries, whose interests equity would protect by appointing a trustee if necessary to execute the trust. Bowe v. Minnesota Milk Co. 44 Minn. 480, 47 N. W. 151.

When a corporation is dissolved, discontinues its business, makes a general assignment, or does any other act indicating positive insolvency, its property thereafter is affected by an equitable lien or trust for the benefit of all its creditors, and these may individually be restrained by injunctions against appropriating the corporate assets to the payment of their claims. McClaren v. Union Roller Mills & Elevator Co. 95 Tenn. 696, 35 S. W. 88.

It is well settled that the property of a corporation is a trust fund in the hands of its directors for the benefit of creditors and stockholders,—that is, to the extent of preventing the directors from dealing with it to their own advantage, or in disregard of the rights of the creditors and stockholders. Goodin v. Cincinnati & W. Canal Co. 18 Ohio St. 169, 98 Am. Dec. 95.

In the view of equity the property of a dis-titled to damages for the breach of his contract, payable pro rata out of the assets in the hands of the receiver.

In treating of this subject, Cook on Corporations, § 641, says: "It was formerly believed to be the common law that upon the dissolution of a corporation all its assets belonged to the state, and all its debts were canceled, and that the creditors were not entitled to anything from the assets. This remarkable theory has been stated and restated in text-books and decisions of the courts for over one hundred years. It is found in Blackstone's Commentaries and in the old works of Kyd on Corporations and Grant on Corporations. The courts, however, while upholding the rule theoretically, have quite uniformly refused to apply such a doctrine, and have invented various theories, fictions, and arguments for avoiding this supposed doctrine of the common law. Finally, in 1899, an English court denied that the common law ever countenanced such confiscation, and showed that in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries many corporations were dissolved, and that in not a single case was any such doctrine applied. It again may be said that, although the common law has its reproaches, this is not one of them. The American courts have always refused to follow the supposed common-law rule on this subject." The same work says, at § 642: "As already seen, the old rule that upon dissolution all debts by or to the corporation are rendered unenforceable is no longer the law. It has been solved corporation constitutes a trust fund pledged to the payment of creditors and stockholders. Broughton v. Pensacola, 93 U. S. 266, 23 L. ed. 806.

The property of an insolvent corporation constitutes a trust fund pledged to the payment of all its debts equally and ratably. Butler v. Cockrill, 20 C. C. A. 122, 36 U. S. App. 702, 73 Fed. 945.

It is a very plain proposition that the stock and property of every corporation are to be regarded as a trust fund for the payment of its debts, and its creditors have a lien and the right to priority of payment over any stockholder. Bartlett v. Drew, 57 N. Y. 587. Followed in Hastings v. Drew, 76 N. Y. 9.

In Nevitt v. Bank of Port Gibson, 6 Smedes & M. 513, said Lumpkin, J., of the supreme court of Georgia, "nearly all the learning on this subject was exhausted, it having been twice argued with singular diligence and ability. And there, as everywhere else where the question has been raised, a majority of the court held that the property and debts due to and belonging to the bank was a trust fund subject to the cognizance and control of a court of equity for the benefit of creditors. Hightower v. Thornton, 8 Ga. 486, 52 Am. Dec. 412.

The authorities are uniform that, in case a corporation is insolvent, its directors and officers are trustees for its creditors, and must manage its property and assets with strict regard to their interests, and, if they themselves are creditors, they cannot secure any preference or advantage over other creditors while managing the insolvent corporation. Haywood v. Lincoln Lumber Co. 64 Wis. 639, 26 N. W. 184.

The assets of an insolvent corporation are a trust fund for the benefit of creditors and stockholders. Sands v. Kimbark, 27 N. Y. 148.

While a corporation continues solvent, its officials are agents or trustees for its shareholders, but owe duty or obligation to none others. But the moment a corporation becomes insolvent its assets must be regarded as a trust fund for the payment of all its creditors, and the directors occupy the position of trustees,—a fiduciary relation which forbids them to take the trust property and apply it to the payment of corporate debts due to themselves. Beach v. Miller, 130 Ill. 162, 17 Am. St. Rep. 291, 22 N. E. 464.

A corporation being insolvent and ceasing to 69 L. R. A.

prosecute the business for which it was created, its assets become a trust fund in the hands of its directors, to be used by them in paying the corporate creditors. Stough v. Ponca Mill Co. 54 Neb. 500, 74 N. W. 868.

The assets of a corporation are a trust fund for the payment of its debts, upon which creditors have an equitable lien, as against both stockholders and all transferees, except those purchasing in good faith and for value. Cole v. Millerton Iron Co. 133 N. Y. 164, 28 Am. St. Rep. 615, 30 N. E. 847.

Nothing is better settled than that the assets of an insolvent corporation are a fund for the payment of its debts. The holders of such property take it charged with a trust in favor of such creditors, which a court of equity will enforce. Shanokin Valley & P. R. Co. v. Malone, 85 Pa. 25.

The settled law of Tennessee is declared to be that the assets of an insolvent corporation become, from the date of its assured insolvency, a fixed trust fund for the equal pro rata distribution among its creditors, unless otherwise provided by law or fixed by a valid contract. Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. 95 Tenn. 634, 31 L. R. A. 593, 49 Am. St. Rep. 943, 32 S. W. 1097.

When an insolvent corporation ceases to carry on its business, and by a conveyance of all its property incapacitates itself from continuing business, the law makes its assets a trust fund for the benefit of all its creditors without preference. Lyons-Thomas Hardware Co. v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co. 86 Tex. 143, 22 L. R. A. 502, 24 S. W. 16, 88 Tex. 468, 27 S. W. 100.

In equity the capital stock of a corporation is regarded as a trust fund for the payment of debts. The creditors have a lien upon it which is prior in point of right to any claim which the stockholders as such can have upon it; and courts will be astute to detect and defeat any scheme or device which is calculated to withdraw this fund, or in any way to place it beyond the reach of creditors. Crandall v. Lincoln, 52 Conn. 73, 94, 52 Am. Rep. 560.

This is the settled law. Buck v. Ross, 68 Conn. 29, 57 Am. St. Rep. 60, 35 Atl. 763.

The capital, unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock, and the liability of holders of paid-up stock to pay an additional amount equal to the par value of their stock, are all parts of a trust estate sacredly pledged for the security of held that the liability of a corporation to deliver goods according to an executory contract ceases upon such corporation passing into the hands of a receiver, where the receivership was accompanied by the usual injunction against the further transaction of business by the insolvent corporation. This conclusion is arrived at on the theory that the failure to perform was due to the operation of law, and hence that no damages could be recovered for breach of the contract. The better rule, however, is that, even at common law, the obligations of a corporation do not cease by reason of its dissolution. The dissolution of a company does not put an end to its executory contract to employ a person, nor obligations which were created for a period longer than the duration of the corporate charter. Where a corporation is dissolved before a lease taken by it runs out, the lessor may hold its assets liable for the breach of contract. Where a receiver is appointed, he generally finds a number of executory contracts in force,—contracts of employment, or for rental of premises, or for purchases of material, etc. He then must decide whether he wishes to adopt any of these contracts as his own. If he does not adopt a particular contract, then that contractor has no preferred claim against the receiver, as a part of the receiver's expenses or disbursements, but has merely a claim against the corporation and its general assets, and this claim may be for past sums due or for breach of contract, or both. On the other hand, if the the creditors of a national banking association organized under the national banking acts. Stuart v. Hayden, 18 C. C. A. 618, 36 U. S. App. 462, 72 Fed. 402.

The law is that, when a corporation is insolvent, its capital is a trust fund for the payment of its debts. Hence, a director who is a creditor upon a pre-existing debt cannot take advantage of his superior information to secure his demand in preference to other creditors. Hill v. Pioneer Lumber Co. 113 N. C. 173, 21 L. R. A. 560, 37 Am. St. Rep. 621, 18 S. E. 107.

The capital stock and profits of a dissolved corporation should be regarded as a trust fund for the payment of its debts and liabilities, and the stockholders are only entitled to such surplus as remains after their payment. Dudley v. Price, 10 B. Mon. 84.

When a state becomes the sole stockholder in a corporation chartered by it for trading purposes, and such corporation becomes insolvent, the state, upon taking the corporate property, does so as stockholder, and not as sovereign, and takes such property charged with a trust in favor of the corporate creditors. Curran v. Arkansas, 15 How. 304, 14 L. ed. 705.

The obligations of its contracts survive the dissolution of a corporation, and its creditors may enforce their claims against any property belonging to the corporation which has not passed to bona fide purchasers, but is still held in trust for the company or its stockholders at the time of its dissolution, in any mode permitted by law. Mumma v. Potomac Co. 8 Pet. 286, 8 L. ed. 945.

Its debts survive the dissolution of a corporation, and creditors may enforce their claims against any property belonging to the corporation which has not passed into the hands of a bona fide purchaser; for such property will be held affected with a trust primarily for the creditors of the company. Howe v. Robinson, 20 Fla. 352.

By the old common law a dissolution of a corporation extinguished its debts; but in such cases courts of equity consider the property and effects a trust fund for the payment of creditors, and shareholders into whosoever hands they come subject to such a trust. Powell v. North Missouri R. Co. 42 Mo. 63.

But such statements require great modification.

The property of a corporation is only a trust fund for the payment of its debts in the sense that, when the corporation is lawfully dissolved, and all its business wound up, or when it is insolvent, all its creditors are entitled, in equity, to have their debts paid out of the corporate property before any distribution thereof among the stockholders. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Ham, 114 U. S. 587, 29 L. ed. 235, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1081.
69 L. R. A.

That the property of an insolvent corporation is a trust fund for the benefit of its creditors is true only in the sense that, after a court of equity has duly acquired, by virtue of some independent general equitable principle, jurisdiction to administer corporate assets, it will administer them for the benefit of all creditors equally. O'Bear Jewelry Co. v. Volfer, 106 Ala. 205, 28 L. R. A. 707, 54 Am. St. Rep. 31, 17 So. 525.

The cases of Gibson v. Trowbridge Furniture Co. 96 Ala. 357, 11 So. 365; Goodyear Rubber Co. v. George D. Scott 96 Ala. 439, 11 So. 370, and Corey v. Wadsworth, 99 Ala. 68, 23 L. R. A. 618, 42 Am. St. Rep. 29, 11 So. 350, in so far as they decided anything beyond the point that the transfer by the officers of a corporation of corporate assets to pay corporate debts upon which such officers were secondarily liable constituted, as respected other corporate creditors, a fraudulent preference, and was therefore, as to such creditors, void, were overruled by the decision in O'Bear Jewelry Co. v. Volfer, 106 Ala. 205, 28 L. R. A. 707, 54 Am. St. Rep. 31, 17 So. 525; and the proposition that the assets of a corporation become a trust fund for the benefit of creditors, and are beyond the power of disposition or control of the governing directors whenever and as soon as the corporation becomes insolvent; and that mere corporate insolvency gives a court of equity jurisdiction to administer the assets as trust property,—was there distinctly negated.

The general doctrine that the property of a corporation is a trust fund for the payment of its debts only means that the property must be first appropriated to the payment of corporate debts before any portion of it can be distributed to the stockholders. It does not mean that the property is so affected by the indebtedness that it cannot be sold, transferred, or mortgaged in good faith and for value, except subject to the liability of being appropriated to pay that indebtedness. Fogg v. Blair, 133 U. S. 534, 33 L. ed. 721, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 338.

receiver does adopt the contract, then, as to sums becoming due before such adoption, the contractor is a general creditor only, but, as to sums becoming due after such adoption, they are a part of the receiver's expenses or disbursements, and must be paid as such. The law is clear that a receiver may refuse to carry out an executory contract of the corporation. A receiver has no power, however, to cancel a lease, except as to his own liability."

Upon this question, the language of § 59 of chapter 53 of the Code of 1899 has important bearing. It says the property and assets of a dissolved corporation, whatever the cause or manner of its dissolution may be, shall be subject to the payment of the liabilities of the corporation. This language is much broader than that of the New Jersey statute, which only directs the payment of the debts of the corporation out of its assets, and under which the courts of that state give damages on executory contracts rendered impossible of performance by reason of dissolution. As has been stated, the contract is not invalid, everything done under it is in part performance thereof, and the dissolution of the corporation cannot have the effect of rescission or rendering it void ab initio, and undoing anything that has been performed under it. Dissolution, even upon the theory adopted by those courts which adhere to the doctrine of People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 174, is simply a contingency in view of which the contract was made, and which it was

The general principle is well settled that the property of a private corporation is not charged by law with any direct trust or specific lien in favor of general creditors, and such a corporation, so long as it is in the active exercise of its functions, may exercise as full dominion and control over its property as an individual. McClaren v. Union Roller Mills & Elevator Co. 95 Tenn. 606, 35 S. W. 88.

It is not strictly accurate to refer to the assets of an insolvent corporation as a trust fund, and to its officers as trustees; at most, under some circumstances, the assets are a quasi trust fund, and the directors quasi trustees. Gottlieb v. Miller, 154 Ill. 44, 39 N. E. 992.

In the absence of countervailing legislation, an insolvent corporation may prefer certain of its creditors subject to the same restrictions that apply to individual debtors, which it could not do if its property and assets were held in trust for all its creditors equally, as soon as insolvency supervened. Ibid.

There is an extended examination of the trust-fund doctrine, commonly called the American doctrine, in Hospes v. Northwestern Mfg. & Car Co. 48 Minn. 174, 15 L. R. A. 470, 31 Am. St. Rep. 637, 50 N. W. 1117, leading to the conclusion that there is no distinction between the absolute and unconditional control of his property and assets which belongs to an individual and that belonging to a corporation. The stockholders of a corporation cannot appropriate the corporate property without satisfying the creditors, not because it is held in trust for creditors, but because such appropriation is a fraud upon them. If equity is called upon to distribute corporate assets in the case of insolvency or dissolution, creditors will be treated equally, and preferred to shareholders, who will get what is left pro rata to their shares.

The American or trust-fund doctrine is thus explained by the United States Supreme Court: A corporation is a distinct entity. Its affairs necessarily are managed by officers and agents, but it is as distinct a being as an individual is, and is entitled to hold property as absolutely as an individual can. Its estate, its interest, its possession, are the same. When a corporation becomes insolvent it is so far civilly dead that its property may be administered as a trust fund for the benefit of its creditors and stockholders. A court of equity will then make those funds trust funds which in other circumstances are as much the absolute property of the corporation as any man's property is his. Graham v. La Crosse & M. R. Co. 102 U. S. 148, 26 L. ed. 106.

That is to say that, when a court of equity takes into its possession the assets of an insolvent corporation, it will administer them on the theory that in equity they belong to the creditors and stockholders, rather than to the corporation itself. The idea underlies all the expressions in reference to "trust" in connection with corporate property, that the corporation is an entity distinct from its stockholders as from its creditors. Solvent it holds its property as any individual holds his, free from the touch of a creditor who has acquired no lien; free, also, from the touch of a stockholder, who, though equitably interested in, has no legal right to the property. Becoming insolvent, the equitable interest of the stockholders in the property, together with their conditional liability to the creditors, places the property in a condition of trust, first for the creditors, and then for the stockholders. Whatever of trust there is arises from the peculiar and diverse equitable rights of the stockholders as against the corporation in its property, and their conditional liability to its creditors. It is rather a trust in the administration of the assets after possession by a court of equity, then a trust attaching to the property as such for the direct benefit of either creditor or stockholder. Hollins v. Brierfield Coal & I. Co. 150 U. S. 371, 37 L. ed. 1113, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 127.

The question of trust when the legal right to the estate in lands of a dissolved corporation is claimed by the grantor in reversion under the common-law rule cannot be considered to prevent the legal results flowing from that rule in a court of law. A court of law is powerless to divest a legal estate in order to enforce an equity. In equity the rights of creditors and stockholders, if any there are, of a defunct corporation, will be enforced, whenever properly brought before a court administering equity. To enforce such rights equity will follow the legal estate in the hands of the grantor after he has recovered it at law. St. Philip's Church v. Zion Presby. Church, 23 S. C. 297.

IX. The effects of corporate dissolution according to modern views.

a. Civil death.

An act of the legislature declaring the charunderstood should, upon its happening, end the contract on a date earlier than that specified. Under that doctrine, full compensation is paid for so much of the contract as has been performed at the date of the dissolution, and profits which would have arisen from the performance of the part remaining unexecuted are denied and refused. It is difficult to conceive or express any reason why, upon the same principle, money expended in the performance of a contract which is not one of mere agency or service should not be recovered. It is laid out and expended upon the faith of the contract, at a time when that contract is recognized by the parties as valid and binding. If necessarily expended, as it must be if recoverable in any sense, it is of the very essence of performance, an act of performance, a thing without which there could be no performance. Can the dissolution of the corporation have the effect of undoing that which was binding at the time it was done, and of releasing obligations fixed and unalterable by the parties themselves? It cannot be done upon any theory except that which was supposed once to have been a principle of the common law, under which the dissolution of a corporation canceled all its obligations, released it of its debts, vested the title to its personal assets in the king, and returned its real estate to the donors,—a doctrine which Cook well says has been declared by the English court never to have been a part of the common law, and which has never been adopted, approved, ter of a domestic corporation vacated and annulled, and its powers and rights elsewhere vested, effects such corporation's legal death. Mumma v. Potomac Co. 8 Pet. 286, 8 L. ed. 947.

When the charter of a corporation is taken away or annulled by an act of the legislature the corporation is extinct. Sturges v. Vanderbilt, 73 N. Y. 384.

The dissolution of a corporation by act of the legislature deprives it of its corporate existence. Merrill v. Suffolk Bank, 31 Me. 57, 50 Am. Dec. 649.

b. Upon litigation.

Actions, suits, and other legal proceedings pending against a corporation abate by its dissolution. Walters v. Western & A. R. Co. 49 Fed. 679.

After the dissolution of a corporation, the power to proceed judicially against it in an action is wholly divested, except as specially authorized by statute. Combes v. Keyes (Combes v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co.) 89 Wis. 297, 27 L. R. A. 369, 46 Am. St. Rep. 839, 62 N. W. 89.

The dissolution of a corporation ends an action pending against it, and all subsequent proceedings therein are void, unless some statute providing for a continuance exists and is followed. McCulloch v. Norwood, 58 N. Y. 562; Sturges v. Vanderbilt, 73 N. Y. 384.

When a corporate charter is expressly subject to repeal by act of the legislature, and contains no provision for the prosecution of suits against the corporation in case of its dissolution, and no other statute provides for such prosecution, an action at law against such corporation abates upon the repeal of its charter. Read v. Frankfort Bank, 23 Me. 318.

When the charter of a company expires by limitation, its power to hold property as a corporation, and to prosecute and defend suits and actions, is gone; and, whether its property reverts to the donors, or the stockholders, or to the commonwealth as derelict, there is no doubt that it no longer remains in the corporation as such; hence suits pending against it abate at the instant its existence terminates. Rider v. Nelson & A. Union Factory, 7 Leigh, 154, 30 Am. Dec. 405.

To the same effect is May v. State Bank, 2 Rob. (Va.) 50, 40 Am. Dec. 726.

The extinction of a corporation is a substantial tial impediment to the prosecution of a creditor's claim by legal remedies before ordinary tribunals, and warrants the interposition of a court of equity. Shamokin Valley & P. R. Co. v. Maloue, 85 Pa. 25.

No legal judgment can be rendered against a corporation which has been dissolved by an act of the legislature. Merrill v. Suffolk Bank, 31 Me. 57, 50 Am. Dec. 349.

A scire facias cannot be maintained, nor can a judgment be had thereon, against a dead corporation, any more than against a dead man. Mumma v. Potomac Co. 8 Pet. 286, 8 L. ed. 947.

It is neither to be denied, nor questioned, but that, by the common law, a corporation which has been dissolved absolutely for all purposes whatsoever stands upon the same footing as a dead person with respect of any power in the courts to enter a valid judgment against it. In the absence of any statute upon the subject, the manifest logic and reason of the thing are the same in both cases. Life Asso. of America v. Fassett, 102 Ill. 315.

The dissolution of a corporation abates all suits pending against it at the time such dissolution takes place, and thereafter no valid judgment in a pending action can be taken against the corporation. Marion Phosphate Co. v. Perry, 33 L. R. A. 252, 20 C. C. A. 490, 41 U. S. App. 14, 74 Fed. 425.

When, in an action by a foreign corporation upon a promissory note, besides proof of the note and incorporation, it is shown that, by order in chancery in the home state, a receiver of the corporate property has been appointed upon a petition alleging the insolvency of the company, and that it had suspended business for want of funds; and a statute of the foreign state providing for the appointment of a receiver when any corporation shall be dissolved is the only law proved, the inference is that the company no longer has a corporate existence, and the action must be dismissed. Merchants' Loan & T. Co. v. Clair, 107 N. Y. 663, 14 N. E. 414.

But statutes providing for the prosecution to judgment of pending suits, and action against dissolved corporations, affect only the domestic companies. Suits against foreign corporations abate by their dissolution notwithstanding such statutes. Marion Phosphate Co. v. Perry, 33 L. R. A. 252, 20 C. C. A. 490, 41 U. S. App. 14, 74 Fed. 425.

And the dissolution of a corporation after a and recognized in America. There is certainly no room for any such principle under the statutes of this state creating, regulating, and providing for the dissolution of corporations and of the distribution of their assets.

Nor do the principles of law, constituting the other ground for discontinuing the performance of the contract, preclude recovery for outlay and expenses in part performance thereof. In its opinion, the court exonerates Thompson from any actual fraud in the procurement of his contract, although holding that his being a director of the corporation gave the stockholders the right to avoid it, and held that he is entitled to be compensated for labor and money necessarily expended by him in part performance thereof. The rule on this subject is stated in 10 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 794, 795, as follows: "Directors are not disabled from entering into contracts with the corporation, provided there be enough directors on the other side of the contract to make a quorum, and provided the contract is open, fair, and honest. The rule under consideration prohibits a director from acquiring secret profits through contracts made with or for the corporation, but does not prohibit contracts with the corporation, where there has been a full and fair disclosure of his interest in the contract. For example, it has been held that the shareholders and directors of a manufacturing corporation, who, with their own money and on their own credit and risk, erect new works, may make trial against it has been had in an action upon contract and the submission of the cause to the court for decision has been made does not abate the action, but judgment may be entered nunc pro tunc. Shakman v. United States Credit System Co. 92 Wis. 368, 32 L. R. A. 383, 53 Am. St. Rep. 920, 66 N. W. 528.

Often a state statute preserves for a longer or shorter period after its dissolution the right of a corporation to prosecute and defend suits. Tuskaloosa Scientific & Art Asso. v. Green, 48 Ala. 346; Bowe v. Minnesota Milk Co. 44 Minn. 460, 47 N. W. 151; Blake v. Portsmouth & C. R. Co. 39 N. H. 435.

c. Upon property and assets.

The ancient doctrine that, upon the repeal of a private corporation, its debts were extinguished, and its real property reverted to its grantors, and its personal property vested in the state, has been so far modified by modern adjudications that a court of equity will now lay hold of the property of a dissolved corporation and administer it for the benefit of its creditors and stockholders. Broughton v. Pensacola, 93 U. S. 266, 23 L. ed. 896.

The common-law doctrine respecting corporate property and assets upon dissolution has, so far as the modern business and commercial corporation is concerned, become practically obsolete. Its unjust operation upon the rights of creditors and stockholders has been generally prevented by statute. And in equity the assets of such a corporation, which represent, not the donations of a prince or its pious founder, but contributions of stockholders, are held, independent of statute, to constitute a trust fund, into whosoever hands they may come, for the benefit of creditors and stockholders. Wallamet Falls Canal & Lock Co. v. Kittridge, 5 Sawy. 44, Fed. Cas. No. 17,105.

The rights and interests of the creditors and stockholders of a corporation are neither extinguished nor seriously impaired by its dissolution. If the charters or statutes for winding up the business of a trading or moneyed corporation do not secure the rights and interests of its creditors and stockholders, equity regards its capital property and debts as trust funds pledged to pay the dues of creditors and stockholders, and has ample power to reach and apply them to the purposes of such trust. Taylor v. Holmes, 14 Fed. 498.

49 L. R. A.

A law distributing the property of an insolvent trading or banking corporation among its stockholders, or seizing it to the use of the state, would as clearly impair the obligation of its contracts as a law giving to the heirs the effects of a deceased natural person to the exclusion of his creditors would impair the obligation of his contracts. Curran v. Arkansas, 15 How. 304, 14 L. ed. 706.

The legislature, if the power to do so has been reserved, may repeal the charter of a corporation without thereby impairing the obligation of any contract into which the corporation has entered; but it cannot establish rules in regard to the management and disposition of the corporate assets so that the avails shall be diverted from, or divided unfairly and unequally among, the corporate creditors, thus impairing the obligations of contracts; nor so that that portion of the avails which belongs to the stockholders shall be sequestered and diverted from the owners, and thus injure vested rights. Lothrop v. Stedman, 13 Blatchf. 134, Fed. Cas. No. 8,519.

Upon the civil death of a manufacturing corporation by the expiration of its charter, real estate conveyed to it in fee for a money consideration does not revert to the grantors, but the title thereto vests in a receiver of its property and effects for the benefit of creditors and stockholders. Owen v. Smith, 31 Barb. 641.

The rule of the common law that real estate held by a corporation at the time of its dissolution reverts to the grantor does not, with respect of stock corporations, prevail in New York, a statute of which (1 Rev. Stat. 248; 1 Rev. Stat. 800, §§ 9, 10) provides that, upon the dissolution of a corporation, the directors or managers at the time become trustees of its property to pay its debts and divide its property among its stockholders, and the provisions apply as well to the real as to the personal property; consequently, where land is conveyed absolutely to a corporation having stockholders no reversion, or possibility of reversion, remains to the grantor. Heath v. Barmore, 50 N. Y. 302.

The modern doctrine now held in North Carolina in spite of earlier decisions to the contrary is that, upon the dissolution of a corporation, the title to real property does not revert to the original grantors or their heirs, and the personal estate does not escheat to the state; nor are the debts due to and from the corporation extina profit thereon upon the sale to such corporation of such works, and are not accountable therefor, especially where the transaction is advantageous to the corporation, has been ratified by a unanimous vote at a shareholders' meeting, and an opportunity is given the shareholders to rescind, with full knowledge of all the facts, and where opportunity was also given to the corporation to erect such works before their construction was undertaken by the directors. Such contracts will be scrutinized in equity, and will be set aside if not made in the utmost fairness and good faith. So far from being void ab initio, such contracts are good as against third persons, who are not in a position to set up the rights of the corporation by way of defense against them.

guished. Wilson v. Leary, 120 N. C. 90, 38 L. R. A. 240, 58 Am. St. Rep. 778, 26 S. E. 630.

It seems to be otherwise with respect of the real estate of public-service corporations.

Although an act incorporating a turnpike company vests it, upon complying with prescribed conditions, with title to the land over which the road passes, nevertheless such title must be considered as vested solely for the purposes of a road, and when such road is abandoned the land reverts to the original owners. Hooker v. Utica & M. Turnp. Road Co. 12 Wend. 371.

A turnpike corporation loses title to its lands by reversion back to its grantor or his heirs upon its dissolution, when there is no provision in its charter, or some other statute, to avert such a consequence. Bingham v. Welderwax, 1 N. Y. 509.

Especially does this appear to be the case when lands have been taken by condemnation under the power of eminent domain.

See the cases in point, cited in the note on The nature of a railroad, whether real or personal property, appended to the case of Webster Lumber Co. v. Keystone Lumber & Min. Co. 66 L. R. A. 33.

But this class of cases constitutes an exception to the prevalent rule.

The common-law doctrine that, upon dissolution, the property of a corporation reverted to the Crown, has never been recognized in the United States. Bolles v. Crescent Drug & Chemical Co. 53 N. J. Eq. 614, 32 Atl. 1061.

The dissolution of a corporation by the forfeiture of its charter, while it disables the company from continuing its business, does not prevent it from closing out its affairs and disposing of its property in the interest of creditors and stockholders, independent of statute; and a fortiori is it authorized to liquidate thus when a statute of the state which created it so empowers. Boyd v. Hankinson, 34 C. C. A. 197, 63 U. S. App. 678, 92 Fed. 49.

Although contrary to the doctrine asserted in most elementary works, and in the case of Bank of Vincennes v. State, 1 Blackf. 267, 12 Am. Dec. 234, the doctrine that, on the dissolution of a once legal corporation, its personal and real property become assets for the payment of its debts and distribution among stockholders, is right. State ex rel. Brown v. Bailey, 16 Ind. 46, 79 Am. Dec. 405.

The assets of an insolvent banking corporation are a fund for the payment of its debts. Curran v. Arkansas, 15 How. 304, 14 L. ed. 705.

When an act of incorporation is repealed equity takes charge of all the property and effects which survive the dissolution, and administers them as a trust fund primarily for the benefit of the creditors. If anything is left it goes to the stockholders. Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S. 819, 24 L. ed. 357.

When a corporation is virtually dead, although its term of existence limited by law has not expired, and it has property and assets which cannot be used in carrying out the purposes of the corporation, a court of equity has jurisdiction to distribute such property and assets among its members upon such basis as is just. Stamm v. Northwestern Mut. Ben. Assn. 65 Mich. 317, 32 N. W. 710.

tion are a fund for the payment of its debts. Curran v. Arkansas, 15 How. 304, 14 L. ed. 705.

When an act of incorporation is repealed equity takes charge of all the property and effects which survive the dissolution, and administers them as a trust fund primarily for the benefit of the creditors. If anything is left it goes to the stockholders. Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S. 819, 24 L. ed. 357.

When a corporation is virtually dead, although its term of existence limited by law has not expired, and it has property and assets which cannot be used in carrying out the purposes of the corporation, a court of equity has jurisdiction to distribute such property and assets among its members upon such basis as is just. Stamm v. Northwestern Mut. Ben. Assn. 65 Mich. 317, 32 N. W. 710.

The dissolution of a corporation cannot deprive its creditors or stockholders of their rights in its property; and, if the common law affords them no adequate remedy, they may obtain relief in equity. Folger v. Columbian Ins. Co. 99 Mass. 267, 96 Am. Dec. 747.

The property of a dissolved corporation is liable only in equity for the claims of creditors. Smith v. Huckabee, 53 Ala. 195.

The property of a dissolved corporation is subject to a trust in favor of creditors. Montgomery & W. P. R. Co. v. Branch, 59 Ala. 153; Nelson v. Hubbard, 96 Ala. 244, 17 L. R. A. 377, 11 So. 430.

A court which never allows a trust to fail for want of a trustee will see to the execution of the trust charged upon the assets of an insolvent corporation for the payment of its creditors, although by the dissolution of the corporation the legal title to its property has been changed. Shamokin Valley & P. R. Co. v. Malone, 85 Pa. 25.

In equity a corporation is regarded as a trustee holding the corporate property for the benefit of its creditors and shareholders, which, upon its dissolution or civil death, a court of chancery will lay hold of as a trust fund and distribute for their benefit. Life Assn. of America v. Fassett, 102 Ill. 315.

When a corporation is declared insolvent it is incapacitated from doing any new business, but it still survives to discharge its liabilities, and, when that is accomplished, to make final distribution of its remaining assets. Chemical Nat. Bank v. Hartford Deposit Co. 161 U. S. 1, 40 L. ed. 593, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 439.

from it, or otherwise contracting or dealing with it, if for the purpose of the transaction he does not represent the corporation at all, but it is adequately represented by its other directors or officers, and the transaction is entirely free from fraud. And, by the weight of authority, a transaction between a director or other officer and the corporation, or a transaction in which a director or other officer is interested, is valid, if entirely free from fraud, even when he has acted as a member of the board in authorizing the same, if there were enough of disinterested votes in favor of the transaction to render his vote unnecessary."

Mr. Justice Miller, speaking for the court in Turin-Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 567, 23 L. ed. 328, said: "So, when the lender is a director, charged, with others, with the control and management of the affairs of the corporation, representing in this regard the aggregated interest of all the stockholders, his obligation, if he becomes a party to a contract with the company, to candor and fair dealing, is increased in the precise degree that his representative character has given him power and control derived from the confidence reposed in him by the stockholders who appointed him their agent. If he should be a sole director, or one of a smaller number vested with certain powers, this obligation would be still stronger, and his acts subject to more severe scrutiny, and their validity determined by more rigid principles of morality, and freedom from motives of selfishness. All this

And, although a judicial decree may, in terms, declare a corporation dissolved, yet, if it also authorizes suits to be brought and defended in the corporate name, and conveyance of its property and effects to be made, for the purpose of winding up its business, the corporation cannot be said to be absolutely extinguished for all purposes, but, on the contrary, to be expressly kept alive so far as necessary to collect and apply its assets to the payment of its debts. Life Asso. of America v. Fassett, 102 Ill. 315.

In the state of New York the rule of the common law in relation to the effect of the dissolution of a corporation upon its property and debts has never been applied to business corporations, and as early as 1811 an act was passed making the directors of such a corporation trustees to settle its affairs and divide the money among the stockholders after paying the debts owing at the time of dissolution. Shayne v. Evening Post Pub. Co. 168 N. Y. 70, 55 L. R. A. 777, 86 Am. St. Rep. 654, 61 N. E. 111.

When a corporation is dissolved by a repeal of its charter, says Black, J., of the Pennsylvania supreme court, the legislature may appoint, or authorize the appointment of, a person to take charge of its assets for the use of its creditors and stockholders, and this is no more confiscation than it is confiscation to appoint an administrator for a dead man. But money, goods, or land which are or were the private property of a defunct corporation cannot be arbitrarily seized for the use of the state without compensation paid or provided for. Erie & N. E. R. Co. v. Casey, 26 Pa. 287.

When the effects of a dissolution of a corporation are said to be the reversion of its lands to those who had granted them, and the extinguishment of the debts due either to or from the corporate body so that they are not a charge or a benefit to the members, the dictum is supported by the statutes and judgments following the suppression of the military and religious orders or the cases of dissolution of monasteries and other ecclesiastical foundations upon the death of all their members, or of donations to public bodies, such as municipal corporations. But such cases are not analogous to those of trading corporations. These hold their property in trust, first for their creditors, and next, when their debts are paid, for those who contributed in capital to the corporate enterprise. Bacon v. Robertson, 18 How. 480, 15 L. ed. 499.

d. Upon debts and credits.

There have been some decisions, notably in Delaware and Mississippi, upholding the common-law doctrine that dissolution extinguishes debts, whether owing to or due from the corporation; while elsewhere the existence of the rule has been admitted, but for one or another reason it has been found not to apply.

When, by the expiration of the period limited in its charter for its corporate existence, a bank is dissolved, the dissolution is absolute, and a debt owing to it at the time is extinguished. Commercial Bank v. Lockwood, 2 Harr. (Del.) 8.

The case of Commercial Bank v. Lockwood, 2 Harr. (Del.) 8, was examined, criticized, and disapproved in Moultrie v. Smiley, 16 Ga. 289.

The current of decisions has flowed in such a channel that it may be regarded as settled doctrine that, on the dissolution of a banking corporation, the debts due to and from it are extinguished, not by any implied condition in the contracts, but from necessity, because there is no person in whose favor, or against whom, they can be enforced. Commercial Bank v. Chambers, 8 Smedes & M. 9.

It is settled doctrine, upon common-law principles, independent of any statute declaring a different rule, that, upon the dissolution of a corporation, the debts due to and from it are extinguished. Port Gibson v. Moore, 13 Smedes & M. 157.

It is the doctrine of the common-law that upon the dissolution of a corporation the debts due to and from it are extinguished. Hightower v. Thornton, 8 Ga. 486, 52 Am. Dec. 412.

That the debts of a corporation either to or from it are extinguished by its dissolution is a proposition which nobody denies. Thornton v. Lane, 11 Ga. 459.

An act of the legislature renewing the corporate powers and franchises of a banking corporation after the expiration of its charter does not revive a debt owing to it when the original charter expired. Commercial Bank v. Lockwood, 2 Harr. (Del.) 8.

The granting of a new charter to a dissolved corporation does not revive a debt extinguished by the dissolution. Port Gibson v. Moore, 13 Smedes & M. 157.

falls far short, however, of holding that no such contract can be made which will be valid, and we entertain no doubt that the defendant in this case could make a loan of money to the company; and as we have already said that the evidence shows it to have been an honest transaction for the benefit of the corporation and its shareholders, both in the rate of interest and in the security taken, we think it was valid originally, whether liable to be avoided afterwards by the company or not."

In Leavenworth County v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 134 U. S. 688, 33 L. ed. 1064, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 708, the court refused to set aside the foreclosure of a mortgage on a railroad and the sale of the road made under a decree, on the ground of its having been procured by parties sustaining a trust relation to the property, where there was no proof of collusion or fraud in fact. In Fit. Payne Rolling Mill v. Hill, 174 Mass. 224, 54 N. E. 532, the court said of a contract made between a corporation and one of its directors: "It was not illegal or void because made with a director, the only person likely to be willing to make it. In this country it very generally has been deemed impracticable to adopt a rule which absolutely prohibits such contracts." The same doctrine is announced in the case of Gay v. Fair, 175 Mass. 521, 56 N. E. 708. In the late case of United States Steel Corp. v. Hodge, 64 N. J. Eq. 807, 60 L. R. A. 742, 54 Atl. 1, the law on this subject is stated by the court of last resort in New Jersey

The general current of authorities, especially the more recent ones, is altogether adverse to this doctrine.

A corporation never can dissolve itself so as to defeat any of the just rights of its creditors. Brown v. Union Ins. Co. 3 La. Ann. 177.

It is a well-settled rule that the dissolution of a corporation by liquidation or any other act of its stockholders, or by limitation, or in any mode save legislative repeal or judicial decree, does not affect the rights of creditors, and that, as to them and their right to enforce their claims or determine their validity by suit or otherwise, the corporation will be deemed to continue in existence. National Pabuloque Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 36 Conn. 325, 4 Am. Rep. 80.

The common-law doctrine that a dissolution of a corporation extinguishes its debts does not prevail in the United States. Howe v. Robinson, 20 Fla. 352.

The obligations of a corporation survive its dissolution, and are enforceable upon its assets. Whiting v. Sheboygan & F. du L. R. Co. 25 Wis. 207, 3 Am. Rep. 47.

After a banking corporation has been dissolved and its franchise forfeited debts owing to it still exist, and can be recovered by a trustee for distribution to creditors and stockholders. Bacon v. Robertson, 18 How. 480, 15 L. ed. 499; Lum v. Robertson, 6 Wall. 277, 18 L. ed. 743.

A delinquent debtor of a dissolved corporation, sued upon his obligation by a trustee of the corporate property, cannot plead the extinguishment of his debt by the forfeiture of the corporate franchise. Lum v. Robertson, 6 Wall. 277, 18 L. ed. 743.

There is no question but that debts due the creditors of a corporation, as well as claims for wrongs done by it, are not lost by its dissolution, but may be enforced by proper proceedings against the assets. Walters v. Western & A. R. Co. 69 Fed. 679.

The English doctrine that, in case of the dissolution of a corporation, its personal property vests in the King, and all its unsold real estate reverts to the grantor or his heirs, while debts due to and from it are extinct, is harsh and inequitable, and has not been adopted and acted upon as the rule in this country,—at least so far as the extinguishment of debts is concerned; and it certainly has not been favored 69 L. R. A.

by the courts or the legislatures. Owen v. Smith, 31 Barb. 641.

Sometimes a state provides by general statute that, upon the dissolution of a corporation, its debts may be thereafter collected, and its creditors discharged, and its assets divided among its shareholders. McCoy v. Farmer, 65 Mo. 244; Bolles v. Crescent Drug & Chemical Co. 53 N. J. Eq. 614, 32 Atl. 1061.

e. Upon contracts in general.

A corporation by the very terms of its political existence is subject to dissolution by a surrender of its corporate franchises and by a forfeiture of them for wilful misuser or non-user. Every creditor must be presumed to understand the nature and incidents of such a body politic, and to contract with reference to them. Mumma v. Potomac Co. 8 Pet. 281, 8 L. ed. 945; Washington & B. Turnp. Road v. State, 19 Md. 239.

Whoever contracts with a corporation exposes himself to losses which may arise from its dissolution, as he would with natural persons by their death. Read v. Frankfort Bank, 23 Me. 318.

A dissolution of a corporation by the sovereign power of the state puts an end to its contracts for the services of its agents by rendering performance impossible on either side; and such a result must be deemed within the contemplation of the contracting parties and an unexpressed condition of their contract inhering therein from the beginning. People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 174.

Where a corporation surrenders its charter, ceases to exist by the efflux of time, or where its charter is decreed forfeited by a judicial tribunal of competent jurisdiction, it can neither sue nor be sued, although the obligations of its contracts survive, and may be enforced against any property which has not gone to bona fide purchasers. City Ins. Co. v. Commercial Bank, 68 Ill. 348.

The obligations of the contracts of a corporation survive its dissolution, and its creditors may enforce their claims against any property or estate belonging to the corporation which has not passed to bona fide purchasers. Dudley v. Price, 10 B. Mon. 84.

The obligation of contracts made whilst the corporation was in existence survives its dissolution; and the contracts may be enforced by as follows: "The general doctrine is well established in this state that facts known, which are sufficient to put a party upon inquiry, are sufficient to charge him with all such knowledge as he would have acquired by a proper inquiry in the ordinary course of business. The rule that directors cannot lawfully enter into a contract in the benefit of which even one of their number participates without the knowledge and consent of the stockholders, is the settled law of this state. Such a contract is voidable at the option of the corporation, but is not void per se. When the facts are disclosed to the stockholders, it may be subsequently ratified by them."

As the contract was voidable, and not void per se, the principle of estoppel, according to the great weight of authority, is applicable to cases of this kind, and must be given effect if the facts of this case warrant its application. The principal contract under which Thompson operated bears date June 18, 1890. Under it he began operations in the same month, and continued them until August, 1893, during which time he built a railroad, equipped it with locomotives and cars, built tramroads, rebuilt and repaired dams in the Blackwater river, and carried on the business of stocking the mill with timber under the contract upon an immense scale, using the railroad, cars, locomotives, tramroads, tools, appliances, and the booms and dams in the river for that purpose, and, as indicated by the record, practically supplied the mill with timber. In these opera-a court of equity so far as to subject for their satisfaction any property possessed by the corporation at the time. Broughton v. Pensacola, 93 U. S. 266, 23 L. ed. 896.

The dissolution of a corporation no more impairs the obligation of its contracts than the death of a private person can be said to impair the obligation of his contracts. Mumma v. Potomac Co. 8 Pet. 286, 8 L. ed. 945.

The repeal or forfeiture of a corporate charter by an act of the legislature, although conditional upon the consent of the corporation, does not infringe the constitutional provision against impairing the obligation of contracts, notwithstanding it may deprive creditors of all opportunity to collect their debts. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. State, 29 Ala. 573.

While the obligation of the contract between a corporation and its creditor is not impaired by the repeal, by act of the legislature, of its charter, the method of obtaining indemnity for its breach is changed, and, after the enactment of the repealer, an action at law upon the contract can no longer be maintained or prosecuted, in the absence of any statute permitting it to be. Read v. Frankfort Bank, 23 Me. 318.

The liquidation of a corporation has the immediate effect of terminating all its purely personal obligations, and of relegating the beneficiaries thereunder to an action in damages in keeping with its covenants. Schleider v. Dielman, 44 La. Ann. 462, 10 So. 934.

Although a law authorizes the stockholders of a business corporation to dissolve it at will, and the laws of the state in this regard enter directly into its contracts, and all persons are deemed to have contracted in view of the existence and possible exercise of this power, it is nevertheless true that such a dissolution does not destroy the obligation of the corporation's contracts. The equitable rights of creditors survive the dissolution, and attach to the assets and property of the corporation in the hands of its liquidators. Ibid.

The dissolution of a solvent corporation by its own voluntary act will not relieve it from its contracts, but its assets will be liable for breaches thereof. Griffith v. Blackwater Boom & Lumber Co. 46 W. Va. 56, 33 S. E. 125.

"Even the executory contracts of a defunct corporation are not extinguished." Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S. 319, 24 L. ed. 357.

Unless the dissolution is compulsory and involuntary. Then, even when partly performed, 69 L. R. A.

executory contracts perish when the corporation is dissolved. Griffith v. Blackwater Boom & Lumber Co. 46 W. Va. 56, 33 S. E. 125.

When a corporation, upon petition of its stockholders and by the decree of a court, is dissolved, and thereafter neither does, nor attempts to do, any business, it becomes as entirely extinct, except so far as the statute prescribes otherwise, as if it had never existed. It is thus wholly disabled from performing its contracts, and its breach of any such contract is a total one, which entitles the other party, immediately upon the dissolution, to his whole damages, present and prospective, for the loss of his contract. Bowe v. Minnesota Milk Co. 44 Minn. 480, 47 N. W. 151.

It is not the law that when a corporation is dissolved under a statute all contracts whereby third parties hold its property are annulled and avoided; hence, a writ of assistance will not be awarded to put a receiver in possession of property of such a corporation, where persons not parties to the dissolution proceedings assert in good faith a colorable right to hold it. Musgrove v. Gray, 123 Ala. 376, 82 Am. St. Rep. 124, 26 So. 643.

When the receiver of a dissolved corporation has paid all the undisputed debts, and has funds enough left to pay all the disputed ones, and still has a large surplus for distribution to stockholders, he is bound to pay rent accrued and accruing to the end of the term under a lease for years to the corporation. People v. National Trust Co. 82 N. Y. 283.

When, at the instance of the state, and by judicial decree or operation of law, a corporation is dissolved, and its corporate existence terminated, a contract between it and an individual for the latter's services, which is in progress and has been performed upon both sides according to its terms down to the time when the corporation and its agents and servants were prohibited from carrying on the corporate business, is at an end, and cannot upon either side longer be performed; but it cannot be considered as broken by the corporation, since nothing has occurred to constitute a breach of the contract upon either side, performance being simply prevented by vis major, and hence the individual has no claim for damages against the assets of the corporation. People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 174.

A contract of a corporation with an individual for the latter's services for a term of tions he expended nearly $300,000, according to the report of the commissioner. He resigned his position as director in 1891. Can it be possible that the directors and the stockholders, who appear to have been few in number (only six, as indicated by the record), had no knowledge of the immense expenditure Thompson was making on the faith of this contract? Whether the making of the contract was in all respects duly formal or not, the books of the company were open to them, and upon them the terms of the contract were indicated by the entries. For a long time after Thompson ceased to be a director and to have any share or part in the management of the company, they allowed him to go on without objection or notice of the disapproval of the contract. If, having such knowledge, they had the right to avoid the contract because he was a director at the time it was made, can they do it in such manner as to inflict upon him the loss of so much of this large expenditure as compliance with his contract, so far as he was permitted to perform it, necessitated? Having the right to deprive him of the profits which he could have made on the contract if permitted to complete it, have they also the right to punish him by depriving him of money expended under the honest belief that they, having full knowledge of all the facts, as they must be deemed to have had, and giving it to creditors, who advanced their money under the belief that the company had such financial strength as warranted years at a stipulated salary is broken when, before the expiration of the term, the corporation is adjudged insolvent, and a receiver is appointed whose duty by statute is to collect and distribute the assets, under judicial direction, to the creditors and stockholders. Spader v. Mural Decoration Mfg. Co. 47 N. J. Eq. 18, 20 Atl. 378.

When a corporation contracts to sell and deliver upon a future day merchandise, and before the time of delivery arrives is enjoined from in anywise interfering with its property, and a receiver is appointed of all its assets, performance of its contract is rendered impossible by judicial action, and the buyer has no claim for damages. Malcomson v. Wappoo Mills, 88 Fed. 680.

The court cited and followed People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 174, and rejected Spader v. Mural Decoration Mfg. Co. 47 N. J. Eq. 18, 20 Atl. 378, but the report does not show whether the appointment of the receiver was voluntary or involuntary, or whether or not the selling corporation (if such it was, for even its corporate entity is not stated) was dissolved.

Where, upon the suspension of business and the appointment of a receiver of a dissolved corporation, a contract with it is in process of performance, and is for a time afterwards continued under direction of the court having jurisdiction of the matter, it cannot be said that there was a breach of the contract, committed by the corporation. Griffith v. Blackwater Boom & Lumber Co. 46 W. Va. 56, 33 S. E. 125.

When the receiver of a dissolved corporation abandons the performance of one of its contracts by direction of the court which appointed him, after he had for a time, by the like direction, been performing it, and when at the time of his appointment the corporation was not in default thereon, the corporate assets are not liable for damages for a breach of such contract. Ibid.

While it is implied in every agreement, the performance of which depends upon the continued existence of a person or thing, that such existence will continue, and that the death of the person or destruction of the thing will terminate the obligation; and when a corporation is a party to such contract its dissolution or civil death ends it,—yet such is not the rule if such dissolution be voluntary, for it is equally an implied condition of all corporate contracts that the corporation will not of its own volition try to escape the obligation of its contracts, and, if it does, equity will not recognize the dissolution or permit the dissipation of its assets until its contracts are satisfied. Ibid.

A contract between a dairyman and a corporation to run a year, whereby the company agrees to buy and furnish all the cans to carry all the milk produced by the former's kine to be delivered daily, is broken in toto by the voluntary dissolution of the corporation during the year, and the dairyman is entitled immediately to all his damages for the loss of the contract, present and prospective, for it is an entirety, and a single recovery is a bar to further actions. Rowe v. Minnesota Milk Co. 44 Minn. 460, 47 N. W. 151.

1. Upon employment contracts.

1. With officers.

The bringing of an action against a corporation, and alleging its insolvency and the appointment therein of a receiver, do not abrogate a contract for the employment of a salaried officer. Kinsman v. Flisk, 37 App. Div. 443, 56 N. Y. Supp. 33.

When a corporation makes a general assignment for creditors it is not thereby released from its express contract to pay a salary to its treasurer if he renders, or is ready to render, his services as such; and, on a reconveyance by the assignee after settlement with its creditors, he is entitled to recover his stipend. Potts v. Rose Valley Mills, 167 Pa. 310, 31 Atl. 655.

A secretary of a corporation which becomes insolvent and goes into the hands of a receiver is entitled to his salary for the balance of the year for which he was employed, less what he may earn in other employment. Hassenfus v. Philadelphia Packing & Provision Co. 15 Pa. Co. Ct. 650.

A managing director of a corporation, engaged upon a salary for a term of years, is entitled, upon the winding up of such corporation during the term, to prove up his claim for salary on the same footing as outside creditors, notwithstanding he was a shareholder in the company. His characters as stockholder and employee being quite distinct. Re Dale, L. R. 43 Ch. Div. 255, 59 L. J. Ch. N. S. 180, 62 L. T. N. S. 215.

Salary due the secretary of a corporation for services as such down to the winding up is a their doing so without taking security for its repayment, just as Thompson laid out and expended these immense sums, under the like belief? The law does not demand the infliction of any such punishment, nor will its principles warrant the court in depriving him of compensation for his expenditures merely because of his fiduciary status at the time the contract was made, even if this court has correctly decided that he is not entitled to damages by way of compensation for the loss of anticipated profits, as to which it is now too late to enter upon any inquiry.

"The rule under consideration does not extend so far as to work an entire confiscation of the property of the unfaithful director, which he may have attempted to sell to his corporation at an advance over its cost to him, so as to derive a secret profit therefrom; but in the accounting which takes place under the principle the director will be compelled to yield to the corporation the secret profit, but will be allowed a credit for the property sold to the corporation at its real value." 10 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 795.

"In most jurisdictions, as we have seen, a contract or other transaction between a corporation and its directors or other officers, the corporation being represented by others, or a contract or other transaction between a corporation and a third party, from which a director or other officer derives a profit, or in which he is otherwise personally interested, is merely voidable at the option of the corporation, and not absolutely provable demand, although he consented to take one half the amount until such time as it might be convenient for the company to pay the other half. Cope's Case, 20 L. J. Ch. N. S. 28, 1 Sim. N. S. 54.

The salaries of the officers of a corporation cease upon the appointment of a receiver empowered and directed to take control of all its property and to assume the entire management of all its affairs. Lenoir v. Linville Improv. Co. 126 N. C. 922, 51 L. R. A. 150, 36 S. E. 185.

The New Jersey rule, as exemplified in Spader v. Mural Decoration Mfg. Co. 47 N. J. Eq. 18, 20 Atl. 373, that claims for damages arising from breaches of contract for services occasioned by the insolvency of a corporation are entitled to be paid pro rata out of funds in the hands of the receiver, has much to commend it, says the North Carolina supreme court; but we think that the average ends of justice would be better and more generally subserved by following the New York rule as laid down in People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 174, that such contracts are terminated by the dissolution of the corporation at the instance of the sovereign power, and not broken. 176d.

The dissolution of a corporation and annulment of its charter for the nonpayment of taxes preclude a manager, who was at the same time one of its stockholders and directors, from recovering from its assets in the hands of a receiver any salary on account of services rendered in continuing the business after dissolution of the corporation, as his contract terminated when the corporation was dissolved. Louchheim v. Clewson Printing & Weighing Co. 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 55.

2. With superintendents.

When, by the insolvency and winding up of a banking company, its manager is discharged by the official liquidator, and his contract has not expired, and he was by such contract entitled, in addition to a stated annual salary, to residence and offices upon the bank's premises free of rent and taxes, he is entitled to damages from the effects of the bank for the loss of his contract, computed upon the basis of the present value of an annuity equal to his annual salary and terminating at the end of his term of employment, with a proper rent for the bank premises for the unexpired term, deducting what is just for his being at liberty to obtain a fresh appointment. Yelland's Case, L. R. 4 Eq. 350.

When it is part of the contract under which one is employed as manager for a corporation, that, if he is deprived of his employment for other than his gross misconduct, he shall be paid by the company a sum equal to three years' salary, he is entitled, upon the winding up of the corporation under the English companies act, to the sum stated without deduction as in Yelland's Case, because, had the corporation while a going concern discharged him without his misbehavior, it would be bound to pay him the three years' salary, and he might have entered at once upon a new employment. Re London & S. Bank, L. R. 9 Eq. 140, 18 Week. Rep. 273.

One who has a contract to serve a corporation as superintendent for a period of ten years at a stated annual salary and a percentage of profits, which is duly performed for nearly two years by both parties, when further performance is stopped by the adjudication of bankruptcy of the corporation, is entitled to prove against the assets in bankruptcy, and to share in the distribution thereof, damages for the breach of such contract as if he had been discharged without legal cause at the time the adjudication took place. Ex parte Pollard, 2 Low. Dec. 411, Fed. Cas. No. 11,252.

The reasoning of Lowell, J., in the above case as to the provability and right of participation of a claim for damages against a bankrupt manufacturing corporation, of one employed as its superintendent under a written contract at a stated annual salary for ten years with a percentage of profits, and which was in course of performance by both parties, and had eight years and upwards to run when it was interrupted by an adjudication in bankruptcy following the voluntary petition of the corporation, is worth outlining, and in striking contrast to the reasoning of the New York case of People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 174. Has there, he asks, been such a breach of the contract as will give the petitioner a right of proof for any damages which he may have suffered against the estate of the bankrupt corporation? That, he says, is a difficult question. It is easy to show the very great hardship of a negative answer. No corporation has been wound up in bankruptcy in this district, and ever been revived in such a form as to give its old creditors redress. In most cases, here or elsewhere, a void. It follows that the transaction, if within the powers of the corporation, may be consented to, ratified, or acquiesced in, by the stockholders, or by the board of directors, if it could be authorized by them. If it is consented to or ratified with full knowledge of the facts, it is finally and absolutely binding, and neither the corporation nor individual stockholders can afterwards sue to set it aside, or otherwise attack its validity. And since the corporation may thus consent to the transaction and render it binding, if it acquiesces, strangers cannot object. This is true of contracts and other transactions between two corporations having directors or other officers in common. They are not absolutely void, but, at the most, merely voidable, and may be rendered binding by ratification or acquiescence on the part of the stockholders. Ratification is to be implied if the corporation accepts or retains the benefit of the transaction (assuming, of course, that it can do otherwise), with knowledge of the facts; and it may be implied from acquiescence. Ordinarily, it is for the corporation—the stockholders collectively—to ratify or disaffirm the transaction, and individual stockholders cannot object. Of course, ratification or acquiescence by a majority of the stockholders cannot bind a dissenting stockholder where the transaction is a fraud upon his rights, or beyond the powers of the corporation, and cannot prevent the dissenting stockholder from suing in a proper case to set the transaction aside, and obtain re-dividend is all that is left. And advertg to the English companies act (26 & 27 Vict. chap. 89, § 158) allowing proof of claims for damages, certain and uncertain, present and future, which, he says, is no more than common justice; and expressing regret that the attention of Congress was not attracted to this matter, and that the law as it stands is the same for corporations and individuals notwithstanding the difference in their situation,—he concludes that, as this claim could be proved against an individual bankrupt, it can be proved against a bankrupt corporation. He justifies this conclusion by saying that it is now well settled that where one party to a contract definitely refuses to perform it, even before the time for performance arrives, the other party has his immediate action, a fortiori when, after part performance, there is a refusal to complete, the only question in doubt being whether the injured party could have an immediate and complete remedy once for all without tender of performance on his part, and the decisions are that he may. It is plain, therefore, that if the corporation had discharged its superintendent the day before it began the bankruptcy proceedings, he would have had a claim for damages which he might prove. Does it make any difference that the company neglected to give the employee a formal dismissal?—he inquires. Not at all. It did an act which incapacitated it from fulfilling its contract, and it is unnecessary and false nicety to hold that, because this act was the very filing of a petition in bankruptcy, therefore there was no breach at the time of filing that petition. The contract was ipso facto dissolved by the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, which made its performance by the bankrupt impossible and by the employee illegal, for he had no right to employ a man or pay a dollar after that time; and the fact that the bankrupt corporation did not, five minutes or more before such filing, formally dismiss him from its service, is immaterial.

3. With agents.

In People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 174, a general agent who had a running contract for a term of years with a life insurance company, and whose employment was terminated by the compulsory dissolution of his corporate employer, was denied any participation in the assets of the company upon his asserted claim for damages for a breach of his contract of employment. There were more than one ground assigned for this conclusion, but the chief one was that there had been no breach of the contract on the part of the company, nor was it possible for the agent to perform, or tender performance, upon his part, so as to put the company in default, a sine qua non, to a recovery of such a claim. Both parties were in good faith, it was said, performing this contract, when the state, in the exercise of its sovereign power, interfered. It forbade by injunction both parties, alike, from going on with the contract, and rendered performance impossible, alike, by the company and the agent by the same sovereign act and at the same instant of time. Both parties contracted in view of the possibility of the dissolution of the corporation at any time by the act of the state.

It was necessary, to reach this judgment, for the court to distinguish two of its prior decisions. In People v. Security L. Ins. Co. 78 N. Y. 114, 34 Am. Rep. 522, and People v. National Trust Co. 82 N. Y. 283, the respective corporations defendant had been enjoined from continuing business, placed in the hands of a receiver, and dissolved absolutely. In the one case it was held that policy holders had contracts of value which were broken by the dissolution, and in the other case that a lease for years was not thereby terminated; so that in the first case the policy holders had valid claims upon the corporate assets for the value of their policies which were destroyed by the dissolution, and in the second case that the landlord had a valid claim for the future accruing rent to the end of the leased term.

It was said that the policy holder stood upon a breach of his contract, but that breach was not the dissolution of the company, but the failure upon its part, before the dissolution, to maintain the legal reserve which was the provoking cause of the state's intervention, and the promise to maintain, which was an implied part of its contract with every policy holder. The state, finding these contracts with the policy holders broken in this unexpressed condition, stepped in and wound up the recalcitrant corporation. The landlord's case, affected, it was said, property rights which survived the death of the corporation. He could perform upon his part, his ability to do so existed and was not restrained. The agent could not per-dress for the benefit of the corporation, as has been explained in a former chapter. But where the transaction is of such a character that it might lawfully have been authorized by the majority, it may lawfully be ratified or acquiesced in by them, and their ratification or acquiescence will bar an action by a dissenting minority to set it aside. The board of directors may ratify a transaction if they could have authorized it, but not otherwise. When they do undertake to ratify, a majority must be disinterested. It is also well settled that the corporation and the stockholders may and will lose the right to have the contract or transaction set aside by laches in exercising their option to disaffirm it. Whether the delay in electing to set the transaction aside constitutes laches, so as to bar the right to relief, will depend upon the circumstances, and not merely upon the length of time which has elapsed. It was said by Mr. Justice Miller in a leading case in the Supreme Court of the United States [Twin-Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 587, 23 L. ed. 328], in which a director had purchased property of a corporation at a sale under a deed of trust: 'The doctrine is well settled that the option to avoid such a sale must be exercised within a reasonable time. This has never been held to be any determined number of days or years, as applied to every case, like the statute of limitations, but must be decided in each case upon all the elements of it which affect that question. These are generally the presence or absence of the parties at the place of the form because the state would not allow him to do so.

The court dismissed the English cases with the statement that in all of them the companies stopped payment before the law took them in hand, and they did so by open public notice, which was in legal effect a refusal to perform their contracts. The law did not break the contracts; they were already broken.

After disposing of the troublesome precedents in this wise, the court faced the contention that the agent's contract is to be regarded as only dissolved when destroyed by an outside, independent force, operating separately, and not set in motion directly or indirectly by the act of the party pleading it as an excuse. In other words, such party must be innocent and blameless respecting the vis major which dissolves the contract, and, if not so, cannot plead as an excuse what is practically his own act and fault. The argument was pressed upon the court that, unlike the corporations in all the precedent authorities, the Globe company at the bar was not only not blameless, but that its dissolution resulted from, and was directly caused by, its own acts and omissions.

The answer to this seems deplorably weak. The court said, the fact is not shown, nor necessarily to be inferred, from aught in the record, that the corporation was derelict, although at the same time it admitted that it should presume the legal reserve to have fallen below the safe level, since this was the statutory ground for state intervention. Moreover, this result, it added, may have been due to investments seemingly prudent when made, but which, contrary to all reasonable expectation and foresight, turned out bad. As, however, even this pointed to an indirect responsibility, the court retreated to the fellow-servant doctrine, that has done such yeoman service in preventing recoveries for personal injuries.

On the whole this decision is unsatisfying. Waiving the question as to why the court in one case implied a contract with the policy holder that the company should maintain the legal reserve, and not provoke corporate death at the hands of the state; and in the other refused to imply any contract with its agent to refrain from disabling itself from doing the business it was chartered to do,—there are difficulties with the court's theories. To say that the agent contracted with knowledge that the corporation must die whenever its creator so willed does not help, since both policy holder and landlord did the same. It is also unsatisfactory to say that there was, by the failure to maintain the legal reserve, a breach of the contract with the policy holder before dissolution,—such breach being the cause and the dissolution the consequence. This alleged breach did not authorize any policy holder to refuse to carry out his contract until the state intervened. The policy holder was bound to pay his premiums down to the very moment of dissolution, or his policy would have lapsed and he have been barred from sharing in the corporate assets. Why, then, was not the company up to the instant of its dissolution as much performing its contracts with its policy holders as with its general agents? How could the policy holder, more than the agent, when dissolution occurred by the vis major, put the company in default?

In Hepburn v. Montgomery, 97 N. Y. 618, and in Atty. Gen. v. Continental L. Ins. Co. 93 N. Y. 630, the decision in People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 174, was followed.

A question arose in a New Jersey litigation over the sufficiency of a plea in answer to a declaration by the general agent of a credit insurance company claiming damages for a breach of his contract to solicit insurance, which set up in defense, in substance, that the corporation became insolvent, and ceased to employ the agent because it was declared insolvent and enjoined from doing further business by the court of chancery, was put in the hands of a receiver, and its charter was declared to be forfeited and void, except for the purpose of collecting and distributing its assets. The supreme court held the plea good, and overruled the plaintiff's demurrer thereto, reasoning as follows: It is well settled that contracts for personal services are made upon the implied agreement that both contracting parties will continue alive, and are terminated when either dies. The distinction between such contracts and those with policy holders was applied in People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 174, a case involving the question here, and where, as here, the life of the company was extinguished by the act of the state. The New York supreme court held, and its view was unanimously concurred in by the court of appeals, that a general agent whose compensation depended upon his success in procuring insurance for the company upon a percentage could not maintain an action for damages against the receiver because, be-transaction, their knowledge or ignorance of the sale and of the facts which render it voidable, the permanent or fluctuating character of the subject-matter of the transaction as affecting its value, and the actual rise or fall of the property in value during the period within which this option might have been exercised.' Laches may bar the right of a corporation or its stockholders to maintain a suit to compel directors to account for secret profits. Individual stockholders may be estopped to attack a contract or other transaction on behalf of the corporation on the ground that directors or other officers were personally interested. If they participated or consented, or if they have ratified the transaction with knowledge of the facts, they are clearly estopped.

Stockholders will not be heard to complain of their own acts as directors. The right of individual stockholders to complain may also be barred by laches." Clark & M. Priv. Corp. § 764.

This text is supported by authorities too numerous to mention or examine, one of which is the leading case of Foss v. Harbottle, 2 Hare, 461, in which the vice chancellor, after laying down the rigid rules of law requiring the exercise of the utmost good faith on the part of promoters of corporations, treating them as acting in a fiduciary capacity, proceeds as follows: "If persons, on the other hand, intending to form a company, should purchase land with a view to the formation of it, and state at once that they were the owners of such land, fore the expiration of the period for which he was engaged, he was prevented by the insolvency, receivership, and dissolution of the company from continuing his employment. The rule in that case will be accepted here. Rosenbaum v. United States Credit System Co. 60 N. J. L. 204, 37 Atl. 595.

But this judgment was reversed by the New Jersey court of errors and appeals, which, in doing so, said: In the case of People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 174, upon which the supreme court relied, both parties to the contract, the company and the agent, were restrained by injunction, at the instance of the attorney general, from further prosecution of the business of the company and the exercise of any of its corporate franchises, followed by the appointment of a receiver and dissolution of the company: and it was held that, as the action of both contracting parties was paralyzed by injunction at the same time, so that neither could put the other in the wrong, there was no breach of the contract. But in the case at bar there was no such injunction. The contraction of debts and disposition of assets was forbidden, and afterwards there was an adjudication of insolvency and a receiver, but without continuing the injunction. The New Jersey statutes do not provide that a mere adjudication of insolvency and the appointment of a receiver take from a corporation its right to do business. The practical effect is to stop business, but the right to go on is not taken away. Rosenbaum v. United States Credit System Co. 61 N. J. L. 543, 40 Atl. 591.

Chancellor McGill, of New Jersey, in writing for the court of errors and appeals in Rosenbaum v. United States Credit System Co. 61 N. J. L. 543, 40 Atl. 591, which unanimously reversed the supreme court in the same case (60 N. J. L. 204, 37 Atl. 595), sharply criticises the reasoning of the New York court of appeals in People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 174, upon which the court below had relied in coming to the conclusion about to be reversed. The learned chancellor had pointed out at the beginning a very material distinction between the case in hand and the New York case, which deprived the latter of authority as a precedent: but he did not rest there. He took up the broad question whether the forfeiture of the corporate charter would bar a general soliciting agent's claim for damages for a breach of his contract of employment for the term of the 69 L. R. A.

contract which had not expired at the date of that forfeiture. Following the reasoning of the New York court in the case mentioned, the court below, he said, looked upon the contract as one merely for skilled personal service, and treated the insolvency of the company and forfeiture of its charter as analogous to the death of the master of such a servant, which, by an implied condition, ended the contract. The court of appeals of New York carried the doctrine of implied condition in the contract still further, Finch, J., saying: What had happened was the dissolution of the contract by the sovereign power of the state, rendering performance on either side impossible. This result was within the contemplation of the parties, and must be deemed an unexpressed condition of their agreement. One party was a corporation. It drew its vitality from the grant of the state, and could only live by its permission. It existed within certain defined limitations, and must die whenever its creator so willed. The general agent who contracted with it did so with knowledge of the statutory conditions, and these must be deemed to have permeated the agreement and constituted elements of the obligation. The judge admits, says the chancellor, that the implication will not exist if it appears that the corporation was culpably responsible for state intervention. He then proceeds: It appears to us that both these implied conditions are forced, or at least forced in their application to cases in this state similar to the case now considered. It appears to us that the material fact that the corporation defendant is a stock company, and that its capital stands as a trust fund for the payment of its debts, is lost sight of. Such a company may become insolvent, and its charter may be forfeited when its assets may be more than sufficient to pay its debts. Everyone who deals with such a corporation does so in view of the trust fund its capital provides and the security that fund is intended to afford. The stockholders who provide the fund invite confidence because of it, and through such confidence their venture may be profitable to them. The mere statement of this situation makes conspicuous the injustice of any course of reasoning which will return to the stockholders their capital before satisfaction of all losses induced by faith in it should be made. The state creates corporations, and requires of them the provision of such a trust fund, and, when it destroys their corporate ex and propose to sell it at a price fixed, for the purposes of the company to be formed, the transaction, so far as the public are concerned, commencing with that statement, might not fall within the principle of Hickens v. Congreve, 4 Russ. Ch. 562. A party may have a clear right to say: 'I begin the transaction at this time. I have purchased land, no matter how or from whom, or at what price. I am willing to sell it at a certain price for a given purpose.' Another is Twin-Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 587, 23 L. ed. 328, heretofore quoted from. It holds: "The right of a corporation to avoid the sale of its property by reason of the fiduciary relations of the purchaser must be exercised within a reasonable time after the facts connected therewith are made known, or can by due diligence be ascertained. As the courts have never prescribed any specific period as applicable to every case, like the statute of limitations, the determination as to what constitutes a reasonable time in any particular case must be arrived at by a consideration of all its elements which affect that question." In Stewart v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 38 N. J. L. 505, Mr. Justice Dixon, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "After an examination of all the cases cited, and such others as I have found, and a careful consideration of the principle, and the results of regarding and disregarding it, I have come to the conviction that the true legal rule is that such a contract is not void, but voidable, to be avoided at the option of the insistence, natural justice requires that it shall provide for distribution of the fund so that no part of it shall be returned to those who offer it as security for the action of others, until the latter shall have all the protection against loss in their undertaking that it is capable of affording.

The insolvency of a corporation and appointment of a receiver of its assets under the New Jersey laws do not rescind or terminate a contract with individuals to set up and operate a soda water fountain in the premises of the corporation, and pay, in lieu of rent, 15 per cent. of the gross receipts. Bolles v. Crescent Drug & Chemical Co. 53 N. J. Eq. 614, 32 Atl. 1061.

The ground of the decision in People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 174, that the contract for service was annulled by the act of the state in dissolving the corporation, not by default of the corporation in performing it, "does not seem to be very perspicuous or satisfactory in any view; but the case certainly does not hold that contracts for personal services are rescinded by the insolvency of a corporation." Ibid.

An agent of a corporation, engaged for the term of five years, during which period the company goes into voluntary liquidation, and is wound up, and whose employment is continued by the official liquidators for a considerable length of time after the winding-up order, is entitled, under the rule in Yelland's Case, L. R. 4 Eq. 350, to his full salary to the end of the five years' term. Re London & C. Co. L. R. 7 Eq. 550, 38 L. J. Ch. N. S. 562, 20 L. T. N. S. 774.

An agent of an insurance company, employed for a term of years upon a stated annual salary and a commission of 10 per cent of the net profits of each year, when the company is wound up before the term of employment expires, is entitled to his stated salary, but not to damages for loss of his commission for the rest of the term of employment. The reason is, he cannot compel the company to do business, and, unless business is profitable, he earns no commissions. Re English & S. Marine Ins. Co. L. R. 5 Ch. 737, 39 L. J. Ch. N. S. 685, 23 L. T. N. S. 685, 18 Week. Rep. 1122.

If an agent is employed for a term of years to sell goods of a corporation upon a commission, and the company winds up before the term expires, he is entitled to his damages for the breach of his contract. Re Patent Floor Cloth Co. 41 L. J. Ch. N. S. 476, 26 L. T. N. S. 467.

60 L. R. A.

Bacon, V. C., distinguished English & S. Marine Ins. Co.'s Case by the circumstance that Maclure was to be paid a salary and a tithe of the net profits besides, while the claimants at bar were to be paid a commission on sales as sole compensation, and whether the sales were profitable or not. He did not venture to state any rule for computing the damages, or suggest any method of proving them.

The winding up of a corporation does not abrogate a contract made with a broker to place its shares and receive a stated fee for doing so, payable when all the shares have been allotted. Inchbald v. Western Nellogherry Coffee, Tea & Cinchona Plantation Co. 17 C. B. N. S. 733.

Notwithstanding the assignee of a corporation is enjoined by the courts from consummating a sale of the corporate property negotiated by a broker, the latter may recover his commissions, since these were earned as soon as he found a purchaser ready and able to buy. Gibson v. Gray, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 646, 43 S. W. 922.

This is the distinguishing feature that makes inapplicable People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 174.

The salaried selling agent of a corporation, employed for a definite term, who is discharged before that term expires because the company is embarrassed and unable to continue business, and when, immediately after such discharge the corporation is dissolved by the decree of a competent court in regular proceedings voluntarily instituted, has a valid claim for damages against the property and assets of such corporation for a breach of his contract of employment, and the measure of such damages is the salary for the rest of the term less the net amount he has earned in the meantime. Tiffin Glass Co. v. Stoeck, 54 Ohio St. 157, 43 N. E. 279.

In Tiffin Glass Co. v. Stoeck, 54 Ohio St. 157, 43 N. E. 279, the supreme court of Ohio properly distinguished the case at bar from People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 174, by pointing out that in the case before it the employee had been discharged from his employment before the company was dissolved, and, consequently, that a breach of his contract had been committed by the corporation before its dissolution, and that dissolution was the result of its own voluntary request. The fact that the damage could not be computed until long after the dissolution did not affect the case. Unlike cestui que trust, exercised within a reasonable time. I can see no further safe modification or relaxation of the principle than this." In the late case of United States Steel Corp. v. Hodge, 64 N. J. Eq. 807, 60 L. R. A. 742, 54 Atl. 1, decided February 18, 1903, Van Syckel, J., said: "It is a settled rule of corporation law that the personal interest of directors renders a transaction voidable at the option of the stockholders, and not void per se. Under the declaration of this court in the case last cited the shareholders may, within a reasonable time after the disclosure to them of the interest of a director, elect to avoid the contract; but, if an unreasonable time is allowed to elapse without exercising such option, during which the position of directors becomes so changed that it would be inequitable to vacate the engagement, equity would refuse to interpose."

On this question, it is useless to multiply authorities, for the principle is in perfect accord with both justice and common sense, and underlies the whole doctrine of compensation. It is the principle of estoppel that gives the right to recovery for outlay and expenses where performance of a contract has been wrongfully prevented. United States v. Behan, 110 U. S. 338, 28 L. ed. 168, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 81. It is on the basis of compensation, not punishment. Equity does not permit parties to play fast and loose with a contract, when they know money is being expended, labor performed, and obligations contracted on the faith of it. They the case in New York, the Ohio corporation might lawfully have continued in business, and the agent was at liberty to go on and perform his services under his contract. The Ohio tribunal did not consider the effect of stopping performance of such a contract before either party had committed a breach, and of prohibiting eo instanti both parties from going on with it by the sovereign power of the state.

4. With ordinary employees.

When a corporation contracts with an individual for his services at a stated compensation, to be rendered until the corporation is dissolved, and otherwise to end only by the death of the employee or his refusal to further serve, it is not discharged by ceasing wholly to do business because it is unprofitable, followed by a vote of the stockholders to surrender the charter and wind up the business. Revere v. Boston Copper Co. 15 Pick. 351.

When a corporation ceases to do business, and breaks up its establishment, and its stockholders vote to dissolve and wind up its business; and it has a running contract for the services of an individual at a stipulated annual salary, and notifies him it has no further use for his services,—he is discharged from his obligation to serve them exclusively, and has a claim for damages, the measure of which is indemnity for the loss he has sustained by reason of not being longer employed and paid. Ibid.

When the contract of service of a salaried employee of a corporation is terminated before the end of the time limited for its continuance, by a judgment of insolvency against the corporation and appointment of a receiver to collect and distribute its assets according to law, such employee is a claimant for damages caused by the breach of his contract for service, and entitled, as such, to participate with other creditors in the distribution of the corporate assets. Spader v. Mural Decoration Mfg. Co. 47 N. J. Eq. 18, 20 Atl. 378.

The difficulty which led the English courts to disallow claims against bankrupt corporations for damages for breaches of contracts for personal services of employees occasioned by and accruing subsequent to the bankruptcy of the company, under the English bankrupt act before 1861 was the omission from that statute of all provisions for the ascertaining of such damages. Ibid.
69 L. R. A.

The decision in People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 174, notwithstanding an intimation in the opinion that the insolvency of a corporation is equivalent to death in cases of contract for skilled personal services, was not rested upon that ground, but was based upon the proposition that the service was interrupted by the act of the state, and that it was not shown that dissolution was the result of any fault of the corporation. Boiles v. Crescent Drug & Chemical Co. 53 N. J. Eq. 614, 32 Atl. 1061.

One employed at a stated salary under a written contract by a corporation, which, becoming insolvent, made a general assignment for the benefit of its creditors, and who continued in the discharge of his duties until after the assignment, and until discharged by the assignee, is a claimant for damages for the breach of his contract, and when he diligently seeks other employment, and makes the most advantageous agreement open to him, is entitled to participate in the distribution of the assigned estate on the basis of his contracted salary after crediting the earnings of his subsequent new employment. Parker v. Hull, 46 Ill. App. 471.

Where a corporation ceases, in consequence of the destruction of its works by fire, to carry on its business, the fact is no defense to the claim of an employee hired unqualifiedly for a year for damages because of his discharge for that reason. Eastman v. Eastman & M. Co. 1 N. Y. Supp. 16.

The fact that a corporation has been sold out on execution does not justify an employee in treating as abrogated a contract with it for his services. Nash v. H. R. Gladding Co. 118 Mich. 529, 77 N. W. 7.

The insolvency of individuals, followed by an assignment for creditors, a discontinuance of business, dissolution of their partnership, and discharge of their employees, will not absolve them from their obligation to pay salary to an employee without fault whose term of employment has not expired, if he does not assent to the termination of his contract. Vanuxem v. Bostwick, 19 W. N. C. 74, 7 Atl. 598.

Insolvency of a corporate employer does not put an end to a contract to pay for services so as to deprive the employee of his salary after the insolvency. Hassenfus v. Philadelphia Packing & Provision Co. 15 Pa. Co. Ct. 650, Following Vanuxem v. Bostwick, 19 W. N. C. 74, 7 Atl. 598.

The appointment by a court of chancery, at cannot take an equivocal position, waiting for time to reveal whether it will prove to be a good contract or a bad contract, and then accept it or reject it as may best subserve their own interest. Neither law nor equity permits any person intentionally to mislead another to his injury. Having, by their silence, led Thompson to believe that they would not disavow his contract, their objection to it, after he has acted upon it, comes too late to deprive him of compensation for his labor and outlay.

Having thus seen that no principle of l.v., nor any decided case, withholds from the appellee compensation for his outlay, as the legal consequence of the termination of his contract before completion thereof on either of the two grounds on which it was terminated, there is nothing in the former decision to deprive him of it. The language of both the opinion and syllabus is broad enough to carry it, and the principles declared do not inhibit it. So, according to both the letter and the spirit of the decision, he is entitled to it, unless precluded on some other ground.

Another objection urged against the allowance of Thompson's claim is the alleged purchase by him of the property of the Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company at the sale under the decree of June 23, 1893, and confirmed by the decree of August 4, 1893, as to which sale, and the terms and conditions thereof, see the opinion filed on the former appeal. 46 W. Va. 56, 59, 33 S. E. 125. The ostensible purchaser at this the instance of debenture bondholders, of a manager and receiver of a corporation, is like the case of a mortgagee taking possession upon the default of the mortgagor, and is equivalent to a dismissal of the latter's servants, and that dismissal is so far wrongful as to afford the employees rights of action where they have running contracts protecting them from summary discharge. An employee, however, who may be discharged upon notice of a stated length of time, and who is continued in service of the manager and receiver for the period to be covered by such notice, has no cause of action, for he has not been damaged. Reid v. Explosives Co. L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 264, 56 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 338, 57 L. T. N. S. 430, 35 Week. Rep. 509.

In England an order for winding up a corporation under the companies act of 1862 operates as a notice of discharge of clerks and servants from the employ of the corporation. Re General Rolling Stock Co. 35 Beav. 207, L. R. 1 Eq. 346, 12 Jur. N. S. 44.

When an English corporation becomes hopelessly and irretrievably insolvent, and there is really nothing for its clerks to do, a notice, a few days after the winding-up order under the companies act of 1862, that their services are not longer required, may be considered as dating back to the day of the order; but where there is a special contract, and the clerk continues in the employment, he is entitled to his salary. Re English Joint Stock Bank, L. R. 3 Eq. 341, 15 L. T. N. S. 528.

But in New York one employed by a corporation for a year at an annual salary, and discharged before it expires by a receiver appointed in an action by a judgment creditor to sequester and distribute the corporate property, and who has sustained damages in the amount of the balance of his stipulated salary to the end of the year less what he earns in the meantime, cannot participate in the receipt of dividends to creditors, since he was not, at the appointment of the receiver, a creditor of the corporation, there having up to that time been no breach of his contract. Eddy v. Co-operative Dress Asso. 3 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 442.

In reaching this conclusion, Cullen, J., relied upon and followed the case of People v. Globe Mt. L. Ins. Co., at that time only decided by the New York supreme court (64 How. Pr. 249), but later affirmed by the court of appeals (91 N. Y. 174). He held that the final decree 69 L. R. A.

of sequestration worked a dissolution of the corporation and differentiated the case from those wherein only a temporary receiver pendente lite had been appointed and the corporate life continued. Then, said he, the assets of the company were subject to the claims of existing creditors at the time of the receiver's appointment, and until these were satisfied could not be used for any other purpose. At that time no liability had accrued to the employee, and might never accrue. He added that, if the corporation continues in existence, there may be a valid claim against it; but there is not a right to share in the fund to the detriment of other creditors.

X. Remedies.

a. Abstract.

Whatever technical difficulties exist in maintaining an action at law by or against a corporation after its charter has been repealed, in the apprehension of a court of equity there is no difficulty in a creditor following the property of a corporation into the hands of anyone not a bona fide creditor or purchaser, and asserting his lien thereon, and obtaining satisfaction of his debt out of that fund specifically set apart for its payment when the debt was contracted and charged with a trust for all the creditors when in the hands of the corporation; which trust the repeal of the charter does not destroy. Curran v. Arkansas, 15 How. 304, 14 L. ed. 705.

Although by dissolution debts due to or from a corporation are extinguished because there is no one in law to sue or be sued, yet the individuals who composed such corporation (and corporations aggregate are but associations of individuals) may, by contract or in law, nevertheless have incurred liabilities which will survive their charter, and be enforced at law or in equity according to the circumstances of the case. Hightower v. Thornton, 8 Ga. 486, 52 Am. Dec. 412.

I must think, said Lumpkin, J., of the supreme court of Georgia, that the legal world with great unanimity will hold that the science of jurisprudence is deplorably defective if the assets of a corporation, and among these the capital stock authorized to be invested and to which the public looks with confidence for security and indemnity, cannot be rescued "as sale was W. H. Osterhout, but the Thompsons, the appellee and his son, F. E. Thompson, furnished him, on some sort of terms, part, if not all, of the money for the cash payment, and became his sureties on the notes for the deferred payments. After the sale a new mill was purchased and erected in the place of the one which had been burned down under the receivership, a new company was organized,—the Blackwater Lumber Company,—and the stocking, cutting, and marketing of the timber were resumed under the management of Frank E. Thompson, and so continued until the time of his death, by which event the appellee became the owner, by the statutes of descent and distribution, of all the estate of F. E. Thompson, including a large amount of timber to be cut at the mill under contract. The appellee then resumed the management of the mill and property, paid part of the money due on the notes, and in 1898 purchased the interest of Osterhout, and is now substantially the owner of all the property. He claims to have sold to the new company his locomotives, cars, steel rails, splices, teams, camp outfits, tools, and appliances of all kinds. In addition to the circumstances indicating that the Thompsons were the real purchasers, a witness testifies that he had a conversation with them and Osterhout, in which they assured him that the mill and stocking business would go on after the sale as they had been run prior thereto. Thompson denies having made the purchase. Whether the charge is planks from the wreck," and saved for depositors, bill holders, and other creditors; and that, although the corporation is dissolved, with or without legislative interference, a court of equity will devise a mode for the purposes of the remedy to hold the true parties to their just obligations. Ibid.

b. Concrete.

The doctrine is clearly established that courts of equity are without jurisdiction to decree the dissolution of a corporation and the forfeiture of its franchise, either at the suit of an individual or the state, unless such jurisdiction is conferred by statute. But, in virtue of its general jurisdiction over trusts, and to give relief where legal remedies are inadequate, a court of equity may, recognising the existence of a corporation, interpose to prevent dissipation and misapplication of its property and assets when it has ceased to do business, and make a just and equitable distribution thereof to whatever creditors and shareholders may be thereunto entitled. Stamm v. Northwestern Mut. Ben. Asso. 63 Mich. 317, 38 N. W. 710.

A suit in equity against the stockholders of an insolvent corporation may be maintained to collect unpaid subscriptions to be applied in payment of the corporate debts. Robison v. Carey, 8 Ga. 531.

A stockholder in an insolvent corporation is liable for his subscription as part of a trust fund for benefit of creditors. Scott v. Latimer, 33 C. C. A. 1, 60 U. S. App. 720, 89 Fed. 852.

When a statute affords a remedy against stockholders to creditors of an existing corporation, the remedy is open, although the corporation has ceased active operations, and has no persons in office as president, directors, etc., provided there has been no actual dissolution, expiration of charter, or forfeiture of the franchise. Curry v. Woodward, 53 Ala. 371.

Notwithstanding the annulment of the charter of a corporation by the judgment of a competent court in quo warranto proceedings instituted by the state, its creditors may compel the subscribers to its stock to pay up their subscriptions, although these were repudiated upon the ground the corporation had no legal existence. Gaff v. Flesher, 33 Ohio St. 107.

In sustaining the right of a judgment creditor of a dissolved and insolvent corporation to recover the debt against one of the stockholders. L. R. A.

ers, the New York commission of appeals, by Reynolds, C., said: With the nice distinction between law and equity, we are not troubled in this case, nor even as to the form of the action. The plaintiff is a creditor of the corporation upon a judgment duly obtained, and the company has no property in the state that can be taken on execution. The defendant is found in possession of corporate assets more than sufficient to pay the plaintiff's demand, and the law requires that he should pay it. It does not matter how he got it, whether by fair agreement with his associates, or wrongful act; it is enough that he had it, and that it should have been devoted to paying the corporate debts. His claim as a stockholder cannot prevail over a creditor's prior right. Bartlett v. Drew, 57 N. Y. 587, Followed in Hastings v. Drew, 76 N. Y. 9.

A transfer by a corporation of all its property and assets, which involves the destruction of the corporation and an abandonment of the purposes of its organization, is illegal as against creditors whose rights thereby are sacrificed and whose remedies thus are destroyed. Cole v. Millerton Iron Co. 133 N. Y. 164, 28 Am. St. Rep. 615, 30 N. E. 847.

The mere fact that the property of a corporation is a trust fund for the payment of creditors does not authorize the creditor to ask a court of equity to follow it into the hands of the stockholders and decree its payment to him, without alleging facts to show that his legal remedy would be unavailing and the interposition of a court of equity needful to enable him to obtain payment of his demand. Dudley v. Price, 10 B. Mon. 84.

The mere fact that a corporation is an insolvent debtor in the insolvent court of a state, and there has been appointed therein an assignee of its property, will not bar, even in equity, one of its contract creditors from proceeding to judgment against it in an action at law, when the insolvency proceedings cannot by statute eventuate in the discharge of the corporate debtor, and when, also, by statute, the creditor must obtain judgment against the corporation before he can pursue its stockholders. Miller v. Waldborough Packing Co. 88 Me. 605, 34 Atl. 527.

A creditor of a bank upon its circulating notes after the corporate charter has expired cannot maintain an action at law against one of its stockholders predicated upon the division of true is not of controlling importance, for reasons now to be given.

Having erected its mill and obtained contracts of purchase of the timber standing on large tracts of land in the vicinity thereof, and commenced its operations, the Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company, on the 18th day of June, 1890, entered into a contract with S. W. Thompson and the appellee, Albert Thompson, for cutting and delivering said timber at the mill at certain specified prices per thousand feet. The lands mentioned in the contract from which the timber was to be so taken are those of the Marshall Coal & Lumber Company, containing 12,000 acres, lying on both sides of the Blackwater river, H. C. Davis & Bros., Wm. H. Harness, J. G. Harness, W. W. Harness,

H. C. Harness, H. J. Cooper, J. W. Parsons, C. S. Harness, I. H. Kuykendall, Jacob Van Meter, and Ann Van Meter. In all the contracts for the purchase of the timber on these lands by the Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company, there were certain covenants, and, among others, time limits for the removal of the timber; and the contract made with the Thompsons contain this clause: "All of said contracts are to be kept and observed as to detail by said Thompsons as binding upon them." Part of these lands lay along and near enough to the river to make it practicable to put the logs into it and drive them to the mill, while from others the timber had to be hauled. So the contract required the Thompsons to put the logs into the "mill

the capital among them on the dissolution without adequate provision to pay the note holders; the only remedy is by bill in chancery in behalf of all creditors, bringing in the stockholders and compelling restitution and pro rata distribution according to the justice of the case. Vose v. Grant, 15 Mass. 505.

There is no mode at common law whereby a single creditor of a banking corporation whose charter has expired by limitation can compel any one stockholder to pay him the amount of his stock. If any remedy to this effect exists it must be sought in a tribunal having power to act over the whole subject-matter equitably, and so as to adjust the varied claims and diverse liabilities, and make a final and just distribution to those entitled to the fund. Spear v. Grant, 16 Mass. 9.

XI. Construction and effect of statutes.

Admitting that, in the absence of any statute to the contrary, the common-law rule that the civil death of a corporation extinguishes all debts due to or from it still applies to actions at law, yet, as it is manifest that the modern business and commercial corporation is not within the reason of the rule, and that the rule itself has been generally superseded by legislation, the provisions of a statute in point ought to be so construed, if possible, as to keep the case out of the rule and accomplish the manifest purpose of the legislature, viz., to allow a corporation to terminate its existence and collect and distribute its assets in its own name whenever and by any means deemed best by its stockholders. Wallamet Falls Canal & Lock Co. v. Kittridge, 5 Sawy. 44, Fed. Cas. No. 17,105.

Insolvency, as applied to corporations, and which brings into play the statute of New Jersey (P. L. 1896, pp. 277, 298) giving effect to the American trust-fund doctrine, denotes "a general inability to meet pecuniary liabilities as they mature by means of either available assets or an honest use of credit." Empire State Trust Co. v. Wm. F. Fisher & Co. (N. J.) 60 Atl. 940.

In Tennessee, although the liabilities of a corporation greatly exceed its assets, it is not insolvent, in such sense as to make its assets a trust fund for pro rata distribution to its creditors, if it continues a going concern conducting business in the ordinary way. Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co. 95 Tenn. 634, 31 L. R. A. 593, 49 Am. St. Rep. 69 L. R. A.

943, 32 S. W. 1097; McClaren v. Union Roller Mills & Elevator Co. 95 Tenn. 696, 35 S. W. 88.

Companies created in Delaware with banking powers are corporations unlike the English incorporated towns. They are mere creatures of the law deriving existence and all rights and powers, expressly or incidentally, from the law which created them. Perpetual succession is not one of their attributes. In their charter the days of their existence are numbered, and their period of dissolution fixed. If their charter be not extended, the moment that period arrives the corporation stands, not dormant, disabled, or incapable of action merely, but absolutely dissolved, civilly dead, without life or being, and altogether at an end. Their condition when their charters expire is not the same as that of an incorporated town which has failed to elect its officers and thus become inactive. Their life has gone out by their own constitution; they are not simply without active being through failure to do what they were entitled to do. They are dead, not dormant, and the principles of law applicable to a corporation thus dormant or disabled are not the same as those which apply to a corporation dissolved or civilly dead. An act of the legislature may awake and revive the one; it can only create a new corporation in the place of that which became defunct. Commercial Bank v. Lockwood, 2 Harr. (Del.) 8.

The legislature of New York, by its act of April 9th, 1811 (1 Rev. Stat. 248), re-enacted in the revision of 1830 (1 Rev. Stat. 600, §§ 9, 10), to the effect that, upon the dissolution of any corporation, its directors or others appointed by competent authority shall be trustees for its creditors and stockholders to settle its affairs, collect its outstandings, pay its debts, and divide among its stockholders what is left after paying necessary expenses, took means to remedy the gross injustice of the common law rule, and abolished it, establishing the equitable rule in its stead. Owen v. Smith, 31 Barb. 641.

In New York the dissolution of a corporation does not have the effect to terminate a lease for years and discharge a covenant to pay rent. Under the statutes of that state, upon the dissolution of a corporation its assets become a trust fund for the payment of its debts, and these include debts to mature as well as accrued indebtedness, and all engagements entered into by the corporation which have pond at Davis in summer and to bullechain in winter." Owning the land on both sides of the Blackwater river, the Marshall Coal & Lumber Company, in its contract of sale of the timber to the Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company, granted to it the free and exclusive use of the river and its branches for floating, booming, and manufacturing its timber, with the right to erect dams and mills for such purpose, and also the right to construct on its lands, tramroads for hauling the timber.

In the light of these facts, the following clauses of the Thompson stocking contract are to be read and kept in mind, together with what Thompson did under the contract, in order to clearly understand his situation when the property and rights of the Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company were sold free and discharged from the obligations of his contract:

"9th. Said Thompsons agree to make all river improvements and repairs to river piers, dams, booms, etc., while said river improvements are used by them, excepting always dams, piers, booms, etc., at the mill; but said Thompsons agree to renew the boom and renew the piers, down to the water even at the mill pond, once during this contract when said boom and piers need said repairs; and said Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company agree to furnish the standing timber for said repairs to Davis boom and piers at mill.

"10. The Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company agree to sell, and S. W. and A. Thompson agree to purchase, all effects used by said company in stocking and driving as follows, to wit, horses, harness, wagons, tools, supplies, and camp outfits; also company's blacksmith shop at Davis, with its tools and supplies in shop and ordered; all effects at a fair valuation, but if parties cannot agree at a fair valuation then the valuation of above property shall be decided by a board of arbitration, to be composed of parties agreeable to both parties hereto. It is mutually agreed that 'one have' the purchase price of above property be paid on 20th Aug. and one half be paid on 20th Sept., 1890.

"11th. It is mutually agreed by the parties hereto that in case any improvements not sold as above provided for be used by said Thompsons, such as camps, slides, etc., said Thompsons agree to pay for use of same, excepting camps along the river, for which no charge is to be made, for a consideration to be agreed upon.

"12th. The Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company agree to grant to said S. W. and A. Thompson all the rights and privileges held by them under the Marshall C. & S. Company contract and under other contracts to erect dams, booms, piers, and erect and build bridges and tramroads, but only for the purpose of carrying out this contract; and the said Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company agree to proceed under their contract for the purpose of condemning rights of way, etc., provided said Thompsons pay all costs, judgments, and damages under said condemnation proceedings, always provided not been fully satisfied or canceled. People v. National Trust Co. 82 N. Y. 283.

A lessor, therefore, is entitled to recover subsequently accruing rent to the end of the lease from the receiver of such a dissolved corporation, and, in case the premises have been vacated, and he relets them to a new tenant, he is entitled to the difference between the new rent received and that reserved in the lease. People v. St. Nicholas Bank, 151 N. Y. 592, 45 N. E. 1129.

A statute for the winding up, through a receiver of corporations adjudged insolvent, whereby the corporate assets including rights of action, damages, and demands of every nature existing at the time of the insolvency, or accruing subsequently thereto, are to be collected by the receiver, and their proceeds distributed by him among the creditors of the corporation in proportion to the amounts of their debts, does not use the terms "creditors" and "debts" in any narrow, restrictive, or technical sense, but as covering all just liabilities, including claims for damages for breaches of contract for personal service. Spader v. Mural Decoration Mfg. Co. 47 N. J. Eq. 18, 20 Atl. 378.

Whether, upon general principles, the dissolution of a corporation by the voluntary act of its stockholders has the same effect upon the status of its property and the rights of creditors as does its extinction by expiration of its 69 L. R. A.

charter, or a decree of forfeiture by a competent judicial tribunal, in Iowa, by statute (Rev. Stat. 1865, § 1171), such a dissolution does not take away the power to act in winding up its affairs, or the right of a creditor (in equity, at least) to relief from the inequitable consequences of such a dissolution. Muscatine Turn Verein v. Funck, 18 Iowa, 469.

Under the provisions of a statute for placing the property of insolvent banks and trust companies in the custody of the law, to be converted into money and divided among their creditors, upon the appointment of an assignee the corporation is practically dissolved. The insolvency proceedings do not revoke corporate contracts, nor excuse the corporation from performing them. They disable it from performing the executory parts of such contracts, and entitle the other parties to them to an allowance of reasonable damages for the breaches of contract thus occasioned. Bank Comrs. v. New Hampshire Trust Co. 69 N. H. 621, 44 Atl. 130.

The common-law rule respecting the effect of dissolution upon the property and assets of a corporation does not, under the statutes of Texas, apply to stock corporations. On the dissolution of a stock corporation in that state its assets become a trust fund for the discharge of its liabilities, and the surplus belongs to the shareholders. Equity will always find means to said Thompsons require said proceedings to carry out this contract."

Thompson shows that under this contract he expended $1,700 on the dams in the river, and constructed 2½ miles of tramroad, called the "Harness tramroad," at a cost, exclusive of rails, splices, spikes, and switches, of $3,200, and 11 210/320 miles of standard gauge tramroad at a cost, as aforesaid, of $19,582.25, besides two bridges across the Blackwater river at a cost of $1,200. In addition to this, he built engine houses, a repair shop, sand house, and necessary switches, put the steel on the roads, and equipped them with three locomotives and cars, making a total outlay of $53,258.60, according to a statement filed as an exhibit with his petition. As tested by the items credited in the commissioner's report to the railroad and the tramroad accounts, this estimate appears to be under, rather than above, the actual cost. A large portion of this expense, it will be observed, was on account of the dams, bridges, and cutting and grading of roads, which, by clause 12 of the contract, could be used by Thompson for no other purpose than that of the performance of his contract. By selling the Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company's property discharged from his contract, the purchaser obtained the benefit of these improvements. Though the rolling stock and the materials of the railroad might have been taken away and held by Thompson, the benefit of his expenditures upon the dams and bridges and in the opening and grading of roads would have gone to the purchaser.

At the time of the sale there were several millions of feet of timber lying in the woods and streams on which work had been done to the amount of $12,399.63, payment of which could not be demanded by Thompson under the contract until after actual delivery, which was prevented by the court. The purchaser took this timber discharged of Thompson's claim for the labor done on it. Having completed and equipped his tramroads at great cost, he was in a position to earn profits in the performance of the unexecuted part of his contract, and by purchasing the property himself, if he did so, he thereby paid into the hands of the court the supposed value of his work on the dams, bridges, roads, etc., and said sum of $12,399.63 due to himself for work done on timber not delivered. His bid may not have provided for any profits, as by becoming the purchaser he secured to himself the right to continue and complete the logging of the timber. Had he purchased subject to his contract, the sale would not have deprived him of the benefit of his permanent improvements, and he would have been compelled to pay, in addition to the purchase money, said sum of $12,399.63 due to himself, as well as profits thereafter accruing by the completion of the logging contract. If Osterhout was a bona fide purchaser of the property discharged of the Thompson contract, it is perfectly clear that he obtained and paid for said permanent improvements, and the timber on which Thompson had done work for which he had not been paid. What he paid for these went into the hands of the collect the corporate debts after dissolution for the benefit of either creditors or stockholders. Sulphur Springs & M. P. R. Co. v. St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. 2 Tex. Civ. App. 650, 22 S. W. 107, 23 S. W. 1012.

The forfeiture of the franchise of a railway company in respect of the unfinished part of its road under the Texas statute, which is self-executing, does not affect its corporate existence or property rights in the completed part of its line. Ibid.

Under the statutes of Texas the forfeiture of the charter of a railway corporation does not devest without compensation the stockholders of their property right in the roadbed, acquired by their means. This proposition is in harmony with the decision in People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 1, 2 L. R. A. 255, 7 Am. St. Rep. 634, 18 N. E. 692, construing statutes of New York similar in terms to those of Texas. The decision in Erie & N. E. R. Co. v. Casey, 26 Pa. 287, to the contrary effect can only be sustained in the absence of statutes in those jurisdictions where the strict rule of the common law is in force respecting the property of dissolved corporations. Ibid. Stephens, J., however, dissented on this point.

XII. Conclusion.

The general trend of the decisions, notwithstanding much disagreement and many backward glances at the early doctrine of the common law, makes it reasonably safe to conclude that, upon the civil death by dissolution of a corporation, especially if its demise be suicidal, the obligations of its contracts with those engaged to render it service will survive in all cases where they would survive the death of a natural employer; and that claims arising upon such contracts stand in the same relation to the property and assets of the dissolved corporation as do other unliquidated claims arising upon other contracts. The rule deducible from the New York cases in respect of the effect of compulsory dissolution upon running contracts not otherwise broken, and claims for damages on account of their loss, has met with only partial acceptance, and its general recognition lies in the future, and cannot be confidently predicted. It may be suggested that, under its operation, cases may arise where, in the course of administering the estate of a dead corporation, all its creditors would be paid in full and something be left for its stockholders. The gross injustice of excluding from any share in the property and assets of claims for damages for abruptly canceled employment contracts is so obvious that the rule appears unsound. Should such a case arise it is probable the grounds upon which it rests would be critically re-examined before the rule would be allowed to stand.

J. B. G.

court, and Thompson is equitably entitled to it. If, on the other hand, Thompson was, in fact, the purchaser, he purchased on the same basis, and paid his own money into court, to be returned to him to the extent of the value of said improvements and the amount due for work done on timber. Assuming that Thompson put in both bids,—$72,500 subject to his contract, and $110,000 discharged from his contract,—the latter having been confirmed, the difference of $37,500 indicates that a large amount was paid by him for the privilege of retaining the benefit of his expenditures. It also indicates that the bidders, parties to the suit, and the court, in ordering and confirming the sale, understood that on one basis the purchaser should allow Thompson to continue his contract and pay him all demands thereafter accruing under it, and that on the other he should not be liable to Thompson for anything, and that Thompson should look to the purchase money in the hands of the court for the satisfaction of any claims he might have.

In cases of breach of contract, money paid out and expended by the plaintiff to prevent or lessen the resulting damages is recoverable. A man is not precluded from recovering because it is in his power, by the expenditure of his own money, to save himself from the injury inflicted by the other party. Sutherland on Damages, in treating of the elements of damages, says, at § 88, 3d ed.: "Fifth, such losses may consist of labor done and expenses incurred to prevent or lessen damages which would otherwise result from the defendant's default or misconduct. The law imposes upon a party injured by another's breach of contract or tort the active duty of using all ordinary care and making all reasonable exertions to render the injury as light as possible. If by his negligence or wilfulness he allows the damages to be unnecessarily enhanced, the increased loss—that which was avoidable by the performance of his duty—falls upon him. This is a practical obligation under a great variety of circumstances, and, as the damages which are suffered by a failure to perform it are not recoverable, it is of much importance. Where it exists, the labor or expense which its performance involves is chargeable to the party liable for the injury thus mitigated; in other words, the reasonable cost of the measures which the injured party is bound to take to lessen the damages, whether adopted or not, will measure the compensation the party injured can recover for the injury, or the part of it that such measures have or would have prevented. This is on the principle that, if the efforts made are successful, the defendant will have the benefit of them; if they prove abortive, it is but just that the expense attending them shall be borne by him." The latter part of the same section demonstrates the duty to make the loss as light as possible in case of notice of rescission given by one party to the owner, but it also appears that money expended in doing so is recoverable. This equitable and common-sense principle must be applied here, and therefore, if Thompson was the actual purchaser, the circumstance does not preclude the allowance of his claim.

In support of the view here taken, the following is quoted from the decree of confirmation of the sale: "The said special receiver is directed to execute and deliver to the said William H. Osterhout, the purchaser, a deed conveying to him all the property, real and personal, and also all the corporate rights, powers, privileges, and franchises, of the said Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company, together with all the improvements made in said Blackwater river and its tributaries, including dams, piers, and booms, and all standing timber belonging to said company, and all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred upon said company under and by virtue of the contracts set forth in the decree of sale, other than the logging contracts with S. W. and A. Thompson; and in said deed said receiver shall reserve a lien for unpaid purchase money upon the real estate conveyed, and upon the leasehold property held under leases from H. G. Davis and others, and upon all improvements thereon; and the said receiver, Fairfax S. Landstreet, is directed forthwith to turn over and deliver to the said purchaser, William H. Osterhout, the possession of all said property, real and personal, and all the original timber contracts aforesaid."

If the price paid was inadequate, it is too late to suggest that the inadequacy is the result of manipulation on the part of Thompson, or of collusion between him and Osterhout. That would have been ground for resisting confirmation of the sale, but it can have no bearing on the question of Thompson's right to compensation or the amount thereof. The sale was widely advertised, and was public and open to the world, and the confirmation without objection on the part of creditors or stockholders estops them from denying the fairness of the sale or adequacy of the price. At any rate, it has no connection whatever with the matter now under consideration.

The foregoing principles and conclusions settle the most important question in the case, but do not cover the exceptions touching specific items entering into the account, the mode of statement, and the evidence upon which the balance struck depends. Under exceptions 1, 2, 3, 6, 12, and 13, it is insisted that Thompson's contract was divisible, that the executed part of it could not be considered in ascertaining his compensation, and that the sums expended in getting out the timber which had been paid for, and the amounts received on account of it, should not have been charged and credited in the statement, for the reason that if, in any instance, Thompson had lost money on any particular lot of timber, the loss was, by such method of statement, wrongfully charged to the company, since it ought to be borne by Thompson, and if, in any instance, a profit had resulted, it was wrongfully given to the company, as it belonged to Thompson. If, on the last-stated hypothesis, any error has been committed, it is not prejudicial, but beneficial, to the appellants, and they cannot complain of it. If, on the former, any error was committed, it is prejudicial, but the burden is upon the appellants to show that such losses sustained were carried into the general balance against the company. This they have failed to do. They point out no instance of such charge, and have introduced no evidence showing it. Moreover, it is a question of fact on which the commissioner and the court below have passed, and their finding cannot be disturbed by this court unless plainly wrong. How is it possible to determine the amount of compensation on the basis of charging all expenditures and the value of work and labor, and crediting all sums received, without including those relating to the executed part of the contract? The lengthy argument of the brief on this point not only fails to point out any wrong done, but also to show how it is possible to arrive at the amount necessary to reimburse for outlay in any other way with any degree of certainty.

Exceptions 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, and 17 present the contention that the expenditures for permanent improvements and preparations for the execution of the contract should be apportioned between the executed and unexecuted parts of the contract, on the theory that if, when interrupted, his contract was three-fifths performed, he should be allowed only two fifths of such expenditures. The authorities cited for this do not support it. The first is Watts v. Camors, 115 U. S. 353, 29 L. ed. 406, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 91, holding that a clause in a charter party whereby the parties bind themselves, etc., "in the penal sum of estimated amount of freight," to the performance of the agreements contained in the contract, is not a stipulation for liquidated damages, and is discharged by payment of the actual damages sustained by breach of the agreement. Another is Dalbeattie S. S. Co. v. Card, 59 60 L. R. A.

Fed. 159, holding as follows: "In awarding damages against a charterer for refusing a vessel, the net freight earned by obtaining another—less valuable—cargo is to be deducted from the sum which would have been earned under the charter." Another is Baker Transfer Co. v. Merchants' Refrigerator & Ice Mfg. Co. 12 App. Div. 260, 42 N. Y. Supp. 76, applying the principle of the last-named case in determining the measure of damages for breach of an agreement to take and deliver the output of an ice-manufacturing plant. Another is Ewing v. Codding, 5 Blackf. 433, an action by a landlord against the tenant for breach of an agreement to deliver one third of the crops as rent, in which it was held that in assessing the damages the defendant might prove in mitigation thereof that after the making of the lease the plaintiff, with defendant's consent, had leased a part of the premises to a third person, from whom he had received rent for that part. The last one is Jebsen v. East & West India Dook Co. L. R. 10 C. P. 300, relating to reduction of damages resulting from a breach of a contract concerning one ship by applying profits earned with another ship. These authorities, except the Indiana case, all relate to damages by prevention of anticipated profits, and not to compensation for outlay and expenses, and are so obviously inapplicable to the proposition contended for that it would be a waste of time to comment on them. Nor has the Ewing v. Codding Case the remotest bearing on the question. By consent of parties, part of the land, and consequently part of the rent, were eliminated from the contract. The proposition is not only unsupported by any authority, but is also at variance with the law of compensation and reimbursement as laid down by the courts. It is an element in every case of damages for prevention of the performance of a contract, and is ascertained upon the following basis: "When one party enters upon the performance of a contract, and incurs expense therein, and, being willing to perform it, is, without fault of his own, prevented by the other party from performing, his loss will consist of two distinct items of damage: First, his outlay and expenses; second, the profits he might have realized by performance, which profits are related to the outlays, and include them and something more. The first item he may recover in all cases, unless the other party can show the contrary." United States v. Behan, 110 U. S. 338, 28 L. ed. 168, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 81. Here there is no question of profits. It is one of outlay, time, labor, and expenses, and is governed by so much of the foregoing rule as relates to reimbursement for outlay. The idea of apportionment here contended for is nowhere to be found in it; nor do its terms leave any room for it. "But, as Towne saw fit to say that the special contract was not binding upon him, it cannot be set up by his executor as binding upon the plaintiff. King v. Welcome, 5 Gray, 41. It cannot be treated as a nullity for one purpose, and as a contract for another. It required two years for its completion, and both parties understood that there was to be no profit or advantage to the plaintiff except from the operations of both years taken together. A large part of the labor and expense incurred in the first year had no reference whatever to the operations and results of that year, taken by itself, but were a preparation of the land for increased productiveness in the second year. The plaintiff must be considered as having in that way paid in advance, in part at least, for the privilege of using the land the second year in the manner agreed upon. By the repudiation of the contract he has lost the privilege which he had so paid for. The consideration upon which he made that payment has failed by the wilful act of the other party to the contract, and he is therefore entitled to recover back what he has so paid." Williams v. Bemis, 108 Mass. 91, 11 Am. Rep. 318.

To apportion the expense for permanent improvements between the executed and unexecuted portions of the contract, on the theory that Thompson has had three fifths of the benefit of them, would be inconsistent with the rule of compensation adopted, and contrary to the fact as regards the alleged reception of the three fifths of the benefit of them. Everything received by him goes in reduction of his bill for services and outlay. Every dollar paid by him, profits on the work, executed work included, is charged against his bill. How can it be said, then, that he has had the benefit of these improvements so far as the contract has been executed? The rule of compensation as laid down by the court deprives Thompson of all his profits, past and future, directs that he be made whole, nothing more, nothing less, and excludes any inquiry as to allowances of, or deductions for, profits, benefits, and losses.

In this connection, it is contended that Thompson should not be allowed the money expended in the construction of the railroad because he hauled over it more of F. E. Thompson's timber than of the company's timber. In order to reach the Van Meter tract of timber owned by the company, and which Thompson was bound to log under a short-time limit, it was necessary to build the road through the C. E. Harness tract, the timber on which belonged to F. E. Thompson, or to the company, and was to be logged by said F. E. Thompson. Albert 69 L. R. A.

Thompson, having built his road though said tract, hauled timber from it for F. E. Thompson, and has credited, in his statement against his expenditures, the hauling of said timber at 50 cents per thousand, and testifies that there was a profit in it to him, and therefore to the company. But it is said he hauled more timber on this road for his son than he hauled for the company, and that therefore he did not build it for use under his contract with the company. This position is untenable. He was bound to take the timber from the Van Meter tract, No. 8, the W. H. Harness tract, No. 11, and the J. W. Parsons tract, No. 12, under time limits, all lying beyond the C. E. Harness tract, from which he incidentally hauled timber for F. E. Thompson. The situation of these lands necessitated the hauling of the timber by a railroad or in some other way. He may have hauled more of his son's timber than of the company's timber, too, but the question is not what was actually hauled. It is the purpose for which the road was built, and that is very apparent from the facts stated. Had he been permitted to complete his contract, the relative amounts actually hauled for the company and for F. E. Thompson would in the end have been in a proportion very different from what they are now. It is further objected, in this connection, that Thompson hauled some bark and pulpwood of his own over this road, and, for hauling bark, purchased some bark cars. These were used, not only in hauling bark, but also in hauling supplies to the camps along the road, the log cars being unsuitable for that. He has credited what he deems a fair price for the hauling of the bark, and the cars are credited at a little more than what they cost. All this seems to be purely incidental, and does not prove the road to have been built for a purpose other than the carrying out of the logging contract.

Again, it is urged that compensation cannot be had because the work under the contract was prosecuted in the name of a corporation organized by Thompson, called the Forest City Lumber & Improvement Company. No authority is cited in support of the contention, and the argument in its favor is far from convincing. If a contractor can employ individuals to aid in carrying on his contract, why can he not, on the same principle, procure the work to be done by a corporation? Must he do all the work with his own hands, or keep the business all in his own name? If he chooses to operate through a corporation, so as to limit his liability on claims for damages as to third persons, or to keep one branch of his business separate from others, is that a matter which in any way prejudices or comcerns the other party to the contract, even if it be in some sense immoral, or even contrary to public policy, as charged in the argument? Whether it is immoral or otherwise wrong, we have no occasion to say.

Exception No. 22 comprises six different items. The first is $4,750, charged by Thompson for his personal services. The objection seems to be that he charged this as a salary at $1,500 per year as president of the Forest City Lumber & Improvement Company, a mere instrumentality in his hands for the execution of the work under his contract. As already indicated, there is nothing in this objection. The second is to the allowance of three items of $1,500, $300, and $878.35, paid by Thompson to three subcontractors, Talbord, Bartlett, and Whitcomb. These were paid to discharge liabilities thrown upon him by the interruption of his work under the main contract, and he was bound to pay them. They were necessary expenditures, but it is said they were disallowed by this court on the former appeal. No reference to them is found in the opinion, and there is no more reason for saying they were disallowed than for holding many thousands of dollars of other expenditures to have been so cut out. The third objection is to the allowance of $65 expended by Thompson in hunting a locomotive, because he is allowed $1,500 a year for personal services. Are his expenses to come out of his small allowance for services? The fourth relates to the bark cars, which has been disposed of. The fifth is of the same nature, and relates to an item of $400 for lumber cars, which Thompson used in hauling his own lumber, as well as for purposes of his contract. They were sold, and the proceeds credited, as well as their earnings in hauling his lumber. The sixth is to all items in the account, because they were paid by the Forest City Lumber & Improvement Company, and not by Thompson. Nothing further need be said on that subject.

Exceptions Nos. 5, 16, 18, and 19 relate to questions of competency, relevancy, and sufficiency of the evidence upon which the report is based. It is shown that many of the items charged were not found on the books of the Forest City Lumber & Improvement Company, or the Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company, but were taken from Thompson's private memoranda or inserted upon his verbal representations. The commissioner has made a complete list of all the items not taken from the books. Those in Thompson's favor are principally items of rent, wages of S. W. Thompson, superintendent, services of Albert Thompson, amounts paid Talbord, Bartlett, and Whitcomb, an item of $230 paid the Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company for loss of timber on the Van Meter land not removed within the limit of time specified in the contract, and an item of $450 paid for a team of horses and harness. These charges amount to $14,271.94, and, with the exception of three or four small items, were all fully explained by Thompson in his testimony, and shown by him to be proper charges, under the principles of law hereinbefore announced. The items on the other side of the account, not taken from the books, amount to $26,357.97, composed of credits for stocking and hauling for F. E. Thompson, and the proceeds of the locomotives, cars, rails, horses, harness, wagons, etc., sold to the Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company. It is not perceived that any wrong has been done the appellants in respect to any of these items. But it is said the accounts concerning work done for F. E. Thompson and for the Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company have been so mingled as to render it improper to allow any of the items to enter into a statement for the purpose of ascertaining the amount expended by Thompson under his contract. No instance is specified in which money paid out on work for F. E. Thompson is charged in favor of Albert Thompson, without a corresponding credit for the stocking and hauling of his timber at fair prices—the same, or about the same, prices as those paid Albert Thompson under his contract. All the timber logged for F. E. Thompson went to the Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company. Its books, as well as Thompson's, must have shown the amount of it so far as delivered. Is Thompson to be deprived of all compensation because he is unable to separate these accounts, when it is evident that the balance found by charging and crediting as aforesaid is substantially the true balance? As his work progressed, there was nothing in the situation to apprise him, or the other interested parties, that it would ever become necessary for him to produce the evidence now demanded, and it is as clear, full, and fair as could be expected under such circumstances. The books of the two companies were open to the commissioner and counsel on both sides, and were thoroughly and critically examined by the former, and from them and the testimony taken he has arrived at a conclusion which the circuit court has confirmed. The evidence on which it rests is neither incompetent nor irrelevant, and there is nothing to pass upon but its sufficiency. How can this court disturb the finding, if the appellants are unable, as apparently they are, to show wherein or how they have suffered from an erroneous finding upon the evidence? They fail to show or indicate that any money was lost on the work done for F. E. Thompson; nor do they put a witness on the stand who denies Thompson's claim that there was a profit in it. If it was profitable, how are they injured? If so, how can it be otherwise than that they are benefited?

Does the amount of this decree, as compared with the former one, indicate injustice? It is suggested that Thompson now has a decree for outlay, services, and expenses about equal to his former decree for these and profits added. But the record does not verify the charge. Under the former decree, he had, on account of the claims included in the present decree, principal sums decreed to him amounting to $94,433.50, and under the present decree on the same accounts, after his claim for profits has been eliminated, about $48,000, making a difference against him of about $46,433. From the $48,000 now allowed, deduct the item of $12,399.63, representing uncompleted work on timber actually felled, and the remainder is $35,600.37, the amount decreed for money expended, not directly upon the timber, but in making betterments and improvements and other preparations for carrying on the work. In view of what has been shown, respecting the character and magnitude of this work, the court cannot say the amount is unreasonable and unsustained by the evidence. It is suggested in this connection, however, that there is inconsistency, condemning and rendering worthless Thompson's testimony and all his evidence, in this: That in obtaining his former decree he swore his contract was a profitable one, and now shows it to have been a losing one. The bases of the former and present estimates are entirely different. When Mr. Thompson, on the former inquiry, testified that $10,000 had been sunk in the first year, and almost made up by the profits of the second year, he spoke of profits, not outlay and expenses. Just how he estimated them does not appear. The present inquiry is upon an entirely different basis, and, even if there be inconsistency, and the logic of facts shows the present result to be reasonable and just, is it to be cast aside and justice withheld because of such inconsistency? The great bulk of the expenditures and receipts by Thompson is shown by items taken from books, the correctness and accuracy of which have not been impaired or overthrown. There is a substantial check upon them found in the books of the Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company. All of them—both sets—have been open to the commissioner and counsel. Who has pointed out any omissions, any padding, any false or fraudulent entries? There is not an intimation of such a thing anywhere in the record or the argument. There is no suggestion of fraud in connection with the omissions from the books of certain credits and charges reported by the commissioner as not having been found on the books.

69) L. R. A.

This disposes of all important exceptions and assignments of error respecting the principles on which the account is stated and the items thereof. But two errors, not made the subjects of exceptions nor mentioned in the assignments of error, have been discovered. The receiver paid Thompson in August, 1893, interest amounting to $330.68, which has not been credited in the account against him, though charged in his favor. He is credited as of October, 1894, with $15,955, proceeds of property sold, and as of December, 1895, with $2,000 on account of property sold. These sums should have been credited as of August, 1893, for Thompson used them from that date until they were sold, and he ought, therefore, to pay, as compensation for their use, at least the interest on the sums for which he sold them. Making these corrections, and deducting $34.50 interest on small items disallowed by the circuit court, the sum found to be due him as of the 12th day of June, 1901, is $80,288.90, of which $47,873.62 is principal and $32,415.34 is interest.

The last contention is that the court erred in decreeing the amount due the appellee to be a lien upon the assets of the company. As this question was adjudicated on the former appeal, the court below could not, nor can this court now, disturb that conclusion and determination. Point 4 of the syllabus declares that Thompson's "compensation is entitled to a preference of payment out of the corporate assets in the hands of the receiver in equal priority with the other obligations of the receivership." That decision may be wrong, though we do not say it is; but it is, and must remain, the law of this case, however erroneous it may be. Camden v. Werninger, 7 W. Va. 528; Horn v. Perry, 11 W. Va. 694; Henry v. Davis, 13 W. Va. 230; North Western Bank v. Hays, 37 W. Va. 475, 16 S. E. 561.

As there is no error in the decree except in respect to the omission of said sum of $330.68 from the credit side of the account, and the failure to charge Thompson with the use of the property from the date of the decree of confirmation until disposed of, as hereinbefore stated, it will be corrected and modified in these respects, and, as so modified, affirmed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings; but, as this reduces the amount of the decree by the sum of $4,505.95, the costs in this court will be decreed to the appellants.

Dent, J., dissenting:

I cannot concur in the opinion in this case, for the reason that it is a misconstruction of, and in violation, to some extent, of the former opinion herein. The facts and circumstances clearly show that Albert Thompson was the real purchaser of the property of the defendant company in the name of Osterhout, who was only nominally used to cover the transaction; that Thompson suffered no loss so far as his outlay and expenses were concerned, but had really made a profit, according to his own testimony, at the time the sale of the property was decreed, and that the larger bid was made by him on the theory that he would be able to cover the difference between the two bids by his account for profits not earned; and that, having failed in this, his present account as to damages for outlay and expenses is an unconscionable demand to cover the difference between the two bids incurred by him under a misapprehension of the law as to his right to recover such unearned profits.

In becoming a purchaser of the property, it was Thompson's duty to take into consideration that the law imposed upon him, as the company's contractor, the obligation to use all ordinary means to save the company harmless from the expenditures incurred by him in carrying out his contract. 1 Sutherland, Damages, p. 184, § 88; Id. p. 188, § 90. This is a condition the law imposed upon him as a purchaser, and which it must be assumed he fully understood at the time of his purchase, and that he made the same with this understanding. Hence he could not have made the purchase with any legal expectancy of a recovery of his outlay and expenses from the company, owing to his knowledge that it was his legal duty to save the company harmless. Nor did he, in making his bid, take into consideration his outlay and expenses, for the sale was made entirely free from his stocking contract, which necessarily excluded all improvements made by him for the purpose of carrying them out, and gave the purchaser no right to such improvements without the consent of Thompson. This gave him such control over the property that no one else dare bid against him; for a purchaser subject to the stocking contracts would be entirely in his power, and a purchaser free from the contracts would be none the less so, for the improvements made by him were essential to the enjoyment of the purchase, and concerning which a stranger, in purchasing, would have to deal with Thompson. The property was thus so encumbered that Thompson had it in his power to make his own terms with regard thereto. He made two bids,—the lower one subject to his contract; the higher bid was made with the expectancy of the recovery of the unearned profits on his contracts by reason of the abrogation thereof.

The court held in its former opinion that he could not recover these profits. Hence he made a legal mistake in bidding on the property with such expectation. To avoid such mistake, he comes back with an alleged claim for expenditures for improvements made by him in the expectancy of being permitted to carry out his contracts. The law answers this demand by saying that it was your duty to save your contractee harmless, and you got the full enjoyment of these improvements when you purchased the property, and you can recover nothing unless you can show that you have suffered a loss by reason thereof. This, Thompson could not possibly do, for he had the full enjoyment of all the improvements under his purchase, without paying anything additional therefor, such as a stranger purchasing would have had to do to him. The improvements were no loss to him, but they not only deterred others from bidding on the property, but enhanced its value greatly without his having to pay anything for such enhancement. It is plainly apparent to the most simple minded that Thompson suffered no loss except the unearned profits denied to him by the former opinion, and that he was led into a legal mistake in making his higher bid in contemplation of the recovery of such profits. This is such a mistake that equity has no power to relieve against, it being in no sense mutual, or occasioned by the act or conduct of the opposite party. Yet the court relieves him therefrom by allowing his unconscientious demand for improvements and expenditures, concerning which he suffered no loss, but enjoyed the full benefit thereof, to the great enhancement of his property. In doing so the court in effect overrules its former opinion, and allows Thompson the greater portion of the profits then denied him. For this there can be no other justification or excuse than the legal mistake made by Thompson in making his higher bid. While this may appear equitable, yet it is in violation of the established rules and principles of courts of equity. Hence my dissent.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Poffenbarger, P., on August 13, 1904, handed down the following additional opinion:

A petition for rehearing sets up one new contention, namely, that while the statement of the commissioner shows over 13,000,000 feet of timber was hauled for F. E. Thompson, for which credit is given, only 6,205,000 feet—less than half as much—is credited as having been stocked for F. E. Thompson. This discrepancy, if credited at $4.50 per thousand feet, would amount to over $30,000, and it is urged that the allowance to

Thompson should be cut down by about that much. It is rather strange that such an amount should have been overlooked until this late hour, especially so in view of the strenuousness with which this contest has been waged on both sides; but, if the claim has any foundation in the record, it is made in time. Only the amounts paid by F. E. Thompson for stocking his timber are proper credits. If the 7,000,000 feet and over, stocked for him and not so credited, was paid for by the Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company upon the order of F. E. Thompson, and is therefore included in the cash credited in the statement, it is not only accounted for, but to credit it up as timber stocked for F. E. Thompson would give a double credit. Credit for $17,000 as cash, notes, and drafts, exclusive of commissions paid Thompson on sales of lumber, is given in the statement. At an average price of $4 per thousand, this represents 42,374,000 feet; at $4.50 per thousand it represents 37,777,000 feet; and at $5, covering both stocking and hauling, it represents 33,901,000 feet. Thompson gives the total amount of spruce timber scaled under his own contract as having been 25,643,710 feet. Add to this 13,000,000 feet as having been stocked for F. E. Thompson, and the result is 38,643,710 feet. Add to 33,901,000 feet, represented by the cash credited by Thompson, the 6,205,000 credited as having been stocked for F. E. Thompson, and the result is 40,101,000, but little more than the total found by the other method. But there was some hemlock timber put in by Thompson under his own contract, not included in the 25,643,710 feet. The amount, however, is comparatively small. Of the 6,205,000 feet shown by the statement to have been stocked for F. E. Thompson, only 313,297 feet was hemlock. Albert Thompson cut but little hemlock under his own contract. R. W. Eastham testified that, in saying all the timber of easy access on the 12,000-acre Marshall tract had been cut, he meant the spruce, and that no hemlock on that tract above the dam had been cut. Meyer, secretary of the Marshall Company, filed a statement from which it appears that Thompson logged from the Marshall tract, under his contract, 19,210,065 feet, of which only 1,712,369 feet were hemlock. Making an allowance of 2,000,000 feet of hemlock as having been cut by Albert Thompson under his own contract in addition to the 25,643,710 feet of spruce, and then adding 13,000,000 as having been cut for F. E. Thompson, the result is 40,643,710 feet. Take another test: From the statement exhibited with the deposition of H. A. Meyer, it appears that Thompson logged from the Marshall tract 19,210,065 feet. Most of this went in by the river. As the railroad runs through a corner of the tract, some of this timber may have been hauled in. Thompson says he hauled in about 10,000,000 feet for the company and about 13,000,000 feet for F. E. Thompson. Adding these three amounts, we have 42,210,065 feet, for some of which Thompson has not been paid. For unpaid work on it he had in the present decree $12,399.63. Besides, the report of the receiver shows 16,735,682 feet to have been "in stream and skidded in bush," much of which was, no doubt, from the Marshall tract. From this it is manifest that there can be no such discrepancy as is claimed, and that there is probably none at all. The commissioner and counsel on both sides all had access to the books, knew the basis on which the account was being made up, and had the witnesses before them, and there is a presumption of correctness as to the finding which cannot be overcome by a mere suspicion or surmise which the evidence in the record strongly tends to contradict. Though it may not appear from the record that payments for stocking F. E. Thompson's timber were made directly to Albert Thompson by the Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company, the books of the two companies almost certainly show how these payments were made, and they were at hand when this account was made up by the commissioner. And it does appear here that Albert Thompson has been paid by the Blackwater Boom & Lumber Company for more timber than he stocked for it under his own contract with it,—in fact, about the amount he stocked under his own contract and F. E. Thompson's contract, less the 6,205,000 credited as timber stocked for F. E. Thompson,—and all the money so received is credited in the account stated by the commissioner.

This petition renews, in slightly different form, the contention that Thompson is precluded from claiming the money expended by him because the expenditures were made in the name of the Forest City Lumber Company. It says he paid $25,000 for the stock of that company, which he still holds, wherefore said sum should be deducted from the amount allowed him. That corporation was organized for the sole purpose of carrying out Thompson's contract, and all the money paid into its treasury as capital stock or otherwise was Thompson's money. It never had any assets except the money expended through it by Thompson in the execution of his contract, and the money derived by Thompson from his contract through it as an agency used in the execution thereof. All these sums are carried into this account as charges and credits. The Forest City company is defunct, and its stock is but waste paper in Thompson's hands. The corporation had no substantial existence, nor its stock any value, save as an instrumentality in the execution of the contract. To make such deduction, therefore, would be to substitute a mere shadow for substance, and subordinate equity and justice to a barren technicality.

It is further insisted in the petition that the former adjudication by this court gave no lien for the amount now found to be due to Thompson, because the present claim was not then before the court. All the items in the account as now stated were not then in the record. Some of them were, but not stated in the present form. The claim that formed the basis of the former decree was for damages for breach of contract, composed of two items, outlay and gains prevented, as formerly explained. This court said the latter could not be allowed, but that, upon the ascertainment of the former, a decree therefor should be entered, giving a lien for it upon the assets of the company, and for that purpose the cause was remanded to the circuit court. Was not every question except that of the amount of compensation thereby adjudicated? The present demand was before the court as a part of the original claim. Thompson's original petition sets forth as an item of damages the cost of constructing his tramroads, repairs of dams, and building of bridges, amounting to $53,258.60, and his amended petition sets up the claim for $12,399.63, making in all more than $67,500. But this court said all sums received by him must be deducted. This necessitated a restatement of the account and the addition of many items both of debit and credit, resulting in a decree for about $48,000 instead of $67,500. It is argued that the language of the last clause of point 4 of the syllabus of the case, as reported in 46 W. Va. 56, 33 S. E. 125, saying, "which compensation is entitled to a preference of payment out of the corporate assets in the hands of the receiver in equal priority with the other obligations of the receivership," amounts to a construction of all the language used by the court on the subject of lien, and negatives the allowance of anything but the $12,399.63 item, because it says the amount shall have priority with the "other obligations of the receivership;" in other words, the whole amount must be an obligation of the receivership to make it a lien on the assets. But does not the court declare and decide that "a just compensation for the actual expenditure of labor and money in fulfilment of his contract, subject to a deduction of all sums paid him," shall be allowed priority with the other obligations of the receivership? It must be one of such obligations to satisfy the sense of the words "other obligations" of the like kind. The question is, What did the court decide? not whether it decided correctly. Properly or improperly, it has plainly declared the demand to be an obligation of the receivership and entitled to priority, and remanded the cause for a decree in accordance with the adjudicated principle governing the cause. It was binding upon the court below (Butler v. Thompson, 52 W. Va. 311, 43 S. E. 174), because it was an adjudication. What is res judicata as to one court is res judicata as to all others, and there is no escape from it except where an appeal exists. An appeal to this court from its own decision rendered years ago does not lie.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

John DILL, Appt.,
v.
Daniel W. MARMON.

(.....Ind.....)

1. A master is not liable to a servant for injuries caused by negligence of a foreman in directing work where the master has otherwise performed his duty.

2. A direction by a foreman to an employee assisting in shifting cars to be loaded at a mill, to push a car put in motion by the impact of another before it has lost its momentum, is not such a change in his work, although he has never done that

NOTE.—As to servant's right of action for injuries received in obeying direct command, see also, in this series, Dallemand v. Saalfeldt, 48 L. R. A. 753, and note; and the later cases of Finn v. Cassidy, 53 L. R. A. 877, and Long v. Illinois C. R. Co. 58 L. R. A. 237.

As to vice principalship considered with reference to the superior rank of a negligent servant, see Stevens v. Chamberlin, 51 L. R. A. 513, and note; Norton Bros. v. Nadebok, 54 L. R. A. 442; Southern P. Co. v. Schoer, 57 L. R. A. 707; Canney v. Walkeine, 58 L. R. A. 33; and 59 L. R. A.

Illinois Southern R. Co. v. Marshall, 66 L. R. A. 297.

As to vice principalship determined with respect to the character of the act which caused the injury, see Lafayette Bridge Co. v. Olsen, 54 L. R. A. 33, and note; Wellston Coal Co. v. Smith, 55 L. R. A. 99; Swift & Co. v. Blaise, 57 L. R. A. 147; Kelly v. New Haven S. B. Co. 57 L. R. A. 494; Sroufe v. Moran Bros. Co. 58 L. R. A. 313; Knutter v. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. 58 L. R. A. 808; Sams v. St. Louis & M. River R. Co. 61 L. R. A. 475, and Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Harrell, 63 L. R. A. 461.

particular act before, as to authorize him to proceed at the master's risk.

3. The mere fact that a place where a servant is working is rendered temporarily unsafe in the execution of the details of the service does not, alone, make it the duty of the master to be present in person, or by representative, to protect the servant from harm.
4. A servant engaged in assisting in shifting cars to be loaded at a mill assumes the risk of the foreman giving a negligent command relative to the handling of the cars.
5. A servant employed to assist in shifting cars to be loaded at a mill cannot hold the master liable for an injury caused by the negligence of the foreman in charge of the two or three men engaged in such work, but who is not at the head of a department of the work, in directing him to push a car after it has been set in motion by the momentum of another car, or in failing to stop the latter after the servant, in attempting to obey the order, has slipped and fallen in such a way that he will be injured in case it is not stopped.
6. It is error to direct a verdict for defendant in an action by a servant against his master to recover damages for personal injuries, where there is some evidence tending to show that the injury was caused by defective machinery.

(January 25, 1905.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Marion County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries for which defendant was alleged to be responsible. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Frank E. Gavin, Theodore P. Davis, and James L. Gavin, for appellant:

It is the duty of the master to exercise reasonable care to provide a safe working place and safe appliances for the servant.

Island Coal Co. v. Swaggerty, 159 Ind. 664, 62 N. E. 1103, 65 N. E. 1026; Indiana Car Co. v. Parker, 100 Ind. 181.

If the master authorizes an agent to perform such duty, the agent, whatever his rank, stands in the place of the master.

Taylor v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 121 Ind. 126, 6 L. R. A. 584, 16 Am. St. Rep. 372, 22 N. E. 876; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Graham, 124 Ind. 89, 24 N. E. 668; Nall v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. 129 Ind. 260, 28 N. E. 183, 611; Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Hanning, 131 Ind. 528, 31 Am. St. Rep. 443, 31 N. E. 187; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Holcomb, 9 Ind. App. 198, 36 N. E. 39; G. H. Hammond Co. v. Mason, 12 Ind. App. 469, 40 N. E. 642; Lebanon v. McCoy, 12 Ind. App. 500, 40 N. E. 700; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Harrell (Ind. App.) 66 N. E. 1016.

59 L. R. A.

The duty of the master is a continuing one, not only to make, but to keep, the servant's working place safe.

Taylor v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 121 Ind. 126, 6 L. R. A. 584, 16 Am. St. Rep. 372, 22 N. E. 876; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Graham, 124 Ind. 89, 24 N. E. 668; Nall v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. 129 Ind. 260, 28 N. E. 183, 611; Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Hanning, 131 Ind. 528, 31 Am. St. Rep. 443, 31 N. E. 187; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Holcomb, 9 Ind. App. 198, 36 N. E. 39; G. H. Hammond Co. v. Mason, 12 Ind. App. 469, 40 N. E. 642; Lebanon v. McCoy, 12 Ind. App. 500, 40 N. E. 700; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Harrell (Ind. App.) 66 N. E. 1016.

Until the agent selected by the master acts up to the limit of the duty of the master to act, the master's duty is not done.

Island Coal Co. v. Swaggerty, 159 Ind. 664, 62 N. E. 1103, 65 N. E. 1026; McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157, 29 Am. St. Rep. 181, 22 Atl. 1094; Gerrish v. New Haven Ice Co. 63 Conn. 9, 27 Atl. 236.

The master must respond, not only for the misfeasance, but also for the nonfeasance, of him to whom he has intrusted his duty.

Island Coal Co. v. Swaggerty, 159 Ind. 664, 62 N. E. 1103, 65 N. E. 1026; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Graham, 124 Ind. 89, 24 N. E. 668; Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Martin, 31 Ind. App. 308, 65 N. E. 591; Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Hanning, 131 Ind. 528, 31 Am. St. Rep. 443, 31 N. E. 187; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Holcomb, 9 Ind. App. 198, 36 N. E. 39; Michael v. Roanoke Mach. Works, 90 Va. 492, 44 Am. St. Rep. 927, 19 S. E. 261.

The master must respond for his representative's failure to give the signal to stop the loaded car when the men stepped in behind the empty car to push.

Island Coal Co. v. Swaggerty, 159 Ind. 664, 62 N. E. 1103, 65 N. E. 1026; Indiana Car Co. v. Parker, 100 Ind. 181; Taylor v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 121 Ind. 126, 6 L. R. A. 584, 16 Am. St. Rep. 372, 22 N. E. 876; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Graham, 124 Ind. 89, 24 N. E. 668; Nall v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. 129 Ind. 260, 28 N. E. 183, 611; Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Hanning, 131 Ind. 528, 31 Am. St. Rep. 443, 31 N. E. 187; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Holcomb, 9 Ind. App. 198, 36 N. E. 39; G. H. Hammond Co. v. Mason, 12 Ind. App. 469, 40 N. E. 642; Lebanon v. McCoy, 12 Ind. App. 500, 40 N. E. 700; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Harrell (Ind. App.) 66 N. E. 1016; McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157, 29 Am. St. Rep. 181, 22 Atl. 1094; Gerrish v. New Haven Ice Co. 63 Conn. 9, 27 Atl. 236; Chicago, I.

& L. R. Co. v. Martin, 31 Ind. App. 308, 65 N. E. 591; Michael v. Roanoke Mach. Works, 90 Va. 492, 44 Am. St. Rep. 927, 19 S. E. 261.

The master must respond herein because he absolutely failed to take any precaution whatever to keep the plaintiff's working place safe after he had specifically ordered him to do this particular work at this particular place.

Taylor v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 121 Ind. 124, 6 L. R. A. 584, 16 Am. St. Rep. 372, 22 N. E. 876; Nall v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. 129 Ind. 260, 28 N. E. 183, 611.

In ordering the appellant to work at this particular place, Haines was performing the master's duty.

Lebanon v. McCoy, 12 Ind. App. 500, 40 N. E. 700; Noblesville Foundry & Mach. Co. v. Yeaman, 3 Ind. App. 521, 30 N. E. 10; Taylor v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 121 Ind. 124, 6 L. R. A. 584, 16 Am. St. Rep. 372, 22 N. E. 876; McMahon v. Ida Min. Co. 95 Wis. 308, 60 Am. St. Rep. 117, 70 N. W. 478; Miller v. Missouri P. R. Co. 109 Mo. 350, 32 Am. St. Rep. 673, 19 S. W. 58; Schrader v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 108 Mo. 322, 18 L. R. A. 827, 18 S. W. 1094; Carlson v. Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. 63 Minn. 423, 65 N. W. 915; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. last ed. §§ 204-233.

Having ordered plaintiff to do this particular work at this particular place, defendant had no right, by his negligence, to make the place unsafe and dangerous for the work, and the hazard of his master's negligence, of which he was ignorant, cannot be imposed upon plaintiff.

Taylor v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 121 Ind. 124, 6 L. R. A. 584, 16 Am. St. Rep. 372, 22 N. E. 876; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Graham, 124 Ind. 89, 24 N. E. 668; Nall v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. 129 Ind. 260, 28 N. E. 183, 611; Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Hanning, 131 Ind. 528, 31 Am. St. Rep. 443, 31 N. E. 187; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Holcomb, 9 Ind. App. 198, 36 N. E. 39; G. H. Hammond Co. v. Mason, 12 Ind. App. 469, 40 N. E. 642; Noblesville Foundry & Mach. Co. v. Yeaman, 3 Ind. App. 521, 30 N. E. 10; Lebanon v. McCoy, 12 Ind. App. 500, 40 N. E. 700; Island Coal Co. v. Swaggerty, 159 Ind. 664, 62 N. E. 1103, 65 N. E. 1026; Gould Steel Co. v. Richards, 30 Ind. App. 348, 66 N. E. 68; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Harrell (Ind. App.) 66 N. E. 1016; Herdler v. Buck's Stove & Range Co. 136 Mo. 3, 37 S. W. 115; Michael v. Roanoke Mach. Works, 90 Va. 492, 44 Am. St. Rep. 927, 19 S. E. 261; McMahon v. Ida Min. Co. 95 Wis. 308, 60 Am. St. Rep. 117, 70 N. W. 478; Miller v. Missouri P. R. Co. 109 Mo. 350, 32 Am. St. Rep. 673, 19 S. W. 58; 69 L. R. A.

Gerrish v. New Haven Ice Co. 63 Conn. 9, 27 Atl. 235; Schrader v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 108 Mo. 322, 18 L. R. A. 827, 18 S. W. 1094; Carlson v. Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. 63 Minn. 428, 65 N. W. 914; Rahman v. Minnesota & N. W. R. Co. 43 Minn. 42, 44 N. W. 522; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Fox, 31 Kan. 586, 3 Pac. 320.

A servant who was obeying a specific order of his superior in charge "had the right to assume, in the absence of warning or notice to the contrary, that in conforming to the order he would not be subjected to injury."

Republic Iron & Steel Co. v. Berkes, 162 Ind. 517, 70 N. E. 815.

Messrs. Elmer E. Stevenson and Edward H. Knight, for appellee:

The appellant and E. A. Haines, the foreman whose negligence is complained of, are shown by the evidence to have been engaged in the performance of a common service for the master at the time of the accident to appellant, and they were therefore fellow servants.

Smallwood v. Bedford Quarries Co. 28 Ind. App. 692, 63 N. E. 869; Standard Cement Co. v. Minor, 27 Ind. App. 479, 61 N. E. 684; Salem Stone & Lime Co. v. Chastain, 9 Ind. App. 453, 36 N. E. 910; Peirce v. Oliver, 18 Ind. App. 87, 47 N. E. 485; American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Bower, 20 Ind. App. 32, 49 N. E. 182; Kerner v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. 149 Ind. 21, 48 N. E. 364; Ross v. Union Cement & Lime Co. 25 Ind. App. 463, 58 N. E. 500; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Martin, 160 Ind. 280, 66 N. E. 886; Brazil & O. Coal Co. v. Cain, 98 Ind. 282; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Ison, 10 Ind. App. 691, 38 N. E. 423; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Johnson, 102 Ind. 352, 26 N. E. 200; Capper v. Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. 103 Ind. 305, 2 N. E. 749; Conley v. Portland, 78 Me. 217, 3 Atl. 658; Reese v. Biddle, 112 Pa. 72, 3 Atl. 813; McLaughlin v. Camden Iron Works, 60 N. J. L. 557, 38 Atl. 677; Morgridge v. Providence Teleph. Co. 20 R. I. 386, 78 Am. St. Rep. 879, 39 Atl. 328; Kelly v. Hogan, 37 Misc. 761, 76 N. Y. Supp. 913; New Pittsburgh Coal & Coke Co. v. Peterson, 14 Ind. App. 634, 43 N. E. 270, 136 Ind. 398, 43 Am. St. Rep. 327, 35 N. E. 7; Elliott, Railroads, § 222; Brothers v. Carter, 52 Mo. 373, 14 Am. Rep. 424; McDermott v. Boston, 133 Mass. 349; Perigo v. Indianapolis Brewing Co. 21 Ind. App. 338, 52 N. E. 462; Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Voght, 28 Ind. App. 665, 60 N. E. 797; Maher v. Thropp, 59 N. J. L. 186, 35 Atl. 1057; Fraker v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 32 Minn. 54, 19 N. W. 349; Justice v. Pennsylvania Co. 130 Ind. 321, 30 N. E. 303; Houser v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co.

60 Iowa, 230, 46 Am. Rep. 65, 14 N. W. 778; Taylor v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 121 Ind. 124, 6 L. R. A. 584, 16 Am. St. Rep. 372, 22 N. E. 876; Northern P. R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 40 L. ed. 994, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 843.

A foreman is a fellow servant of those working with him; and for the foreman's negligence in the discharge of those duties owing by him to the master, resulting in injury to a servant working with such foreman, the master is not liable.

Indiana Car Co. v. Parker, 100 Ind. 181; New Pittsburgh Coal & Coke Co. v. Peterson, 136 Ind. 398, 43 Am. St. Rep. 327, 35 N. E. 7; Salem Stone & Lime Co. v. Chastain, 9 Ind. App. 453, 36 N. E. 910; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Martin, 160 Ind. 280, 66 N. E. 886; Brazil & C. Coal Co. v. Cain, 98 Ind. 282; Crispin v. Babbitt, 81 N. Y. 516, 37 Am. Rep. 521.

The test to determine whether an employee is a vice principal or a fellow servant is not his title or rank, or power to employ or discharge, but the nature of the service that is being performed at the time of the accident.

Peirce v. Oliver, 18 Ind. App. 87, 47 N. E. 485; Robertson v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 146 Ind. 486, 45 N. E. 655; Justice v. Pennsylvania Co. 130 Ind. 321, 30 N. E. 303; Ross v. Union Cement & Lime Co. 25 Ind. App. 463, 58 N. E. 500; Perigo v. Indianapolis Brewing Co. 21 Ind. App. 338, 52 N. E. 462.

If there was any negligence on the part of Haines in failing to warn the appellant, it was the negligence of a fellow servant.

New Pittsburgh Coal & Coke Co. v. Peterson, 14 Ind. App. 634, 43 N. E. 270; Cole Bros. v. Wood, 11 Ind. App. 37, 36 N. E. 1074; Kerner v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. 149 Ind. 21, 48 N. E. 364; Klochinski v. Shores Lumber Co. 93 Wis. 417, 67 N. W. 934.

When the master has furnished appliances reasonably safe and fitted for the purposes intended, and exercised reasonable care to so keep them, he is not liable to a servant injured by reason of the negligent, unskilful, or improper use thereof by other servants, even if the latter be superior in rank to the injured servant. The proper use of such implements is a duty owing to the master from all his servants.

12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 953, 954; Kerner v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. 149 Ind. 21, 48 N. E. 364; Hoosier Stone Co. v. McCain, 133 Ind. 231, 31 N. E. 956; Drinkout v. Eagle Mach. Works. 90 Ind. 423; McKinnon v. Norcross, 148 Mass. 533, 3 L. R. A. 320, 20 N. E. 183; McDermott v. Boston, 133 Mass. 349; O'Brien v. American Dredging Co. 53 N. J. L. 291, 21 69 L. R. A.

Atl. 324; McGinty v. Athol Reservoir Co. 155 Mass. 183, 29 N. E. 510; Lothrop v. Fitchburg R. Co. 150 Mass. 423, 23 N. E. 227; Howard v. Hood, 155 Mass. 391, 29 N. E. 630; Johnson v. Boston Tow-Boat Co. 135 Mass. 209, 46 Am. Rep. 458; O'Keefe v. Brownell, 156 Mass. 131, 30 N. E. 479; Columbus & I. C. R. Co. v. Arnold, 31 Ind. 174, 99 Am. Dec. 615; Neutz v. Jackson Hill Coal & Coke Co. 139 Ind. 411, 38 N. E. 324, 39 N. E. 147; Robertson v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 146 Ind. 486, 45 N. E. 655; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Martin, 160 Ind. 280, 66 N. E. 886; Ross v. Union Cement & Lime Co. 25 Ind. App. 463, 58 N. E. 500; Meehan v. Speirs Mfg. Co. 172 Mass. 375, 52 N. E. 518; Peirce v. Oliver, 18 Ind. App. 87, 47 N. E. 485; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Abend, 7 Ill. App. 130.

A master is not chargeable with negligence on account of a place for work made dangerous alone by the carelessness and neglect of fellow servants, or for the negligent manner in which they use the tools or materials furnished to them for their work.

Hussey v. Coger, 112 N. Y. 614, 3 L. R. A. 559, 8 Am. St. Rep. 787, 20 N. E. 556; 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 953, 954; Kerner v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. 149 Ind. 21, 48 N. E. 364; Robertson v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 146 Ind. 486, 45 N. E. 655; Meehan v. Speirs Mfg. Co. 172 Mass. 375, 52 N. E. 518; Hermann v. Port Blakely Mill Co. 71 Fed. 853.

A master is not required to be present at all times superintending the work, but the details of the work and the manner of its execution must usually be intrusted to workmen, for whose negligence in the performance of such details of the work the master is not liable to other servants.

Kerner v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. 149 Ind. 21, 48 N. E. 364; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Martin, 160 Ind. 280, 66 N. E. 886; Hussey v. Coger, 112 N. Y. 614, 3 L. R. A. 559, 8 Am. St. Rep. 787, 20 N. E. 556; O'Brien v. American Dredging Co. 53 N. J. L. 291, 21 Atl. 324; Cullen v. Norton, 126 N. Y. 1, 26 N. E. 905; Central R. Co. v. Keegan, 160 U. S. 259, 40 L. ed. 418, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269; Potter v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 136 N. Y. 77, 32 N. E. 603.

Where one servant is injured by the negligence of his fellow servant, the duties of both being such as to bring them into habitual association, as in this case, so that they may exercise a mutual influence upon each other, promotive of proper caution, and the master is not guilty of any negligence in employing the servant causing the injury, the master is not liable.

Bier v. Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. 132 Ind. 78, 31 N. E. 471; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Kneirim, 152 Ill. 458, 43 Am. St.

Rep. 259, 39 N. E. 324; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Moranda, 93 Ill. 302, 34 Am. Rep. 168; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. O'Bryan, 15 Ill. App. 134; Indiana Car Co. v. Parker, 100 Ind. 181.

An employee assumes, not only the ordinary dangers of his employment which are known to him, but also such as, by the exercise of ordinary diligence, could have been known to him.

Bailey, Master's Liability for Injuries to Servant, pp. 162 et seq.; Pennsylvania Co. v. Ebaugh, 152 Ind. 531, 53 N. E. 763; Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Wagner, 17 Ind. App. 22, 45 N. E. 76, 1121; Russell v. Tiltonson, 140 Mass. 201, 4 N. E. 231; Corning Steel Co. v. Pohlplatz, 29 Ind. App. 250, 64 N. E. 476; Romona Oolitic Stone Co. v. Tate, 12 Ind. App. 57, 37 N. E. 1065, 39 N. E. 529; Diamond Plate Glass Co. v. De Hority, 143 Ind. 381, 40 N. E. 681; Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Glover, 154 Ind. 584, 57 N. E. 244; Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Eastman, 7 Ind. App. 514, 34 N. E. 835; Linton Coal & Min. Co. v. Persons, 15 Ind. App. 69, 43 N. E. 651; Day v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 137 Ind. 206, 36 N. E. 854; Stuart v. New Albany Mfg. Co. 15 Ind. App. 184, 43 N. E. 961.

If a servant with knowledge of existing conditions, or the means of obtaining such knowledge, without objection adopts the more dangerous method of doing the work, because it is convenient, the risk is his own.

Wabash Paper Co. v. Webb, 146 Ind. 303, 45 N. E. 474; St. Louis Bolt & Iron Co. v. Brennan, 20 Ill. App. 555; St. Louis Bolt & Iron Co. v. Burke, 12 Ill. App. 369; Bailey, Personal Injuries Relating to Master & Servant, §§ 1121-1150; Beach, Contrib. Neg. 3d ed. § 299, note, p. 242; Elliott, Railroads, § 1313; Consolidated Stone Co. v. Redmon, 23 Ind. App. 319, 55 N. E. 454; Erskine v. Chino Valley Beet-Sugar Co. 71 Fed. 270.

When a servant knows facts from which he can, as well as the master, determine the probability of danger, he assumes the risk, even though he may not know of the actual danger.

McFahan v. Indianapolis Natural Gas Co. 140 Ind. 335, 29 L. R. A. 355, 49 Am. St. Rep. 199, 37 N. E. 601; Hines v. Willcox, 96 Tenn. 148, 34 L. R. A. 824, 54 Am. St. Rep. 823, 33 S. W. 914; Mitchell v. Stewart, 187 Pa. 217, 40 Atl. 799; Kibele v. Philadelphia, 105 Pa. 41.

The master is not bound to furnish implements of the best or most approved pattern, or of any particular design.

Jacobson v. Cornelius, 52 Hun, 377, 5 N. Y. Supp. 306; Harley v. Buffalo Car Mfg. Co. 142 N. Y. 31, 36 N. E. 813; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. McCormick, 74 Ind. 440, 69 L. R. A.

Where an accident is unusual, and could not have been reasonably anticipated by a master in the light of long experience, there can be no culpable negligence upon his part, and a verdict for the plaintiff cannot stand.

Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Locke, 112 Ind. 404, 2 Am. St. Rep. 193, 14 N. E. 391; Standard Oil Co. v. Helmick, 148 Ind. 457, 47 N. E. 14; Consolidated Stone Co. v. Redmon, 23 Ind. App. 319, 55 N. E. 454; Craven v. Mayers, 165 Mass. 271, 42 N. E. 1131; Kitteringham v. Sioux City & P. R. Co. 62 Iowa, 285, 17 N. W. 585; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Krapp, 143 Ind. 647, 36 N. E. 901; Gassaway v. Georgia Southern R. Co. 69 Ga. 347; Sjogren v. Hall, 53 Mich. 274, 18 N. W. 812; Loftus v. Union Ferry Co. 84 N. Y. 455, 38 Am. Rep. 533; McGrell v. Buffalo Office Bldg. Co. 153 N. Y. 265, 47 N. E. 305; Del Sejnore v. Hallinan, 153 N. Y. 274, 47 N. E. 308; Ayers v. Rochester R. Co. 156 N. Y. 104, 50 N. E. 960; Baxter v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 104 Wis. 307, 80 N. W. 644; Deisenrieter v. Kraus-Merkel Malting Co. 97 Wis. 279, 72 N. W. 735; Wilber v. Follansbee, 97 Wis. 577, 72 N. W. 741, 73 N. W. 559.

Gillett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant instituted this action to recover for an injury to his person alleged to have been caused by the negligence of appellee. It is unnecessary to make any particular statement of the issues. Upon the close of the evidence introduced on behalf of the defense, the court instructed the jury to return a verdict in favor of appellee. The record presents the question as to the propriety of this action upon the part of the court.

There is a question in the case as to whether a certain appliance was defective, but, laying this matter aside for the present, it may be said that, after giving appellant the benefit of all disputed questions upon the evidence, the following facts are shown by the bill of exceptions: On July 4, 1900, appellee was, and for some time prior thereto had been, operating a flour mill, and an elevator in connection therewith, at Noblesville, Indiana. Appellee did not give the business his personal attention. One Anderson was the general manager thereof, and the evidence shows that he occasionally gave directions to the workmen. Under him was one Haines, who had charge of the loading, weighing, and handling of cars used by appellee, as well as of the exchange business in connection with the mill. So far as shown, he had but three or four men under him. Appellant was employed by Anderson about the middle of May, 1900. He was told that he would be subject to the instructions of Haines. Appellant worked under Haines in loading cars, and in moving them on a siding used in connection with the plant; but, when there was no work of that kind to do he was given general, or, as he describes it, "roustabout," work upon the premises. The mill was about 150 feet north of the elevator. The siding was on the east side of the mill and of the elevator, and when cars were loaded at the mill they were pulled down to or just beyond a track scale which was in front of the latter building. From one to three cars were handled per day. The men would sometimes push an empty car between the two points, but the method of taking a loaded car from the mill to the elevator was by means of an appliance in the elevator known as a "car puller." The power was transmitted from this appliance to the car by means of a rope. The car puller would draw the car at the rate of 45 feet per minute. The rope passed out of the elevator through a window which was so situated that, by attaching the rope to the rear truck of the car, it could be pulled until the rear end of it was just south of the scale. Anderson had explained to appellant at different times that it was necessary for a man to stand in the window to signal the man in charge of the car puller when to shut off the power. Haines ordinarily did this, but he frequently designated some one of the men to do it. On quite a number of occasions appellant had done this. A short distance south of the scales two tracks came into the siding,—one from the Lake Erie & Western Railroad, and the other from the Chicago & Southeastern Railroad. Appellant had helped to push cars between the mill and the elevator, and had assisted in pulling cars onto the intersecting tracks to the south. Haines ordinarily worked with his men. He possessed no power to hire or discharge them. Appellant was forty-two years old, and had had a reasonable amount of general experience about machinery. He admits that he was thoroughly familiar with the surroundings outside the mill and elevator. During the night of July 3, 1900, two cars were pushed into the siding by the Lake Erie & Western for appellee's use. The next morning the north car was loaded at the mill. The other car stood partially on the scale, but the greater part of it was to the south thereof. It was necessary to pull the loaded car down to the scale to weigh it, and then to get the empty car to the north. Haines, appellant, and another man started to do this work. The rope was fastened to the rear truck of the loaded car, and Haines stood at the window to stop the car when it stood upon the scale. It seems to have been appellant's expectation, since it was the practice, that a chock would be put under one of the wheels when the car reached the proper position. Haines said to the two men, as the car was approaching: "When that loaded car comes down and bumps that empty car, you keep it going down the switch." Appellant testified that his understanding of the order was that when the two cars got far enough apart so that they could get in between them, and before the empty car had lost its momentum, they were to get in and push. The two men undertook to do so, and, as appellant was pushing, he slipped, and one of his feet was caught by the flange of a wheel of the loaded car. Both appellant and his associate cried out. Their cries were heard by a man inside, but the car continued to move for a minute or a minute and a half, during which time appellant's foot slipped along the rail for a little distance, but the outcome of it was that his foot was crushed. Appellant did not look back after stepping between the cars. He supposed that the loaded car would be stopped. He had never been called on before to help push a car that had been started by a car behind it.

33 L. R. A.

Assuming that Haines was guilty of negligence in giving the order, and in failing to signal to stop the car puller the moment that he was apprised that appellant's foot was caught, it is to be determined whether Haines occupied such a relation to the work that appellee should be held responsible for the consequences which ensued. If there is any liability in this case, it must be placed on a common-law ground, since appellee is an individual.

The extreme doctrine concerning who are fellow servants, which was declared in Columbus & I. C. R. Co. v. Arnold, 31 Ind. 174, 99 Am. Dec. 615, is no longer the law of this state. There have been innovations upon the doctrine as declared in that case, in the direction of a more liberal rule in favor of injured employees, but not to the extent of permitting a recovery on the grounds suggested. Appellant's counsel cite upon this branch of the case the following authorities: Indiana Car Co. v. Parker, 100 Ind. 181; Taylor v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co., 121 Ind. 124, 6 L. R. A. 584, 16 Am. St. Rep. 372, 22 N. E. 876; Nall v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co., 129 Ind. 260, 28 N. E. 183, 611; Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Hanning, 131 Ind. 528, 31 Am. St. Rep. 443, 31 N. E. 187; Hoosier Stone Co. v. McCain, 133 Ind. 231, 31 N. E. 956; Island Coal Co. v. Swaggerty, 159 Ind. 684, 62 N. E. 1103, 65 N. E. 1026. Indiana Car Co. v. Parker, 100 Ind. 181, was a case where a duty of the master was neglected, in failing to furnish a safe place to work. It is therein very clearly pointed out that, as respects those duties which the master owes to the servant, they cannot be delegated, and that therefore the omission of the servant to whom their performance is intrusted is necessarily the omission of the master. The case, however, gives no recognition to the view that rank or superiority in service upon the part of a commanding servant is a controlling factor in the solution of the question as to liability. On the contrary, it was said: "The rules which these decisions so firmly establish as the law of this state may be thus stated: First. The master is not liable to a servant for injuries resulting from the negligence of a fellow servant engaged in the same general line of duty, where the negligent act is performed in the capacity of a servant. Second. Servants engaged in the same general line of duty are fellow servants, although one may be a superior, and the others may be subordinate servants, under his immediate direction and control." In Taylor v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 121 Ind. 124, 6 L. R. A. 584, 16 Am. St. Rep. 372, 22 N. E. 876, it was held that the company was liable to a servant who was injured, while acting under a special order of the master mechanic, owing to a negligent act done by the latter. The case does not rest upon the theory that the master mechanic occupied a position analogous to that of a foreman, but on the proposition that, in view of the full authority which he had over the men, machinery, and work, he stood for the master in the particular circumstances. The following extract from the opinion will sufficiently show the effect of the decision: "We do not affirm that an employee with authority to command may not be a fellow servant. On the contrary, we hold that one having authority to command may still be a fellow servant; but we hold also, that, where the position is such as to invest the employee with sole charge of a branch or department of the employer's business, the employee, as to that branch or department, may be deemed a vice principal while engaged in giving orders or directing their execution." In Nall v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. 129 Ind. 260, 28 N. E. 183, 611, a servant was called out, with a large force of men, to save a bridge which a freshet threatened with destruction. While laboring in the waters, as he was directed to do by an employee who had solely been intrusted with the work of endeavoring to save the bridge, the servant was killed by reason of a negligent order given by the man in charge of the work as to the movement of a locomotive. It was held that the master was liable. In the opinion of the petition for a rehearing, it was said: "One who is placed in charge of a force of men engaged in any of those occupations, whose duties are limited to carrying on the work or directing it, whether actively assisting therein or not, and who is invested with no authority, or charged with no duty, in furnishing places or appliances for the work, or in the employment or retention of employees, is himself usually a mere coemployee. His duties require him to use, or superintend and direct the using of, places and appliances, and to control employees furnished by the master. If, however, he is given additional authority, and is charged with the duty of furnishing places to work, and appliances for the work, and is authorized to employ and discharge operatives, he is, as to such things, not a coemployee, but speaks and acts as the master. One who is placed in unrestricted control of a given department by his master, and is clothed with the power to command the services of the other employees, not simply to see that they faithfully discharge the duties ordinarily pertaining to their employment, and in the usual places, with the usual appliances provided therefor, but has authority to require of them the performance of other duties in other places and with other appliances,—who has the authority to call the sectionmen, the bridge builders, the freight handlers, and the laborers from the gravel pit and gravel train, and require of all that they unite in averting the threatened destruction of a bridge,—is certainly in such matters more than a mere fellow servant with those thus subject to his control." In Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Hanning. 131 Ind. 528, 31 Am. St. Rep. 443, 31 N. E. 187, it was held that the railroad company was liable where a servant was killed while engaged in the repair of a car on a track used for switching; it appearing that the servant was called from his regular work, and had engaged in the repair of the car at the special command of the general foreman of the company's repair shops, and that such foreman had neglected to put out flags, as it was alleged that it was his duty to do, and as decedent supposed had been done. In Hoosier Stone Co. v. McCain. 133 Ind. 231, 31 N. E. 956, the facts were that, while two cars were being loaded with stone they started, and, running down a grade, caused the death of a servant who was unloading coal from a car which was standing further down the track. The superintendent was present, and had directed the loading of the cars above, and the jury found that there was nothing to prevent him from seeing that the cars were not sufficiently stationed. In deciding the case, this court said: "It sufficiently appears, upon a fair and reasonable construction of the facts stated, that the superintendent represented the corporation of which appellee's intestate was an employee. He was placed in charge of the quarry and the connected business, and, in conducting and controlling the quarry and the connected business, he was, in law and in fact, occupying the position of a master, and not that of a mere fellow servant. If he represented the master, his negligence, if he was guilty of negligence, was that of the employer."

Although it is not cited by counsel for appellant, we call attention, in passing, to the case of Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Heck, 151 Ind. 292, 50 N. E. 988. It was there held that the railroad company was liable for the negligence of a train despatcher in sending an improper order; it appearing that he was authorized to send orders in the name of the division superintendent, and had done so in the instance in question. The ruling was based on the ground that the despatcher was authorized to act for one who was a vice principal, and on the further ground that the master's business was of such a character that superintendence upon its part was necessary in the operation of its trains.

The case of Island Coal Co. v. Swaggerty, 159 Ind. 664, 62 N. E. 1103, 65 N. E. 1026, may be said, in a general way, to belong to that class of cases to which Taylor v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 121 Ind. 124, 6 L. R. A. 584, 16 Am. St. Rep. 372, 22 N. E. 876; Nall v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. 129 Ind. 260, 28 N. E. 183, 611; Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Hanning, 131 Ind. 528, 31 Am. St. Rep. 443, 31 N. E. 187, and Hoosier Stone Co. v. McCain, 133 Ind. 231, 31 N. E. 956, belong. It was a case where a servant was injured who had gone into a dangerous place pursuant to the special command of the master's sole representative below ground, and where the latter had been guilty of negligence in failing to stop the descent of an elevator.

Notwithstanding the view which this court has sanctioned as to the liability of the master to a servant for the negligence of an employee who is over the whole service, or over a large department of it, yet it has never given any recognition to what is termed the "superior servant doctrine." On the contrary, it has always maintained that the master was not liable for the act of a mere foreman in giving directions concerning the work to a servant working under him, where the place and appliances furnished by the master were proper. Indiana Car Co. v. Parker, 100 Ind. 181, and cases cited; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Johnson, 102 Ind. 352, 26 N. E. 200; Pittsburgh C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adams, 105 Ind. 151, 5 N. E. 187; Justice v. Pennsylvania Co. 130 69 L. R. A.

Ind. 321, 30 N. E. 303; New Pittsburgh Coal & Coke Co. v. Peterson, 136 Ind. 398, 43 Am. St. Rep. 327, 35 N. E. 7; Bedford Belt R. Co. v. Brown, 142 Ind. 659, 42 N. E. 359; Robertson v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 146 Ind. 486, 45 N. E. 655; Kerner v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. 149 Ind. 21, 48 N. E. 364; Hodges v. Standard Wheel Co. 152 Ind. 680, 52 N. E. 391, 54 N. E. 383; Island Coal Co. v. Swaggerty, 159 Ind. 664, 62 N. E. 1103, 65 N. E. 1026; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Martin, 160 Ind. 280, 66 N. E. 886; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Harrell, 161 Ind. 689, 63 L. R. A. 460, 68 N. E. 262. In the case last cited it was pointed out that the master's duty relative to furnishing a safe place to work does not require, in undertakings which may properly be intrusted to a foreman and the men under him, that the master shall guard the men against those transient dangers which from time to time occur in the progress of the work. In Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Martin, 160 Ind. 280, 66 N. E. 886, it was said: "The train and every appliance that the appellant had furnished may be presumed to have been proper, and it may be presumed that it had no notice that Mathieu was not a proper man to intrust with the duty of acting as foreman in the performance of the particular work. The whole matter was one of detail, that the foreman and the men might properly be permitted to attend to in their own way." While it may be that a different rule applies where the master or—what amounts to the same thing—his personal representative is present and is guilty of negligence: and, while we admit that a master's business may be so complicated and dangerous that the very carrying on of some department of it may require the master's superintendence, in addition to his ordinary duties,—yet, as applied to those classes of work which may properly be left to the direction of a foreman, we cannot, in view of principles, and of the constant iteration and reiteration in our cases that superiority in rank or authority to direct does not per se make a servant a vice principal, consent to the proposition that the master is liable for the negligence of the foreman in directing the work, where the master has otherwise performed his duty.

In the course of an article written by Judge Cooley in 2 Southern Law Rev. N. S. 114, 124, it was stated: "It has been seen that the superior position of the negligent servant, as that of a foreman, conductor, etc., is not regarded as affecting the case. But a foreman is not necessarily or usually, perhaps, intrusted with any large share of the master's discretionary authority. Neither is the conductor of a train of cars, except as to the particular duty of taking it safely to its destination. His duty may be, and probably is, less responsible than that of the telegraph operator who directs his movements and those of others in charge of trains on the line; and, if the conductor is to be regarded as principal for some purposes, so should the operator be for others. But this would suggest questions and distinctions that could only be confusing, and would preclude the possibility of any settled rule whatsoever. It would seem that the law could go no further than to hold the corporation liable for the acts and neglects of the officer exercising the powers and authority of general superintendent; but that for these it ought to respond to its servants as for its own acts or neglects. But this in no way affects the general rule which requires of any employer, whether corporate or not, to employ suitable servants, and to make use of safe tools, machinery, etc., or at least to take care that there is no negligence in procuring them."

The opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States concerning the superior servant doctrine, at least in recent years, is shown by the following quotation from the opinion in Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 389, 37 L. ed. 772, 782, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914, 922: "It may be safely said that this court has never recognized the proposition that the mere control of one servant over another in doing a particular piece of work destroys the relation of fellow servants, and puts an end to the master's liability [sic]. On the contrary, all the cases proceed on the ground of some breach of positive duty resting upon the master, or upon the idea of superintendence or control of a department. It has ever been affirmed that the employee assumes the ordinary risks incident to the service; and, as we have seen, it is as obvious that there is risk from the negligence of one in immediate control as from one simply a coworker." In Northern P. R. Co. v. Hambly, 154 U. S. 349, 38 L. ed. 1009, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 983, it was said: "To hold the principal liable whenever there are gradations of rank between the persons receiving and the persons causing the injury, or whenever they are employed in different departments of the same general service, would result in frittering away the whole doctrine of fellow service. . . . In a large majority of cases there is some distinction either in respect to grade of service, or in the nature of their employments. Courts, however, have been reluctant to recognize these distinctions unless the superiority of the person causing the injury was such as to put him rather in the category of principal than of agent,—as, for example, the superintendent of a factory or railway,—and the employments were so far different that, 69 L. R. A.

although paid by the same master, the two servants were brought no farther in contact with each other than as if they had been employed by different principals."

An illustrative case upon the subject in hand is Northern P. R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 40 L. ed. 994, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 843, where it was said: "This boss of a small gang of ten or fifteen men, engaged in making repairs upon the road wherever they might be necessary, over a distance of three sections, aiding and assisting the regular gang of workmen upon each section as occasion demanded, was not such a superintendent of a separate department, nor was he in control of such a distinct branch of the work of the master, as would be necessary to render the master liable to a coemployee for his neglect. He was in fact, as well as in law, a fellow workman. He went with the gang to the place of work in the morning, stayed with them during the day, superintended their work, giving directions in regard to it, and returned home with them in the evening; acting as a part of the crew of the hand car upon which they rode. The mere fact, if it be a fact, that he did not actually handle a shovel or a pick, is an unimportant matter. When more than one man is engaged in doing any particular work, it becomes almost a necessity that one should be boss, and the other subordinate, but both are nevertheless fellow workmen."

In Howard v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 26 Fed. 837, it was stated by Mr. Justice Brewer: "To make one, as the controller of a department, properly the representative of the master, his duties should be principally those of direction and control. He should have something more than the mere management of machinery. He should have subordinates over whose various actions he has supervision and control, and not a mere assistant to him in his working of machinery. He should have control over an entire department of service, and not simply of a single machine in that service. He should be so lifted up in the grade and extent of his duties as to be fairly regarded as the alter ego—the other self—of the master."

For a general discussion of the question as to who is a vice principal, see note to Stevens v. Chamberlin, 51 L. R. A. 513; note to Mast v. Kern, 75 Am. St. Rep. 580. See, further, on the question in hand, Labbatt, Mast. & S. cc. 28, 29, 31, 32.

Where groups or gangs of men are employed in the performance of work, it is, in the nature of things, impossible to bend their energies to the accomplishment of the ultimate purpose without intelligent direction upon the part of one mind. To secure this end, and in many circumstances to protect the men themselves, they must work under a foreman. His work, although it consists in giving directions, is not only essential, but, as his commands set in motion the forces which may lead to the injury or death of those under him, there is an especial reason why the employees should consider the intelligence and prudence of the man in control. If there is any philosophy in the general rule, its purpose must be clearest in the case of a coservice of this character, since the workmen have ordinarily a better opportunity than the master to determine how much of discretion the foreman possesses. These considerations, and especially the want of opportunity upon the part of the master to supervise every command, should prompt the courts to exculpate him where there has been no negligence in the performance of a master's duty, as in negligently hiring or retaining an unfit foreman. In Ross v. Walker, 139 Pa. 42, 23 Am. St. Rep. 160, 21 Atl. 157, 159, it was said: "No employer could bear the burden of legal responsibility for every blunder or neglect on the part of each and all of his employees. The fact that one employee is more skillful than another, or has had greater experience, and so is deferred to by others, does not change his relation to his employer or to his fellows. Nor does a difference in rank or grade of service change the rule. When the character of the business requires it, the master is as much bound to provide his workmen with a reasonably competent foreman as to provide them with tools, but in either case his liability ceases when he has made a suitable selection." As was observed by Mr. Justice Holmes in Kalleck v. Deering, 161 Mass. 469, 42 Am. St. Rep. 421, 37 N. E. 450: "A command is a transitory act which the employer has no chance to supervise. It is not like a permanent condition of land or machinery, or the abiding incompetence of an employee. See Flynn v. Campbell, 160 Mass. 128, 35 N. E. 453. If the defendants have been guilty of no personal negligence, and the plaintiff does take the risk of the negligence of some persons with whom his work will bring him into contact, the question whether the negligence of one of those persons is within or outside the risks assumed is not a matter of names or dignities. That is too well settled to need the citation of cases. Moody v. Hamilton Mfg. Co. 159 Mass. 70, 38 Am. St. Rep. 396, 34 N. E. 185. The question is what he must be taken to have contemplated when he went into the employment. The chances of negligence on the part of a superior employed in the common business are as obvious as in the case of one of a lower grade, and therefore, when the duty is not personal to the employer, the same rule applies, whatever the degree."

Giving command as to the proper manner of performing the work is not ordinarily one of those absolute, personal functions which the master alone can exercise. Doughty v. Penobscot Log Driving Co. 76 Me. 143; Hofnagle v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 55 N. Y. 608. A vice principal is one who represents the master in the discharge of those duties which the master owes to his servants. Thacker v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. 159 Ind. 82, 85, 59 L. R. A. 792, 64 N. E. 605; Indiana Car Co. v. Parker, 100 Ind. 181; New Pittsburgh Coal & Coke Co. v. Peterson, 136 Ind. 398, 43 Am. St. Rep. 327, 35 N. E. 7; Robertson v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 146 Ind. 486, 45 N. E. 655; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Martin, 160 Ind. 280, 66 N. E. 886; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Harrell, 161 Ind. 689, 63 L. R. A. 460, 68 N. E. 262.

In this case appellant was engaged in the business of loading and moving cars, and in general, or, as he termed it, "roustabout," work. His duties made him familiar with the operation of moving cars by means of the car puller, and of pushing them by hand, and he was familiarly associated with the foreman whom he charges with negligence. While it is true that appellant claims that he had never before been called on to perform a precisely similar task, yet it is clear that pushing the empty car to the south was comprehended within his general employment. The direction from the foreman to push the car before it lost the momentum which it had acquired was not such a change in his business as to authorize him to proceed at the master's risk. Stuart v. New Albany Mfg. Co. 15 Ind. App. 184, 43 N. E. 961. If every new situation in matter of detail were to be held to constitute a new service, the general rule would be frittered away, for an accident ordinarily grows out of a new combination of circumstances. The case, so far as the matter of discretion is concerned, is one where the place was rendered unsafe in the execution of the details of the service; and, since every place where an accident happens is at least momentarily unsafe, it cannot be said that that fact alone made it the duty of the master to be present in person or by representative to protect the servant. Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Harrell, 161 Ind. 689, 63 L. R. A. 460, 68 N. E. 262. Appellant, in our opinion, assumed the risk that the foreman might give a negligent command relative to the handling of cars upon the siding. But even if we were to concede that the command of Haines related to a matter so essentially new that the appellant might fairly contend that he is not debarred of a recovery under the rule. Volenti non fit injuria, yet it does not follow that, because he may not have assumed the risk, he proceeded at the master's risk. A case like this is to be broadly distinguished from one where the command comes from the master or his special representative, or where the condition is of such a permanent character as to place or appliances that the master is in default in failing to warn the servant. In such cases the latter has a right to assume, at least ordinarily, that in following a special direction he will not be carried into an extraordinary and unapprehended peril. But it is nevertheless a rule of law that a servant cannot recover compensation of a master unless he can show that his injury was occasioned by the negligence of the master or of his representative. Quincy Min. Co. v. Kitts, 42 Mich. 34, 3 N. W. 240; Ross v. Walker, 139 Pa. 42, 23 Am. St. Rep. 160, 21 Atl. 157, 159, 4 Thomp. Neg. § 3758. Of course, the master may be thrown into default, notwithstanding all the care that he may have taken to perform his duties, as respects those obligations which are personal to himself; but, as applied to an employment not essentially dangerous, it does not admit of doubt that, having taken due care to furnish and maintain a proper place, sufficient appliances, and proper servants, he may intrust the carrying out of the details of the work to those servants. The very denial of the superior servant doctrine, which this court has steadily frowned on, involves the proposition that the master is not always required to be present while the ordinary duties of the employment are being carried on. In such a case it is not the master's voice which directs the servant to perform the particular act, and the employee knows that, in the nature of things, there has been no opportunity upon the part of the master to examine and consider whether the act is dangerous, so there is no basis for the assumption that the servant has undertaken the peril at the master's risk. As applied to the question in hand, we may well adopt the following language used by the supreme court of Massachusetts in Flynn v. Campbell, 160 Mass. 128, 35 N. E. 453: "The actual danger of the moment was due to a transitory act. Under the circumstances, the rule as to instructing inexperienced hands about the hidden dangers of their employment does not apply." It were idle to declare the rule of law to be that a master who has fully discharged every duty which belongs to him may intrust the details of the execution of a part of the business to a foreman, if we also held that whenever an accident happens from a negligent order given by the foreman the master is to be charged with a default because he did not protect the servant from the transitory peril. If it be the law that the ordinary work of an employment not essentially dangerous may be carried on by means of a foreman who directs the servants in their work, the proposition becomes a practical matter to employers, and this assurance should not be nullified by converting the foreman into a vice principal whenever an accident happens.

We have before us a case of a foreman who worked with his men; who was not, in the sense of the law, at the head of a department, but was simply over two or three men; who was intrusted with no function which belonged to the master, but was superintending and assisting in the loading, weighing, and handling of cars; and who had a man over him. We deem it clear that the master was not liable for any negligence upon the part of his foreman, either in giving the order, or in failing to stop the car afterwards.

It remains to consider another branch of the case. It appeared without dispute that the car puller principally consisted of two drums: that, in pulling a car, the load was on the lower drum; and that the other drum was used to take up the slack. Appellant offered evidence tending to show that a finger clutch was used to throw the appliance out of gear; that it was very difficult to operate the clutch when the load was heavy, thereby occasioning serious delay in stopping cars. One witness testified that he had been compelled to pound with a heavy timber on shutting off the power, that he had complained to the general manager about the clutch a year and a half before, that it had not been changed, and that the appliance would have operated promptly if a friction clutch had been substituted. Another witness testified that he had on a number of occasions given signals at the window to the man in charge of the appliance, that it would take from half a minute to a minute to stop, and that in some instances the car would pull over the chock. Appellant testified that he did not know that there was anything wrong with the machinery. Appellee offered evidence which tended to show that the clutch was in order, and also that by raising a lever the slack could be loosened on the upper drum, with the result that the rope would no longer wind about the lower drum. He also offered evidence tending to show that Haines gave the signal to stop as soon as he heard the outcry, and that the man in charge of the appliance threw it out of gear and raised his slack lever, throwing off the power instantly. In rebuttal, appellant introduced evidence of a declaration of the man who was in charge of the power, made after the accident, to the effect that there was something wrong with the machinery, and that he was not able to stop it. The evidence in roduced by appellant on his case in chief, while not wholly conclusive that the appliance could only be stopped by the finger clutch, tended to show, when taken in connection with the evidence offered as to the delays in stopping, that the appliance was defective. In attempting to meet this, appellee altogether relied upon the testimony of his own witnesses, all of whom were in his employ. In addition to this, it was pertinent for the jury to consider why the car did not stop for a minute or a minute and a half after the outcry was heard by a man who was in the elevator. Of course, this is giving appellant the benefit of disputed questions, but it is our duty to do this in considering whether the trial court invaded the province of the jury in giving a peremptory instruction to find for appellee. We think that there was at least some evidence tending to show a defective condition of the machinery, and that it was error to take that theory of the case from the jury. Diezi v. G. H. Hammond Co. 156 Ind. 583, 60 N. E. 353.

Judgment reversed, with an instruction to grant a new trial.

Petition for rehearing denied April 18, 1905.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

Melvina SMITH, Appt.,
v.

SUPREME TENT KNIGHTS OF MACCA-BEES OF THE WORLD
and

Daniel BANTZ, Intervener, Appellee.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. A niece of a former wife of a man is not a relative of his child by a subsequent one, within the meaning of a statute permitting certificates of mutual benefit societies to be taken in favor of relatives.
2. Naming a person as beneficiary in a mutual benefit certificate does not make her a legatee, within the meaning of a statute permitting such certificates to be issued in favor of legatees.

(March 11, 1905.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Black Hawk County in favor of intervener in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a mutual benefit certificate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Mullan & Pickett, for appellant:

The word "relative," as used in Code, § 1824, should be given a liberal construction, and include any one of those popularly called relatives.

Bennett v. Van Riper, 47 N. J. Eq. 563, 14 L. R. A. 342, 24 Am. St. Rep. 416, 22 Atl. 1055; People's Bank v. Aetna Ins. Co. 20 C. C. A. 630, 42 U. S. App. 81, 74 Fed. 507;

NOTE.—For a case in this series holding that a stepfather is a relative, and may be made the beneficiary in a benefit certificate, see Simcoke v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 15 L. R. A. 114.

As to who are relatives or relations generally, see note to Bennett v. Van Riper, 14 L. R. A. 342.

69 L. R. A.

Simcoke v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 84 Iowa, 383, 15 L. R. A. 114, 51 N. W. 8; Snow v. Durgin, 70 N. H. 121, 47 Atl. 89.

The legislature having enlarged the category of those capable of being selected as beneficiaries so as to include all persons whom the member may see fit to select as his legatees, there is no substantial rule of public policy which would be violated by the adoption of a different mode of selection of beneficiaries.

Martin v. Stubbings, 126 Ill. 387, 9 Am. St. Rep. 620, 18 N. E. 657; Lamont v. Grand Lodge I. L. of H. 31 Fed. 177.

A designation as beneficiary is of precisely the same effect as being named as legatee.

Lamont v. Grand Lodge I. L. of H. 31 Fed. 177.

If a member under the law can give or devise the benefits of his certificate to a stranger, he can, in the first instance, take out a policy payable to such stranger, and naming such stranger as beneficiary.

Bloomington Mut. Ben. Asso. v. Blue, 120 Ill. 121, 60 Am. Rep. 558, 11 N. E. 331; Mitchell v. Grand Lodge I. K. H. 70 Iowa, 360, 30 N. W. 865; White v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, 124 Iowa, 293, 66 L. R. A. 164, 99 N. W. 1071.

The defendant, by paying the money into court, waived the right to question the designation of the plaintiff as beneficiary, and the intervener cannot be heard to do so.

Martin v. Stubbings, 126 Ill. 387, 9 Am. St. Rep. 620, 18 N. E. 657; Titsworth v. Titsworth, 40 Kan. 571, 20 Pac. 213; Brown v. Mansur, 64 N. H. 39, 5 Atl. 768; Johnson v. Knights of Honor, 53 Kan. 255, 8 L. R. A. 732, 13 S. W. 794; Supreme Conclave, Royal Adelpia v. Cappella, 41 Fed. 1; Ledebuhr v. Wisconsin Trust Co. 112 Wis. 657, 88 N. W. 607.

Messrs. Springer & Smith, for appellee:

The laws of the order and the statutes of the state enter into and become a part of the contract of insurance.

Wendt v. Iowa L. of H. 72 Iowa, 682, 34 N. W. 470.

A member has no power to designate by will one outside of the class named in the certificate.

McClure v. Johnson, 56 Iowa, 620, 10 N. W. 217.

The plaintiff herein was not related by affinity to the insured.

See title Affinity, in 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 911, also title Relative, 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 278; Chinn v. Ohio, 11 L. R. A. 630, note, 47 Ohio St. 575, 26 N. E. 986; Waterhouse v. Martin, Peck (Tenn.) 390; Köhler v. Centennial Mut. L. Ins. Co. 66 Iowa, 325, 23 N. W. 687.

If a beneficiary is designated who does not belong to the class of persons enumerated by statute and the laws of the order, the insurance becomes payable to those who would have been entitled to it in the absence of any designation.

Schmidt v. Northern Life Asso. 112 Iowa, 41, 51 L. R. A. 141, 84 Am. St. Rep. 323, 83 N. W. 800; Byram v. Sovereign Camp, W. 108 Iowa, 440, 75 Am. St. Rep. 265, 79 N. W. 144; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 960; Norwegian Old People's Home Soc. v. Wilson, 176 Ill. 94, 52 N. E. 41; Alexander v. Parker, 144 Ill. 355, 19 L. R. A. 187, 33 N. E. 183; Palmer v. Welch, 132 Ill. 141, 23 N. E. 412; Rindge v. New England Mut. Aid Soc. 146 Mass. 286, 15 N. E. 628; Newman v. Covenant Mut. Ins. Asso. 76 Iowa, 56, 1 L. R. A. 659, 14 Am. St. Rep. 196, 40 N. W. 87; Britton v. Supreme Council, R. A. 46 N. J. Eq. 102, 19 Am. St. Rep. 376, 18 Atl. 675; Niblack, Ben. Soc. 2d ed. §§ 13, 136, 158, 177; Article entitled Rights of beneficiaries erroneously or falsely described in benefit society certificates, 57 Cent. L. J. 383.

McClain, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The certificate was taken by one Daniel J. Bantz, benefit payable to plaintiff. On the death of the member, plaintiff brought action against defendant, and intervener, father of the deceased member, as administrator of his estate, and also as assignee of the mother of deceased, who, under the provisions of the by-laws of the association, would be entitled to the proceeds in preference to the father, made claim to such proceeds as against the plaintiff. The defendant does not resist payment of the sum named in the certificate, and the only question for decision in the lower court was as to which of the two claimants was entitled to the proceeds.

69 L. R. A.

In Code, § 1824, it is provided that "no fraternal association . . . shall issue any certificate of membership, . . . unless the beneficiary under said certificate shall be the husband, wife, relative, legal representative, heir, or legatee of such member." The plaintiff was the niece of the first wife of the father of the deceased member, deceased being the issue of the second wife; and the contention of appellant is that therefore plaintiff was a "relative" of the deceased, under the statutory language. Conceding that the term "relative" is to be extended to cover relatives by marriage as well as by blood, we are still unable to reach the conclusion that the plaintiff was a relative of deceased. During the life of the first wife, the father of deceased was the uncle by marriage of the plaintiff, and, perhaps, after the death of the first wife, the father of deceased was still her uncle by affinity. Simcoke v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 84 Iowa, 383, 387, 15 L. R. A. 114, 51 N. W. 8. But there was no relationship by either blood or affinity between the plaintiff and the deceased, the son of her uncle by marriage by his second wife. The general proposition seems to be this: That relationship by affinity is not created between the blood relatives on either side of the parties to the marriage relation. Chinn v. State, 47 Ohio St. 575, 11 L. R. A. 630, 26 N. E. 986; Waterhouse v. Martin, Peck (Tenn.) 374, 389; Winchester v. Hinsdale, 12 Conn. 88, 94; 1 Bouvier, Law Dict. Affinity. It appears, then, that in no legal sense was the plaintiff a relative of the deceased member. They might, perhaps, be said to be connections by marriage, but they were not relatives by marriage.

The argument of counsel for appellant is, however, that, although no recognized legal relationship existed between them, the statute should be broadly construed as including all persons who by common understanding are recognized as relatives. But we cannot properly give to the words used in the statute any other meaning than their true legal meaning. It must be presumed that the legislature intended to use the terms employed in the statute with accuracy and definiteness, and not with indefiniteness and uncertainty. Furthermore, there is nothing in the record, or within our judicial knowledge, to justify us in saying that, according to common use or understanding, the plaintiff and deceased were related.

Counsel also urge that the use of the word "legatee" indicates a purpose on the part of the legislature to permit certificates to be made to any beneficiary whom the member shall see fit to name, because, as anyone may be made a legatee, the member might, by making a will in favor of one not a relative.

support a certificate naming such person as beneficiary. But the statute is explicit in limiting the authority of such associations as to the persons who may be entitled to the benefits of certificates issued, and we have no power to enlarge the statute to cover persons not thus designated. If the deceased member had made a will in favor of the plaintiff, then the plaintiff might have been the beneficiary in the certificate; but he did not do so, and it seems to us this is an end to the argument.

Plaintiff, then, not being one of the persons who by statute may be made beneficiaries in such a certificate, it follows that she was not entitled to the proceeds of the certificate. As the association does not resist payment of the claim, we have no occasion to elaborate the question as to whether the intervener is entitled to the proceeds. But it seems to be well settled that, where the beneficiary named is incapable of taking the proceeds under the law, the administrator of the deceased person can recover the proceeds, just as he might if no beneficiary had been named. Schmidt v. Northern Life Assn. 112 Iowa, 41, 51 L. R. A. 141, 84 Am. St. Rep. 323, 83 N. W. 800, and cases therein cited.

The decree that plaintiff is not entitled to the fund, on the grounds that she is not related by consanguinity or affinity, and that the intervener is the beneficiary entitled to the fund, is affirmed.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Kansas, Appt.,

v.

Charles M. BOWLES.

(.....Kan.....)

- *1. Whenever required by the governor to appear and prosecute criminal proceedings in any county, the attorney general becomes prosecuting attorney of that county in those proceedings, and as such may sign indictments presented by the grand jury.
2. The district court of any county is obliged to take judicial notice of an executive order upon the attorney general to appear and prosecute criminal proceedings there, and such authority need not be expressed on the face of an indictment which he signs.
3. The solicitation of a bribe does not constitute an attempt to accept or receive a bribe.
4. The solicitation of a bribe is not punishable as a crime by the laws of this state.

(February 11, 1905.)

APPPEAL by the State from an order of the District Court for Wyandotte County quashing an indictment charging defendant with offering to accept a bribe. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. C. C. Coleman, Attorney General, and Jay F. Close, for appellant:

The attorney general has authority to sign

*Headnotes by BURCH, J.

NOTE.—As to criminality of solicitation to crime which is not consummated, including solicitation of bribe, see also note to State v. Butler, 25 L. R. A. 434.
69 L. R. A.

indictments found by a grand jury. The powers belonging to the office of attorney general at common law are retained, in addition to those conferred by statute.

3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 479; People v. Miner, 2 Lans. 396; Hunt v. Chicago & D. R. Co. 20 Ill. App. 282; Craft v. Jackson County, 5 Kan. 521; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. State, 22 Kan. 1; Barber County v. Smith, 48 Kan. 331, 29 Pac. 565.

Under his general authority as attorney general, he may, in his discretion, institute prosecutions in any court he may choose.

The proceedings before a grand jury are as much a part of a prosecution as the proceedings in the trial court.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 268; Choen v. State, 85 Ind. 210; Territory v. Harding, 6 Mont. 327, 12 Pac. 750; Territory v. Layne, 7 Mont. 225, 14 Pac. 705; State ex rel. Nolan v. District Court, 22 Mont. 25, 55 Pac. 916.

When power is placed in the hands of an officer, all incidental powers necessary for the due and efficient exercise of the power expressly granted are conferred by implication.

Throop, Pub. Off. § 543.

Where acts are of an official nature, or require the concurrence of official persons, a presumption arises in favor of their due execution.

Broom, Legal Maxims, 5th ed. 637; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1267; Mechem, Pub. Off. § 525; Throop, Pub. Off. § 558; State v. Farrar, 41 N. H. 53; San Luis Obispo County v. Hendricks, 71 Cal. 242, 11 Pac. 682; Wolfe v. State, 79 Ala. 201, 58 Am. Rep. 590; Lowell v. Flint, 20 Me. 404;

Miller v. Lewis, 4 N. Y. 555; Choon v. State, 85 Ind. 210; State v. Thompson, 64 Tex. 690; Tierney v. Cornell, 3 Neb. 267; Ward v. Barrows, 2 Ohio St. 241; Coombs v. Lane, 4 Ohio St. 112; Valley Twp. v. King Iron Bridge & Mfg. Co. 4 Kan. App. 622, 45 Pac. 660; State v. Nield, 4 Kan. App. 626, 45 Pac. 623; Smith v. Payton, 13 Kan. 384; Rex v. Verelst, 3 Campb. 432; M'Gahey v. Alston, 2 Mees. & W. 206; Faulkner v. Johnson, 11 Mees. & W. 581; M'Mahon v. Lennard, 6 H. L. Cas. 970; Nofire v. United States, 164 U. S. 657, 41 L. ed. 588, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 212.

When all is done toward the commission of a crime that the nature thereof will admit of, except its actual perpetration, an attempt to commit a crime has been made.

2 Wharton, Crim. Law, § 1857; State v. Ellis, 33 N. J. L. 102, 97 Am. Dec. 707; 1 Bishop, New Crim. Law, chap. 51.

An offer by a public officer to receive a bribe is a punishable offense at common law.

2 Wharton, Crim. Law, § 1858.

Messrs. Hale & Maher, for appellee:

There is a marked difference between an intent to commit a crime and an attempt to commit one.

No one can be convicted in Kansas except for such crimes as are defined by statute, there being no common-law offense.

State v. Young, 55 Kan. 349, 40 Pac. 659.

In order to constitute an attempt to commit an indictable offense, some physical act must be done towards its commission, and mere solicitation, no matter how urgent or long persisted in, is not sufficient.

State v. Frazier, 53 Kan. 87, 42 Am. St. Rep. 274, 36 Pac. 58; Thompson v. People, 96 Ill. 161; 2 Bishop, Crim. Proc. ¶¶ 86-92; Re Lloyd, 51 Kan. 501, 33 Pac. 307; State v. Russell, 64 Kan. 798, 68 Pac. 615; Hicks v. Com. 86 Va. 223, 19 Am. St. Rep. 891, 9 S. E. 1024; Com. v. Clark, 6 Gratt. 675; 1 Wharton, Crim. Law, 9th ed. ¶ 192.

An attempt to commit a crime is compounded of two elements: (1) The intent to commit it; and (2) a direct ineffectual act done towards its commission.

Code, § 3888; 2 Bishop, Crim. Proc. 71; Uhl v. Com. 6 Gratt. 706; Mc Dade v. People, 29 Mich. 50; Bouvier, Law Dict. Attempt; People v. Murray, 14 Cal. 180; United States v. Savaloff, 3 Sawy. 311, Fed. Cas. No. 16, 226; United States v. Stephens, 8 Sawy. 116, 12 Fed. 52; Cornwell v. Fraternal Acci. Asso. 6 N. D. 201, 40 L. R. A. 437, 66 Am. St. Rep. 601, 69 N. W. 191; Mulligan v. People, 5 Park. Crim. Rep. 105; State v. Clarissa, 11 Ala. 57; Hicks v. Com. 86 Va. 223, 19 Am. St. Rep. 891, 9 S. E. 1024; Stabler v. Com. 95 Pa. 318, 40 Am. Rep. 653; State v. Butler, 8 Wash. 194, 25 L. R. A. 434, 40 Am. St. Rep. 900, 35 Pac. 69 L. R. A.

1093; 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, ¶¶ 760, 762, 764; Reg. v. Taylor, 1 Fost. & F. 511; Smith v. Com. 54 Pa. 209, 93 Am. Dec. 686; Com. v. Willard, 22 Pick. 476.

Where the solicitation is not in itself a substantive offense, or where there has been no progress made towards the consummation of the independent offense attempted, the question whether the solicitation is by itself the subject of penal prosecution must be answered in the negative.

1 Wharton, Crim. Law, 9th ed. 179; People v. Gardner, 73 Hun. 66, 25 N. Y. Supp. 1072; Stabler v. Com. 95 Pa. 318, 40 Am. Rep. 653.

Merely soliciting one to do an act is not an attempt to do that act.

Rex v. Butler, 6 Car. & P. 368; Smith v. Com. 54 Pa. 209, 93 Am. Dec. 686; Kelly v. Com. 1 Grant Cas. 484; Reg. v. Williams, 1 Car. & K. 589; Reg. v. Lewis, 9 Car. & P. 523; Reg. v. St. George, 9 Car. & P. 483.

The provision of the statute (¶ 5540, Gen. Stat. 1901), requiring that each indictment must be signed by the prosecuting attorney, is mandatory, as much so as the provision requiring that it shall be indorsed, "A true bill," with the name of the foreman signed thereto; and a failure on the part of the foreman to so indorse and sign an indictment is a fatal omission.

State v. Joiner, 19 Mo. 224; Teas v. State, 7 Humph. 174; Hite v. State, 9 Yerg. 198; State v. Soragan, 40 Vt. 450; Oliver v. Com. 95 Ky. 372, 25 S. W. 600; Strange v. State, 110 Ind. 354, 11 N. E. 357; State v. Cooper, 2 Blackf. 226; State v. Bowman, 103 Ind. 69, 2 N. E. 289; Bird v. State, 103 Tenn. 343, 52 S. W. 1076; United States v. Helriggle, 3 Cranch, C. C. 179, Fed. Cas. No. 15,344.

An indictment must be signed by the prosecuting attorney.

Jackson v. State, 4 Kan. 150; State v. Brown, 63 Kan. 262, 65 Pac. 213; Teas v. State, 7 Humph. 174; Hite v. State, 9 Yerg. 198; State v. Soragan, 40 Vt. 450; State v. Tannahill, 4 Kan. 117; State v. Beddo, 22 Utah, 432, 63 Pac. 96; Shattuck v. Chandler, 40 Kan. 516, 10 Am. St. Rep. 227, 20 Pac. 225; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. ¶ 333-454.

When one section of a statute treats solely and especially of a matter, it will prevail, as to that matter, over sections in which only incidental references are made thereto.

Long v. Culp, 14 Kan. 413; Re Donnelly, 30 Kan. 191, 1 Pac. 648; Shattuck v. Chandler, 40 Kan. 520, 10 Am. St. Rep. 227, 20 Pac. 225; South Carolina v. Stoll, 17 Wall. 425, 21 L. ed. 650; Nelden v. Clark, 20 Utah, 382, 77 Am. St. Rep. 917, 59 Pac. 524.

Burch, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Charles M. Bowles was indicted by a grand jury of Wyandotte county. The indictment charged that the defendant did unlawfully, feloniously, wickedly, and corruptly offer and promise to a person named that he would give his vote, opinion, judgment, and action as a member of the board of education of the city of Kansas City in favor of a certain matter on condition that he be paid a sum of money as a bribe and reward for so doing, and did unlawfully, feloniously, and corruptly seek and solicit from the party named the payment of the sum of money stated as a reward and bribe unlawfully and corruptly to be given to influence him in the giving of his opinion, vote, judgment, and action. The indictment concluded and was signed as follows: "And the said grand jurors do present that, by the means and acts aforesaid, the said Charles M. Bowles did then and there unlawfully, feloniously, and corruptly attempt to commit the crime of unlawfully, feloniously, and corruptly accepting and receiving money from the said George E. Rose under an understanding and agreement which he, the said Charles M. Bowles, then and there unlawfully, feloniously, and corruptly attempted to make and enter into, that the vote, opinion, and judgment of the said Charles M. Bowles should thereby be corruptly influenced to be cast and given in favor of the election of the said George E. Rose as principal and teacher in the said public schools, contrary to the statutes in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state of Kansas. C. C. Coleman, Attorney General of the State of Kansas, prosecuting in Wyandotte County." A motion was made to quash the indictment on the following grounds: "(1) The indictment is not signed by the county attorney, as required by law. (2) That said indictment is not signed by the prosecuting attorney of said county, as required by law. (3) That said indictment is not signed by any person as attorney who by law is authorized to sign indictments in said county. (4) That the facts stated in such indictment are not sufficient to constitute any offense or crime under the laws of the state of Kansas." The district court sustained the motion and quashed the indictment. The state appeals upon a question reserved.

The essence of the defendant's claim in reference to the form of the indictment is that it can be signed by no officer of the state except the county attorney of the county in which the grand jury sits. While the argument is re-enforced from other sources, its fundamental content is derived from the Code of Criminal Procedure and two decisions rendered in this state. Section 5540, Gen. Stat. 1901, reads as follows: "Each indictment must be signed by the prosecuting attorney; and when the grand jury return any indictment into court the judge must examine it, and if the foreman has neglected to indorse it, 'A true bill,' with his name signed thereto, or if the prosecuting attorney has neglected to sign his name, the court must cause the foreman to indorse, or the prosecuting attorney to sign it, as the case may require, in the presence of the jury." In the case of State v. Nulf, 15 Kan. 404, the following language is used: "Under the laws of Kansas the 'prosecuting attorney' is always the 'county attorney' (Gen. Stat. 283, 284, §§ 135-137). That is, every criminal action prosecuted in the name of the state must be prosecuted by the county attorney, who is the public prosecutor. Therefore, for the purpose of prosecuting criminal actions, the prosecuting attorney and the county attorney is one and the same person." And in the case of United States v. Weld, 1 Kan. Dassel's ed., 21 Appx., decided in 1860 by the United States district court for the first judicial district of the territory of Kansas, the syllabus reads: "When one person or class of persons is named in a power of attorney, or an act of the lawmaking power, as being authorized to do a certain thing therein named, all other persons are thereby excluded from doing the same thing as effectually as if they were positively forbidden."

The attorney general justifies his conduct under § 7271, Gen. Stat. 1901, which provides: "The attorney general shall appear for the state, and prosecute and defend all actions and proceedings, civil or criminal, in the supreme court, in which the state shall be interested or a party; and shall also, when required by the governor or either branch of the legislature, appear for the state and prosecute or defend, in any other court, or before any officer, in any cause or matter, civil or criminal, in which this state may be a party or interested." In the year 1855 the legislature of the territory of Kansas provided for the election of a district attorney for each district organized for judicial purposes. He was required to appear in each county at the district court and prosecute and defend on behalf of the territory or county all suits, indictments, applications, or motions, civil or criminal, in which the territory or county should be a party, and, among other things, to draw, and sign all indictments or other pleadings connected with his office. The same legislature adopted a Code of Criminal Procedure which made it the duty of the attorney prosecuting in the county to attend any grand jury whenever required, and aid in various ways in the conduct of its proceedings; but no reference was made to the matter of signatures to indictments. By an act approved

February 12, 1858 (Laws 1857-58, chap. 13, p. 195), the territorial legislature changed the system relating to local prosecutors, and created the office of county attorney for each county organized for judicial purposes. Its incumbent was required to appear in the several courts of the county and prosecute or defend actions, attend the sittings of the grand jury when required, and draw bills of indictment. The law provided that county attorneys should be elected at the general election following the session of the legislature; and, of necessity, district attorneys remained in office until the new system became operative. By another act, approved February 12, 1858, the same legislature changed the Code of Criminal Procedure, and adopted a provision in reference to the manner in which indictments should be signed, in all respects identical with § 5540, Gen. Stat. 1901, already quoted. This act took effect immediately after its passage. It is plain, therefore, that the words "prosecuting attorney," in the new Code, were designed to embrace both the district attorney who would have authority to prosecute until the next general election and the county attorney, who would then be the local prosecutor.

During territorial days the attorney general was an official deriving his power and authority from the government of the United States. There was therefore no multiplicity of officers, some one of whom needed to be designated to perform the special duty of signing indictments, to the exclusion of all others. All that was necessary was to provide for the due authentication of true bills returned by the grand jury. The object of the statute was not to confer a special power upon an individual, according to the principle announced in the case of the United States v. Weld, but to protect the legitimacy of a document. To the attorney in charge of the territory's case at the time was assigned this duty. He might be district attorney, with jurisdiction extending over all the counties of a judicial district, or he might be county attorney, with a much more limited range of authority, but the prosecuting attorney, whatever his official title and whatever the scope of his territory, was to sign indictments. Upon its admission into the Union the new state abolished the office of county attorney, and returned to the former system of district attorneys. In 1864 the office of county attorney was restored. But the statute of 1858 relating to the authentication of indictments has persisted, unmodified, to the present time. In the organization of the state government the office of attorney general was created, and by an act approved June 3, 1861 (Laws 1861, chap. 58, p. 216), it was provided that the attorney general, whenever required by the governor or either branch of the legislature, should appear for the state and prosecute or defend, in any court, or before any officer, in any cause or matter, civil or criminal, in which the state might be a party or interested. The substance of this act has been preserved in all subsequent revisions of the law, and it now appears as § 7271, Gen. Stat. 1901. The experience of members of the legislature during territorial times had taught them the necessity of a state government equipped with sufficient power to protect public rights and redress public injuries throughout the entire state, independent of the attitude of local authorities who might be indifferent, incapable, or even antagonistic. They had suffered from the baleful manifestations of sectionalism within the state as well as between different states, and the purpose was to make the authority of the government felt, through its chief law officer, in every part of its territory, if the chief executive or either branch of the legislature should determine it to be necessary. The language of the statute indicates that the intention was to grant plenary power to the attorney general to this end, and he was invested with full authority to use all the means afforded by the law to meet the requirements of any situation and fully protect the interests of the state. When directed by the governor or either branch of the legislature to appear and prosecute criminal proceedings in any county, he becomes the prosecuting attorney of that county in those proceedings, and has all the rights that any prosecuting officer there may have, including those of appearing before the grand jury, signing indictments, and pursuing cases to final determination.

69 L. R. A.

In 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 268, there is a fair statement of what is included in the term "prosecute": "To prosecute is to proceed against judicially. A prosecution is the act of conducting or waging a proceeding in court; the means adopted to bring a supposed offender to justice and punishment by due course of law. It is also defined as the institution or commencement and continuance of a criminal suit; the process of exhibiting formal charges against an offender before a legal tribunal, and pursuing them to final judgment on behalf of the state or government, as by indictment or information." The reasoning of decided cases, involving differing states of fact, leads to the same conclusion. Choen v. State, 85 Ind. 209; Territory v. Harding, 6 Mont. 323, 12 Pac. 750; State ex rel. Nolan v. District Court, 22 Mont. 25, 55 Pac. 916, 918.

The remark of Mr. Justice Valentine in State v. Nulf, 15 Kan. 404, was made without attention having been called to this power of the attorney general. The court was not then considering, and did not pretend to decide, the question now under discussion. Certainly it was not the intention of the court to nullify, by that decision, the statute which gives the attorney general the right to prosecute whenever required by the governor or either branch of the legislature to do so.

Time has abated nothing from the strength of purpose indicated by the words of the statute under consideration. Indeed, the power of the attorney general in our political system has subsequently been enlarged, and he may now, upon his own motion, undertake the enforcement of the prohibitory liquor law in any county of the state, if the county attorney is unable or neglects to do so, and to that end may perform any act which the county attorney may perform. What, if any, common-law powers he may possess, it is not necessary, in view of the statute, to determine.

The indictment was signed by an attorney who was by law authorized to sign indictments in Wyandotte county, and it should not have been quashed upon any one of the first three grounds stated in the motion to quash.

In the brief for the defendant it is urged that the indictment was insufficient because the authority of the attorney general to sign it was not stated. The motion to quash does not raise this question, but the attorney general argues it as if it were a matter in dispute before the district court. Therefore, it is proper to say that the signature was sufficient. The district court was obliged to take judicial notice of the official character and identity of the attorney general, and of the executive requirement upon him to appear and prosecute. The action of the governor was a matter of court cognizance, and not a matter for the indictment to express. The attorney general was no more required to indicate that he was acting under an executive order than the county attorney is required to refer to the fact of his election, the taking of his oath, and the filing of his bond. Having authority to sign the indictment, the attorney general did all the statute requires when he signed it. State v. Nulf, 15 Kan. 404; State v. Tannahill, 4 Kan. 117; State v. Kinney, 81 Mo. 101; Choen v. State, 85 Ind. 209; 10 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 448.

The act charged against the defendant in the body of the indictment is the solicitation of a bribe. The legislature has not seen fit to make the solicitation of a bribe punishable in express terms, and the question is if the same end may be reached through the statute relating to attempts. In the light of the history of the legislation of this state concerning bribery, the omission from the statute may well be regarded as conclusive. The subject is an old one. When the aged Samuel was testifying his integrity, he said: "Whose ox have I taken? or whose ass have I taken? or whom have I defrauded? whom have I oppressed? or of whose hand have I received any bribe to blind mine eyes therewith? and I will restore it you." Isaiah accorded the privileges of the godly to him "that shaketh his hands from holding of bribes," and David sang of a separation of life and soul from those whose "right hand is full of bribes." The governments of all the civilized peoples which have arisen since those ancient days have struggled with the problem. Previous to the year 1869 receiving a bribe was a crime in this state. By chapter 43, p. 128, of the Laws of that year the legislature repealed all sections of the bribery statute then in force, so far as they related to bribe takers. For a period of twenty six years following this repeal, officers who received rewards for official conduct were not amenable to criminal punishment at all for their corrupt acts. In 1895 the matter again became the subject of legislative cognizance, and the present law was enacted, providing as follows: "Any officer of the state or of any county, city, district, or township, after his election or appointment, and either before or after he shall have qualified, or entered upon his official duties, who shall accept or receive any money, or the loan of any money, or any real or personal property or any pecuniary or other personal advantage, present or prospective, under any agreement or understanding that his vote, opinion, judgment, or action shall be thereby influenced, or as a reward for having given or withheld any vote, opinion, or judgment, in any matter before him in his official capacity, or having wrongfully done or omitted to do any official act, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $200 nor more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than seven years in the penitentiary at hard labor, or by both such fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court." Gen. Stat. 1901, § 2212. The statutes of many states by express provision punish the solicitation of bribes. The statute of this state in force in 1895 relating to the giving of bribes devoted a separate section to offering or attempting to bribe. The appearance in the new law of an analogous section relating to soliciting or attempting to secure a bribe might well have been anticipated, but nothing of the kind was inserted. Presumably the legislature expressed itself fully, and did not intend to punish a solicitor unless he actually received the bribe. The spectacle of a public officer soliciting his own purchase is so disgusting that the subject scarcely could have escaped the legislative attention. But many practical considerations are involved in the detection and punishment of bribery. Ordinarily, disclosure must come from one or the other of the participants in the despicable business. Solicitation, however, is extremely rare compared with offers to corrupt, and the same policy which so long exempted the bribe taker altogether may have been deemed wisest in regard to solicitation. In any event, this court should not be called upon to strip the legislature and by construction invent a crime which, with many precedents before them the law-makers might have delineated in a few words while engaged in the work of remodeling the bribery law.

Aside from these considerations, the court is of the opinion that the solicitation of a bribe is not an attempt to accept or receive a bribe within the meaning of the statute relating to attempts. That statute reads: "Every person who shall attempt to commit an offense prohibited by law, and in such attempt shall do any act toward the commission of such offense but shall fail in the perpetration thereof, or shall be prevented or intercepted in executing the same, upon conviction thereof, shall, in cases where no provision is made by law for the punishment of such attempt, be punished as follows." Gen. Stat. 1901, § 2284.

In determining whether certain conduct was punishable criminally at common law, English judges have frequently made the statement that soliciting is an act done which in itself is sufficient, when coupled with wrongful intent, to constitute a crime. In discussing the subject, the word "solicit" has been used in the same connection with words like "incite," "endeavor," and "attempt," but the purpose in view has been to show that solicitation in itself embodied the elements of an independent crime, and not to discriminate it as an ineffectual attempt to commit another crime in the sense of our statute. This is plain from a critical reading of the leading case of King v. Higgins, 2 East, 5. The headnote accurately expresses the conclusion of the judges, as follows: "To solicit a servant to steal his master's goods is a misdemeanor, though it be not charged in the indictment that the servant stole the goods, nor that any other act was done except the soliciting and inciting. And such offense is indictable at the sessions, having a tendency to a breach of the peace." Lord Kenyon, Ch. J., and Le Blanc, J., were able to express themselves without confusing attempt and solicitation. Justices Grose and Lawrence were more discursive, and by their language opened the way to 69 L. R. A.

much of the uncertainty relating to the law of attempt in this country. In his work on Criminal Law, Mr. Bishop has evidently seized upon the words most favorable to his purpose in this and other similar cases, in an effort, supported, however, by some authority, to establish the doctrine that solicitation is an attempt. The case of Heslton v. Lister, Cooke C. P. 88, is cited. The entire report of that case is here given, because it is apparently referred to as deciding that solicitation is an attempt in a bribery case. "A motion to justify bail upon examination of the bail in court. The plaintiff's attorney showed to the court that the same persons were bail in another cause, and represented that he verily believed they were very insufficient, for the defendant himself had told him they were not worth a groat. He likewise informed the court that one Dewell, a sheriff's officer, had just then been with him, and told him if he would go out of court the defendant would give him half a guinea. Dewell was likewise examined upon oath, and declared the same. Upon this the court all agreed that this was an attempt in the defendant to pervert justice, and a notorious contempt of the court, and committed him to the Fleet till farther order." A number of American cases used as authority for the proposition of the same text throw no more light on the subject than King v. Higgins. The reporter of the case of United States v. Worrall, 2 Dall. 384, 1 L. ed. 426, Fed. Cas. No. 16,766, says the defendant in that proceeding was charged with an attempt to bribe. The indictment uses no such language, and the only legal question argued and determined was if the courts of the United States had jurisdiction of common law offenses, and that question was decided wrong. In the case of State v. Avery, 7 Conn. 267, 18 Am. Dec. 105, the sole question was if the solicitation of another to commit adultery was a high crime and misdemeanor cognizable by the superior court, and not if an attempt could be made out from mere solicitation. In the case of Com. v. Harrington, 3 Pick. 26, the headnote is accurate, and reads: "Exciting, encouraging, and aiding a person to commit a misdemeanor is of itself a misdemeanor." The same is true of the case of Com. v. Flagg, 135 Mass. 545, where it is said: "It is an indictable offense at common law for one to counsel and solicit another to commit a felony, although the solicitation is of no effect, and the crime counseled is not in fact committed." The citation of the case of Com. v. M' Gill, Addison (Pa.) 21, to prove that solicitation is equivalent to attempt, is astonishing. The report is of an occurrence in the county court of Allegheny county, and reads thus:

"Indictment for a misdemeanor. Boggs persuaded M'Gill to steal, and deliver to him, a conveyance, for 100 acres of land, executed by Henry Shaver to his son and daughter. This land was part of a larger tract of which Shaver had been possessed under a location of a Virginia certificate. He intended this 100 acres as a provision for his two children, and, having sold the rest to Boggs, he conveyed the location or certificate to him that he might take a patent for the whole in his name, and took an article or bond on Boggs to convey this 100 acres to his children after he obtained the patent for the whole. They were convicted. The court suggested that it might be useful if Boggs, having the title to this land, should before sentence execute a conveyance to the son and daughter of Shaver. He did so, and judgment was given." The case of People v. Bush, 4 Hill, 133, is the strongest authority cited in support of the text referred to. Concerning that case, however, it might be argued that the conduct proceeded beyond solicitation. The prisoner, besides soliciting to arson, furnished materials to accomplish the burning, and was held guilty of an attempt under a statute similar to that of this state. The doctrine of People v. Bush is repudiated by the supreme court of West Virginia in an able and exhaustive opinion in the case of State v. Baller, 26 W. Va. 90, 53 Am. Rep. 66, and contrary to State v. Avery, the supreme court of Washington, in a recent carefully reasoned case, holds that "mere solicitation to commit adultery is not an attempt to commit the crime." State v. Butler, 8 Wash. 194, 25 L. R. A. 434, 40 Am. St. Rep. 900, 35 Pac. 1093. Appended to the reprint of this decision in 25 L. R. A. 434, is an editorial note relating to the criminality of solicitation to crime which is not consummated, in which many cases are analyzed and classified. Upon the branch of the subject now under consideration the following conclusion is reached: "The authorities are not so uniform upon the question how far solicitation is an attempt. But the weight of authority is in accord with State v. Butler, that it is not an attempt. The very definition of attempt precludes the possibility of its including a mere solicitation." Likewise, in 12 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 183, where numerous authorities are collated, it is said: "Some of the courts have treated solicitation to commit a crime as an attempt. By the weight of authority, however, it is not a sufficient overt act to be indictable as an attempt, but must be indicted as a distinct offense." In the state of Illinois a statute (Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1903, chap. 38, § 273, p. 670,) was enacted reading as follows: "Whoever attempts to commit an offense prohibited by law, and does any act toward it, but fails, or is intercepted or prevented in its execution, where no express provision is made by law for the punishment of such attempt, shall be punished." In construing this statute, the supreme court of that state said: "The words 'whosoever attempts to commit any offense prohibited by law, and does any act towards it,' must be construed, in cases like the present, to mean a physical act, as contradistinguished from a verbal declaration; that is, it must be a step taken towards the actual commission of the offense, and not a mere effort, by persuasion, to produce the condition of mind essential to the commission of the offense." Cox v. People, 82 Ill. 191, 193. In the case of State v. Harney, 101 Mo. 470, 14 S. W. 657, the opinion reads: "For a man to have sexual intercourse with a female child under the age of twelve years is for that man to be guilty of rape. Rev. Stat. 1879, § 1253. And the law declares that 'every person who shall attempt to commit an offense prohibited by law, and in such attempt shall do any act towards the commission of such offense, but shall fail in the perpetration thereof, shall be punished,' etc. Rev. Stat. 1879, § 1645. The only charge that can be evolved from the verbose reiterations of this indictment is that the defendant by verbal solicitations tried to obtain the consent of a child under the age of twelve years to have sexual intercourse with him, and failed. However despicable and deserving of punishment such conduct may be, it falls short of the criminal offense attempted to be charged, to constitute which there must be an actual attempt to have intercourse with such child. So long as the evil purpose dwells in contemplation only, it is beyond the grasp of these provisions of the law." And in the case of Hicks v. Com. 86 Va. 223, 19 Am. St. Rep. 891, 9 S. E. 1024, it is said: "The act must reach far enough towards the accomplishment of the desired result to amount to the commencement of the consummation. It must not be merely preparatory. In other words, while it need not be the last proximate act to the consummation of the offense attempted to be perpetrated, it must approach sufficiently near to it to stand either as the first, or some subsequent, step in a direct movement towards the commission of the offense after the preparations are made." This court has virtually adopted the restricted meaning of the word "attempt" indicated by these decisions.

In the case of Re Lloyd, 51 Kan. 501, 502, 33 Pac. 307, the position is taken that an attempt must involve an overt act beyond solicitation, and in the case of Re Schurman, 40 Kan. 633, 542, 20 Pac. 277, 282, it is said: "If what was charged would naturally have resulted in inducing the company to part with its money, such attempt would probably be an offense; 'but when between the attempt and the execution is interposed the volition of an independent moral agent, then, by stress of the definition just given, an indictable attempt is not made out.' 1 Wharton, Crim. Law, §§ 177, 178." In a very recent case the supreme court of Michigan admitted the principle announced by Dr. Wharton to be applicable to the crime of bribery, and held the solicitation of a bribe to be punishable, not as an attempt, but as an independent common-law crime. "It is strenuously contended that the indictment charges no offense known to the laws of this state. It is conceded by the learned counsel for the state that there is no statute defining the offense set out in the indictment, but it is contended that the case falls within the statute (3 Comp. Laws, § 11,795) providing for the punishment of offenses indictable at the common law. In other words, it is claimed that the indictment sets out an offense at the common law. Respondent's counsel assert that solicitation to commit a crime is not indictable when there is interposed between the solicitation on the one hand and the proposed illegal act on the other the resisting will of another person, which other person refuses assent and co-operation; citing, among other cases, McDade v. People, 29 Mich. 50, and Smith v. Com. 54 Pa. 209, 93 Am. Dec. 686. It may be accurate to say that what is treated in the law as an attempt to commit a crime is not complete where there is interposed between the solicitor and the consummation of the completed offense the resisting will of the one whom the solicitor seeks to employ as the active agent. But to say that a solicitation may not amount to an offense under these circumstances is to deny that a solicitation to commit a felony is punishable at the common law as a substantive and completed offense." People v. Hammond, 132 Mich. 422, 93 N. W. 1084. The inference from this decision is that soliciting a bribe would not be punishable in Michigan, except for the statute recognizing common-law offenses. That it is not punishable in Texas appears from the case of Hutchinson v. State, 36 Tex. 293, in which it is said: "The indictment was drawn under article 1870, Paschal's Digest, and the pleader attempted to charge the defendant with accepting a bribe; but the indictment wholly fails to make any such charge specifically, and only charges him with offering to receive a bribe. This is not an offense punishable as a crime under the law." There are no common-law offenses in this state, and there can be no convictions in this state except for such crimes as are defined by statute. State v. Young, 55 Kan. 349, 40 Pac. 659.

69 L. R. A.

In harmony with what is undoubtedly the modern trend of the law, this court is constrained to hold that, so long as the will of the person solicited is opposed to the corrupt conduct, there can be no attempt, in the legal sense, to accept or receive a bribe. After a willingness of mind on the part of both participants has been established, the matter of giving and receiving the bribe money or other pecuniary or personal advantage must still be accomplished. That transaction may be very simple or very complex, and the room for attempt may be very wide or very narrow, but until it is finally undertaken and some act done, the stage of attempt has not been entered upon. The remarks of the supreme court of Maryland in an opinion denying that solicitation constitutes an attempt are pertinent to this case: "Certainly it would be a great public calamity to invent crimes by subtle, ingenious, and astute deduction. In all free countries the criminal law ought to be plain, perspicuous, and easily apprehended by the common intelligence of the community. It is the essence of cruelty and injustice to punish men for acts which can be construed to be crimes only by the application of artificial principles according to a mode of disquisition unknown in the ordinary business and pursuits of life. The legislature, with ample power over the whole subject, determined what offenses should be punished. If it had desired that other actions of a cognate character should become penal, it would have so enacted. It is the duty of the courts to interpret and administer the legislative will, but in cases of criminal cognizance they must resolutely determine never to exceed it. . . . The law would not be a practical system if it did not define with precision the nature and circumstances of the attempts which are criminal, and determine what acts are necessary to make the attempt a substantive offense. In our judgment it has done so, and not left us to grope after results under the guidance of vague general expressions." Lamb v. State, 67 Md. 524, 10 Atl. 208, 298.

The indictment was properly quashed upon the last ground stated in the motion, and the judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE of the State of Michigan ex rel.
City of DETROIT

v.

BOARD OF INSPECTORS OF ELECTION for the Fourth District, Second Ward,
City of Detroit.

(.....Mich.....)

A statute permitting the use of a voting machine which assures secrecy, free choice of candidates, a correct record of the vote, and a correct record and announcement of the total vote given for each candidate, does not contravene a constitutional requirement that all votes at elections shall be given by ballot.

(March 30, 1905.)

CERTIORARI to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment denying a writ of mandamus to compel respondent to utilize voting machines at a coming election. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Lewis A. Stoneman, with Mr. Timothy E. Tarsney, for relator:

The word "ballot," as used in the Constitution and in literature, means secret voting, in contradistinction to viva voce, or open, voting.

23 Am. Law Rev. p. 725; Opinion of Justices, 7 Me. 495, Appx.; Temple v. Mead, 4 Vt. 540; Williams v. Stein, 38 Ind. 90, 10 Am. Rep. 97; Ritchie v. Richards, 14 Utah, 345, 47 Pac. 670; Brisbin v. Cleary, 26 Minn. 107, 1 N. W. 825; Otero v. Gallegos, 1 Bartlett Contested Elect. Cas. 177; People ex rel. Williams v. Cicott, 16 Mich. 297, 97 Am. Dec. 141; People ex rel. Smith v. Pease, 27 N. Y. 81, 84 Am. Dec. 242; Atty. Gen. v. Detroit, 58 Mich. 213, 55 Am. Rep. 675, 24 N. W. 887; State v. Shaw, 9 S. C. N. S. 138; State ex rel. Smith v. Anderson, 26 Fla. 240, 8 So. 1; Ex parte Arnold, 128 Mo. 260, 33 L. R. A. 386, 49 Am. St. Rep. 557, 30 S. W. 768, 1036; 4 Encyclopedia Britannica, 8th ed. 399.

The Australian ballot created two difficulties: First, it invited mistakes in marking the ballot, and, second, caused needless delay and controversy in the count, resulting in the throwing out of many of the votes, and requiring, in some precincts, as much as forty hours to count the votes.

Coulehan v. White, 95 Md. 703, 53 Atl. 786; McCrory, Elections, § 728.

NOTE.—For other cases in this series as to right to use voting machine under constitutional provisions providing for voting by ballot, see Opinion of Justices, 38 L. R. A. 547, and Re House Bill No. 1,291, 54 L. R. A. 430.

The voting machine is the next step, and is the outgrowth of the Australian ballot, and cures its defects, and a vote cast thereby is voting by ballot in the meaning of the Constitution.

The keyboard of the machine, with the ballot labels thereon, constitutes a mechanical Australian ballot, and affords the voter an opportunity to vote secretly and accurately by ballot, prevents mistakes, and insures the counting of his vote as cast.

The test of the validity of the method employed is secret voting.

Henshaw v. Foster, 9 Pick. 319; Temple v. Mead, 4 Vt. 540; Opinion of Justices, 7 Me. 495, Appx.

Voting by machine is constitutional voting.

Re House Bill No. 1,291, 178 Mass. 605, 54 L. R. A. 430, 60 N. E. 129; Re Voting Machine, 19 R. I. 729, 36 L. R. A. 547, 36 Atl. 716; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 760.

Mr. Frank Keiper also for relator.

Mr. Sherman D. Callender, for respondent:

The Constitution must be construed in the light of the surrounding facts, to understand its provisions and their intended application.

The voting machine does not permit a vote by ballot.

Where the Constitution provides a means for the exercise of a power, no other can be employed by the legislature.

Boehm v. Hertz, 182 Ill. 154, 48 L. R. A. 575, 54 N. E. 973; People v. Dean, 14 Mich. 406; Beardstown v. Virginia, 76 Ill. 34; People ex rel. Bay City v. State Treasurer, 23 Mich. 499; People ex rel. Kennedy v. Gies, 25 Mich. 83.

It is proper to take into consideration the uniform, continued, and contemporaneous construction of the Constitution given by the legislature, and generally recognized, as to its meaning or intention, and such contemporaneous construction affords a strong presumption that it rightly interprets the meaning and intention.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 82; Bunn v. People, 45 Ill. 397; People ex rel. Woodyatt v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 451, 40 N. E. 307; People ex rel. Lynch v. La Salle County, 100 Ill. 495; Boehm v. Hertz, 182 Ill. 154, 48 L. R. A. 575, 54 N. E. 973; People ex rel. Badger v. Lowenthal, 93 Ill. 191.

It is a matter of common knowledge that, up to a very short time ago, voting by ballot has been construed to mean voting by depositing with the election officers some material thing, usually, in modern times, a paper ticket, upon which is indicated, by printing or writing, the choice of the elector.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 604; Wharton, Law Dict.

When the Constitution was framed, the term "ballot," as designating a mode of election, was then well ascertained and clearly defined.

Williams v. Stein, 38 Ind. 95, 10 Am. Rep. 97; Collins v. Henderson, 11 Bush, 74.

In construing a statute, great regard ought to be paid to the construction which the sages of the law who lived about the time or soon after it was made put upon it, because they were best able to judge of the intention of the makers at the time when the law was made.

3 Coke Inst. 11, 136, 181.

At the time our Constitution was adopted, the word "ballot" was defined by law dictionaries, and generally referred to in legal decisions, as a piece of paper.

Comstock v. Gage, 91 Ill. 328; Anderson, Law Dict. 104; Cyclopædic Law Dict. 84; Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 5 L. ed. 257; People ex rel. Williams v. Dayton, 55 N. Y. 377.

Contemporaneous construction of an ambiguous provision of the Constitution is always important, and is frequently of controlling influence in determining its meaning.

6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 931; Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. 351, 4 L. ed. 97; Ex parte McNeil, 13 Wall. 236, 20 L. ed. 624; Bank of United States v. Halstead, 10 Wheat. 63, 6 L. ed. 267; Stuart v. Laird, 1 Cranch, 308, 2 L. ed. 118; Briscoe v. Bank of Commonwealth, 11 Pet. 257, 9 L. ed. 709; People ex rel. Livesay v. Wright, 6 Colo. 92; Morgan v. Dudley, 18 B. Mon. 694, 68 Am. Dec. 735; State ex rel. Cardwell v. Glenn, 18 Nev. 44, 1 Pac. 186; People ex rel. Gallup v. Green, 2 Wend. 266; People ex rel. Lynch v. La Salle County, 100 Ill. 495; Field v. People, 3 Ill. 79; Easton v. Scott, Clarke & H. Contested Elect. Cas. 272.

The meaning of our Constitution was fixed when it was adopted, and cannot be changed by events alone.

People ex rel. Twitchell v. Blodgett, 13 Mich. 139.

The voting machine does not permit the voter to cast a ballot.

Cushing, Parliamentary Law, chap. 4.

Every qualified elector is entitled to vote, under the Constitution. If a voter is not permitted to see and know that he has dealt with the officers of the election some material thing upon which is expressed his choice, he is deprived of his constitutional right to vote.

Anderson, Law Dict. 104; Black, Law Dict. 116; People ex rel. Budd v. Holden, 28 N. L. R. A.

Cal. 136; Taylor v. Bleakley, 55 Kan. 14, 28 L. R. A. 683, 49 Am. St. Rep. 233, 39 Pac. 1045; State ex rel. Runge v. Anderson, 100 Wis. 530, 42 L. R. A. 239, 76 N. W. 482.

Ostrander, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The relator, the city of Detroit, filed its petition in the circuit court for the county of Wayne, setting out, in substance, the following facts: That at the meeting of the common council of the city of Detroit, held March 7, 1905, the city clerk was directed by resolution to have voting machines placed in divers election districts in said city (amongst others, in the fourth district of the second ward), to be used at the election to be held Monday, April 3, 1905; that the resolution specified a particular kind of voting machine; that the board of inspectors of the named district, and each of them, have refused to obey the order of the common council, and assert that they will not obey it, giving as reason for their refusal that such method of voting is not a constitutional method. It is further set out that the particular voting machine is a complete and perfect piece of mechanism, thoroughly tested and reliable, constructed and operated in such a way as to permit an elector to vote secretly for a candidate or candidates of his choice upon any and all tickets, and that the same opportunity for discrimination is provided for the elector as if a paper ticket were used. The petition prays for a writ of mandamus, directed to the board of inspectors of said election district, commanding them to obey the resolution of the council. An order to show cause was issued, and the inspectors of said election district filed an answer, in which they admit the facts stated and set forth in the petition of relator, and they aver that they have refused and will refuse to obey the said order and direction of the common council to use the voting machine named, or any other voting machine, because they are advised that, under and by virtue of the provisions of § 2 of article 7 of the Constitution of this state, all votes given at any election must be by ballot, except as stated in said Constitution, "and that the word 'ballot,' as contained in said provision of the Constitution, does not permit the use of said voting machines, or any other voting machine, at elections, but means only a ticket upon which shall be written or printed the names of the candidates to be voted for at said election, and that the use of any other device is without warrant or authority of law." The cause coming on to be heard upon the petition and answer, the court denied the writ. The proceeding is brought into this court by certiorari, has been argued orally, and very full briefs have been submitted in behalf of both the relator and the respondents.

The act of the legislature which is brought into question is act No. 61, p. 71, of 1897, Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 3750-3758, as amended by act No. 234, p. 383, of the Public Acts of 1903. The title of the act is, "An Act to Authorize the Use of Any Thoroughly Tested and Reliable Voting Machine at Any Election Held in This State." The act provides that any city council or village council may, at any regular meeting, authorize the use of such voting machines at any election to be held within their respective cities or incorporated villages during the ensuing year, but that "all voting by machine shall be a secret vote, as hereinafter provided," and that all election laws not incompatible with the act are continued in full force and effect. The pleadings before us, read in connection with the legislation referred to, not only assume, but afford assurance of, the fact that the voting machines in question will, if used, insure to the elector proper instruction in the use of the machines, absolute secrecy in voting, opportunity to vote for any person or candidate of his choice for any office to be filled at a particular election, a knowledge that he has voted, a correct record of the vote or votes, and a public and correct declaration of the total result of the election, and the recording and preservation of such result by officers chosen and sworn for that purpose. It is with reference to this statement of facts, and upon the assumption of the verity of each of them, that we proceed to discuss the only question before us, which is, Does the legislation in question contravene the provisions of § 2 of article 7 of the Constitution? That section reads: "All votes shall be given by ballot, except for such township officers as may be authorized by law to be otherwise chosen." The same language was used in the Constitution of 1835. There is but one other provision of the Constitution relating to the method of voting at elections, and that is § 11 of article 4, which is: "In all elections by either house or in joint convention, the vote shall be given viva voce." The question may be stated in simpler form in this way: Is a vote given or cast by the use of the machine—secrecy, free choice of candidates, a correct record of the vote, and a correct record and announcement of the total vote given for each candidate being assured—a vote "given by ballot?"

All reasonable presumptions are to be indulged to support the questioned legislation. The Constitution of Michigan is not a code, nor is the particular provision in any way self-executing. The language is imperative, and requires that whatever system of conducting elections shall receive legislative sanction must have, as an integral, mandatory part of it, voting by ballot. In our opinion, the question is not to be determined as one of mere philology; nor should we apply, as we are asked to do, the rule of construction, often of great assistance, which limits the meaning of the words "given by ballot" to the vehicle used in voting or the method of depositing the vote which was probably in the contemplation of the framers of the Constitution. Neither do we regard as controlling the fact that previous legislative enactments have, with few exceptions, and those like the one now before us, uniformly provided for written or printed tickets for use in elections. We may assume that they have adopted the best known and most convenient way of voting by ballot,—of obeying the constitutional mandate. And a ticket so provided was not a ballot, but, when properly deposited, or properly marked and deposited, by the elector, was a vote given by ballot. State ex rel. Runge v. Anderson, 100 Wis. 523, 531, 42 L. R. A. 239, 76 N. W. 482. We regard the provision of the Constitution as a declaration of state policy, assuring to the elector a secret, as distinguished from an open, or announced, vote. And in reaching this conclusion, we apply those rules of construction which subserve the apparent purpose of the provision questioned.—its generality,—whether the language used is broader in meaning than the individual conceptions at the time of its adoption, and broad enough to sustain the legislation now considered.

The necessity for an early opinion in this case prevents any considerable references to the history of voting by ballot. The uses of the white and black balls in the club and in the lodge are familiar. Some of the early laws of the colonies provided that freemen might vote in the affirmative by the use of an Indian corn; in the negative, by putting in a bean. Lexicographers seem not agreed upon the derivation of the word "ballot." It has been said that it was adopted from the French language, without change of meaning (State v. Shaw, 9 S. C. N. S. 94, 138); that it comes from the Greek word meaning "to throw" (2 Am. Cyc. 245). In common speech, the word "ballot" is used to mean the ball or ticket used in voting; the act of voting; the result of voting. It seems clear, however, that, from the earliest times, voting by ballot has been a term used to contradi-stinguish open, viva voce, or public voting, and secret voting. "Voting by ballots is by a ticket or ball, and secrecy is an essential part of this manner of voting." Bouvier, Law Dict. (Rawle's Rev.) title Ballots. "The material guaranty of the provision of the Constitution (§ 6, art. 6), that "all elections by the people shall be by ballot" is inviolable secrecy as to the person for whom an elector shall vote; and this guaranty is binding upon municipal governments in the regulation of elections." State ex rel. Smith v. Anderson, 26 Fla. 240, 8 So. 1 (syllabus). "The expression 'election by ballots' had been expounded and construed by the various courts of last resort, and, with entire unanimity, they had declared it meant a secret ballot, and that the essential principle of this manner of voting was that the elector might conceal from every person the name of the candidate for whom he voted." Ex parte Arnold, 128 Mo. 280, 33 L. R. A. 386, 49 Am. St. Rep. 557, 30 S. W. 769, 1036. See also Williams v. Stein, 38 Ind. 90, 10 Am. Rep. 97; Ritchie v. Richards, 14 Utah, 345, 47 Pac. 670; Brisbin v. Cleary, 26 Minn. 107, 1 N. W. 825. References to the principal lexicographers will discover the same concept and definitions of ballot voting. In Opinion of Justices, 7 Me. 495, Appx., one of the questions answered was whether printed ballots came within the meaning of a constitutional provision which required that all elections shall be by written ballots. The answer was, in part: "It may be observed that those who framed the Constitution undoubtedly intended to guard against many inconveniences in the before-named elections, by excluding all those other modes by which questions are often decided in popular assemblies. This was the general object. The word 'ballot' may be considered as opposed to a vote by word or by signs,—as, for instance, a vote by yeas and nays, or the common mode of voting, by holding up the hand, or by rising and standing till counted. It may well be supposed that the mode prescribed was preferred . . . because it secures a greater degree of independence than any other in the exercise of the elective franchise." And the printed ballot was held good. Henshaw v. Foster, 9 Pick. 312, 320, is, as to the question presented, like the case last cited, and to that question the same answer was returned. But the opinion is of further interest here. It was urged "that the uniform and constant use of manuscript ballots in elections amounts to a construction of the terms of the Constitution which ought now to be received as the only true one." Of this the court, speaking by Chief Justice Parker, said: "This practice of a mode of voting which is undoubtedly constitutional, founded in existing convenience, and never brought into competition with the use of printed votes, scarcely furnishes an argument against the latter. . . . It merely shows a preference of one over the other, or that one during the time of the practice is more convenient than the other." To the same effect is Temple v. Mead, 4 Vt. 535. In the opinions and briefs in State v. Shaw, 9 S. C. N. S. 94, will be found an exhaustive discussion of the meaning of the word "ballot," its derivation and definitions, some history of its employment, and its meaning, as used in the Constitution of that state. That Constitution provided that "in all elections by the general assembly, or either house thereof, the members shall vote viva voce, and their votes thus given shall be entered upon the journal of the house to which they respectively belong." [S. C. Const. art. 2, § 24.] Another section of the same instrument required the state to be divided into convenient circuits, and that for each the assembly should elect a judge by "joint ballot." In the election of certain judges, the vote was given viva voce; and upon application of the attorney general, who invoked the original jurisdiction of the supreme court of the state, and who contended that a secret ballot was, by the Constitution, made imperative in such elections, there was a judgment of ouster. The case, Re Voting Machine, 19 R. I. 729, 36 L. R. A. 547, 36 Atl. 716, is not precisely in point here, because of differences in the constitutional provisions of the two states. The opinion is of interest, however, because the court considered the argument that the framers of the Constitution, as individuals, never had in mind such a method of voting. Of this it is said: "The question, however, is not what limitations they may have had in mind, by reason of the methods to which they were accustomed, but what the language of the Constitution means, or may reasonably mean, with reference to the matter before us." In Re House Bill No. 1,291, 178 Mass. 605, 54 L. R. A. 430, 60 N. E. 129, the question presented was: "Has the general court the right to authorize the use of voting and counting machines at elections by the people of national, state, district, county, city, or town officers?" The Constitution, as has been noticed, provided that representatives shall be chosen by written vote. It was held by three of the justices that the requirement might be complied with in voting by a machine which registers each vote cast, without the use of separate ballots. One justice concurred, provided the results of the action of the machine in registering each vote were visible to the voter, and the work of the machine in adding up votes was done under the supervision of some person or persons charged with the duty of counting the votes cast. Three justices dissented upon the ground that "the turn of a wheel or a dial, the punching of a hole in an unseen roll of paper on which are the names of candidates, by a voter who pulls a lever or turns a key, is not the use of a written vote, within the meaning of the Constitution." The majority opinion, which seems to have been prepared by Chief Justice Holmes, referring to the opinion in Henshaw v. Foster, in which it was said that the word "ballot" is ambiguous, which was the reason for the constitutional requirement of a written vote, contains this language: "No doubt, the picture in the minds of those who used the words was that of a piece of paper with the names of the candidates voted for written upon it in manuscript; but the thing which they meant to stop was oral or hand voting, and the benefits which they meant to secure were the greater certainty and permanence of a material record of each voter's act, and the relative privacy incident to doing that act in silence. . . . It seems to us that the object and even the words of the Constitution, in requiring 'written votes,' are satisfied when the voter makes a change in a material object,—for instance, by causing a wheel to revolve a fixed distance,—if the material object changed is so connected with or related to a written or printed name purporting to be the name of a candidate for office that, by the understanding of all, the making of the change expresses a vote for the candidate whose name is thus connected with the device."

Our attention has been called to no decisions precisely in point. We have referred to those mentioned as supporting substantially our reasoning and the result arrived at. We do not regard the decision in State ex rel. Runge v. Anderson, 100 Wis. 523, 42 L. R. A. 239, 76 N. W. 482, as opposed in principle to either our reasoning or conclusions.

The purpose of the framers of our Constitution in requiring that, in all elections in either house of the legislature, the votes shall be given viva voce, is obvious. Equally obvious, in our opinion, is the purpose of the provision under consideration. It is undoubted, as is claimed by counsel for respondents, that, as early as 1835, the method of voting by the use of tickets was known. It was nevertheless important that the policy of the new state with reference to the subject of voting at elections should be declared in the Constitution. Agitation for the vote by ballot had only then begun in England, nor was it ended and the ballot assured until 1872. In 1835, and after, voting other than by ballot was practised in the United States. To say that the purpose of the framers of our Constitution was not to secure a particular mode of voting secretly, but was to make manifest in the organic and continuing law a policy to be perpetuated, is to give to the words of the instrument no forced or unnatural meaning. As was said by Mr. Justice Campbell in People ex rel. Williams v. Cicott, 16 Mich. 283, 297, 97 Am. Dec. 141: "Our whole ballot system is based upon the idea that, unless inviolable secrecy is preserved concerning every voter's action, there can be no safety against those personal or political influences which destroy individual freedom of choice." If we could imagine our Constitution adopted to-day, and the legislation in question enacted, with reference to all the facts stated, to-morrow, would it be contended that the legislation was unconstitutional because not providing that "votes shall be given by ballot?"

We are of opinion that we should not hold the legislation to be invalid for any of the reasons urged. The Circuit Court for the County of Wayne was in error in denying the writ of mandamus, which should issue as prayed. The proceeding being one of public interest and importance, no costs will be awarded.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

Maria VIZACCHERO, Admr., etc., of —— Vizacchero, Deceased,
v.

RHODE ISLAND COMPANY.

(.....R. I.....)

1. The speed of an electric car running along a sparsely settled country road in the space between intersecting crossroads in the dark is to be governed, not by the ability of the motorman to stop his car after discovering an object on the track by the aid of his headlight, but by the ability of persons on the track conveniently to leave it after seeing the light and hearing or understanding the signals given by the approaching car.

2. Failure to anticipate the presence of a man on his hands and knees on the track in front of an electric car on a dark night, and to run the car so as to provide for that contingency, is not negligence on the part of the motorman.

NOTE.—For a case in this series as to care required of persons crossing tracks of electric railway in country, see Keenan v. Union Traction Co. 58 L. R. A. 217.

For intoxication as affecting negligence, see Kingston v. Ft. Wayne & E. R. Co. 40 L. R. A. 131, and note; Bageard v. Consolidated Traction Co. 49 L. R. A. 424; and Wheeler v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 54 L. R. A. 955.

As to doctrine of last clear chance, see also Bogan v. North Carolina C. R. Co. 55 L. R. A. 418, and note, and Harrington v. Los Angeles R. Co. 63 L. R. A. 238.

3. The negligence of a man in crawling on his hands and knees towards an approaching electric car in the dark after the appearance of the headlight, which can be seen 800 feet away, is continuing, so as not to entitle his personal representative to hold the company liable for his death on the theory of last clear chance, because the speed of the car is so great that it cannot be stopped after his presence on the track is discovered.

4. Intoxication does not relieve a man from the degree of care required of a sober man under the same circumstances.

(September 21, 1904.)

PETITION by defendant for a new trial after verdict in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Judgment for defendant.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry W. Hayes, for defendant:

To say that a street car shall not be run any faster than at a speed which will enable the car to be stopped within the distance within which the headlight throws its rays is manifestly absurd.

Kline v. Electric Traction Co. 181 Pa. 276, 37 Atl. 522.

The decision that the motorman was proceeding in violation of his duty is wholly contrary to the rule established by innumerable decisions throughout the country, and also by the decisions of our own court.

Stelk v. McNulta, 40 C. C. A. 357, 99 Fed. 138; New York Condensed-Milk Co. v. Nassau Electric R. Co. 29 Misc. 127, 60 N. Y. Supp. 234; Murray v. Forty-Second Street, M. & St. N. R. Co. 9 App. Div. 610, 41 N. Y. Supp. 620; Mathison v. Staten Island Midland R. Co. 66 App. Div. 610, 72 N. Y. Supp. 954; Chicago City R. Co. v. Lewis, 5 Ill. App. 243; Winter v. Federal Street & P. Valley Pass. R. Co. 153 Pa. 27, 19 L. R. A. 232, 25 Atl. 1028; State use of Meidling v. United Railways & Electric Co. 97 Md. 73, 54 Atl. 612; Bittner v. Crosstown Street R. Co. 153 N. Y. 76, 60 Am. St. Rep. 588, 46 N. E. 1044.

Messrs. Frank T. Easton and Lofferts S. Hoffman also for defendant.

Messrs. Lewis S. Thompson and Livingston Ham, for plaintiff:

In the absence of evidence of due care, or want of due care, the plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of a presumption of due care on his part.

Cassidy v. Angell, 12 R. I. 447, 34 Am. Rep. 690; Judge v. Narragansett Electric Lighting Co. 21 R. I. 128, 42 Atl. 507; 69 L. R. A.

Northern C. R. Co. v. State, 29 Md. 420, 96 Am. Dec. 545; Johnson v. Hudson River R. Co. 20 N. Y. 65, 75 Am. Dec. 375; Prue v. New York, P. & B. R. Co. 18 R. I. 360, 27 Atl. 450; Tuff v. Warman, 5 C. B. N. S. 573.

Where both parties are negligent, and the negligence of each contributes in some degree to the injury sustained by the plaintiff, yet, if the negligence of the plaintiff is remote in point of time, and results merely in putting him or his property in a position or condition of danger, so that the acting or casual negligence of the defendant, otherwise harmless in the particular case, is given an opportunity to operate, a verdict for the plaintiff is proper.

Davies v. Mann, 10 Mees. & W. 546; Tuff v. Warman, 2 C. B. N. S. 740, 5 C. B. N. S. 573; Radley v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 10 Exch. 100; Pickett v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 117 N. C. 616, 30 L. R. A. 257, 53 Am. St. Rep. 611, 23 S. E. 264; Lloyd v. Albemarle & R. R. Co. 118 N. C. 1010, 54 Am. St. Rep. 764, 24 S. E. 805; Pharr v. Southern R. Co. 119 N. C. 751, 26 S. E. 149; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Grablin, 38 Neb. 90, 56 N. W. 796, 57 N. W. 522; Omaha Street R. Co. v. Martin, 48 Neb. 65, 66 N. W. 1007; Hilz v. Missouri P. R. Co. 101 Mo. 36, 13 S. W. 946; Moore v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo. App.) 75 S. W. 699; Haley v. Earle, 30 N. Y. 208; O'Brien v. McGlinchy, 68 Me. 552; Nashua Iron & Steel Co. v. Worcester & N. R. Co. 62 N. H. 159; Isbell v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 27 Conn. 393, 71 Am. Dec. 78; Northern C. R. Co. v. State, 29 Md. 420, 96 Am. Dec. 545; Prue v. New York, P. & B. R. Co. 18 R. I. 360, 27 Atl. 450.

This principle is not dependent upon an actual discovery of the plaintiff's dangerous position, and a want of due care after such discovery on the part of the defendant.

The liability is based, not on negligence arising after the discovery of the plaintiff's perilous predicament, but on negligence in failing to discover that predicament. Negligence after actual discovery of another's dangerous position comes very close to intentional injury, and in such cases the doctrine of contributory negligence does not apply.

Straus v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 75 Mo. 185.

Conceding that the plaintiff's intestate was drunk upon the track, this would not alter the defendant's duty towards him.

Lloyd v. Albemarle & R. R. Co. 118 N. C. 1010, 54 Am. St. Rep. 764, 24 S. E. 805; Pharr v. Southern R. Co. 119 N. C. 751, 26 S. E. 149; Isbell v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 27 Conn. 393, 71 Am. Dec. 78; Clayards v. Dethick, 12 Q. B. 439; Radley v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 10 Exch. 100.

Douglas, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is brought to recover damages for the death of the plaintiff's intestate, who was struck and mortally wounded by one of the defendant's electric trolley cars, which was coming towards the city, in the town of Johnston, about 8 o'clock, P. M., March 8, 1903. The place where the accident occurred was on Atwood avenue, a thinly settled country road 50 feet wide, having the car track located along one side, next to the sidewalk, leaving about 30 feet of unoccupied highway. The evening was dark and stormy, and the headlight and other lights of the car were lighted, and a person on the track approaching the place of the accident, and facing towards the car, had an uninterrupted view for at least 800 feet. The headlight enabled the motorman to distinguish objects upon the track within a distance of about 25 feet. A witness, who, with his wife and child, were the only passengers on the car, testifies that the car at the time of the accident was going, as he thinks, at the rate of 20 miles an hour. In cross-examination he admits that he could not see through the windows, which were obscured by the weather; that his attention was taken up by the child, with whom he was playing; and that his estimate of the speed of the car was merely a guess. The motorman and conductor testify that the car was going at the rate of from 9 to 12 miles an hour, as was customary at that place. The motorman testifies that, looking carefully ahead, he first saw the intestate on his hands and knees, upon the track, facing the car, about 25 feet away; that he immediately applied his brake and reversed the power, but, notwithstanding these efforts, which were all that he could make, the car struck the man, threw him to one side of the track, and stopped about 20 feet further on. It appeared from the evidence of the physicians who examined the plaintiff's intestate at the hospital that he had been drinking spirituous liquor, but there is no direct evidence that he was intoxicated. He had been seen, shortly before the accident, walking in his usual manner on the road. Jury trial having been waived, the case was tried before a single judge in this division, who decided that, while the plaintiff's intestate was negligent in approaching the car as he did, the defendant's servant was negligent in running the car so rapidly that, with the appliances at his command, he could not stop the car after the man was distinguishable by the headlight. And his conclusion was that the negligence of the defendant was the proximate cause of the accident. He therefore decided in favor of the plaintiff, and assessed the damages at $5,000.

69 L. R. A.

We think the learned judge erred in his finding that the defendant's servant was guilty of neglect of duty, and also in finding that the intestate's negligence was not the proximate cause of the accident. The duty of the driver of an electric car passing along a sparsely settled country road in the space between intersecting roads is not to be judged by the same rules with regard to speed which apply to the same car passing along the crowded street of a city. The care to be exercised is relative, and must be proportional to the danger reasonably to be apprehended at the time and place. Steik v. McNulta, 40 C. C. A. 357, 99 Fed. 138. The popular demand for electric cars rather than horse cars or omnibuses prevails at the present day because the former can carry more passengers, and at a more rapid rate, than the latter. In order to serve the public, these cars must be propelled as rapidly as safety will permit; and on long stretches of country road, where the statutes and town ordinances fix no limit to their speed, no given rate of speed is per se excessive. Kline v. Electric Traction Co. 181 Pa. 276, 37 Atl. 522. The duty of a traveler upon an unimpeded country road is to yield the use of the railroad track to an approaching car. The wilful and malicious obstruction of a street railway company in the use of its tracks is punishable as a misdemeanor. Gen. Laws 1896, chap. 279, § 65. The car cannot turn out, and so the traveler must. The conduct of the operator of the car may be lawfully predicated upon the expectation that the traveler will observe his duty in that regard.

The duty of the railroad company towards such travelers is not to stop its car when they appear, but to give them sufficient notice of the approach of the car to enable them to leave the track before the car arrives. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Graham, 46 Ind. 239-245; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Schwartz, 93 Ill. App. 387; McQuade v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 17 Misc. 154, 39 N. Y. Supp. 335. If the car is going only at such speed as will give a traveler ample time to leave the track, after he sees the light or hears the signal of the car, before the car reaches him, he has nothing to complain of. It is not running at excessive speed with regard to him. Bethel v. Cincinnati Street R. Co. 15 Ohio C. C. 381, 8 Ohio C. D. 310. It is therefore plain that the distance at which the light of the car can be seen or the bell or whistle can be heard and understood by travelers, so as to enable them conveniently to leave the track—not the distance that the motorman can see ahead—is the standard by which the speed of the car should be regulated. As it is not the duty of the car to stop within the limit of the illumination of the headlight, its speed need not be restricted to the rate prescribed by such a necessity. Such a general rule as that which the court announced is neither necessary nor reasonable as applied to the locality in question.

In the particular circumstances of this case we are unable to see that the defendant's servant was guilty of any negligence. Negligence is the failure to provide for some condition or event which may reasonably be expected, and the motorman in this case, in the place where he was going, had no reason to expect that any pedestrian would remain upon the track after the lights of the car were plainly visible. Certainly he had no reason to anticipate that he would encounter a human being upon the track, crawling towards the car upon his hands and knees, and it was not his duty to run his car so as to provide for such a contingency. After the man was seen, it is not suggested that the motorman was guilty of negligence, as he used every means in his power to stop the car before the collision. Stelk v. McNulta, 40 C. C. A. 357, 99 Fed. 138; Murray v. Forty-Second Street, M. & St. N. Ave. R. Co. 9 App. Div. 610, 41 N. Y. Supp. 620. It may be added, also, that there is no evidence that upon the wet and slippery track the car could have been stopped in time if it had been proceeding at a very moderate rate of speed.

Again, the court erred in holding that the plaintiff could recover notwithstanding his own negligence. The doctrine of proximate cause, sustained by a long series of decisions following Davies v. Mann, 10 Mees. & W. 546, as we have adopted it in this state, is clearly stated in Mahogany v. Ward, 16 R. I. 479, 27 Am. St. Rep. 753, 17 Atl. 860, and Prue v. New York, P. & B. R. Co. 18 R. I. 360, 27 Atl. 450. The plaintiff's counsel cites many cases in support of his contention that this case is governed by the rule. Some of the cases cited make, as it seems to us, quite unwarranted applications of it, to the extent almost of making a railroad company responsible for damages to the heirs of a suicide; but none go so far as would be necessary to absolve the plaintiff from contributory negligence in this case. Taking the words of Baron Parke in Davies v. Mann, "the negligence which is to preclude a plaintiff from recovering in an action of this nature must be such as that he could by ordinary care have avoided the consequences of the defendant's negligence," as a guide, it is plain that the plaintiff cannot recover; for her intestate, by ordinary care, could have avoided the car, which was visible at a distance of 800 feet, no matter how fast it was going. It was just as much the duty of the plaintiff's intestate to avoid the consequences of the defendant's negligence, if there was any, as for the defendant's servant to avoid the consequences of the intestate's negligence, if by any care and foresight he could have done so. The intestate's negligence was not remote in point of time, but continuous and coefficient with the act of the company. The court says, in O'Brien v. McGlinchy, 68 Me. 552, 558: "But this principle would not govern where both parties are contemporaneously and actively in fault, and by their mutual carelessness an injury ensues to one or both of them." In Isbell v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 27 Conn. 393, 71 Am. Dec. 78, it is said: "The negligence of the plaintiff, if there has been any, was not the proximate cause of the accident. To be so, it must have been simultaneous in its operation with that of the defendants, of the same kind, immediate, growing out of the same transaction, and not something distinct and independent of a prior date, remotely related to the negligence of the defendants." In the case of Prue v. New York, P. & B. R. Co. 18 R. I. 360, 27 Atl. 450, the victim was proceeding to extricate himself from the danger, and could have escaped but for the independent mistaken act of the gateman after he saw the position of the traveler. If the traveler had remained upon the track, with the gates open, the case must have been decided differently. In one of the most reliable textbooks on the subject of negligence, the rule, as formulated by a writer in the Quarterly Law Review, vol. 2, p. 507, is adopted as follows: "The party who last has a clear opportunity of avoiding the accident, notwithstanding the negligence of his opponent, is considered solely responsible." 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 165, § 99. The negligence of the plaintiff's intestate did not consist in walking upon the track, which he had a right to do until the car approached, but in remaining upon it after the car was plainly visible; and this negligence continued until the car struck him. The opportunity for him to escape began when he could have seen the car 800 feet away, and only ended a few seconds before he was struck. His neglect of this opportunity, as much as the approaching car, caused the accident. In Randall v. Union R. Co. (R. I.) 59 Atl. 165, we held that a nonsuit was properly granted where it appeared that the accident was caused by the failure of the plaintiff seasonably to turn off of the track after the car had reached a point where it could have been seen, or by the slipping of the horse on the hard snow. It has been held that a person riding between the rails of an electric street railway upon a bicycle has the duty to look out for and endeavor to avoid danger from the electric cars, and the negligence of a bicycle rider who continued to ride on the track of an electric car up to the very moment when he was struck, when, by the slightest care and effort on his part, he could have put himself out of danger up to the last moment, is a contributing and efficient cause of the injury which precludes the conclusion that the negligence in managing the car was later in time, and therefore the proximate cause of injury. Everett v. Los Angeles Consol. Electric R. Co. 115 Cal. 105, 127, 34 L. R. A. 350, 46 Pac. 889, 43 Pac. 207. The duty of a pedestrian is the same, and his opportunity is as great; and so it is clear that the contributory negligence of the plaintiff's intestate was a proximate cause of his death. In Ormsbee v. Boston & P. R. Corp. 14 R. I. 104, 51 Am. Rep. 354, it was held to be contributory negligence on the part of a deaf mute to cross a railroad track without looking for an approaching train, and that his administratrix could not recover, though the train gave no signal as it should have done.

A very instructive case, though not presenting the same facts affecting the question of the defendant's negligence as the case at bar, is State use of Meidling v. United Railways & Electric Co. 97 Md. 73, 54 Atl. 612, 613. The care required of one who attempts to cross the track of an electric road in the open country is strongly insisted upon. The case is directly in point on the questions of contributory negligence. The court says: "It is evident from all the evidence that we have here . . . a rapidly approaching car in the sight of the traveler, who, in spite of the fact that he saw it, drove leisurely on the track, and was run over and killed. It is conceded, of course, that the defendant was negligent in failing, perhaps, to give signals, and in running at a higher rate of speed than was allowable; but, under all the authorities, such negligence of the defendant does not palliate or excuse the negligence of the plaintiff;" citing Keenan v. Union Traction Co. 202 Pa. 107, 58 L. R. A. 217, 51 Atl. 742. So in Gilmore v. Federal Street & P. Valley Pass. R. Co. 153 Pa. 31, 34 Am. St. Rep. 682, 25 Atl. 651, it was held that "a person is guilty of contributory negligence 69 L. R. A.

who leaves a horse and wagon unguarded upon the track of an electric street railway, in a narrow and unlighted alley, on a dark night; and he cannot recover for injuries to the horse and wagon, although the railway company was also negligent in running the car at a rate of speed that did not permit its stoppage within the distance covered by its own headlight." The court says: "It is an unbending rule, to be observed at all times and under all circumstances, that a person about to cross the track of a street railway must look in both directions for an approaching car before attempting to cross. Ehrisman v. East Harrisburg City Pass. R. Co. 150 Pa. 180, 17 L. R. A. 448, 24 Atl. 596; Wheelahan v. Philadelphia Traction Co. 150 Pa. 187, 24 Atl. 688. But compliance with this rule would be an idle ceremony if a person might afterwards stop his horse or vehicle upon the track, relax his vigilance, and, leaving his horse unguarded, go into a building in the vicinity, and there remain any length of time whatever." And the judgment for the plaintiff was accordingly reversed. See also, to the same effect, New York Condensed-Milk Co. v. Nassau Electric R. Co. 29 Misc. 127, 60 N. Y. Supp. 234.

If the plaintiff's intestate had impaired his ability to take care of himself by getting intoxicated, that fact in no wise affects the case. Intoxication does not relieve a man from the degree of care required of a sober man in the same circumstances. Chicago City R. Co. v. Lewis, 5 Ill. App. 242; Baggeard v. Consolidated Traction Co. 64 N. J. L. 316, 49 L. R. A. 424, 81 Am. St. Rep. 498, 45 Atl. 620. In Bugbee v. Union R. Co. (R. I.) 59 Atl. 165, the plaintiff was walking upon the track, intoxicated, when he was struck by an electric car, and the court considered him culpably negligent.

As the record presents all the evidence attainable, and it conclusively appears that the plaintiff's intestate has no cause of action against the defendant, judgment will be entered for the defendant.

TEXAS COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEALS

Lee BEASON, Appt.,

v.

STATE of Texas.

(43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 442.)

1. The record of a prior conviction of theft, based upon a plea of guilty, is admissible in a prosecution for burglary, where the taking alleged in both cases is the same.
2. That accused was not admonished does not destroy the effect of a judicial confession in the nature of a plea of guilty in a prosecution for a misdemeanor.
3. A plea of guilty of the theft to commit which a burglary is alleged to have been committed does not, where the fact of burglary itself depends on circumstantial evidence, relieve the court of the necessity of instructing the jury as to the law governing convictions on circumstantial evidence.

4. A remark by the trial judge to counsel in the presence of the jury in a criminal case, indicating that in his opinion the case is not one depending on circumstantial evidence, and that he gives instructions on that subject only in deference to the opinion of the higher court, is reversible error.
5. It is reversible error for the trial judge to permit, without rebuke, the prosecuting attorney to state to the jury, in a prosecution for burglary, that, if they do not convict, we might as well tear down the courthouses; that, if defendant is not guilty,

NOTE.—Necessity of instruction as to law on circumstantial evidence.

- I. Introductory, 193.
- II. When evidence is entirely circumstantial.
 - a. In general, 193.
 1. Homicide, 193.
 2. Larceny, 195.
 3. Burglary, 197.
 4. Other crimes, 198.
 - b. Possession of stolen property, 198.
- III. When the evidence of guilt of accused is direct.
 - a. By positive testimony, 200.
 1. Homicide, 201.
 2. Larceny, 203.
 3. Robbery, 203.
 4. Rape, 204.
 5. Other crimes, 204.
 - b. By proof of the confession of accused.
 1. Homicide, 205.
 2. Larceny, 206.
 3. Burglary, 207.
 4. Other crimes, 208.
 - c. Plea of insanity, 208.
- IV. Where evidence is both direct and circumstantial, 209.
- V. Where instruction or request to charge, simply states abstract proposition, 210.
- VI. Testimony of accomplice, 211.
- VII. Necessity of request for instruction; or exception, 211.
- VIII. Refusal of request, the substance of which is elsewhere charged, 213.
- IX. Accused in juxtaposition to main or inculpatory fact, 214.
- X. As to question of intent, 215.
- XI. Miscellaneous cases, 216.

I. Introductory.

This note will be strictly limited to the subject contained in the title: that is to say, to the necessity of the instruction. It is believed that there is a unanimity of opinion among the several jurisdictions as to the rules which govern this subject, and that they are, in substance, that, in a criminal case where the prosecution is dependent solely upon circumstantial evidence, it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury as to the law governing that character of evidence, and that this is so only in those cases which depend solely upon circumstantial evidence. In many cases given herein the courts have quoted largely from opinions relating mostly, if not entirely, to the question of the sufficiency of a charge upon circumstantial evidence, but such cases have no place in the examination of the particular subject here being considered, and, of course, have not been included.

The other rule consists in the converse of the proposition mentioned, and is that where there is direct evidence of what the courts have frequently styled the inculpatory fact, whether such evidence consists in the positive assertions of witnesses, or the direct testimony, such as the confession, admission, statement, or testimony of the accused, or a plea the natural and only effect of which is to admit the existence of the inculpatory fact, no instruction concerning it need be given. As is well said in BEASON V. STATE, "What constitutes circumstantial evidence, and what constitutes a case depending solely upon circumstantial evidence, are two different questions." An endeavor has been made to preserve the distinction between the two, and to eliminate the consideration of the question first mentioned from the discussion.

II. When evidence is entirely circumstantial.a. In general.

The following cases are those which hold unqualifiedly to the rule mentioned, that where, in a criminal case, the evidence is purely circumstantial, a charge upon that branch of the law must be given, and severally contain the different circumstances and character of trials wherein the strict rule has been applied.

1. Homicide.

On a trial for murder, where all the evidence against the accused is circumstantial, he is entitled to an instruction on the law of circumstantial evidence, and the refusal to give an instruction asked for by him, which in all respects correctly states the law as to the ef-there are too many courts for the case to go through to permit his conviction; that the state has proved that defendant stole the property by his pleas of guilty, which the judge would not have entered if it was not true; so that the case is one of direct, and not circumstantial, evidence, although a 2 x 4 appellate court had held that it was the latter.

6. A claim that the jury in a criminal case was prejudiced by a report of a grand jury as to the enforcement of criminal law, which was read before them, comes too late on a motion for a new trial.

(February 12, 1902.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Clay County convicting him of burglary. Reversed.
The facts are stated in the opinion.

fect of such evidence, will nullify his conviction. State v. Moxley, 102 Mo. 374, 14 S. W. 969, 15 S. W. 556.

On a trial for murder, while the essential facts may be proved by circumstantial evidence, it is a well-established principle that it is necessary to caution the jury, in a proper instruction, as to the weight and effect to be given the circumstances detailed by the witnesses; and, where the evidence in the case is wholly circumstantial, the jury should be instructed as to the nature and conclusiveness of that character of testimony to warrant a conviction upon it. Territory v. Lermo, 8 N. M. 566, 46 Pac. 16.

On a trial for murder a witness testified that she saw the accused strike the deceased on the head with a piece of iron, and several minutes thereafter she heard a pistol shot, which she thought was in the same room where she had witnessed the blow. The evidence of experts made it clear that death did not result from the blow, but alone from the shot, although it was testified that the blow could, or might, have produced or brought about death in a few days, depending upon probable attendant and resultant effects of the blow. The court said, that conceding that the blow could have produced death in a few days, yet that time did not elapse, for the evidence showed that the shot took effect while deceased was living, and that it produced death, and, as no witness saw the pistol fired, it was left to be ascertained from inference or conclusions from the circumstances and facts developed on the trial who did the shooting, and, this being the case, the conviction was wholly dependent for its support on circumstantial evidence; and, although a charge upon this phase of the law was prepared, and requested by the accused, it was not given, and this was held to be error. Leftwich v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 489, 31 S. W. 385.

Where, on a trial for murder of a new-born infant, it appeared by the evidence of the child's mother that, directly after its birth, the defendant took the child into another room, and while there with the child she heard the sound of water; that thereafter the defendant brought the child, or its body, she could not tell which, into the room, there being no sound coming from the child showing that it was alive; and there, to her positive knowledge, he burned the child,—the court said that, if the

Messrs. Barrett & Barrett, for appellant:

The record of the former conviction was not admissible, because the state failed to show that the defendant had been properly admonished before he pleaded guilty.

Allen v. State, 18 Tex. App. 120; Black v. State, 18 Tex. App. 124; Walker v. State, 7 Tex. App. 245, 32 Am. Rep. 595.

Where the remarks of the district attorney in his closing argument are improper, and have probably injured the rights of defendant, when they are properly excepted to, and the court is requested to tell the jury not to consider them, and the objection and request are overruled by the court, the cause should be reversed.

Crow v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 264, child was drowned, then it was a case of circumstantial evidence, and the facts demonstrated this proposition. That the proof tended more strongly to show that it was drowned, and, this being a case of circumstantial evidence, the rules applicable to such a case should have been given in charge to the jury. And, even conceding that the circumstances—the facts—were in such close juxtaposition that they amount to positive proof that the child was burned to death, still the theory that it was drowned might have been adopted by the jury, and the accused convicted upon that theory, without proper instructions upon the rule applicable to a case depending upon circumstantial evidence. Puryear v. State, 28 Tex. App. 73, 11 S. W. 929.

Notwithstanding the fact that the court, on a trial for homicide, has already embraced in its charge the doctrine of reasonable doubt, an additional instruction must be given where the guilt of the accused is sought to be established upon circumstantial evidence only, viz., that the proof must be so clear and convincing as to exclude every other reasonable hypothesis than that of the guilt of the accused. Barnard v. State, 88 Tenn. 183, 12 S. W. 431.

In a criminal prosecution for murder, in which nothing is proved by positive testimony save the corpus delicti, and all the evidence to connect the accused with the crime is circumstantial, it is essential that the jury be further instructed as to the conviction which must impress itself upon their minds, drawn by inference from the circumstances in evidence, before they can say that, beyond a reasonable doubt, the accused perpetrated the act. Hunt v. State, 7 Tex. App. 212.

In this immediate connection, the court said further: "And it is believed that the adjudged cases in our state furnish no instance of a conviction for a grave felony upon circumstantial testimony alone, unless the charge of the court plainly directed the jury as to the principles of law which should govern them in reaching their conclusion: and we have already held it error to refuse a charge of this character when asked in a proper case. Harrison v. State, 6 Tex. App. 42."

On the trial of an indictment against two brothers for murder the trial court limited its charge upon circumstantial evidence to the case of one, thereby (as stated by the court of appeals) giving the jury to understand that the 26 S. W. 209; Brazell v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 333, 26 S. W. 723.

Neither the district attorney nor the court should be allowed to appeal to the prejudice of the jury, directly or indirectly, in order to obtain a conviction in a criminal case.

Moncallo v. State, 12 Tex. App. 171; Moore v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 306, 26 S. W. 403; Kirk v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 224, 32 S. W. 1045; Crow v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 264, 26 S. W. 209.

The court is not allowed in this state, and is expressly prohibited by the statute, from either directly or indirectly expressing or intimating an opinion as to the guilt of the defendant in a criminal case being tried before it.

Ibid.

In a criminal case the judge should so construct his charge as to place the burden of proof on the state.

Philbrick v. State, 2 Tex. App. 517.

Mr. Robert A. John for appellee.

Brooks, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant, Lee Beason, was charged by indictment with burglarizing a house occupied and controlled by Paul Schucht with the intent to commit the crime of theft, and that he did fraudulently take 15 bushels of corn, of the value of $6. His trial resulted case of the other did not depend wholly upon that character of evidence, but was supported, in part at least, by direct evidence. This was held to be error, as the charge upon circumstantial evidence should have been made applicable to the case of the one as well as to that of the other. It was a part of the law of both cases, and its omission from the charge has been repeatedly held to be error for which the judgment must be reversed, although such error was not excepted to at the trial. Conner v. State, 17 Tex. App. 1.

Upon an appeal from a conviction for manslaughter the court said that it was a case clearly of circumstantial evidence, and the trial court should have charged the law applicable to such a case, and a failure to do so was fundamental error, and the conviction was reversed. Elley v. State, 20 Tex. App. 106.

2. Larceny.

In the following cases the rule has been applied in trials for larceny.

On a trial for larceny, where all the evidence as to the accused was circumstantial, and the court, when requested by the counsel for the accused to charge the law of circumstantial evidence, refused to do so, and stated in the presence and hearing of the jury that he did not think that was in the case, this was held to be error, and a conviction was reversed. Hart v. State, 97 Ga. 365, 23 S. E. 831.

On a trial for larceny the evidence on behalf of the state, tending to prove the appellant's guilt, was all circumstantial, there being no direct evidence of such guilt, and the court having refused a request for an instruction as to the effect of circumstantial evidence,—that it was a case where the state sought a conviction on circumstantial evidence; that the accused was presumed to be innocent until the contrary was made to appear by the evidence; and that, in order to convict, the circumstances must be so strong as to exclude every other reasonable hypothesis, except that of the defendant's guilt,—this was held to be error for which a conviction was reversed. Wantland v. State, 145 Ind. 38, 43 N. E. 931.

On a trial for larceny, where there was no direct or positive evidence of the guilt of the accused, a refusal to instruct the jury that, before they could convict upon circumstantial evidence alone, the circumstances should be such as to exclude every other reasonable hypothesis than that of the defendant's guilt, is error for which a conviction will be reversed. Turner v. State, 4 Lea, 207.

On a trial for larceny, where it became necessary for the jury to determine from the evidence that the animals charged to have been stolen from the alleged owner were taken in a particular county, the evidence on this question being purely circumstantial, it was necessary for the judge to give to the jury an appropriate charge on circumstantial evidence, and the failure to do so was reversible error. Lindley v. State, 8 Tex. App. 445.

Where, on a trial for larceny, the evidence—apart from that establishing the corpus delicti, which was of a positive character—tended to the establishment of independent facts, from which the guilt of the accused must have been inferred, it was held that such evidence, in so far as it tended to fix guilt upon the accused, was wholly circumstantial, and the instruction requested by him as to the force and effect of such evidence was pertinent to the case, and should have been given. Eckert v. State, 9 Tex. App. 105.

Where the court in a case of theft gave two charges to the jury, the first of which was that the law prescribes no rule for the kind or amount of testimony other than that it must be sufficient fully to satisfy the jury of the existence of every fact necessary to constitute the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt; and the second instruction was that, unless the jury were satisfied of the existence of all the facts necessary to the guilt of the defendant, they would find him not guilty,—these were held to be defective and insufficient as a charge on circumstantial evidence, in that they failed to call attention to the subject at all, or to meet the requisites of any charges on the subject which had been approved in terms by either the supreme court or the court of appeals; but more particularly in that the charge failed to instruct the jury that the facts proved, from which the defendant's guilt was to be inferred, must not only be consistent with his guilt, but they must also be incapable of any other conclusion than the single one of his guilt. Barr v. State, 10 Tex. App. 507. In this case the court said that, in the opinion of the court, neither Taylor v. State, 9 Tex. App. 100, nor Brown v. State, 23 Tex. 195, decided the question whether or not a charge on circumstantial evidence should be given in a proper case, as a part of the law of the case.

in his conviction, and his punishment assessed at confinement in the penitentiary for a term of two years.

This is the second appeal (Beason v. State, 2 Tex. Ct. Rep. 921, 63 S. W. 633), and is a companion case to Murmutt v. State, now pending, involving substantially the same issues. The record contains eight bills of exception. The bills will be treated seriatim.

1. The facts show that the burglary committed and the theft which was consummated in its perpetration occurred some time between 12 o'clock noon of February 24th, and 12 o'clock of February 25, 1901, being Sunday and Monday, respectively. Appellant was arrested on Tuesday, February 26th, about 11 o'clock. When arrested he was in company with his codefendant, Murmutt. This arrest was upon a charge by information and complaint of theft of the corn from the house alleged to have been burglarized. On Thursday, February 28th, appellant duly entered his plea of guilty to the offense of theft in the county court of Clay county, and a judgment was on that day entered adjudging him guilty, assessing his punishment at a fine of $25 and ten days' imprisonment in the county jail. Subsequent to this judgment appellant was arrested, charged with burglarizing the said house, and was indicted by the grand jury of Clay county on March 19, 1901. Upon the trial of this case the state introduced the complaint and information and the judgment upon his plea of guilty in the theft case, to the introduc-

And yet in at least two cases (Vaughn v. State, 17 Tex. App. 562, and Wright v. State, 18 Tex. App. 358) Brown's Case has been cited as an authority that in a criminal case, where all the evidence is circumstantial, a failure to charge on the law of that kind of evidence is a fatal error.

And in Thomas v. State, 13 Tex. App. 493, the court said, in reversing a judgment of conviction because the charge did not present the law of the case: "Appellant was convicted in this case upon evidence wholly circumstantial. A rule of practice, settled in this state by decisions which have been iterated and reiterated, is that, where the inculpatory evidence is purely circumstantial, the charge of the court must expound to the jury the nature and conclusiveness of that character of evidence, to warrant a conviction upon it. It is part of the law applicable to the case, and cannot be omitted from the charge without causing error fatal to the conviction."

And in Lee v. State, 14 Tex. App. 266, the court said: "This is a case in which the evidence adduced on the trial to establish the guilt of the defendant was all circumstantial. There was no direct evidence proving that she committed the theft. Such being the character of the evidence, it was incumbent upon the trial judge to instruct the jury on the legal principles having relation to that kind of evidence. . . . In this case the court failed to charge the jury upon this subject, and therefore failed to charge the law applicable to the case, as has been well settled by the repeated decisions of the supreme court and of this court."

Upon an appeal from a conviction for the theft of a horse, where the trial court had neglected to charge upon the law of circumstantial evidence, the court, in reversing the judgment of conviction, said: "We are of the opinion that the evidence upon which the appellant was convicted is purely circumstantial; and that, therefore, the trial judge should have charged the jury the law applicable to such a case." Faulkner v. State, 15 Tex. App. 115.

On the trial of a prosecution for cattle stealing, where the evidence consisted mainly in facts which with more or less cogency tended to connect the accused with the killing of the animal in question, and some freshly butchered beef was found at their house, and there was a statement of one of the accused which tended to show his knowledge of the killing of the animal; but no witness saw the animal killed and no witness undertook to testify that the accused were ever in charge of the animal, or had possession of it, or were connected with the killing, otherwise than as stated,—it was held that, under this state of the case, a charge of the law applicable to a case of circumstantial evidence was demanded. Lopes v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 40 S. W. 595.

A charge that "theft may be established by circumstances—If the circumstances are sufficient to establish it beyond a reasonable doubt—that the defendant on trial, and no other person, took the same, if taken, from the possession of the owner," is tantamount to no charge on circumstantial evidence; and the refusal to make, in addition thereto, a charge which correctly states the law on the subject, is error for which a conviction will be reversed. Davis v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 54 S. W. 583.

On a trial for hog stealing, where the defense was that the accused took up several head of hogs that had been getting into his corn field, and they all got out but two, which he concluded to kill and appropriate, his defense being that he took up the entire bunch of hogs for an innocent purpose, i. e., to keep them out of his field, and that he subsequently formed the intent to kill and appropriate them, which he did; and the trial court refused to charge on circumstantial evidence,—on appeal from a conviction, the court said that, while there was some testimony on the part of the defendant in reference to his taking the hogs, it was not of the character of taking relied upon by the state for a conviction, and so the state's case depended mainly on circumstantial evidence, and a charge on that subject should have been given. Veasly v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 85 S. W. 274.

In each of the following cases it is decided that on a trial for larceny, where there is no direct evidence of the taking, or where all the evidence is circumstantial, an instruction on the law of circumstantial evidence is essential; and that a failure so to instruct the jury is error, for which a judgment of conviction will be reversed: Wyers v. State, 13 Tex. App. 57; Harris v. State, 13 Tex. App. 309; Montgomery v. State, 13 Tex. App. 669; Cook v. State, 14 Tex. App. 96; Garcia v. State, 15 Tex. App. 120; Howell v. State, 16 Tex. App. 93; Allen v. State, 16 Tex. App. 237; Kennedy v. State, tion of which appellant objected as shown by his first bill of exceptions. This evidence was admissible. The facts clearly show that the plea was entered for the identical theft that is alleged in the indictment in this case, it being alleged in this case as one of the elements of burglary. The objection that appellant was not admonished will not apply to a judicial confession in the nature of a plea of guilty in a misdemeanor, but only applies to felonies. Johnson v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. Rep. 625, 48 S. W. 70; Berliner v. State, 6 Tex. App. 181. We are now discussing only its admissibility. The legal effect of said plea of guilty and its probative force will be discussed later.

2. Bills of exception Nos. 1 and 2 complain that the court erred in permitting the witness Paul Schucht to give his opinion as to whether a man could step in at the south window of the west room of the house alleged to have been burglarized without raising it, and his opinion as to whether or not the door could have been opened by stock that were in the inclosure where the house was situated, his opinion as to the latter being based upon the fact that there was no evidence of stock being near the entrance in question. These two questions will be thoroughly discussed in the Murmutt Case (Tex. Crim. App.) 67 S. W. 508.

3. Bills Nos. 3, 4, 5, and 6 all involve the same subject-matter. A synopsis of the bills may be stated. In bill No. 4 an exception was taken to the following remarks of the district attorney: "The facts in this case

16 Tex. App. 258; Cooper v. State, 16 Tex. App. 341; Schindler v. State, 17 Tex. App. 408; Mathews v. State, 17 Tex. App. 472; Vaughn v. State, 17 Tex. App. 562; Dupree v. State, 17 Tex. App. 591; Murphy v. State, 17 Tex. App. 645; Wright v. State, 18 Tex. App. 358; Ramirez v. State, 20 Tex. App. 133; Crowell v. State, 24 Tex. App. 404, 6 S. W. 318; Fuller v. State, 24 Tex. App. 596, 7 S. W. 330; Guajardo v. State, 24 Tex. App. 603, 7 S. W. 331; Willard v. State, 26 Tex. App. 126, 9 S. W. 358; Arlsmendis v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 374, 54 S. W. 599, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 378, 54 S. W. 601; Scott v. State (Tex. App.) 12 S. W. 504; Deaton v. State (Tex. App.) 13 S. W. 1009; Bennett v. State (Tex. App.) 15 S. W. 405; Poston v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 35 S. W. 656; Stewart v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 77 S. W. 791.

See also Ray v. State, 13 Tex. App. 51; and Flores v. State, 13 Tex. App. 665, infra, VII.

8. Burglary.

Where, on a trial for burglary, the defendant requested the trial court to charge that the evidence against the defendant was purely circumstantial; and that his innocence must be presumed until the case against him is proved in all its material circumstances beyond a reasonable doubt; and that to find him guilty as charged the evidence must be so strong and cogent as to show his guilt to a moral certainty; and, unless it is established, the jury must find him not guilty, which request was refused,—this was held to be error, the record showing that the evidence against the accused was purely circumstantial. Gilmore v. State, 99 Ala. 154, 13 So. 536.

Upon a trial for burglary, where there was no contest at the trial as to the corpus delicti, and the inculpatory evidence tending to identify the accused as the guilty party was wholly circumstantial, and the jury, after remaining out from twelve to twenty hours, returned and requested the court for a further charge in reference to circumstantial testimony, in response to which the court said, among other things: "This case is not founded entirely upon circumstantial testimony. There is both positive and circumstantial testimony,"—the jury must have understood this to mean that there was some direct evidence to connect the accused with the offense charged. The charge was held 60 L. R. A.

to be erroneous, and the judgment of conviction reversed. Simmons v. State, 85 Ga. 224, 11 S. E. 555.

On a trial for burglary, when the evidence is entirely circumstantial, the jury should not be given a loose rein, but should have careful direction as to the quantum of proof necessary to justify a conviction. State v. Brady, 121 Iowa, 561, 91 N. W. 801.

Where the evidence on a trial for burglary is wholly circumstantial, the jury should be instructed as to the nature and conclusiveness of that character of testimony to warrant a conviction upon it. Struckman v. State, 7 Tex. App. 581.

And in Black v. State, 18 Tex. App. 124, a trial for burglary, the court, after holding that the charge was objectionable for another reason, said: "Another fatal objection to the sufficiency of the charge of the court is that it omits entirely to give the jury any instructions with regard to circumstantial evidence. The case was one wholly of circumstantial evidence, and the jury should have been properly instructed with regard to the rules pertaining to that character of testimony."

Where, upon a trial for burglary, the accused (who was a boy, in regard to whom there was a question whether he would have sense enough to know right from wrong), after a witness had stated to him that he knew all about it, and he might as well own up, as he had been seen in the store, and tell all about it, went off, and in a short while returned with a pistol that had been taken from the store at the time, and delivered it to the witness; but the witness did not say that the accused confessed to him that he committed the burglary,—while his bringing the pistol was a very strong circumstance of guilt, yet, not being accompanied by a direct confession, it was only a circumstance; and, such being the character of the testimony, it was the duty of the court to charge the law relative to that character of testimony; and, as this was not done, the judgment was reversed. Parker v. State, 20 Tex. App. 451.

On appeal from a conviction for burglary. It appeared that just prior to the arrest of the accused he made conflicting statements as to his right of possession of the property stolen, which he had undertaken to pawn on the day following the burglary. Such statements were made to the pawnbroker and the officer who arrested him. He introduced evidence to prove are so clear that you can't have a reasonable doubt as to the defendant's guilt; and, if you do not convict this defendant, we had just as well tear down our courthouses, and stop paying our officers salaries to try to enforce the law. The grand jury has done all that they could do. I have prosecuted this case with all my might, and the officers of the court have done all that they could do; and His Honor, the judge on the bench, is not going to help turn a guilty man loose. He is not that kind of a man that would let a criminal go free. It is true that, if the jury return a verdict of not guilty, the case will be ended; and, if this court thinks this defendant is not guilty, the jury should not think that he would sit there and let him be convicted. He is not made of that kind of stuff. If a defendant is not guilty, there is no danger of his being convicted, because there are too many courts for this case to go through for an innocent man to be convicted in the courts of Texas." The bill shows that this argument was made in reply to the following argument of defendant's counsel, which is quoted, as follows: "Gentlemen of the jury, I am now about to close this case. You see from evidence there have been several trials in this cause, which is indicative of the fact that there is something wrong about this matter, and illustrates the adage that 'a thing is never settled until it is settled right.' Therefore, gentlemen of the jury, I hope you will settle this case right, and end it by returning a verdict of not an alibi, and also in support of one of his statements,—that he obtained the property from another party. It was urged for reversal that the trial court had failed to charge the law applicable to a case dependent upon circumstantial evidence, and the court held that the charge should have been given. Robertson v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 26 S. W. 728.

In Gonzales v. State, 12 Tex. App. 657, a trial for burglary, the court said: "We find but a single error in the proceedings of which defendant can justly complain. The evidence against him was entirely circumstantial. It is well settled that, when the inculpatory evidence in a case is purely circumstantial, the charge of the court must expound to the jury the nature and conclusiveness of that character of testimony, to warrant a conviction upon it. It is a part of the law applicable to the case, and cannot be omitted from the charge without causing error fatal to the conviction. . . . In this case the court wholly failed to instruct the jury in regard to circumstantial evidence, which error was properly complained of by defendant in a bill of exceptions, and also in his motion for a new trial."

4. Other crimes.

In Daniels v. State (Tex. App.) 14 S. W. 895, the court said: "In the statement of facts we find no direct evidence that defendant, by a promise to marry the female, seduced and had carnal knowledge of her. Penal Code, art. 814. That he promised to marry her is proved only by the circumstance that he asked her mother's permission to do so. He never told anyone that he promised to marry her; nor did any witness testify that he made such a promise. No one testified that he ever had carnal knowledge of her, and, if he did have such carnal knowledge, it does not appear, at least by direct evidence, whether it was before or after he had made such promise. We regard the case as one of circumstantial evidence only, and to our minds the circumstances are of a weak and inconclusive character. Such being the character of the evidence, it was material and fundamental error to omit to instruct the jury in the charge as to the rules of law applicable to such evidence."

Where one was indicted for making a false instrument, but there was no charge of uttering the same, and the evidence is direct and positive as to the passing, but is only circumstantial as to the making thereof, which is the crime with which the accused is charged, a failure to charge on circumstantial evidence is fatal, and a judgment of conviction will be reversed. Hanks v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 56 S. W. 922.

b. Possession of stolen property.

The finding of property that has been stolen in the possession of the accused, which possession he does not satisfactorily excuse, explain or account for, or does so untruthfully, has been held to be prima facie evidence that he committed the larceny; but the single possession of such property, shown in the accused, is only a circumstance tending to prove his guilt, and which, without any positive proof as to the taking, renders the case one wholly depending upon circumstantial evidence, and a failure of the court to charge upon the subject is error; and the cases in this subdivision are those which, under varying circumstances, point out this rule.

In Gablick v. People, 40 Mich. 292, the court, in holding that the accused, on a trial for larceny, was entitled to an instruction that the fact of possession of stolen property, standing alone and unconnected with any other circumstance, afforded but slight presumption of guilt, for the real criminal may have artfully placed the property in the possession, or on the premises, of an innocent person, said that, while it was perfectly true that the jury must judge of the proper weight of the evidence, yet, when evidence was laid before them which only indirectly tended to raise an inference of guilt, and the importance of which must depend altogether upon circumstances, it was the right of the accused to have the jury instructed how those circumstances bore upon the presumption of guilt.

On a trial for theft, the court said that the case against the defendant—that is, his complicity with the taking of the stolen animal—was one wholly of a circumstantial character, as no witness testified to having seen him take the animal, and his first connection with it, as disclosed, was in his pasture after it had been taken from its accustomed range by someone; that he was the party who took it, therefore, was a fact derivable alone from other circumstances; and it was plainly the duty of the guilty; that a verdict of not guilty in a criminal case is so authoritative that it cannot be gainsaid by any power in this state; that it is the highest and most binding proceeding in such a case." In bill No. 5 the language complained of, as used by the district attorney, is as follows: "The state has proved that defendant stole the corn mentioned in the indictment by his plea of guilty. Do you believe that such a man as Judge Allen, your county judge, would let a man plead guilty that was not guilty and did not want to plead? You know that he would not. There is no circumstantial evidence in this case. The old court decided that when a man confessed his crime it was positive evidence, notwithstanding the fact that a little 2 x 4 court has since decided to the contrary. And I will say to you, gentlemen, you have positive evidence in this case, although the court may think it the safest to give you in charge the rule governing circumstantial evidence." And in bill No. 6, the following language, used by the district attorney and the court, is complained of: "The district attorney, in his argument before the court and jury, stated to the court, in the presence and hearing of the jury, and read an authority to the court, to the effect that, where a defendant had confessed his guilt, that a charge on circumstantial evidence should not be given; and that the rule of circumstantial evidence should not be given in this case, because this defendant had confessed the crime. And the court thereupon remarked, in the presence and court, under the facts of the case, to charge the jury with regard to circumstantial evidence; and the conviction was reversed. White v. State, 18 Tex. App. 57.

In Sullivan v. State, 18 Tex. App. 623, the court said: "The learned trial judge, and likewise the assistant attorney general, appear to entertain the view that evidence which proves that the defendant was found in possession of property recently stolen, and of which possession he gives no reasonable explanation, is positive and direct evidence that he committed the theft of such property; and that in such case a charge upon the rules governing circumstantial evidence is not required. We have always understood, and still understand, such evidence to be purely circumstantial, when regarded as evidence to prove the guilt of the defendant. Such is the character of evidence in this case, and the court failed to instruct the jury in the rules governing in such cases; for which error the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded."

Where one was convicted of the theft of a horse, and was seen in possession of the stolen animal about the time it was missed, but 25 miles distant from its range, no one seeing him take it from its range; and he did not confess to anyone that he had taken it, although his possession of the same, and his conduct in relation thereto, and all the other facts in the case sufficiently and cogently established his guilt of the theft; still all this evidence was circumstantial and none of it was direct and positive,—the court, on appeal, said: "We have no idea that the required instruction, which the court failed to give the jury, would have affected the result of the trial had it been given but the law required that such instruction should be given, and we have no discretion in the matter;" and the judgment, for that reason alone, was reversed. Counts v. State, 19 Tex. App. 450.

Recent possession is not positive evidence of theft; it is but a circumstance tending to establish it. A case dependent, alone, upon recent possession is a case of circumstantial testimony, and the law presenting that character of case should be submitted to the jury; because, while under certain conditions recent possession will support a conviction for theft, it is, in connection with such other conditions, only one of the circumstances from which guilt is inferred. Boyd v. State, 24 Tex. App. 570. 5 Am. St. Rep. 908, 6 S. W. 853.

Upon a trial for theft the evidence upon which the conviction was based was wholly circumstantial as to the taking of the alleged stolen animal by the accused. He claimed the animal as his property, admitted that he put his brand upon it, but claimed, also, that he had bought it, and he never admitted the taking; such being the character of the evidence, it was held that the trial court committed a material error in failing to charge the jury with respect to circumstantial evidence, and for this error alone the judgment was reversed. Crowley v. State, 26 Tex. App. 578, 10 S. W. 217.

Possession of recently stolen property is not positive evidence of theft, but is, at most, a circumstance tending to establish theft. A case, therefore, depending alone upon the possession of recently stolen property is a case resting upon circumstantial evidence; and in such case the omission of the trial court to charge the jury upon the law of circumstantial evidence is material error. Taylor v. State, 27 Tex. App. 463, 11 S. W. 462.

Where, on a trial for theft, there was no positive evidence that accused was the original taker of the horses, but the state relied for conviction mainly upon the fact of his possession of them shortly after their theft, together with such other inculpatory circumstances as were adduced to show such possession a guilty one, a charge upon the law of circumstantial evidence should have been given; and, as it was omitted, the judgment of conviction was reversed. Hyden v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 401, 20 S. W. 764.

Where, on a trial for theft, the original taking is to be inferred from the fact of subsequent possession, by the accused, of the alleged stolen property, this is a case of circumstantial evidence, and a failure to give a charge thereon to the jury will cause a reversal of a judgment of conviction. York v. State, 42 Tex. Crim. Rep. 528, 61 S. W. 128.

Upon a trial for stealing a cow, the court declined to charge as to circumstantial evidence, because the case did not depend wholly upon that character of evidence; but, on appeal from a conviction, the court said that it differed with the learned trial judge; that, while there were very strong circumstances to show that the defendant had put a cow in his field within a week hearing of the jury: 'I agree with you in your contention; but you know the court has ruled different in this case, and I can't say whether I will charge on circumstantial evidence.'" As a rule of practice it has been uniformly held that an improper argument—which, for the purpose of this case, must be conceded—is not ground for reversal, unless appellant not only objected to the same at the time, but followed up this objection by requesting the court by a charge in writing to instruct the jury to disregard the same; and that this charge, so requested, was refused by the court. White's Anno. Code Crim. Proc. § 766, and authorities cited. The exception to this rule is where the argument is so obviously of a character that is injurious in its nature, and such a flagrant disregard of the rights of the defendant, that it will be assumed a written charge requested and granted will not cure the error. However, in this case, the crucial test is not the impropriety of the district attorney in his argument, but rather the injury inflicted on appellant by the conduct of the learned judge. To better understand this, it will be necessary to state the history of this case. This was its second trial, the former trial being reversed by this court upon the sole ground that the trial court had failed to give a charge upon circumstantial evidence. The facts on this appeal and upon the former appeal are identical. If it was a case of circumstantial evidence on the first trial, it was likewise a case of circumstantial evidence on the

of the time that the stolen cow was missed, searched for, and the beef and hide found at defendant's house, which was alleged to be that of the stolen animal, still the witness did not see and identify the hide as that of the animal he had seen defendant drive up and have turned into his field, but the identity of the animal was wholly an inference to be deduced from circumstances; and this rendered a charge on circumstantial evidence essential. Smith v. State (Tex. App.) 12 S. W. 869.

In Navarow v. State (Tex. App.) 17 S. W. 545, where the defendant had been convicted of stealing a horse, the alleged owner testified that the horse was taken on the night of one day, or the morning of the next, and two other witnesses testified that on one or the other of two days, at night, the accused brought the horse to their house, and offered to sell one of them the horse on his paying him a small sum and agreeing to pay the balance the next day, when the accused should deliver the horse. He delivered the horse as agreed, and received the deferred payment, and later gave them a bill of sale. When accused offered to sell the horse the purchasers questioned his title. He assured them that the title was in himself; that the horse was his, and that he had purchased it. It was held that, under this state of the case, the court should have charged the jury upon the law of circumstantial evidence, which was not done, and the failure so to charge constituted such error as required a reversal.

On a trial for hog stealing it appeared that the hogs were taken perhaps half a mile or more from where they were found, and the accused was present with others who stole them, and, when discovered in possession of the hogs, ran off with the other persons. The court said that, if the accused ran because of his guilt, then his flight was a cogent fact against him; but, conceding the flight, it was not positive evidence of the taking, as it was as consistent with receiving or guilty connection with the transaction after the theft as with the original taking; and the trial court committed reversible error, under the facts of the case, in failing to explain to the jury the rules governing cases depending purely upon circumstantial evidence. Montgomery v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 20 S. W. 926.

Where, on a trial for stealing a horse in the Indian nation, and bringing it into a county where the trial was had, it appeared that the accused stated that he had brought the horse from the nation, it was held that this did not relieve it from being a case resting alone upon circumstantial evidence, as the main fact in the case was the theft of the horse in the nation, and not the bringing of it into the state, and there was no positive proof that the accused stole the horse, and the court should have given in charge to the jury the law applicable to a case of circumstantial evidence, which it failed to do; and the conviction was reversed. Green v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 34 S. W. 283.

Where, on a trial for cattle theft, there is no positive evidence of any eyewitness to the original taking, and possession by the accused alone is relied upon to prove inferentially the original fraudulent taking, the trial court should charge on the law of circumstantial evidence, and a failure to do so will reverse the conviction. Wallace v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 66 S. W. 1102.

Where on a trial for theft the only evidence against the accused was the possession of the property shown to have been recently stolen, this, by the unbroken decisions, is a case of circumstantial evidence, and requires the court to charge the law applicable thereto. Cortez v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 74 S. W. 907.

See also Doucette v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 45 S. W. 800, infra, III. b, 2, and Alderman v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 23 S. W. 685, infra, IX.

On trial for horse theft the defendant admitted the branding of the stolen animal, and it was proved that the animal was in his possession, and these two facts constituted a taking; and there is no error in failing to charge upon the law of circumstantial evidence. Gentry v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 497, 56 S. W. 68.

See also Alderman v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 23 S. W. 685, infra, IX.

III. When the evidence of guilt of accused is direct.

a. By positive testimony.

As has been stated in the beginning, the necessity or propriety of instructing the jury upon the subject of circumstantial evidence is excluded wherever the testimony as to the in-second trial. The reluctance of the trial judge on the second trial to treat it as a case of circumstantial evidence justifies this court in making a critical review of that proposition, because, if this court was in error in holding in the first instance that it was a case of circumstantial evidence, the remarks made by the trial judge on this trial might be rendered harmless. The court will assume, in approaching the discussion of this proposition, that the learned trial judge understood that if the case was one of circumstantial evidence, it was his duty to give the jury in charge the law upon the same. This rule is so universal in its acceptance, and has been so repeatedly announced by not only this court but the courts of other jurisdictions, that it would be a useless consumption of time and space to enter into its discussion. It is equally as well settled that a case is not to be treated as a case of circumstantial evidence requiring a charge upon the same where some of the material issues, incriminating and inculpatory, rest solely upon that kind of evidence. The distinction between circumstantial evidence and direct evidence is that in the first instance the facts apply directly to the factum probandum, while circumstantial evidence is proof of a minor fact, which, by indirection, logically and rationally demonstrates the factum probandum. This is illustrated by proof of recent possession of stolen property. In such a case, resting alone upon such inculpatory evidence, the eye of no witness saw the thief culpable fact is direct; and the following cases are those wherein the proof was the positive testimony of witnesses.

1. Homicide.

Where the court, in a criminal case, was requested to instruct the jury that, although the facts and circumstances might be strong enough to prove beyond a reasonable doubt every material link in the chain of evidence, save one, necessary to show the guilt of the defendant, yet, if the jury had a reasonable doubt, issuing out of the evidence, as to the truth of this one link, they should acquit the defendant, the court, in reviewing a conviction for murder, said that, apart from the obscurity involved in the truth charged as to what was meant by this reference as to doubting the truth in a chain of evidence, the metaphor was inapt as applied to the case, where the evidence connecting the defendant with the killing did not consist of a chain of circumstances, but was direct, positive, and undisputed. Wilson v. State, 128 Ala. 17, 29 So. 569.

In Purvis v. State, 71 Miss. 706, 14 So. 268, the court said that some of the instructions given for the defendant might well have been refused, for the proof of his guilt was not dependent upon circumstantial evidence, but rested upon the direct and positive testimony of an eyewitness; that all those instructions, therefore, which were predicated on the weight to be given to circumstantial evidence might well have been refused, and that those of the same character which were denied were properly denied.

The report only shows that the conviction was for a capital offense, but the particular offense is not stated.

In State v. Robinson, 117 Mo. 649, 23 S. W. 1066, a conviction of murder, where it was claimed, upon the authority of State v. Moxley, 102 Mo. 374, 14 S. W. 969, 15 S. W. 556, supra, II., a. 1, that an instruction such as was held to be necessary in that case, should have been given, the court said that such an instruction was inapplicable to the facts in this case, because here, although there was some circumstantial evidence which strongly corroborated the confession of the accused, yet the whole was positive testimony, and a charge as to the circumstantial evidence was unnecessary.

In State v. Fairlamb, 121 Mo. 137, 25 S. W. 69 L. R. A.

895, on a trial for murder it would appear that the jury had been instructed on behalf of the state on circumstantial evidence, which instruction the court held should not have been given, as the killing was shown by direct and positive evidence, and did not depend for its proof on circumstances, and that it was only where the crime is sought to be shown by facts and circumstances that such an instruction should be given; but added that the case should not be reversed upon that ground alone.

See Rountree v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 58 S. W. 106, infra, III. a. 5.

In Taylor v. State, 9 Tex. App. 100, the court said that it was not clear that a charge by the court upon the law of circumstantial evidence was essential, as the presence of the accused at the scene of the homicide was established by competent evidence of a positive nature.

Where, upon a trial for murder, the court had properly admitted the testimony of the deceased, in writing, taken at the examining trial of the accused upon a charge of assault with intent to murder deceased, which rendered the case not one of circumstantial evidence; and the court was not required to charge the law applicable to that character of testimony,—the charge, having failed to do so, was not, therefore, obnoxious to the objection urged in that regard. Hart v. State, 15 Tex. App. 202, 49 Am. Rep. 188.

In Sharpe v. State, 17 Tex. App. 486, the court said: "It is further objected to the charge that it does not instruct the jury as to the law of circumstantial evidence. This objection is clearly not tenable, because the evidence establishing defendant's guilt is direct and positive, and not of a circumstantial character. The law of circumstantial evidence should not be charged, except in cases where the state relies solely upon that character of evidence to obtain a conviction."

It is not required, in order to dispense with a charge on circumstantial evidence, that the defendant's guilt should be established by direct evidence. It is only when the inculpatory evidence is wholly circumstantial, and where the defendant's guilt is dependent wholly upon that character of evidence, that an instruction as to circumstantial evidence is required. And, upon a trial for murder, that the defendant killed the deceased is an inculpatory fact, and when this fact is proved by direct evidence the in the act of taking the property stolen. But the witness may testify directly to the fact of seeing the thief, recently after the crime, in possession of the stolen property, and, when his possession was challenged, either declined to explain, or gave an explanation which was false, from which circumstances of the possession, directly sworn to, and circumstances of a failure to explain or a false explanation, the factum of the taking is inferred or deduced by the process of reasoning. But what constitutes circumstantial evidence, and what constitutes a case depending solely upon circumstantial evidence, are two different questions. It has been held that a charge on circumstantial evidence is necessary only when the case rests "solely" and "alone" upon circumstantial evidence. The construction of the word "solely" or "alone" has been repeatedly construed in this state by every court of last resort, and the decisions of this state have been followed with approval by the courts of other jurisdictions. The rule is this: That it is only necessary where the main fact, or, as one case puts it, "where the gravamen of the offense," or, as another case has it, "where the act of the crime," rests solely upon circumstantial evidence, that then it becomes a case known as a case of circumstantial evidence requiring a charge upon that. In the Buntain Case, 15 Tex. App. 515, Judge White used the following language: "If a court were required to charge the law of circumstantial evidence in all cases where reliance was had necessity of a charge upon circumstantial evidence is dispensed with. Self v. State, 28 Tex. App. 398, 13 S. W. 602.

Where the accused and another were indicted for murder of a person who had been shot by such other person, and the accused had demanded and been granted a separate trial, and on such trial the theory of the state was that the defendant and the other person indicted with him and who had fired the shot which killed the person for whose murder they were charged, acted together in the commission of the homicide in pursuance of a previously formed and common design, the evidence of which was circumstantial, it was held that a charge as to circumstantial evidence was not necessary, the killing of the deceased being proved by direct and positive evidence. Weatherby v. State, 29 Tex. App. 278, 15 S. W. 823.

But see Jones v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 490, 30 S. W. 1059, 31 S. W. 664, infra, X.

Where, on a trial for murder, the facts relating to the homicide are testified to by an eyewitness, there is no necessity for the court to charge on circumstantial evidence. Campbell v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 38 S. W. 171.

Where, on a trial for murder, the evidence was direct and positive from an eyewitness that the defendant shot and killed the person for whose murder he was being tried in the perpetration of robbery, the court did not err in failing to charge on the law of circumstantial evidence. Jones v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 177, 20 S. W. 354.

Where, on a trial for murder, the presence of the accused at the place of the homicide, and that he fired the fatal shot, were established by the positive testimony of eyewitnesses, an omission of the court to charge on circumstantial evidence was not error. Russell v. State, 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. 590, 44 S. W. 159.

Where, on a trial for murder, several eyewitnesses testified to the killing, the court did not err in failing to charge on the law of circumstantial evidence. Jones v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 77 S. W. 802.

Where, on a trial for murder, it appeared that there was proof of the confession of the accused to a witness, and the evidence of another witness testifying to the fact of the killing, he being an eyewitness, and the testimony of the defendant himself, in which he testified positively that he did the killing, a charge upon circumstantial evidence was unnecessary; as a charge on this subject is only necessary where the case is one wholly of that character of evidence. Yancy v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 87 S. W. 693.

Where the main proof of the prosecution in a criminal case was the direct testimony of eyewitnesses, who testified that they saw the accused shoot the deceased, a request to instruct the jury as to the effect of circumstantial evidence, which assumes that the main case of the prosecution rested upon circumstantial evidence, which was not the fact, should be denied. People v. Lem Deo, 132 Cal. 199, 64 Pac. 265.

The court said further, in the same connection, that the substance of the instruction was given in other parts of the charge.

Where, on a trial for homicide, the killing of the person for whose murder the accused is on trial is shown by positive testimony, a failure of the court to charge on circumstantial evidence is not error. Augustine v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 59, 96 Am. St. Rep. 765, 52 S. W. 77.

On a trial for murder, where there is a witness to the killing whose testimony, as to all facts prior to the killing, except one, is corroborated by the statement of the accused himself, there is such direct evidence as will render a charge on circumstantial evidence unnecessary. Gibbs v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 20 S. W. 919.

Upon a trial for assault with intent to murder, where the evidence was pointedly positive that the accused inflicted several wounds upon the assaulted party, who testified directly to it, and the defendant himself testified that he inflicted two of the wounds, the court, in affirming a conviction, said that it was unable to see how a charge on circumstantial evidence was applicable to, or required by, the facts of the case. Upchurch v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 39 S. W. 371.

On a trial for murder the dying declarations of the deceased, as well as testimony of eyewitnesses, showed that the accused committed the crime; and it was held that this took the case out of the realm of circumstantial evidence. Cruse v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 77 S. W. 818.

Where, on a trial of one for the murder of his wife, after she was shot, and when she said she was dying, she stated that the accused, her husband, naming him, shot her, and she died in about an hour and a half thereafter, it was upon circumstances to establish any particular fact, then, indeed, there would be but few, if any, cases in which such a charge would not be required; but such is not the rule. A charge upon circumstantial evidence is only required when the evidence of the main facts essential to guilt is purely and entirely circumstantial." In the Hanks Case, 56 S. W. 922 (opinion rendered by this court), in reference to whether or not positive evidence of uttering a forged instrument, where the indictment was for the forgery, was sufficiently direct to lift the case out of the realm of circumstantial evidence, the following language was used: "We are aware of the rule, and we adhere to the same, that, when the main act constituting the gravamen of the offense is proved by direct testimony, and the intent merely with which the act was done is proved by circumstantial evidence, the charge on circumstantial evidence will not be absolutely necessary." But perhaps the best case in point is Jones v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 492, 30 S. W. 1059, 31 S. W. 664. In this case the discussion of the principles applied to burglary is involved. At the risk of being prolix, but in order that the same may be made clear, we quote copiously from that case: "Mr. Starkie, in his work on Evidence (§ 863), says: 'The force of circumstantial evidence being exclusive in its nature, and the mere coincidence of the hypothesis with the circumstances being, in the abstract, insufficient, unless they exclude every other supposition, it is essential to held that her statements, whether regarded as res gestæ, or dying declarations, relieved the court of the necessity of charging the law of circumstantial evidence, as they were an emphatic declaration that the accused shot her. Hernandez v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 81 S. W. 1210.

2. Larceny.

Where two witnesses testified on the trial of an indictment for larceny to seeing accused in the act of removing the ring from the cravat of the prosecuting witness while he was asleep, such can hardly be said to be a case of circumstantial evidence, and a refusal to charge as to the effect thereof is not error. People v. Burns, 121 Cal. 520, 58 Pac. 1096.

Where, on a trial for the theft of two head of cattle, it appeared, in substance, that the alleged owner was the owner of the cattle and the brand upon them, and that the accused knew both the facts, and had advised another against estraying one of them, assigning as his reason therefor that it was the owner's and in his brand; and subsequently this animal found its way into the pasture of the accused, a few miles from where it usually ran, and ran in his pasture two or three months, but there was no evidence as to how it reached there; and the accused knew of the presence of the animal in his pasture for some months, and so stated after his arrest for its theft; and thereafter the accused appeared at the pasture with a stranger, whom he introduced to a witness whom he had agreed to meet there, and the stranger sold the animals in question to the accused, who wrote a bill of sale from the stranger to himself, and the stranger signed it, and, as soon as the bill was executed the stranger changed the marks and brand on the cattle so as to obliterate the old ones; and the accused then drove the cattle away, and the stranger disappeared and was never heard of,—this was held not to be a case demanding an instruction to the jury on the law of circumstantial evidence. Hayes v. State, 80 Tex. App. 404, 17 S. W. 940.

In Rodgers v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 563, 38 S. W. 184, the court said: "A charge on circumstantial evidence in theft is not required if a taking is shown by positive testimony."

On appeal from a conviction for theft, where there was direct and positive evidence as to the taking by the accused, it was held that the court did not err in omitting to charge on circumstantial evidence. Granado v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. 426, 35 S. W. 1069.

On a trial for theft of cattle, where the evidence was positive and direct as to the taking, the defendant himself having so testified, it was held that it was not a case of circumstantial evidence, and therefore the court did not err in omitting a charge on that phase of the law. Blanton v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 26 S. W. 624.

On a trial for theft of cattle, where a witness testifies positively as to the act of taking, if he is to be believed by the jury the case is one of positive testimony, and a charge upon the law of circumstantial evidence is not required. Taylor v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 42 S. W. 285.

On a trial for larceny, where positive evidence of the guilt of the prisoner had been adduced, a refusal of the court to charge that, the case being one of circumstantial evidence, the jury must acquit, unless the circumstances exclude any other hypothesis except that of the prisoner's guilt, was held to be correct, as such an instruction must necessarily have been predicated upon the assumption that positive evidence which had been adduced was unworthy of credit. People v. Kaatz, 3 Park. Crim. Rep. 129.

Where, upon a trial for the theft of cattle, the evidence for the state showed that the defendant sold the animals, went with the purchaser upon the accustomed range, and drove them up and delivered them, this was held by the court, on appeal from a conviction, to be the actual taking and proof positive thereof, and the court committed no error in failing to charge the law of circumstantial evidence. Williams v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 44 S. W. 1103.

Where, on a trial for cattle theft, the only issue in the case was the identity of the animal, and the prosecuting witness swore that the animal stolen belonged to him, this did not raise the issue of circumstantial evidence, and a failure to charge thereon was not error. Gann v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 59 S. W. 896.

3. Robbery.

In Colter v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. 284, 39 S. W. 576, it was held that on a trial for inquire with the most scrupulous attention what other hypotheses there may be which may agree wholly or partially with the facts in evidence.' The court, in Beavers' Case, said: 'We can conceive of no hypothesis by which, in the order of natural causes and effects, the facts proved can be explained consistently with the innocence of the prisoner; and this is the true test of circumstantial evidence. It excludes all reasonable doubt of the prisoner's guilt.' 58 Ind. 531, 537. But this principle applies only to proof of the act, and not to proof of the intent. Accordingly, in a case of burglary, an instruction which contained the following sentence was properly refused: 'Where a criminal intent is to be established by circumstantial evidence, the proof ought to be, not only consistent with the defendant's guilt, but it must be wholly inconsistent with any other rational conclusion than that of the defendant's guilt.' The court said: 'This rule is proper when the act which is claimed to be criminal is sought to be established by circumstantial testimony. But when the act is proved by direct testimony, and all that remains to be found is the intent which accompanied the act, and which may be inferred from the circumstances accompanying the act, then this principle does not apply.' In the reversal of this case upon its former appeal this court said: "Now, while it is true a confession to the burglary would take the case out of the rule, yet a confession to theft alone, under the circumstances of this case, would not make robbery a charge on circumstantial evidence is not called for where there is positive evidence of the participation by the accused in the robbery.

On a trial for robbery, where the prosecuting witness identified the accused as one of the parties who robbed him, this was held to be a case of positive testimony, which did not require that the court give a charge on circumstantial evidence. Evans v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 31 S. W. 648.

Where, on a trial for robbery, the person robbed testifies directly to the facts, and positively identifies the accused as the person who robbed him, this is not a case dependent upon circumstantial evidence, and a failure to charge in regard to the same is not error. Broak v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 43 S. W. 988.

4. Rape.

Where, on a trial for rape, the defendant's guilt is established by direct and positive evidence,—in the language of the court, "as much so as possible for human evidence to be,"—a request by the accused that the court charge that the evidence for the state must exclude every other hypothesis than that of the prisoner's guilt, and, unless it is so conclusive, they shall find the defendant not guilty, is properly refused. Cone v. State, 13 Tex. App. 483.

And in Ellis v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 86, 24 S. W. 895, the court said: "There was no error in refusing the charge of circumstantial evidence. The testimony is positive that defendant committed the rape."

In Ricks v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 87 S. W. 345, the court, in affirming a judgment of conviction for rape, said: "Exceptions were reserved to the charge because it failed to submit the law of circumstantial evidence. This is not a case of circumstantial, but of most positive, testimony. The girl testified fully in regard to the whole matter,—as to the intercourse, and all the facts and attending circumstances. Nor was it necessary for the court to submit the law of aggravated assault, as urged by appellant. This was a case of rape, if the state's testimony is true. If appellant's theory is correct, the transaction did not occur. The [prosecutrix] testified directly and positively to the penetration. Appellant, the only other eyewitness, testified that it did not occur, and contradicted the entire testimony of the prosecutrix."

89 L. R. A.

Where a request to charge, on a trial for rape, is based upon the assumption that the case of the prosecution rests exclusively upon circumstantial evidence, which assumption is not true, such request is properly refused. People v. Baldwin, 117 Cal. 244, 49 Pac. 186.

5. Other crimes.

Where, on a criminal trial for forgery, all the evidence of the guilt of the accused is circumstantial, an assignment of error that the court erred in charging on circumstantial evidence because the case depended on positive evidence will not be sustained. Rountree v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 58 S. W. 106.

See State v. Fairlamb, 121 Mo. 137, 25 S. W. 895, supra, III. a. 1.

It is never necessary to charge the law of circumstantial evidence in a criminal prosecution, where the testimony as to the inculpatory fact is direct and positive; and so a conviction for passing a forged check will not be reversed where the evidence as to the forgery was circumstantial, but the passing of the forged instrument by the appellant was direct and positive,—as where he testified to the fact himself. Wolf v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 53 S. W. 108.

On a trial for fraudulently converting the property of another, where the evidence was positive and direct that the accused made a contract with the owner of the horse, and hired the horse to make a trip into the country from the place of the hiring, and was also direct and positive that the accused had possession of the horse in the county of the trial, and sold it; and the fact that the owner, having sent the horse by a hired hand, could not swear that the latter delivered the horse in person to the accused, did not take it out of the realm of positive testimony. Lewallen v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 87 S. W. 1159.

Where the offense of which one was convicted was charged to be swindling by obtaining an amount of money of a bank on a false representation; and the proof showed that the accused made the representation directly to the bank, and drew his check in favor of the bank against another bank; and the representation was shown by an employee of the latter bank to be false; and the defense predicated on the defendant's testimony was a positive claim by him that he believed that he had at the charge of burglary a case of positive evidence. The possession of the corn recently after it was stolen would only be a circumstance pointing to the burglary, for the corn may have been stolen, and yet no burglary committed." See Wooldridge v. State, 13 Tex. App. 443, 44 Am. Rep. 708; State v. Calder, 23 Mont. 504, 59 Pac. 909; Leeper v. State, 29 Tex. App. 154, 15 S. W. 411. Therefore it is clear that, where the act constituting the main essential fact of a crime is testified to by direct evidence, it is not a case of circumstantial evidence. But where the main fact or the act constituting the crime is shown by indirection, it is a case of circumstantial evidence, although the intent may rest upon positive proof. What is the main fact or the act of a crime in a case of burglary? In murder it is the fact of the homicide; in theft it is the act of the taking; in burglary it is not the intent with which it is committed,—it may be with the intent to commit the crime of theft, robbery, rape, murder, or any other felony. The main essential fact of burglary is the breaking and entering of the house. The commission of the crime intended when the house was entered need not be executed, and yet the crime is complete. Martin v. State, 1 Tex. App. 525. In this case, both upon this trial and upon the former appeal, no human eye saw, nor did a human lip testify to, the actual breaking of the house alleged to have been burglarized. That it was broken and entered depends solely upon inferences and deductions. It was arrived the time more than the amount in the latter bank,—there was no occasion for the court to give a requested instruction upon the law of circumstantial evidence, as the case did not depend wholly upon evidence of that character. Brown v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 43 S. W. 986.

On a trial under what is ordinarily known as "the Whittcapping statute," for sending a threatening letter to the prosecutor, an assistant postmaster testified that he had seen three letters, one addressed to the prosecutor and two others each to another individual, and that he saw the accused put the envelopes containing those letters in a mail box. It was held that this was positive evidence as to the mailing of the letters by the accused, and, hence, it was not incumbent upon the court to charge on the law of circumstantial evidence. Dunn v. State, 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 25, 63 S. W. 571.

Where one was convicted upon a count of an indictment which charged another with the offense of offering to bribe a witness in a criminal case to disobey an attachment, and charged the accused as being an accomplice of such other in the commission of the offense; and the witness in the criminal case testified that the defendant told him that he could make a certain sum if he would leave the country and not appear as a witness, and advised him to accept it,—it was held that the case was not one of circumstantial evidence only, as the testimony of the witness was direct as to the guilt of the accused; and the refusal of the court to give an instruction requested by counsel for the accused, explaining the rules as to the consideration and sufficiency of circumstantial evidence, was no error. Leeper v. State, 29 Tex. App. 154, 15 S. W. 411.

Where, upon the trial of an indictment for gaming, a witness testified directly to the commission of the offense by the accused, it was held that, in view of the direct testimony of the witness, the judge did not err in not giving in charge rules of law applicable to cases founded on circumstantial evidence. Moore v. State, 97 Ga. 759, 25 S. E. 362.

Upon the trial of an indictment for gaming it was held that the rule that the guilt of the accused must be established to the exclusion of any other hypothesis applies in cases depending upon circumstantial evidence, and a refusal to charge such rule is not error in a case where the evidence is direct. Cohen v. State, 32 Ark. 226.

In Jones v. State, 23 Tex. App. 501, 5 S. W. 138, the court said: "It was not error to omit to give the jury a charge explaining the rules governing in cases of circumstantial evidence. In this case the evidence of defendant's incestuous acts was direct and positive. It is only when the evidence relied upon for a conviction is wholly circumstantial that such a charge is required."

b. By proof of the confession of accused.

Wherever evidence is given of the confession, admission, statement, or testimony of the accused as to the inculpatory fact, this is held to be the equivalent of positive proof of the same, and the cases herein are of that character.

1. Homicide.

Where the prosecution on a trial for murder has given evidence of the confession of a defendant as to the commission of the act constituting the crime, it is not error in the trial court to refuse to instruct as a fact that the evidence in the case is entirely circumstantial. Green v. State, 97 Ala. 59, 12 So. 416.

On an application for a rehearing the conviction was reversed for other reasons. See 97 Ala. 64, 15 So. 242.

Where, on a trial for manslaughter, the corpus delicti is clearly established by competent proof, and there is proof of the defendant's confession, these, if credited by the jury beyond a reasonable doubt, are alone sufficient to require a conviction, and other circumstances are additional proof of the guilt of the defendant; and charges as to the effect of circumstantial evidence are properly refused. Dennis v. State, 118 Ala. 72, 23 So. 1002.

Upon the trial of an indictment for murder, the court was requested to charge upon the law of circumstantial evidence, the request being evidently based upon the theory that there was no direct evidence of the guilt of the accused. The court said that it could not say that the request was improperly refused, for there was evidence of a confession that the accused actually participated in the killing, and such evidence is not circumstantial, but direct. Perry v. State, 110 Ga. 234, 36 S. E. 781.

As to the proposition that evidence of a con-at by the method of exclusion. True, appellant pleaded guilty to the theft of the corn; but what was the effect of his plea? It was merely an admission of all the facts alleged in the complaint and information charging theft. "A plea of guilty," says Mr. Bishop, "is a recognition of whatever is well alleged in the indictment." Crow v. State, 6 Tex. 334; Doans v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 468, 37 S. W. 751. There was no allegation in the complaint and information charging theft alleging the breaking of the house; and, if it were there, it would not be well alleged, and a confession by way of a plea of guilty to the theft would not evidence the fact of the breaking of the house alleged to have been burglarized. This court has never held that a confession of one crime was direct proof and positive evidence of the commission of another. Such a contention is so illogical that the statement carries with it its own refutation. A judicial confession admitting only the necessary allegations of the charge, while it becomes a confession that is conclusive against appellant in the case in which the confession is judicially made, could only become an admission of those facts when they become a material inquiry in another case based upon another charge, tried in another forum. It is thus seen that the principle laid down in the former opinion in this case is not only well settled, not only in accordance with uniform precedent, but responds to the dictates of reason. In this case the only question that needs to be considered is whether fession is not circumstantial, but direct, the court cited Eberhart v. State, 47 Ga. 598, in which the court said, at page 609: "Confessional evidence may be circumstantial; as, for instance, if it be of a fact, which is itself but a circumstance, from which guilt is inferable. But confessions may be of the fact of the crime itself,—of its actual commission, or of actual aid, by the prisoner, in the commission. It is, then, direct evidence. The confession is only the mode of proof."

Evidence of the confessions of the accused in a murder case is positive evidence, and, if believed, condemns the accused out of his own mouth; and in such case a charge as to circumstantial evidence is unnecessary. Heard v. State, 24 Tex. App. 103, 5 S. W. 846.

On a trial for murder, where the testimony is positive that the accused, and he alone, killed the person for whose murder he is being tried, of which fact there is not a shadow of doubt, he himself having said that he killed him, a failure of the court to instruct as to the law of circumstantial evidence is not reversible error. Clore v. State, 26 Tex. App. 624, 10 S. W. 242.

On a trial for murder, where the accused confessed and never denied that he himself, and he alone, killed the person for whose murder he is on trial, and there is no controversy at all as to that fact, a charge upon circumstantial evidence is not demanded. Johnson v. State, 28 Tex. App. 17, 11 S. W. 667. The case, however, was reversed for other reasons.

Where, upon a trial for murder, there was proof that the defendant confessed to having committed the murder, such a confession is direct, and not circumstantial, evidence, and the inculpatory evidence cannot be said to be wholly circumstantial; and it is only when the inculpatory evidence is wholly circumstantial that an instruction as to that character of evidence is demanded. Smith v. State, 28 Tex. App. 300, 12 S. W. 1104.

In homicide the factum probandum is the destruction of the life of the deceased by the act, agency, or procurement of the accused; and where, on his trial, the latter admits the killing of the deceased, that fact is not wholly proved by circumstances, but is also directly attested by an eyewitness,—that is, by the defendant himself. Self v. State, 28 Tex. App. 398, 13 S. W. 602.

In White v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 625, 69 L. R. A.

25 S. W. 784, a conviction of homicide, the court said: "The contention that the court erred in failing to instruct the jury in regard to the law applicable to circumstantial evidence is without merit. The proof of the confessions of defendant relieved the court of the duty of so charging."

Where, on a trial for murder, three witnesses testified to the confession of the accused of having committed the crime, his admission of guilt to them was direct, and not circumstantial, evidence, and no instruction on that character of evidence was necessary; as it is only where the evidence is wholly circumstantial that the court is required so to charge. Hedrick v. State, 40 Tex. Crim. Rep. 532, 51 S. W. 252.

On a trial for the murder of a child, where there is evidence that the accused has confessed to the killing, a charge on circumstantial evidence is unnecessary. Red v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 53 S. W. 618.

On appeal from a judgment of conviction of murder, the record showed that the appellant made a confession before a justice of the peace, admitting his presence and participation in the death of deceased, but claimed that he participated because coerced to do so; and it was held that this character of statement on the part of accused took the case out of the realm of circumstantial evidence, and it was, consequently, not error for the court to fail to charge thereon. Jackson v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 62 S. W. 914.

See also State v. Robinson, 117 Mo. 649, 23 S. W. 1066; Gibbs v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 20 S. W. 919; Yancy v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 87 S. W. 693,—supra, III. a. 1.; Mathley v. Com. 27 Ky. L. Rep. 785, 86 S. W. 988, infra, III. c; White v. State, 40 Tex. Crim. Rep. 368, 50 S. W. 705, infra, VII.

2. Larceny.

In Huffman v. State, 28 Tex. App. 174, 12 S. W. 588, which was a trial for the theft of a mare, the court held that the charge was not defective in failing to instruct as to the character of the accused's possession of the mare, whether recent or remote. That this issue was not in the case, because the defendant himself testified that he took the mare, and, in view of such admission, it was not essential to charge as to circumstantial evidence.

the remarks of the learned trial judge operate to appellant's injury to that extent that it will be necessary to reverse this case. We have the right to assume that the trial judge thoroughly understands his judicial province, as distinguished from that of the jury, which, in a felony case, is not only a component, but a necessary, part of the court over which he presides. We assume that he knew he was forbidden by law to express any opinion as to the weight of any evidence admitted by him. We assume that he knew the law requires in case of circumstantial evidence that the jury be cautioned by a charge explaining to them the rules that govern a case where such evidence is solely relied upon to demonstrate the main fact of the crime charged. Undoubtedly, he knew that any remark made by him in the presence of the jury which had a tendency to prejudice their minds against the unsuccessful party will afford grounds for the reversal of the judgment. In this case the learned trial judge stated to the district attorney in the presence and hearing of the jury that he did not consider this a case of circumstantial evidence. Bill No. 7 shows that the district attorney was asserting that, if appellant had confessed his guilt on the charge of theft, the charge on circumstantial evidence in this trial for burglary should not be given, and that the rules of circumstantial evidence should not be given to the jury; and the court thereupon remarked, in the presence and hearing of the jury: "I agree with you in your con-

Where, on a charge for burglary and theft, the defendant was convicted of the latter crime, and on his trial admitted that he took the goods, but explained that he took them from another, who burglarized the house, the facts did not constitute a case of circumstantial evidence; and the court did not err in failing to charge upon that phase of the law. Connors v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 453, 20 S. W. 981.

On a trial for theft of cattle the court said: "It has been repeatedly held by this court that, where the evidence shows a confession by defendant, the case is no longer one of circumstantial evidence;" and a failure of the court to charge on that character of evidence is not error. Mathews v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. Rep. 553, 47 S. W. 647, 48 S. W. 189. To the same effect, Rios v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. Rep. 675, 47 S. W. 987.

On a trial for theft by conversion of personal property, where the fraudulent conversion is not a disputed fact, under the evidence it is not necessary to charge the law on circumstantial evidence. Steadham v. State, 40 Tex. Crim. Rep. 43, 48 S. W. 177.

Where, upon a trial for theft of cattle, the state had proved a confession on the part of the accused, the court did not err in refusing a charge on circumstantial evidence. Mathews v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 98, 51 S. W. 915.

In Wilson v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 21 S. W. 361, it was held that it is necessary to charge upon the law governing circumstantial evidence only when the guilt of the accused is wholly dependent upon circumstantial evidence; and, where the confession of the defendant is proved in addition to other satisfactory criminative facts, a conviction of the defendant for theft will be sustained, although the court did not charge in reference to circumstantial evidence.

On a trial for theft of cattle, where the accused testified that she took the animal by virtue of purchase from a stranger, this relieved the court of the necessity of charging on circumstantial evidence, as she testified positively as to the taking. Holmes v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 42 S. W. 979.

Where, on a trial for horse stealing, the testimony of the accused shows that he bought the horse as it ran upon the range together with another, and took a bill of sale from a person claiming to own it, and after securing the bill of sale, took up the horse, claimed him, and disposed of him as his property, this was positive proof of the fact that he did not receive the horse from another party, but took it from the range himself, and excluded the idea of it being a case of circumstantial evidence; and a refusal and failure to charge the law applicable to a case of that kind of evidence was no error. Baxter v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 43 S. W. 87.

On a criminal prosecution for hog stealing, where the defendant takes the stand himself, and testifies that he got possession of the hogs with the consent of the prosecutor, of whom he purchased them, there is no occasion for the court to give a charge on circumstantial evidence. Reed v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 46 S. W. 931.

Where, on a trial for hog stealing, it appeared that two men were seen by two state's witnesses on the morning of the day the hogs were lost, driving a bunch of hogs which they took to be the prosecutor's, and they thought the accused was one of the parties driving the hogs, though they were not positive; and nine or ten of the prosecutor's hogs, with their ears cut off, were found on the premises of the brother-in-law of the accused, who lived several hundred yards distant from him; and the ears were found concealed in a pile of cotton seed; and one witness testified that on the morning after they found the hogs and the accused had been arrested, he confessed to him that he had stolen them,—it was held that the court did not err in failing to give a charge on circumstantial evidence. Doucette v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 45 S. W. 800.

Where, on a trial for theft, the appellant confessed the taking, but insisted that he did not take with a fraudulent intent, but under a claim of right, this removed the case from the realm of circumstantial evidence, the only issue being as to the intent. Roberts v. State, 44 Tex. Crim. App. 267, 70 S. W. 423.

See also Gentry v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 497, 56 S. W. 68, supra, II. b; Blanton v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 26 S. W. 624, supra, III. a, 2.

3. Burglary.

On a trial for burglary, the defendant having confessed that he entered the house with intent to commit theft therefrom, the case is not tention; but you know the court has ruled different in this case, and I cannot say whether I will charge on circumstantial evidence." This remark of the judge, in connection with the above-quoted excerpts of the speech made by the district attorney, presents this proposition: Can a court charge a necessary phase of the law, and then, by an indorsement, verbally, in the presence and hearing of the jury, of a contention by the district attorney that such is not the law, indicate to the jury how he, as an individual, deems the evidence should be weighed and tested? We think not. We are forced to assume that the judge knew that the effect of his utterance was to indicate to the jury that he gave this charge reluctantly; that he did it in deference to the opinion of this court; that he was driven to it unwillingly; and that his idea of the case, which caused its reversal in the former trial, was still correct, regardless of the opinion of this court and the precedents cited. Of course, no such presumption of the knowledge of the law applies to this district attorney. The other remarks of the district attorney were made in the presence and hearing of the trial court. His conduct in permitting them to be made in the presence and hearing of the jury without rep-one in which the conviction is sought, or wholly founded, upon circumstantial evidence; and it is not necessary, therefore, that the court should instruct the jury in regard to that kind of evidence. Carr v. State, 24 Tex. App. 562, 5 Am. St. Rep. 905, 7 S. W. 328.

In Ricks v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 676, 56 S. W. 928, the court said: "The court did not err in failing to charge on circumstantial evidence, inasmuch as the record contains proof of appellant's confession of the alleged burglary."

On a trial for burglary it was proved that the defendant had voluntarily confessed that he had committed the burglary, and would bring back the meat stolen by him, and this was held to obviate the necessity of giving a charge on circumstantial evidence. Albritton v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 26 S. W. 398.

Where, on a trial for burglary, the accused confessed to the burglary, there was no necessity for the court to charge the jury on circumstantial evidence; as it has been repeatedly held that the confessions of the defendant relieve the court of the necessity of charging on circumstantial evidence. Franks v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 45 S. W. 1013.

Before a charge on the law of circumstantial evidence is required on a trial for burglary, the case must be one wholly of that character of evidence, and it is not where confessions of the accused are introduced in evidence. Glover v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 46 S. W. 824.

Where there was proof of the confession of the accused of the burglary of which he was alleged to have been guilty, the trial court did not err in failing to charge on circumstantial evidence. Ricks v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 676, 56 S. W. 928.

4. Other crimes.

On the trial of an indictment for forgery, if there is proof of the confession of the defendant of the commission of the act constituting the crime, a request for an instruction which assumes that all the evidence of the guilt of the accused is purely circumstantial is properly refused. Langdon v. People, 133 Ill. 382, 24 N. E. 874.

Where, on a trial for forgery, the accused admitted signing the name of the person whose name was alleged to be forged to the note, claimed that he had authority to do it, and testified positively that he did have such authority; and the person whose name was signed testified that he did not,—there was no suggestion of circumstantial evidence as to 60 L. R. A.

the matter of authority in signing the note, and the failure to charge thereon was no error. Usher v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 81 S. W. 309.

On a trial for altering the brand on one head of cattle, there was evidence that the accused confessed to altering the brand on the animal, and it was stated on the part of the state that, under certain decisions, it was not necessary to charge on circumstantial evidence; but the court said, if it were true that the accused confessed to altering the mark on the identical animal belonging to the prosecutor, unquestionably it would not be necessary to give a charge on circumstantial evidence; but that there was some question as to the identity of the animal. The confession of the defendant was that he had changed the brand upon the animal that the prosecutor stated that he had lost, and this gap was filled up by circumstantial evidence that might or might not indicate that it was the same animal; hence, the court should have given a charge upon circumstantial evidence. Childers v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. 392, 35 S. W. 654.

c. Plea of insanity.

The two cases following illustrate the doctrine that the plea of insanity is inconsistent with the position of controverting the existence of the inculpatory fact, and is in truth practically an admission of it.

On a trial for murder, where there is no dispute as to the homicide having been committed by the accused without legal excuse or justification, and it is admitted that he shot the deceased without provocation, and his only defense is insanity, the rule in regard to which is well settled in Kentucky, that one charged with crime is presumed to be sane until the reverse is established by evidence, a refusal to charge expressly as to the presumption of innocence is not error. Mathley v. Com. 27 Ky. L. Rep. 785, 86 S. W. 988.

Where, on a trial for murder, the simple and single issue joined between the state and the accused was in vanus vel non, such a defense, the joining of such an issue, is tantamount to the plea of confession and avoidance. The court said that, this being the case, it was wholly unnecessary—indeed it would have been misleading—to have instructed the jury on the subject of circumstantial evidence; that there was no circumstantial evidence about who did the homicide,—that was undisputable,—while all the evidence as to defendant's mental condition was open, direct, and oral, and an instruction as to circumstantial evidence was rimand indicates that he acquiesced and indorsed the same. This court is forced to assume that the trial judge recognized their impropriety. The only question, so far as the appellant is concerned, for us to pass upon, is whether or not the same injured his rights. We deem a mere statement of them is sufficient. We cannot conscientiously permit a verdict to stand under the circumstances disclosed by this record.

In concluding a disagreeable subject, we cannot refrain from quoting an admirable homily, which was uttered by a great judge. He says: "Government consists of fallible men, who do not always know their duty; and parties may lose some of their rights if they do not aid public officers by notifying them of their views, and urging them; and questions of jurisdiction are very often as difficult to decide as any other. It is an essential element of judicial authority that it must be the judge of its own jurisdiction, and I do not know that this rule is peculiarly applicable to the higher courts. The lowest must act upon it, subject to the higher social law that is involved in official subordination. Often the question may be erroneously decided. Often such decisions may result in great injury to the citizen, rightfully refused. State v. Soper, 148 Mo. 217, 49 S. W. 1007.

IV. Where evidence is both direct and circumstantial.

In the following cases the rule is the same as in supra, II., but they are segregated for the sake of convenience, and also that in a sense they are isolated from the others, being cases wherein there existed both direct and circumstantial evidence; but the rule in regard to them is the same, namely, that no charge on the subject of circumstantial evidence is required.

Where the evidence which tended to establish the guilt of the defendants in a criminal case was both direct and circumstantial, a request to charge on the sufficiency of circumstantial evidence was properly refused, as it ignored all the positive testimony in the case, and required the court to direct the attention of the jury to the circumstances alone which bore upon the question of guilt. Cotton v. State, 87 Ala. 75, 6 So. 396.

Where the prosecution in a criminal case did not rely on circumstantial evidence alone, there was no error in refusing to instruct the jury that, if there is a single fact proved to their satisfaction by a preponderance of the evidence which is inconsistent with defendant's guilt, it is sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt, and they should acquit. Rains v. State, 88 Ala. 91, 7 So. 315.

Where it is not clear that the testimony in a criminal action is entirely circumstantial, it appearing that, while no witness actually saw the defendant stab the deceased, several witnesses saw them fighting, giving each other violent blows, and, when the fight ended, deceased was found with a mortal stab in her breast, blood upon her garments, and she very soon died, a motion for a new trial on the ground that the court erred in charging the law in cases of direct testimony as applicable to the case, and in not charging as to circumstantial evidence, the evidence as to who gave the fatal stab being entirely circumstantial, should be denied. Barrow v. State, 80 Ga. 191, 5 S. E. 64.

In State v. Donnelly, 130 Mo. 642, 32 S. W. 1124, it was insisted on the part of the accused that the prosecution relied upon circumstantial evidence to convict the defendant, and that the court should have instructed the jury with reference to the weight and conclusiveness of such evidence; but it was held that such an instruction would not have been applicable to the facts of the case, for the reason that there was direct and positive evidence that defendant committed the homicide, and that it is only when conviction is sought on circumstantial evidence alone that such an instruction becomes necessary; citing State v. Robinson, 117 Mo. 649, 23 S. W. 1066, supra, III. a. 1, and State v. Moxley, 102 Mo. 374, 14 S. W. 969, 15 S. W. 556, supra, II. a. 1.

In State v. Calder, 23 Mont. 504, 59 Pac. 903, the defendant asked, and the court refused to give, a charge in respect of the burden resting upon the state to establish beyond a reasonable doubt the existence of each link in the chain of circumstantial evidence, and this was held to be right; the court on appeal saying that the question of guilt or innocence was not dependent upon circumstantial evidence alone, or in a controlling degree upon such evidence, and therefore the case did not require a special instruction as to that means of proof; that there was direct evidence of the main fact, and the indirect evidence was merely in corroboration.

Except in cases where the defendant's guilt depends wholly and alone upon circumstantial evidence, it is not requisite that the court should give, in addition to the charge as to reasonable doubt, the usual instructions as to circumstantial evidence. Smith v. State, 2 Legal Rep. 56, 2 Shannon, Cas. 621.

Where, on a trial for larceny, the presence of the defendant at the scene of the theft, and his active confederation with the actual thief, were established by evidence of a positive nature, the evidence is not wholly circumstantial in a legal sense so as to require a charge on the question of the law of circumstantial evidence, as the rule as to circumstantial evidence has not yet been extended to a case of that character. Hardin v. State, 8 Tex. App. 653.

On a trial for robbery, where there is not only strong circumstantial evidence proving the guilt of the accused, but there is also direct, positive, and convincing proof that he is the identical party who committed the robbery charged in the indictment, it is not error for the court to omit and refuse to charge the jury in relation to circumstantial evidence. Makinson v. State, 16 Tex. App. 133.

In Mackey v. State, 20 Tex. App. 603, it was objected that the charge was defective in that it omitted to instruct the jury upon the law relative to circumstantial evidence. But the court held that the facts did not show a case purely of circumstantial evidence, and that, hence, it could not be held that the failure so to charge was reversible error.

and a man of well-trained mind will think it no great hardship to submit to authority, even in error." And again, in referring to the respect that should be given to those in authority, he says: "He that rejects this principle from his moral code, or gives it a low place there, can hardly be an orderly citizen, but must be dangerous to the public peace and progress in proportion as he is otherwise intelligent, influential, and active." We think that the above properly disposes of this case. However, before concluding, it is perhaps our duty to dispose of a question presented in the motion for new trial. In his motion for new trial appellant attaches a report made by the grand jury of Clay county, in reference to the enforcement of criminal law in that county and in the state; he contending that the report being read before the trial of this case, and being received by the trial judge, was such as necessarily prejudiced the jury that tried this appellant, and that they therefore for that reason were not fair and impartial. The fact that a single juror was influenced by this report is not shown. In any event, this comes too late in motion for new trial. It is properly a plea that should be made in limine, as has been specifically held by this court. It cannot, therefore, be considered. Furlow v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 12, 51 S. W. 938; Hannaman v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 33 S. W. 538; Caldwell v. State, 12 Tex. App. 302; Perry v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 45 S. W. 567.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

And in Stone v. State, 22 Tex. App. 185, 2 S. W. 585, it was held that it was not error to omit to charge the jury on the rule as to circumstantial evidence, as the case was not one of circumstantial evidence alone, there being direct evidence proving the guilt of the defendant.

On a trial for murder proof of the killing of the deceased by the accused was by an eyewitness, and was not contradicted. In this case the court said: "A charge upon circumstantial evidence is not required of the court, unless the evidence relied upon by the state is purely and solely circumstantial in character." Surrell v. State, 29 Tex. App. 321, 15 S. W. 816.

Where, on a trial for murder, the confessions of the accused are introduced in evidence, the fact that these were only corroborated by circumstantial evidence will not necessitate a charge on that character of evidence. Carmona v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 65 S. W. 928.

In Buntain v. State, 15 Tex. App. 515, the court, after holding that it was not a case of circumstantial evidence, and the court was not required to charge the jury with a view to such testimony, as there was positive evidence in the case, said further: "If a court were required to charge the law of circumstantial evidence in all cases where reliance was had upon circumstances to establish any particular fact, then, indeed, there would be but few, if any, cases in which such a charge would not be required. But such is not the rule. A charge upon circumstantial evidence is only required when the evidence of the main facts essential to guilt is purely and entirely circumstantial."

See also Williams v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 45 S. W. 494, infra, VI.

But on a trial for larceny, where the prosecution had introduced both direct and circumstantial evidence, and the court had refused an instruction requested by the defendant as to the effect of circumstantial evidence, the court, on appeal, in reversing the judgment, said that it was within the province of the jury to disregard the direct testimony, and to base their verdict solely on the incriminating circumstances surrounding the accused; and that, this being true, it was proper to furnish a guide to the jury to govern them in the consideration of the probative force of such circumstances as were shown, tending to establish the guilt of the accused. State v. Andrews, 62 Kan. 207, 61 Pac. 808.

V. Where instruction or request to charge simply states abstract proposition.

Where the general charge of the court has been correctly and fully given, and the rules of law as applicable to the particular case have been stated to the jury, a request to charge an abstract proposition of law, correct in and of itself as such, but wholly inapplicable to the circumstances of the particular case, is properly refused.

A charge which is not supported in its hypotheses by any phase of the testimony is abstract, and should be refused, no matter how correct the legal proposition it may assert. And so, where there was no testimony which tended in the slightest degree to prove any fact which was inconsistent with the defendant's guilt, a request that, if there is a fact inconsistent with the defendant's guilt sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt, the jury should acquit, is properly denied. Rains v. State, 88 Ala. 91, 7 So. 315.

In a case where the whole evidence is from the mouths of eyewitnesses to the occurrence constituting the crime for which defendant is on trial, and does not go circumstantially or inferentially, but directly and positively, to the details of the occurrence, a charge that a conviction should not be had upon circumstantial evidence, if positive evidence is attainable or before the jury, has no place. Welch v. State, 124 Ala. 41, 27 So. 307.

In Coleman v. State, 87 Ala. 14, 6 So. 290, the court had refused a request to charge that a conviction ought not to be had on circumstantial evidence when direct and positive evidence is attainable, and the refusal was held to be correct, as the request was not adapted to the testimony, there being some positive proof that the defendant stole the money, and the record did not tend to show that any additional positive testimony could be obtained, or was in existence.

Where, on a criminal trial, the section of the Code bearing upon the subject of circumstantial evidence is given in charge to the jury in hæc verba, the refusal to charge as requested by counsel for the accused on the subject of the sufficiency of circumstantial evidence to warrant a conviction is not error. Seats v. State (Ga.) 50 S. E. 65.

And the converse of this proposition is also true, as will be seen in the following case.

To justify a conviction of murder upon circumstantial evidence alone, the facts relied on must be absolutely incompatible with the innocence of the accused, and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of guilt. And, if this be so, a jury called to pass upon a case of that character should be informed of the rule as a part of the law applicable to the case. And an ordinary charge upon the law of reasonable doubt, copied from the statute, cannot convey to their minds a clear conception of this exaction of the law, when a conviction is sought upon circumstantial testimony alone; and without some definite rule for their guidance—a rule which will serve to impress itself on their minds, and cause them to weigh most carefully all the facts, isolated or connected, from which they must reach their conclusion of reasonable inference—they are not unlikely, in many instances, to found their verdict upon strong suspicion, or mere probability, which will not suffice under the law. Hunt v. State, 7 Tex. App. 212.

VI. Testimony of accomplices.

And it would seem to be the almost universal rule that, even though the direct testimony as to the inculpatory fact be given by an accomplice of the accused in the commission of the crime, yet it is so much direct and positive testimony as will not necessitate an instruction upon the subject of circumstantial evidence.

Where in a criminal action the theory of the prosecution was based upon the testimony of an accomplice, and there was nothing to indicate that without it a conviction was asked, a request to instruct the jury as to the effect of circumstantial evidence, based upon the theory that there was no direct testimony aside from that of the accomplice, and that he was impeached, was properly denied. Vaughan v. State, 57 Ark. 1, 20 S. W. 588.

Where the case on a trial for murder was not dependent alone, nor in a controlling degree, on circumstantial evidence, but was rather a case depending upon the testimony of an accomplice, and the necessity of corroborating his testimony, than one dependent upon circumstantial evidence, a request to charge on the subject of circumstantial evidence was properly refused. Tooney v. State, 8 Tex. App. 452.

Where, on a trial for larceny, a witness testified directly that the accused told him that he had stolen a horse from the owner, even though such witness was an accomplice in the theft, this fact will not make the case one dependent wholly on circumstantial evidence so as to demand a charge upon that character of evidence. Wampler v. State, 28 Tex. App. 352, 13 S. W. 144.

In Thompson v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 217, 26 S. W. 198, which was an appeal from a conviction of murder, the court said: "The evidence does not bring this case within the rule of circumstantial evidence. The accomplice swears directly and positively as eyewitness that defendant committed the murder. The threats of defendant to kill the accomplice if she betrayed him were also proved. The court did not err in refusing the requested charge submitting the law applicable to circumstantial evidence."

69 L. R. A.

On a trial for murder the fact that the witness to the transaction was an accomplice furnishes no reason why a charge should be given on circumstantial evidence. Kidwell v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 264, 33 S. W. 342.

On a trial for murder, where the charge was that the accused procured another person to kill the person for whose murder he was on trial, and the person who did the killing testified that he did so at the request and procurement of the accused, and that the latter furnished him the gun with which to do the killing, it was held that the court did not err in failing to charge the law applicable to circumstantial evidence. Thomas v. State, 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 20, 96 Am. St. Rep. 834, 62 S. W. 919.

Upon a trial for larceny of a horse, it was proved that the party who took the horse went into the lot, put a rope around its neck, and was leading it off, when the officers, who were watching for the thief, undertook to make an arrest, when the party fled. There were present at the lot the thief and a companion. The companion was found just outside the lot at the time the horse was taken. It was held that the taking in the case of theft was the main fact, and in this case it was not deducible from circumstances, but testified to positively. The accomplice testified that he went with the accused according to a previous arrangement between them to take the horse in question. This was held to be positive evidence as to the identity of the defendant, although it was testified to by an accomplice; and on the whole case it was held that a charge on the law of circumstantial evidence was unnecessary. Monk v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 44 S. W. 1101.

Where, on a trial for the theft of a head of cattle, a witness testified positively to the taking by the accused of the animal in controversy, and that he was an accomplice, this fact would not necessitate a charge upon circumstantial evidence. Nor would the fact that the identity of the animal taken by the accused and the witness, his accomplice, as being the same animal which belonged to the alleged owner, was established by circumstantial evidence, make it a case wholly depending upon that character of testimony. Williams v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 45 S. W. 494.

Where the only witness to a homicide is an accomplice, this furnishes no reason why the court should give the law on circumstantial evidence in charge to the jury. Red v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 53 S. W. 618.

The following case, however, would appear to differ from the general line of decisions on the subject, and there would seem to be considerable force in the reason given.

Where, on a trial for murder, the only direct evidence of the commission of the crime by the accused is that of an accomplice, who is overwhelmingly impeached; and, aside from his testimony the case against the accused is one largely of circumstantial evidence,—an instruction on the effect and sufficiency of circumstantial evidence is proper and necessary, when requested by the accused, as the jury might refuse to believe the accomplice. State v. Woolard, 111 Mo. 248, 20 S. W. 27.

VII. Necessity of request for instruction; or exception.

An exception to the failure or refusal to instruct on the law of circumstantial evidence in a case where such instruction should be given is considered in the following cases. The rule would appear to be that a failure so to instruct the jury, whether requested or not, is material error, with the exception of a single case.

In every criminal case it is the duty of the judge, even without a request, to charge concerning the law of reasonable doubt; and, where the evidence against the accused on a trial for hog stealing was entirely circumstantial, and the presiding judge failed to state the rule of law applicable in criminal cases to proof of this character, this was held to be such error as would reverse a judgment of conviction. Hamilton v. State, 96 Ga. 301, 22 S. E. 528.

It is only another application of the doctrine of reasonable doubt, which the humanity of the law vouchsafes to prisoners on trial when the evidence against them is wholly circumstantial, that the law as to circumstantial evidence should be correctly given the jury by the court; and an instruction embodying it simply informs the jury what degree of certainty the facts in the evidence must produce in their mind before they can convict, just as a charge upon the reasonable doubt does in ordinary cases. And the failure of the court to give an instruction upon this branch of the law is error which will require a reversal of a judgment of conviction. Hunt v. State, 7 Tex. App. 212.

In Barr v. State, 10 Tex. App. 507, the statement was made by the court that it was not until the decision of the case of Hunt v. State, 7 Tex. App. 212, supra, that it was ever expressly decided in Texas that, in trials for felony, when the proof of guilt depended alone on circumstantial testimony, the court should charge on that character of evidence, as a part of the law of the case, whether requested to do so or not.

On a trial for theft it was held that the case was one of purely circumstantial evidence, and that it was the duty of the court below, whether asked or not, to give in charge the law applicable to such a case. Ward v. State, 10 Tex. App. 298.

And in Ray v. State, 13 Tex. App. 51, the court said: "The evidence upon which the conviction in this case is based is wholly circumstantial. It is well settled that in such case the court should instruct the jury in regard to the character of such evidence, as a part of the law of the case, whether requested to do so or not. There is no particular, definite form of language required to be used in giving such instructions. If the ideas are sufficient, and so expressed that the jury can readily comprehend the meaning of the language employed, the demand of the law will be satisfied. . . . In the case at bar the court failed to give the jury any charge upon circumstantial evidence, and therefore failed to give in charge all the law applicable to the case."

A conviction for homicide will be reversed where it is wholly dependent for its support on circumstantial evidence, where a charge upon that subject was not given at the trial; and this is so whether such charge is requested or not. Leftwich v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 489, 31 S. W. 385.

When the testimony in a criminal case is entirely of a circumstantial character, and a request is made to charge upon the subject of circumstantial evidence, although the request is technically erroneous, it is still the duty of the court to give the law upon the subject, as it is to the court that the accused has the right 69 L. R. A.

to look to see if he has a fair trial, and a jury of inexperienced laymen are hardly expected to apply the rule applicable to this class of testimony without some assistance from the court. People v. Scott, 10 Utah, 217, 37 Pac. 335.

In Dovalina v. State, 14 Tex. App. 312, which was a trial for forgery, the court said: "A conviction was sought alone upon circumstantial evidence. The law applicable to such a case was not charged. However, as there was no charge requested, nor objection made because of the omission of a proper charge on the subject; and as such error is not relied upon in the motion for new trial,—we do not feel called upon to reverse upon this ground."

The last reason stated was probably a good one for not reversing the judgment, but under all the decisions given herein the first one certainly was not.

Where the material evidence in the case is in its nature circumstantial, the court should instruct the jury as to the law governing that character of evidence,—especially when such instruction is requested. Smith v. State, 7 Tex. App. 382.

In Polanka v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 634, 28 S. W. 541, the court said: "This conviction was for hog theft. The statement of facts incorporated in the record constitutes this a conviction depending wholly upon circumstantial evidence. It was therefore incumbent upon the trial court to instruct the jury in regard to the law applicable to such testimony. This is the settled rule in this state by an unbroken line of decisions, and a failure to comply with it requires a reversal of the judgment though exception be not reserved."

In affirming a conviction of murder the court, in White v. State, 40 Tex. Crim. Rep. 366, 50 S. W. 705, said: "Appellant's next assignment is that the court erred in his charge to the jury, in not charging upon the law of circumstantial evidence. In answer to this assignment, we would observe that no bill of exceptions, nor exception in motion for new trial, was reserved to the failure of the court to give this charge, and hence we cannot review the same. Even if there had been, it is not necessary for the court to charge on circumstantial evidence, when the state relies on the confession of the defendant as part of the evidence on which to base the conviction."

The court having decided the last proposition, it was unnecessary for it to decide the first, but, if it had been, the decision would seem to be in direct opposition to all prior decisions of the same court, which has held repeatedly that a failure or omission of the court to charge on circumstantial evidence in a proper case is fatal error to a conviction, whether the instruction is requested or not, and, as stated in the last case, though exception be not reserved. The words quoted are all that was said on the subject, and no reference was made to Polanka v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 634, 28 S. W. 541. See also Richards v. State, 102 Ga. 599, 27 S. E. 720, infra, IX.

From the following cases it would appear that in trials of offenses other than felonies a request for an instruction as to the law of circumstantial evidence in a proper case is necessary.

In Howard v. State, 8 Tex. App. 612, it was held that on a trial for a petty theft, inasmuch as with regard to some of the articles claimed to have been stolen the evidence was wholly circumstantial, a proper charge on circumstantial testimony would have been appropriate; but that being a misdemeanor, it was perhaps the duty of the defendant's counsel to have asked suitable instructions on the subject, by preparing them for delivery to the jury and presenting them to the court.

In criminal actions for misdemeanors, the court is not required to charge the jury, except at the request of counsel on either side; but, when so requested, shall give or refuse such charges, with or without modification, as are asked, in writing; citing Code Crim. Proc. art. 681. Ross v. State, 9 Tex. App. 275.

And so, on a trial for a misdemeanor, where the inculpatory evidence is exclusively circumstantial, it is error for the court to refuse an appropriate instruction on circumstantial evidence when requested so to do by the accused. Ibid.

In the following cases it will be seen there were requests to charge, and there is a suggestion in each that the error consisted in a refusal of the request, but the cases in no sense militate against those which precede them.

Where, upon the trial of an indictment for larceny, there was no direct or positive proof of the guilt of the accused, and all the evidence adduced against them was circumstantial in character, the court said that, this being so, it devolved upon the trial court to charge the law relative to such testimony, and a failure so to charge in such cases had been so repeatedly held by the court to be reversible error that it would be but supererogation to cite authorities; that the charge given did not embrace the law in this respect, and a correct enunciation of it was submitted in the special requested instructions which were asked for defendant, and which were refused by the court. Flores v. State, 13 Tex. App. 685.

In Dreyer v. State, 11 Tex. App. 631, the court said: "Another error complained of is that the charge omits to instruct the jury upon the law of circumstantial evidence, and that the court refused a requested instruction upon this branch of the case. This error is well assigned, and the requested instruction should have been given."

See also Conner v. State, 17 Tex. App. 1, supra, 11, a. 1.

VIII. Refusal of request, the substance of which is elsewhere charged.

The court having instructed the jury in a criminal case that the law presumed the defendant to be innocent of the charge against him, it was neither necessary nor proper to caution the jury against a verdict based upon circumstantial testimony, or to prescribe a rule by which that character of testimony was to be considered by them. Stricklin v. Com. 83 Ky. 566.

In Roberts v. State, 110 Ga. 253, 34 S. E. 203, it was held that, although the evidence relied on for a conviction was entirely circumstantial, it is not cause for a new trial that the court, while instructing the jury on the law of reasonable doubt, failed to state in the same connection that the evidence must also be consistent with defendant's guilt, and must exclude every other reasonable hypothesis; the court having in another connection properly given to the jury this law on circumstantial evidence; citing Young v. State, 95 Ga. 456, 20 S. E. 270.

66 L. R. A.

In Cave v. State, 41 Tex. 182, the court said that the case depended upon circumstantial evidence, and required full instruction on that branch of the law; but that the several charges as given by the court embraced substantially the instructions asked by the defendant, and it was not necessary that the instructions given by the court should be repeated or given in the language asked by the defendant; and that the charge was in accordance with the rulings of the court.

Where, on a trial for murder, there was proof positive that the accused was the voluntary agent who committed the homicide, and the court had, without request, instructed the jury that circumstantial testimony must tend closely to prove the fact, or it is not of itself sufficient, but may still be entitled to great weight in connection with positive testimony; and that the jury would determine from the testimony, and from all the facts and circumstances, whether one of the accused committed the deed, and the other aided and abetted it,—there was no occasion to lay down the law with greater particularity upon the subject of circumstantial evidence. Burrell v. State, 18 Tex. 713.

On a trial for murder, where the charge of the court sufficiently instructed the jury as to the conclusiveness of circumstantial evidence to warrant them in finding a verdict on that character of testimony alone, and was a substantial compliance with the law on that subject, and, being sufficient of itself, a special instruction requested by the defendant became unnecessary, the court was not required to give it, and did not err to the prejudice of the defendant's rights to have the jury properly instructed in the law of the case. Rye v. State, 8 Tex. App. 153.

On appeal from a conviction for the theft of a pair of gloves, it was claimed by the counsel for the accused that it was a case of circumstantial evidence, as no witness saw the taking, and that the fact that the accused was found in the possession of recently stolen property did not take the case out of the rule; neither did the fact that it was a misdemeanor case render it unnecessary to charge on the issue of circumstantial evidence; and yet the court did not charge on it, though a special charge was requested by the accused when instructing the jury on that issue, and refused. All the court said on the subject was that the charges asked and given correctly and sufficiently instructed the jury in regard to the law of the case, and there was no error in refusing additional requested instructions. Martin v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 441, 24 S. W. 512.

See also People v. Lem Deo, 132 Cal. 199, 64 Pac. 265, supra, III. a. 1.

IX. Accused in juxtaposition to main or inculpatory fact.

The following are cases where the court conceded that there was no direct evidence as to the main fact constituting the crime, yet the facts and circumstances testified to were in such juxtaposition to the main fact, or the testimony placed the accused in such juxtaposition to the main fact, as in homicide to the fact of killing, or in larceny to the fact of the taking, that this was equivalent to direct testimony, and a refusal to charge on the law of circumstantial evidence was no error. The cases following show under what circumstances such juxtaposition will be held to have existed.

Upon a trial for the theft of hogs the evidence showed that the missing hogs were tracked a short distance from the place where they were taken, and discovered in the possession of the defendant and his brother, who were driving them, and who drove them on home and butchered them. The court held that, while no witness saw defendant actually take possession of the hogs, yet the criminative circumstances were in such juxtaposition to the main fact that the omission to give a charge upon the law of circumstantial evidence was not calculated to injure the defendant's right. Baldwin v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 589, 21 S. W. 679.

Where, on a trial for theft of a cow, the witness testified that he saw the accused and another at a point a mile and a half distant from the place of the alleged theft; that two or three hours later he heard a gun shot at or about the place of the alleged theft; and that a few minutes later he saw the defendant and the other person "at work" on the carcass of the cow they had killed,—it was held that the court did not err in failing to tell the jury that this was a case wholly of circumstantial evidence, as the evidence was direct and positive as to the guilt of the accused, as testified by an eyewitness, and, if the shooting was not seen, the facts were in such close juxtaposition to the shooting as to be equivalent to direct testimony. Bennett v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 216, 22 S. W. 684.

In Adams v. State, 84 Tex. Crim. Rep. 470, 31 S. W. 372, which was an appeal from a conviction for horse stealing, it appeared that the horse in question was placed in the pasture, and was seen on the day of the alleged theft, outside the pasture, near a road which led along the fence; and the accused was just ahead of the animal, which seemed to be following him. The accused told the witness, as he passed him, that the colt had just jumped out of the pasture, and that he was following him, and that he was going to drive him back. Afterward the accused offered to, and did, sell the animal to another witness. In holding that the failure of the court to charge on circumstantial evidence was not error, the court said: "If it be conceded that no witness saw him in the very act of taking possession of said colt, yet the testimony places defendant in juxtaposition to the main fact, which is the act of taking in this case, so that the omission to give the charge on circumstantial evidence was not calculated to injure defendant's rights."

On appeal from a conviction for murder, the failure of the court to give a charge on circumstantial evidence was assigned as error. The evidence was to the effect that the person for whose murder the accused was on trial was killed in his barn, and his wife, who was killed at the same time, was heard to address the accused, beseeching him not to injure her husband, and immediately on being found, the husband, being still alive and conscious, and being asked who did it, replied with the name of the accused. It was held that, while no witness testified that he saw the act of killing, yet the facts and circumstances of the case were of a character to place the accused in such proximity and juxtaposition to the fact of killing as to render a charge on circumstantial evidence unnecessary, and, besides, the statements of deceased and his wife were in the nature of positive evidence. Crews v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 533, 31 S. W. 373.

On a trial for murder the accused asked a 69 L. R. A.

charge on circumstantial evidence, and contended that, although the accomplice who testified as to the killing was present and saw the killing, yet it being dark, and at the very time of the killing he being some little distance from the parties when it occurred, it was such a case that required of the court a charge on circumstantial evidence. The charge was refused, and, in affirming the conviction, the court said that at the time the fatal stroke was given the witness was so near and in such juxtaposition that, though he may not have seen which one of the two parties inflicted the stabs and blows, several of which were fatal, yet it would make no difference, as to their guilt, which one may have caused the wounds. Kidwell v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 264, 33 S. W. 342.

On a trial for rape, where the facts and circumstances of the case are of such a character as to place the accused in such close proximity and juxtaposition to the main fact as to make it certain that he committed the act, a charge on circumstantial evidence is unnecessary. Allen v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 381, 37 S. W. 429.

On trial for murder, where it appeared that the accused was one of a gang who had conspired to rob a bank, in the commission of which robbery the person for whose murder the accused was on trial was killed, and one of the members of the gang had entered the bank with the accused, and, while they were in the act of robbing, shooting commenced on the outside, and the member alluded to said the boys had opened up the ball, these facts, together with the other facts in regard to the conspiracy to rob the bank, rendered a charge on circumstantial evidence unnecessary, and the court did not err in failing so to instruct the jury. Nite v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 340, 54 S. W. 763.

While, upon the trial of a criminal case, it is ordinarily the duty of the judge, whether requested so to do or not, to give in charge to the jury the rule respecting the degree of certainty required to sustain a conviction where circumstantial evidence is alone relied upon, yet, where the evidence, even though circumstantial, is full and satisfactory, without serious conflict, and clearly shows the guilt of the accused, a failure so to charge will not require the granting of a new trial. Richards v. State, 102 Ga. 569, 27 S. E. 726.

In Jones v. State, 105 Ga. 649, 31 S. E. 574, the court said that it was entirely in harmony with Tarver v. State, 95 Ga. 222, 21 S. E. 381, where it was ruled that, "in passing upon the possession of stolen goods as evidence offered to show criminality, the time which elapsed between the theft and the possession, and the manner in which the possession was accounted for, or that it was not accounted for at all, are material matters for the consideration of the jury, to which the court, by appropriate instructions, should direct their attention;" and also what was ruled in the case of Hamilton v. State, 96 Ga. 302, 22 S. E. 528, that "the failure to give some such instruction, in a close and doubtful case . . . [like the case then being considered], will entitle the accused to a new trial." The court then said, further, that it found that the charge of the court in the case under consideration, while it omitted to deal with the law applicable to the question of stolen goods, and instructions as to conviction on circumstantial evidence, was otherwise full and explicit, and, it appearing that the accused was plainly guilty under the law, the failure of the court below to charge the law applicable to the recent possession of stolen goods as a circumstance tending to show the guilt of the defendant, and the amount and the character of circumstantial evidence necessary to convict, was just ground of criticism from a legal standpoint; yet they were not satisfied to reverse the judgment because of these omissions from the charge, when with them the same verdict must have been rendered.

On a trial for theft it was shown that the accused was found in possession of the stolen property some months after the theft, with the brand upon the animal changed, and it was held that, while the evidence might be sufficient to sustain a conviction, yet the facts tending to connect the accused with the original taking were not in such close proximity to such taking as to relieve the court of the duty of instructing the jury in regard to the law governing cases of circumstantial evidence. Alderman v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 23 S. W. 685.

In Scott v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 23 S. W. 685, the court said that the conviction was wholly dependent upon circumstantial evidence, the facts not being in such close relation or juxtaposition to the main facts, or original taking of the cattle charged to have been stolen, as to bring the case within the rule laid down in Montgomery v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 20 S. W. 928, supra, II., b, and that, under the facts of the case as found in the record, such omission required a reversal of the judgment. The court stated that it desired to reaffirm the doctrine announced in the Montgomery case.

Where, upon a trial for theft of an animal, there was no proof that the defendant took the animal, and the state had to rely upon the fact of recent possession to prove the taking, and there were other incriminatory facts in the testimony, all of a circumstantial character, none of which placed the defendant in such juxtaposition as to relieve the case of being one wholly dependent upon circumstantial evidence for a conviction,—it was held to have been the rule by a long line of decisions that, in cases of this character, it is incumbent upon the court to give in charge to the jury the law pertaining to circumstantial evidence, and, where this is not done, a conviction will be reversed. McCamant v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 37 S. W. 437.

Where, on a trial for stealing a cow, the proof showed that she would come home every night from the range, but failed to come one night, and was seen no more until a month thereafter, when the accused, whose business was hunting stray stock and bringing them to their owners, found the cow, according to his evidence, and brought her to the prosecutor, who some days previously had offered accused a reward if he would find his cow and bring her home, the state proved by another witness that he saw accused in possession of the cow three days after she was missed by her owner, when accused was leading her by a rope around her neck, and, being asked what he was going to do with her, said he was going to turn her loose on the prairie. He was told by the witness that she was the prosecutor's cow, and was shown where the latter lived, the house being in plain view. The court said that this evidence did not place the accused in such juxtaposition to the fact of taking as not to require a charge on circumstantial evidence, and, because of the failure to give a charge thereon, the judgment was reversed. Davis v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 74 S. W. 544.

Where, on a trial for murder, a witness testified that while in her room asleep she was awakened by a pistol shot, and going to the window saw the accused at the window, and he remarked to her to be careful not to say that he did it, and smoke was coming in through the shutters of the window, but she saw no arms about the accused, and the person killed was afterwards found dead directly under the window, and the autopsy showed that he had been killed by a bullet wound, the court held that, while it is true that the circumstances might be so close and cogent, throwing the accused in such juxtaposition with the main fact that it might not require a charge upon circumstantial evidence, yet, where the facts are in doubt upon this theory, it is the safer and sounder rule to charge in regard to circumstantial evidence. That, in order to justify the trial court in not charging upon this phase of the law, it must be taken as certain, first, that the witness testified to the truth fully, and, growing out of that, secondly, that the accused was at the window, as testified by the witness, and thirdly, that his remark to her was a confession of the killing; and that, while these conclusions of the court might or might not be proper deductions from the testimony, it was not believed to be of sufficient cogency to exempt it from the rules of circumstantial evidence, or bring it within the rules of positive evidence to the exclusion of the law of circumstantial evidence. Trejo v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 74 S. W. 546.

Where, upon a trial for hog stealing, a witness testified that he heard four shots, and after a time another, and, after hearing the five shots, he walked half a mile to where he heard them, and saw defendant hanging up a pig that he hid in the brush, and then walked toward the witness, and, when within about 50 yards, worked the lever of his gun several times, and then went in the direction of his home; and witness examined the pig and recognized it as belonging to his uncle, the owner; and the pig was killed by a gunshot; and the following day after the arrest of the accused he was carried to the point designated by this witness, where a track was found and that the shoe the accused was wearing corresponded exactly with the tracks found upon the ground,—it was held that these facts were not of sufficient cogency in their nearness and proximity to the transaction to relieve the court of the duty of charging the law of circumstantial evidence; and the judgment of conviction was reversed. Guerrero v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 80 S. W. 1001.

X. As to question of intent.

As frequently before stated, it is only when the evidence as to the inculpatory or main fact constituting the crime is wholly circumstantial that a trial court is required to instruct the jury upon that branch of the law of the case; but in the case of a prosecution for a crime, one of the essential ingredients of which is the criminal intent of the accused in committing it, and there is direct evidence as to the main or inculpatory fact, such as the killing in homicide, the taking in larceny, or the breaking in burglary, although the evidence tending to prove the guilty intent of the accused may be wholly circumstantial no charge on the law relating to that character of evidence is required.

Where the fact is that the accused stood by and saw another kill the person for whose murder he is on trial, but there is no positive testimony that he took an active part in the killing, and his conviction of murder is sought to be upheld by the prosecution upon the theory that he consented to the killing in pursuance of a conspiracy previously entered into by him and the person who actually did the killing to effect the same, and all the evidence except the killing is circumstantial, a failure to charge the law upon evidence of that character is fatal to the conviction. Jones v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 490, 30 S. W. 1059, 31 S. W. 684. The court said that the rule requiring an instruction upon circumstantial evidence, and of what that instruction should consist, applied only to proof of the act, and not to proof of the intent. On motion for a rehearing the majority of the court adhered to the opinion and judgment of reversal previously rendered in the case, but one of the judges dissented from the views expressed, and said that on a more thorough examination of the questions involved he was forced to do so, giving as his reason that, as the presence of the accused at the killing was proved by positive testimony, and while the intent and purpose of being there, to give color and character to his presence, and what he did or did not do there, were to be gathered by circumstantial evidence, yet, when the act was established by positive evidence, and the intent was to be inferred from circumstances, it was not necessary in such case to give a charge upon circumstantial evidence. The difference between this and the majority opinion seems to be that the latter went upon the theory that the existence of the conspiracy, and what the accused did at the killing, or did not do there, formed the inculpatory act.

The case of Weatherby v. State, 29 Tex. App. 278, 15 S. W. 823, supra, III. a, 1, would seem to sustain the views set forth in the dissenting opinion.

Where, on an appeal from a conviction for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor, it appeared from the statement of facts, giving in detail the conversation between the accused and the witness who bought the whisky at the time it was purchased, that the accused must have known the object and purpose with which the witness went there because he got the bottle of whisky, it was not a case of circumstantial evidence requiring a charge upon that subject. Leftwich v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 55 S. W. 571.

On a trial for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor, where it was conceded that the party got the whisky of the accused, and the only fact left to be proved was, What was the intent of the accused in the transaction?—a failure to charge on circumstantial evidence is no error. Becker v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 50 S. W. 949.

Where, on a trial for murder, the act is proved by direct or positive testimony, and all that remains to be found is the intent which caused the act, and which may be inferred from the circumstances accompanying the same, the rule requiring a charge upon circumstantial evidence does not apply. Red v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 53 S. W. 618.

On a trial for murder the facts that the accused went to the scene of the homicide in company with the person who actually did the killing, and of his being present at the time, and what he did there, having been proved by positive evidence; and all that remains to be found is the intent which accompanied the act of the accused, which may be inferred from the circumstances accompanying the act,—the rule as to the necessity of charging the jury as to the law of circumstantial evidence does not apply. Alexander v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 49 S. W. 229.

If, on a prosecution for theft, the taking of the property (cattle) appears from the defense of the accused to be an admitted fact, as where he claims that he took the cattle under a purchase from one who claimed to sell them as the property of the owner, it is no reason for requiring the court to charge upon the law of circumstantial evidence that the state proposed to prove the intent by that character of evidence. Houston v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 47 S. W. 468.

On a trial for larceny, where the accused confessed the taking, but insisted that he did not take with a fraudulent intent, but under a claim of right, this evidence removed the case from the realm of circumstantial evidence, the only issue being as to the intent; and where such is the case a refusal to make a special charge on circumstantial evidence is not error. Roberts v. State, 44 Tex. Crim. Rep. 267, 70 S. W. 423.

XI. Miscellaneous cases.

In instructing the jury as to reasonable doubt in criminal cases the better practice is to follow as nearly as possible the language of the Criminal Code. The jury in a criminal case having been instructed that it was their duty to consider the entire evidence in the case, it would have been not only needless, but probably misleading, to have instructed them as to the particular character and effect of circumstantial evidence. Weatherford v. Com. 7 Ky. L. Rep. 827.

The case is reported only in the abstract which is given above, and what the particular circumstances were to which it related does not appear.

In People v. Murray, 72 Mich. 10, 40 N. W. 29, the court said that undue prominence is often given to unimportant testimony by the course pursued by the court; and that much care should be observed in this regard by the trial judge; and that the charge in the case before them had this infirmity, as, for instance, it stated that the accused fled, without stating his testimony upon that subject; and officers were sworn who arrested him, and allowed to give evidence of what was said, but no charge was given of the rule applicable in such cases; and that the presumptions of the law in favor of the accused were entirely omitted in the charge. The case was one where the accused had been sentenced to imprisonment for the term of fifty years, which the court held was more than his life could be expected to last in prison, and the circumstances of the case were peculiar, rendering it a hardship; and the court held that it reversed the judgment by a departure from its rules, which it would not ordinarily do, but that this was a case where, under the general superintending power and direction over all inferior courts, it felt it the imperative duty of the court, with or without objection, and exceptions by the counsel for the accused, to set aside the proceedings and order a new trial.

In State v. Roe, 12 Vt. 93, the court, in affirming a conviction for arson, alluded to the claim of the accused that the court neglected to instruct the jury about the rules concerning weighing circumstantial or presumptive evidence, and after stating that there are among elementary writers ingenious, but extremely fanciful, dissertations on this species of proof; and that, as the human mind, in search of truth, is extremely anxious to reduce moral truths to mathematical certainty,—some of the writers have attempted to resolve presumptive evidence into arithmetical proportions and algebraic equations. But that all this is merely fanciful, and no adjudged case has settled any such rules. That some rules for weighing evidence are laid down in the books, and the judge may, and perhaps ought, in cases proper, in his estimation, to aid the jury, in his discretion, by instructing them in those practical rules. But that this rests in his own discretion, depending on his views of the nature of the case and occasion. But no adjudged case can be found where it has been held as error that the court did not instruct the jury in the most approved elementary rules on the best and safest mode of weighing circumstantial evidence which the case would have justified or perhaps called for. And that there probably never was a case of circumstantial evidence tried where the judge gave the jury all the instructions the law would have sustained, but, unless he gave them wrong instructions, it was no error. That the want of full instruction might, in some courts, have been considered ground for a new trial; never was it assigned for error.

It will be noticed that a large proportion of the cases in the note are decisions of the appellate courts of Texas, and particularly the cases in supra, VII., where the questions considered are, the necessity of the request for instruction on the subject of circumstantial evidence; and also the necessity of an exception to the neglect or refusal of the court to charge upon that subject; there being in that division only two cases cited from Georgia and one from Utah, other than the Texas cases. This preponderance of cases from that state in the note is readily accounted for when an examination is made of article 715 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of Texas, which provides: "After the argument of any criminal cause has been concluded, the judge shall deliver to the jury a written charge, in which he shall distinctly set forth the law applicable to the case; but he shall not express any opinion as to the weight of evidence; nor shall he sum up the testimony. This charge shall be given in all cases of felony, whether asked or not." P. H. V.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

ST. LOUIS & SAN FRANCISCO RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

Anna McFALL, Admr., etc., of W. O. McFall, Deceased.

(.....Ark.....)

Negligence of a locomotive engineer, which results in a collision, is not imputable to the conductor in charge of his train, so as to prevent a recovery for injuries thereby caused to the latter, where the conductor could not have controlled the action of the engineer at the time of the accident, or have prevented its occurrence.

(April 8, 1905.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Craighead County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Affirmed.

Statement by Battle, J.:

"On the 16th day of February, 1902, and for some time prior thereto, W. O. McFall was employed" by the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company as a conductor, and on that day had charge of fast freight train 25,201, with William Adams as his engineer, and was running from Thayer, Missouri, to Memphis, Tennessee. This train left Thayer, Missouri, between 4 and 5 A. M., as second section of 201, with orders to run forty-five minutes behind first 201, which was a regular passenger train. At Hardy, the first water station, some 18 miles east of Thayer, McFall's train stopped, and then received orders to meet freight train 252, in charge of conductor Shirk and engineer Morehead, at Ravenden station, about 15 miles further east. McFall's train was a first-class train, and was entitled to the main line at the meeting point, while Shirk's train was a third-class train, and was required to take the siding at this meeting point.

Shirk's train arrived at Ravenden, the meeting point, from five to ten minutes ahead of McFall's train, and, instead of taking the siding, stopped on the main line, at the switch for this siding. The engineer cut the engine off, and ran it up to the water tank on the main line, took water, and NOTE.—For a case in this series holding that the negligence of the driver of a fire engine in colliding with a street car is not imputable to a fireman riding on the engine, see McKernan v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. 68 L. R. A. 347.

As to imputing negligence of driver of vehicle generally to person injured while driving 60 L. R. A.

with him, see Nisbet v. Garner, 1 L. R. A. 152. and note; Becke v. Missouri P. R. Co. 9 L. R. A. 157, and note; Union P. R. Co. v. Lapsley, 16 L. R. A. 800; Mullen v. Owosso, 23 L. R. A. 693; Illinois C. R. Co. v. McLeod, 52 L. R. A. 954; Kopflits v. St. Paul, 58 L. R. A. 74; and Duval v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 65 L. R. A. 722.

returned to his train. McFall's train approached from the west, without stopping at the station, and ran into Shirk's train. No one was hurt on either train, except conductor McFall, who at the time of the collision was looking out at the side door of his caboose. The sudden stopping of the train caused the side door, which was a sliding door, to close, striking McFall about the head or neck, killing him.

It also appears that neither train had any rights over the other at the point of collision. McFall's train, as against Shirk's train, had the superior right to the main line up to the clearance post, a few feet west of the east switches at this station. Shirk's train had superior rights to the side tracks, and had the right to the main line east of the switch. The territory between the east switch stands and the clearance posts is called "neutral territory," and this is where Shirk's engine was when McFall's engine struck it.

Anna McFall, as administrator of W. O. McFall, deceased, brought this action against the railroad company to recover damages, caused by the death of her intestate, for the benefit of the widow and children of the deceased, alleging that she was his widow, and Leoho McFall, fourteen years of age, Gladdis McFall, thirteen years of age, and Nadine McFall, eight years of age, were his children. She alleged in her complaint that McFall's death was caused by the negligence of his own engineer, Adams, in that the latter approached Ravenden station, the meeting point, without reducing the speed of his train and without having his train under control; and by the negligence of Shirk and his engineer in not having their train on the siding on the arrival of McFall's train.

The defendant answered, and admitted that McFall's engineer, Adams, was negligent, and alleged that the combined negligence of Adams and the contributory negligence of McFall caused the collision and McFall's death.

There is no contention here that McFall and the engineer on his train and the employees on Shirk's train were fellow servants, and that he had assumed the risk of their negligence. It is virtually conceded that they were not. The only questions presented for our consideration on this appeal are: (1) Is the negligence of the engineer, Adams, to be imputed to McFall; and, (2) if not, was McFall guilty of negligence which contributed to his death?

The facts we have stated were proved in the trial of the issues in this case; also the following rules:

"(352) Engineers, when on the road, are under the direction of the train conductor, 69 L. R. A.

whose orders they will obey, unless his orders may endanger the safety of the train or require a violation of the rules, in which event the engineer becomes equally responsible with the conductor."

"(505) No train will leave a station without sufficient brakes, air or hand, to handle it with safety to the next stopping point."

"(508) Enginemen and conductors will both be held responsible for the test being made as provided in rule 502," which provides how the air brakes shall be tested.

Evidence was adduced tending to prove the following facts: When McFall's train was about to leave Thayer, Missouri, as before stated, Adams, his engineer, undertook to test the air brakes, when McFall said to him, "Let's not wait for you to pump up the air; let's go on, and you can try the air down the road the first time we have to stop;" and they moved on without making the test of the air brakes. At Hardy, a station 18 miles from Thayer, they stopped to receive orders, and, in doing so, applied the air, and the air brakes worked well. They received orders to meet train No. 252, Shirk's train, at Ravenden, about 15 miles distant, and then ran on to that place. Adams, relating what then followed, says: "There was a slow bridge about 2½ miles west of Ravenden, and I think we had an order there to reduce speed at that bridge; and in coming there it was awfully cold, and I had been using the engine pretty hard, and it was not steaming good, and I shut off way the other side of the bridge and let the train roll over the bridge and did not use the air, and after we rolled over the bridge I put the steam on again, and kept it on until we got to the mile board at Ravenden. I whistled for the road crossing there and for the mile board, and rolled on down, and then whistled for the meeting order, one long and one short blast, and we came on down, and there is a reverse curve there, and when I got in the curve I looked over about the tank and saw smoke and steam arising, and I said to my fireman, 'Those fellows are here, and we won't be delayed any,' and we rolled on down, and about 50 yards north of the pump house I applied the air, and I felt the train budge like it was working all right, and I rolled on down there expecting 252 to be on the side track, and when we got down a little farther I looked on the passing track and did not see anything of them. Well, I was pulling Mr. McFall, and Shirk's train was No. 252, and I expected to see Shirk's train on the siding, but I did not see them, and I thought probably they were doubling over another track, and by that time I was getting up near the tank, and I watched for them and did not see them, and I put the air on, and then looked at the order board and saw it was all right, and just as I passed the order board I came around the depot and struck straight track, and I saw their engine right ahead of me, and it looked to me like they were about 150 yards ahead of me, or not so far, and that scared me, and I put on the air and reversed the engine, and that did not seem to do any good at all, and we run on down and struck them."

He further testified that his train was running about 25 miles an hour as it passed the mile board, "and had been for a mile back," and about 8 or 10 miles an hour when it struck Shirk's train, and thinks that he could have stopped his train and avoided the collision if the air which set the brakes had "worked all right." It "worked all right" at Hardy, and until he "got in sight" of Shirk's train, and then failed, and the collision followed.

As his train approached Ravenen, McFall was in the caboose with no end doors or platform and no cupola, and had side doors on rollers. Adams testified: "McFall being in the caboose, there was nothing he could have done in the way of signaling me after it became apparent that something was wrong. I could not have seen him from the mile board. The track is all curves, first one way, then the other. In the curve at Ravenen, with the short train we had, I do not think McFall could have seen the engine, because the water tank and depot were in the way." He could have set the brakes by turning the air cock, for the purpose of checking the train, but that he was doing, and could do more effectually than McFall could have done.

At the time of the collision McFall was looking out of the side door of his caboose, when the sudden stopping of the train, caused by the collision, caused the door to close with great force and kill him, striking him on the head.

The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $6,000. Judgment was rendered in her favor for that amount, and the defendant appealed.

Messrs. L. F. Parker and W. J. Orr, for appellant:

The negligence of the engineer is imputed to the conductor.

Moore v. Jones, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 391, 39 S. W. 593; Minster v. Citizens' R. Co. 53 Mo. App. 276; Evans v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 62 Mo. 49; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Morgart, 45 Ark. 318; Pine Bluff Water & Light Co. v. Schneider, 62 Ark. 109, 33 L. R. A. 366, 34 S. W. 547; Little v. Hackett, 116 U. S. 366, 29 L. ed. 652, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391; Thorogood v. Bryan, 8 C. B. 115; Maes v. 69 L. R. A.

Texas & N. O. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 23 S. W. 725; Hot Springs Street R. Co. v. Hildreth, 72 Ark. 572, 82 S. W. 245; Callahan v. Sharp, 27 Hun, 85; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Steinbrenner, 47 N. J. L. 161, 54 Am. Rep. 126.

Messrs. J. F. Gantney and N. F. Lamb for appellee.

Battle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Assuming that the collision was caused by the negligence of Adams, the engineer, was such imputable to McFall? In Little v. Hackett, 116 U. S. 366, 29 L. ed. 652, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391, Mr. Justice Field, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "That one cannot recover damages for an injury to the commission of which he has directly contributed, is a rule of established law and a principle of common justice. And it matters not whether contribution consists in his participation in the direct cause of the injury, or in his omission of duties which, if performed, would have prevented it." In that case the court held: "A person who hires a public hack, and gives the driver directions as to the place to which he wishes to be conveyed, but exercises no other control over the conduct of the driver, is not responsible for his acts or negligence, or prevented from recovering against a railroad company for injuries suffered from a collision of its train with the hack, caused by the negligence of both the managers of the train and of the driver." The court, after a review of many cases upon the subject, said: "Those on a hack do not become responsible for the negligence of the driver, if they exercise no control over him further than to indicate the route they wish to travel or the places to which they wish to go. If he is their agent so that his negligence can be imputed to them to prevent their recovery against a third party, he must be their agent in all other respects, so far as the management of the carriage is concerned; and responsibility to third parties would attach to them for injuries caused by his negligence in the course of his employment. But, as we have already stated, responsibility cannot, within any recognized rules of law, be fastened upon one who has in no way interfered with and controlled in the matter, causing the injury. From the simple fact of hiring the carriage or riding in it no such liability can arise. The party hiring or riding must in some way have co-operated in producing the injury complained of before he incurs any liability for it."

In New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Steinbrenner, 47 N. J. L. 161, 54 Am. Rep. 126, a leading case, in which there is a long review of authorities, the following rule is laid down: "A passenger in a hired coach may, by words or conduct at the time, so sanction or encourage a special act of rash or careless driving as to commit an act of negligence which will debar him from a suit against a third person for an injury resulting from the co-operating negligence of both parties. But for whatever purpose the negligence is invoked—whether as a cause of action for an injury done by the driver, or as contributory negligence to bar an action by the passenger against a third person for an injury sustained—the negligence, to be imputed to the passenger, must be such as arises in some manner from his own conduct. The negligence of the driver, without some co-operating negligence on his part, cannot be imputed to the passenger in virtue of the simple act of hiring."

Mr. Beach, in his work on Contributory Negligence, says: "The general rule is that, when the plaintiff's own want of ordinary care is a proximate cause of the injury he sustains, he cannot recover damages from another therefor. But, under certain exceptional conditions, . . . a plaintiff may be legally chargeable with the negligence of some third person, which is imputed to him as though it were his own. In this particular the law of negligence is analogous to the general principles of the law as to liability, under which one is primarily responsible for his own acts, and only secondarily for the acts of others, as e. g., those of his servant or agent. The rule upon this branch of our subject is that the contributory negligence of third persons constitutes a valid defense to the plaintiff's action only when that negligence is legally imputable to the plaintiff. There must, in order to create this imputability, be some connection, which the law recognizes, between the plaintiff and the third person, from which the legal responsibility may arise. The negligence of the third person and its legal imputability must concur. It is clear that there is no justification for the negligent misconduct of the defendant in that some third person, a stranger, was also in the wrong. When the defendant pleads the negligence of a party other than the plaintiff in bar of the action, it must appear, not only that such third person was in fault, but that the plaintiff ought to be charged with that fault." Page 142, § 100.

It follows, then, that, in cases where the injured and negligent do not sustain to each other the relations of master and servant, or principal and agent, or other relation by which alone one is responsible for the act of the other, the contributory negligence of a third person will not be imputed to the party thereby affected, unless he was at the time subject to the control of the injured person, and the wrong—the negligence—was committed at a time when it was within the power of such person to prevent it, and it was his duty to do so, and under circumstances which indicated that he assented to or acquiesced in the wrong by his failure to interfere, or directed it to be done; and that, when the conditions are reversed, the reverse is true,—it will be imputed.

The engineer of a railroad train is presumed to have been selected on account of his fitness for the position he fills. Being qualified, it is not the duty of the conductor to keep him under his constant supervision. In the discharge of his duties the engineer must be left to a large extent to the exercise of his own judgment. There was no evidence in this case tending to prove that Engineer Adams was not, before the collision of his train at Ravenden, careful and competent for the discharge of his duties, or that McFall, his conductor, had reason to believe that he was not.

The jury, in returning a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, necessarily found that the negligence of Adams was not imputable to McFall, and that McFall was not guilty of contributory negligence. The evidence was sufficient to sustain their findings.

Judgment affirmed.

IDAHO SUPREME COURT,

Charles A. McDONALD, Sheriff of Clark County,

v.

Edwin DOUST.

(.....Idaho.....)

*1. Section 1 of article 18 of the Constitution recognizes the counties organized and existing at the date of its adoption, and

*Headnotes by AILSHI, J.

NOTE.—As to power of legislature to divide counties or towns, and erect new counties or towns, see, in this series, People ex rel. Henderson v. Westchester County, 30 L. R. A. 74.

As to power of legislature to change county

69 L. R. A.

it is not within the power of the legislature to destroy or abolish such governmental organizations.

2. Acts inconsistent with the spirit of the Constitution are as much prohibited by its terms as are acts specifically enumerated and forbidden therein.

3. Act of the legislature approved February 28, 1905, entitled "An Act to Abolish the County of Kootenai with from one judicial circuit to another, see McCulley v. Tennessee, 46 L. R. A. 567.

As to constitutionality of special act changing location of county seat, see Edmunds v. Herbrandson, 14 L. R. A. 725.

In the State of Idaho, and Create and Organize the Counties of Lewis and Clark within Said State, Define the Boundaries Thereof, and Locate the County Seats of Lewis and Clark Counties, Apportion the Debt of Kootenai County, between Lewis and Clark Counties, and to Provide for the Appointment of Officers in Said Lewis and Clark Counties, and for Transcribing a Portion of the Records of Clark County, and to Constitute Said Counties of Lewis and Clark a Part of the First Judicial District of the State of Idaho,"—is unconstitutional and void, in that it attempts to abolish and destroy an organized county of the state.

(May 12, 1905.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of mandamus to compel defendant to deliver to plaintiff the office records and property in defendant's possession as former sheriff of Kootenai County. Alternative writ quashed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Edwin McBea, Ezra Whitla, C. W. Beale, Herman H. Taylor, and McGlear & Burgan for petitioner.

On rehearing, Messrs. Henry Z. Johnson and W. E. Borah also for petitioner.

Messrs. Fremont Wood, Edgar Wilson, and Charles L. Heitman, for defendant:

The legislature cannot abolish a county or a county government.

The constitutional recognition of the counties in existence at the time that the state was admitted into the Union precludes the right of the legislature thereafter to abolish them.

Idaho Const. art. 18, § 1; People ex rel. Lincoln County v. George, 3 Idaho, 72, 28 Pac. 983; James County v. Hamilton County, 89 Tenn. 237, 14 S. W. 601.

The legislature cannot remove the county seat from Rathdrum to Cœur d'Alene, as provided in this act, without a compliance with the requirements of § 2 of art. 18 of the state Constitution.

People ex rel. Stephenson v. Marshall, 12 Ill. 391; Craig v. Missouri, 4 Pet. 410, 7 L. ed. 903; James County v. Hamilton County, 89 Tenn. 237, 14 S. W. 601.

In considering and expounding provisions extending to constitutional guaranties, the courts have never considered the extent of the infringement, the only question being whether or not there was any infringement, even the slightest.

Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 124 Fed. 601; Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 29 L. ed. 746, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524; Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 329, 37 L. ed. 469, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622.

Allshie, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an original application by the plaintiff, praying for the issuance of a writ of mandate. The plaintiff alleges that at the general election held in November, 1904, the defendant, Edwin Doust, was duly elected sheriff of the county of Kootenai, and thereafter qualified and entered upon the discharge of his duties as such sheriff; that thereafter the legislature passed an act abolishing the county of Kootenai, and creating the counties of Lewis and Clark, and that by the provisions of the act the governor was authorized and directed to appoint county officers for each of the new counties, and that, in accordance therewith, he appointed the plaintiff as sheriff of the county of Clark, and that plaintiff immediately entered upon the discharge of his duties as such sheriff, and demanded of the defendant, as the former sheriff of Kootenai county, that he deliver over to plaintiff the records, money, property, and prisoners within his care and custody, belonging to the county of Clark; and that the defendant refuses so to do. The defendant demurred to the petition, and at the same time answered, and under both his demurrer and answer urges that the act abolishing Kootenai county and creating the counties of Lewis and Clark is unconstitutional and void. The act in question was approved on the 28th day of February, 1905, and is entitled "An Act to Abolish the County of Kootenai within the State of Idaho, and Create and Organize the Counties of Lewis and Clark within Said State, Define the Boundaries Thereof, and Locate the County Seats of Lewis and Clark Counties, Apportion the Debt of Kootenai County, between Lewis and Clark Counties, and to Provide for the Appointment of Officers in Said Lewis and Clark Counties, and for Transcribing a Portion of the Records of Clark County, and to Constitute said Counties of Lewis and Clark a Part of the First Judicial District of the State of Idaho." Section 1 of the act is as follows: "The county of Kootenai in the state of Idaho, shall be and is hereby abolished, and the county of Lewis and the county of Clark in said state are hereby created, and said counties of Lewis and Clark shall embrace all the territory heretofore included within the boundary of said Kootenai county." By the further provisions of the act, the territory comprising Kootenai county is divided between the two new counties, and the county seat of Lewis county is established at Sandpoint, and that of Clark at Cœur d'Alene city. It contains an emergency clause whereby the act goes into effect immediately upon its approval, and the governor is directed to appoint officers for the two counties within ten days after the approval of the act; but there is no provision in the bill for the continuation or carrying on of county government from the time the act goes into effect until the new officers qualify. By § 1 of this act the county of Kootenai is abolished, and from the identical territory formerly constituting and comprising that county two counties are created, to be known as Lewis and Clark, respectively. To my mind the controlling, and in fact the only serious, question in this case is the power of the legislature to abolish and destroy a county existing at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. If this question be resolved in favor of the exercise of such power, then, in my judgment, the act under consideration must stand. If such power does not exist, then the act is unconstitutional and void.
69 L. R. A.

Article 18 of the Constitution is entitled "County Organization." Section 1 of that article reads: "The several counties of the territory of Idaho, as they now exist, are hereby recognized as legal subdivisions of this state." Section 2 of the same article provides that "no county seat shall be removed unless upon petition of a majority of the qualified electors of the county, and unless two thirds of the qualified electors of the county, voting on the proposition at a general election, shall vote in favor of such removal." Section 3 of the same article provides that no county shall be divided, and the portion cut off be attached to another county, without first submitting the question to a vote of the people in the portion to be detached. By § 4 it is provided that "no new county shall be established which shall reduce any county to an area of less than 400 square miles. . . . Nor shall any new county be formed, which shall have an area of less than 400 square miles." The only instance in which these provisions of the Constitution have been directly under consideration by this court was in People ex rel. Lincoln County v. George, 3 Idaho, 72, 26 Pac. 983. In that case three separate opinions were filed by the justices of this court. Mr. Justice Huston, in his concurring opinion, held that the legislature was without the power or authority, under the Constitution, to abolish a county. Mr. Justice Morgan, who filed the principal majority opinion, held that the act of the legislature creating and establishing the counties of Alta and Lincoln from the identical territory formerly constituting Alturas and Logan was a palpable evasion of the Constitution, by doing in an indirect manner that which the Constitution forbids being done directly; and that the evasion consisted in the attempt to cut off a portion of one county and attach it to another county without submitting the question to a vote of the people affected thereby. Chief Justice Sullivan, dissenting from the views announced by the majority of the court, expressed the opinion 69 L. R. A.

that the legislature had plenary power in both the abolition and creation of counties. It is true that several cases have been before our court involving acts abolishing old and creating new counties, but in none of those cases has the question here involved been directly in issue or squarely passed upon by our court. In Doan v. Logan County, 3 Idaho, 38, 26 Pac. 167, it was held that § 2 art. 18, of the Constitution, does not apply to the location of a county seat consequent upon the creation of a new county. In Wright v. Kelley, 4 Idaho, 624, 43 Pac. 565, the court declined to pass upon the constitutionality of an act of the legislature creating Blaine county on the ground that such question could not be raised upon application for writ of mandate by a private party. In Bellevue Water Co. v. Stockslager, 4 Idaho, 636, 43 Pac. 568, it was held that the constitutionality of an act creating Blaine county could not be tested upon application of a private party for a writ of prohibition. In Blaine County v. Heard, 5 Idaho, 6, 45 Pac. 890, it was held that the court could not examine the legislative journals for the purpose of ascertaining the motives of the legislature for the passage of an act. The opinion in that case concludes by saying that the act establishing Blaine county is constitutional, but that expression seems to have followed from the court's conclusion that it could not examine into the legislative motive, rather than from any other point considered. It is evident from that opinion that the court did not consider or pass upon the constitutional authority of the legislature to abolish a county. This is clearly apparent when we remember that the writer of this latter opinion had stated his position in People ex rel. Lincoln County v. George that a county could not be abolished by legislative act. In People ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Alturas County, 6 Idaho, 418, 44 L. R. A. 122, 55 Pac. 1067, the constitutionality of the act establishing Blaine county was sustained by reason of the application of the doctrine of estoppel, and no other point was passed upon in the case. From the foregoing it is fair to say that in this state there is no expression which has the approval of a majority of the court, as constituted at the time, upon the identical question under consideration. The nearest approach, as above stated, was in the George Case; and there we have one of the learned justices saying the legislature could not abolish a county, and the other saying that it could do so, and the third holding that that particular question was not material to the determination of the case under consideration. In this state of opinion as heretofore expressed by this court, I have felt at liberty, as well as impelled by duty, to make an independent examination of this question, and, in the light of our Constitution, to determine, if possible, the purposes of the framers of the Constitution, and the people in its adoption, with reference to the creation, organization, dissolution, and destruction of counties.

At the outset there are a few propositions which are conceded, and the statement of which will simplify the question and limit our research. Under the foregoing provisions of the Constitution, we find: (1) No county seat can be removed except upon a vote of the people and two thirds of the qualified electors voting in favor of the removal; (2) no part of any county can be cut off and attached to another county without a majority of the people in the territory to be cut off voting in favor thereof; (3) no new county can be established which will reduce an old county to an area of less than 400 square miles; (4) no new county can be created which shall have an area of less than 400 square miles; (5) the legislature may create new counties. The act under consideration, if it is valid legislation, abolished the county of Kootenai, destroyed all county government therein, and, of course, abolished the seat of county government. The same act and same section created two new counties out of the same territory, and gave them two new names, viz., Lewis and Clark. The object to be attained was to have two counties where one formerly existed. There is no one questions in this case but that the legislature had the power to create the county of Lewis, and establish the county seat thereof at Sandpoint, had they left the remainder of the territory organized as Kootenai county, with the county seat at Rathdrum, as it had previously existed. It is also admitted that, had they not abolished Kootenai county, and reorganized the county containing the old county seat, the legislature would have been powerless, under the Constitution, art. 18, § 2, to establish the county seat at Cœur d'Alene for the same county in which the old county seat, Rathdrum, was located. Now, then, is it possible, by saying they abolished the county, and by the same act reorganized the territory containing the old county seat under a new name, with the county seat at another town, they could accomplish the ends forbidden by the Constitution, and thereby circumvent its operation? The purpose of creating and organizing counties is to obtain for the people local and county government. That government is as effective and operative, we take it, under one county name as another. The Constitution was adopted for the establishment and in aid and furtherance of government, and not for the disorganization and abolition of government. The supreme court of Tennessee, in James County v. Hamilton County, 89 Tenn. 237, 14 S. W. 601, in discussing somewhat similar provisions of the Tennessee Constitution to those of our Constitution with reference to the creation and organization of counties and the removal of county seats, said: "From it [the Constitution], it is clearly manifest, the authority, and only authority, conferred, is to build up, and not to pull down. It is equally apparent that it never occurred to the framers that a county could be destroyed or dissolved by an arbitrary act of the legislature. The expression of the one thing is the exclusion of the other. If the Constitution is so careful of the rights of old counties in taking from them fractions to form new counties,—if it is so watchful of the rights of citizens in county seats,—it follows that it is also jealous of any power that might utterly destroy old counties," as the passage of the act before us.

69 L. R. A.

We are cited to § 2, art. 1, of the Constitution, where it is recited that "no special privileges or immunities shall ever be granted that may not be altered, revoked, or repealed by the legislature," as authority for the legislature abolishing a county. Now, it must be apparent at once that a county organization or county government is neither a special privilege nor special immunity. On the other hand, it is a fundamental governmental right, recognized and adopted by the Constitution (§ 1, art. 1), and rests with the people (§ 2, art. 1), and cannot be abrogated or alienated by legislative act. It is true, the manner of organization and exercise of that power are the subjects of legislative control (§ 5, art. 18), but the dissolution of government does not, under our Constitution, rest with the legislature. At the time of the adoption of the Constitution, all the territory of the state, comprising over 84,000 square miles, was then organized into 18 counties, and those counties were recognized as legal subdivisions of the state (§ 1, art. 18); and by the very terms of that document it was made possible to increase the then existing number of counties, as the population and wealth of the state might increase, to the maximum number of 212 counties. This would indicate that the Constitution contemplated growth, and not dissolution. The Constitution was framed and adopted as the organic law on which to build a commonwealth, and not as a sanction for the destruction of what we already had. The thoughts and hopes of the people who adopted that document were centered on a future filled with the progress and development time is bringing us. Not a thought was entertained of ever giving up what we then had, and destroying the local county governments that were recognized by § 1 of article 18.

There is no middle ground on this proposition. The legislature either can or cannot abolish a county. If they can do so at all, they can do so unconditionally and without limitation, except as controlled by § 4, art. 18. The power vested in the legislature to create counties may be exercised, or not, as they see fit. There exists no authority by which they can be compelled to exercise such power. If the power to abolish counties exists at all, it exists freed from all conditions, and independent of the power to create counties. If these respective powers each exist, they are absolute and independent of each other, and the legislature might abolish any one or all of the counties of the state without creating any county or counties to take their place, and, thereby leave the people without any local or county government at all. The mere statement of this proposition refutes the assumption on which it rests. No such thing can be done.

It seems to me that the authority granted by the Constitution to create "new counties" does not mean to reorganize an old county under a new name. It must mean a new county, an additional county, and not a reorganization, rebounding, or renaming of an old county. This is the view entertained by Justice Morgan in the George Case, where he said: "I think the creation of a new county under the proviso in this section must be held to be the creation of an additional county, which the legislature may do out of any territory it may see fit, and without a vote of the people." What could be the necessity for creating a new county, where the people already have a county and county government, unless it be the creation of an additional county out of territory taken from one or more old counties? No advantage can be derived to the people by the reorganization or re-creation of an old county, for the reason that by § 5, art. 18, county government must be uniform throughout the state, and therefore no advantage can be acquired to the people by wiping from the map one county, and replacing the same county and county government by another county exercising the same powers and authority as the old. The Constitution never contemplated any vain or useless thing. Acts inconsistent with the spirit of that document are as much prohibited by its terms as are acts directly enumerated and forbidden therein. Is it possible that the framers of the Constitution, and the people in its adoption, meant to prohibit the removal of a county seat without a two-thirds vote of the people, and to prohibit the cutting off of territory without a vote of the people in the territory to be cut off, and to prohibit the reduction of a county below 400 square miles, and yet intended that a county might be entirely destroyed and blotted out at the legislative will? I am convinced that no such proposition was ever intended or contemplated by either the framers of the Constitution, or the people in its adoption. If the Constitution recognized the counties in the state as they existed at the time of our admission, and then prohibited any of the acts enumerated above, and so guarded the organization and integrity of a county, is it possible that they still meant that by a single act of the legislature a county might be wiped out of existence? Suppose some county should so far forget itself as to elect a set of officers distasteful to the powers that dictate political fortunes, and the legislature should suddenly conclude that the county ought, as a matter of political expediency, to be abolished, and a new county organized from the same territory, and new officers appointed, who would conform to their ideas of government, with the county seat in a neighboring town; is it possible that such an act would be within the purview of the Constitution? I think not.

The counties created and recognized by the Constitution find the authority for their existence in a higher power than the legislature. That authority comes directly from the people,—from the same power that makes legislatures. A strange anomaly would exist, anyway, if we recognized the power of the legislature, under our Constitution, to abolish counties. Senators and representatives are elected by counties. The people of a county may be entitled to a half dozen representatives and a senator, which they elect and send to the legislature to represent their county, not to destroy it; but as soon as they arrive they get a bill through, carrying an emergency clause, abolishing the county they represent. What county will they represent thereafter? Can they legislate their county out of representation? Or can they by legislative dictum constitute themselves the representatives of the new counties? Or suppose they abolish their county, and create none in its stead; where will they be? Who will they thereafter represent? These are questions which present themselves as soon as we enter this field of inquiry. And, indeed, they pass beyond the mere speculative and become actualities the moment it is admitted that the power to abolish counties exists at all.

Aside from the cases I have reviewed from our own court, I have been unable to find any decision passing upon similar constitutional provisions and a similar state of facts to those involved in the case at bar, except People ex rel. Stephenson v. Marshall, 12 Ill. 391, and James County v. Hamilton County, 89 Tenn. 237, 14 S. W. 601. These two cases pass upon very similar facts and constitutional provisions to those under consideration in the case at bar, and sustain the conclusion at which we have arrived. Re Division of Howard County, 15 Kan. 194. State ex rel. Bradford v. Hamilton, 40 Kan. 323, 19 Pac. 723, State ex rel. Robb v. Kiowa County, 41 Kan. 630, 21 Pac. 601, and Portwood v. Montgomery County, 52 Miss. 523, cited by petitioner, are not in point in this case. Neither Kansas nor Mississippi have constitutional provisions at all similar to those sections of our article 18, which recognize the counties existing at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, and the further provisions relating to the creation of new counties, division of counties, and change of county seats. It will be further observed, from an examination of those authorities, that what is there said with reference to the power of the legislature to abolish a county consists principally in the mere statements of the court that such power exists, without giving any reason therefor, as found within the constitutional provisions of those states.

I have considered this question somewhat at length, for the reason that, as I view the matter, our determination of this case may have a far-reaching effect upon the future organization of counties in this state. There is still enough territory in the state for the creation of 190 new counties of the constitutional area. This question must necessarily agitate every succeeding legislature, and I believe the lawmakers and the people have a right to know the opinion of the court upon these various provisions of the Constitution with reference to the creation of counties. A right determination of this question is of vast importance to the people of the state and future legislation which may be had on this subject. It is always with great reluctance that the courts hold an act of the legislature void, but the Constitution is neither the production of the legislature nor the courts, and is as mandatory upon the one as the other. It emanated directly from the people, and its mandates are supreme, and must be obeyed by every branch of the state government. We must apply it as we find it, and not as it might have been.

It follows from what has been said that I consider the act under consideration in violation of the Constitution. It is so held, and the writ will be quashed and the proceeding dismissed.

Sullivan, J., concurs.

89 L. R. A.

Stockslager, Ch. J., dissenting:

The authority of the legislature to create two new counties out of the territory comprising one county is the constitutional question before this court for determination. There was no attempt on the part of the legislature, in the act under consideration, to cover up or conceal the purpose of the act. After weeks of patient work in the committees, the act creating Lewis and Clark counties out of the territory then comprising Kootenai county was reported favorably, passed both houses by a large majority vote, and was promptly signed by the chief executive of the state. It is a matter of public history, shown by the map of the state, that Kootenai county is larger in square miles than some of the New England states. It is also shown by the records of the state that Kootenai county has the wealth, square miles, and population out of which two counties may be created, with more wealth, area, and population than many of the counties of the state as they now exist. It is also true that Rathdrum, the county seat of Kootenai county, is located near the western line of the county, and very inconvenient to a large majority of the taxpayers of the county. It is also true that the county buildings and property at Rathdrum are not permanent or valuable, and that the loss to the taxpayers by reason of the removal of the county seat from Rathdrum, or its location, elsewhere, would be trifling. All these questions were before the lawmaking power of the state, and ably presented by learned counsel for both factions to the controversy. It is evident from the act passed that the legislature believed that the better interests of all the people of Kootenai county would be best served by the division of the county, and location of the county seat of Lewis county at Sandpoint, and that of Clark county at Cœur d'Alene city.

Unless the legislature has exceeded its powers in the passage of this act, it should stand as the law of the state, and this seems to be the only question in the case. It must be conceded that the Constitution of this state, as well as that of every state in the union, vests large discriminating powers in the legislature; and, unless there is a direct and positive prohibition in the Constitution, the acts of the legislature should be upheld by the courts. As I view the Constitution, there is nothing that prohibits the legislature from doing just what is shown by this act; and, as I read the decisions of this court in the numerous cases that have been before it since the adoption of our Constitution, directly bearing on the constitutionality of an act creating new counties, I am unable to find any of them that would not have upheld a law similar to the one under consideration. I cannot see the force of the plea of sacredness in the name of "Kootenai county," or "Rathdrum" as its county seat. The same plea was entered for old Alturas county, and Hailey as the county seat, in People ex rel. Lincoln County v. George, referred to in the majority opinion; and whilst the writer of this opinion was a resident of Hailey, Alturas county, at the time of the litigation above referred to, he has never changed his residence. He now lives at Hailey, Blaine county. Alturas county was cut up and parceled out to Elmore and Logan counties, and one portion left, with the name of "Blaine county," with Hailey as the county seat. Yet my associates say that this court has never passed upon the question now before the court. If the entire importance of the question before us is involved in the location of the county seat, then People ex rel. Lincoln County v. George gives us no light, as less than half of the territory formerly belonging to Alturas county remains in Blaine, with Hailey as the county seat. I do not attach so much importance to the sacredness of the name for a county seat, nor do I believe that any town has a vested right to remain the county seat of a county when conditions have so changed that the interests of a large majority of the people demand a change. I also believe that it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution to vest the legislature with power to meet and provide the people with such changes as might seem best for their interests.

Taking up and discussing the questions in the order followed by my associates, we find first article 18 of the Constitution referred to. Section 1 provides that the several counties as they now exist are recognized as legal subdivisions of the state. Section 2 provides that no county seat shall be removed, unless, upon petition of a majority of the qualified electors of the county and unless two thirds of the qualified electors of the county voting on the proposition at a general election shall vote in favor of such removal. Section 3 provides that no county shall be divided, and the portion cut off attached to another county, without first submitting the question to a vote of the people in the portion to be detached. By § 4 it is provided that "no new counties shall be established which shall reduce any county to an area of less than 400 square miles. . . . Nor shall any new county be formed which shall have an area of less than 400 square miles." Section 1 needs neither comment nor construction. It only disposes of the counties of the state or territory as they existed at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. Section 2 has no bearing on the question before us, for the reason that the act does not attempt to remove a county seat of one of the organized counties of the state to which the Constitution refers without a "petition of the majority of the qualified electors of the county, and unless two thirds of the qualified electors of the county voting on the proposition at a general election shall vote in favor of such removal."

If the legislature had attempted to remove the county seat of Kootenai county to Sandpoint, Cœur d'Alene city, or any other town in that county, then § 2, above referred to, would be directly applicable. The law does no violence to § 3, as there is nothing contained in any of the provisions of the enactment that in any way attempts to cut off any portion of Kootenai county and attach it to any other county of the state, "without first submitting the question to a vote of the people in the portion to be attached." Section 4 is not violated, as there is no contention that each of the new counties created by the act have not within their boundaries all the requirements of the Constitution. Nor is there any attempt to reduce any county of the state to an area of less than 400 square miles. The attempt was to abolish, destroy, or wipe from the map of the state Kootenai county, and create out of the territory comprising that county the counties of Lewis and Clark; no attempt to do indirectly that which was prohibited from being done directly; no attempt to take territory from one county and add it to another without submitting the question to a vote of the people in the territory affected. All this being true, the language of Mr. Justice Morgan in People ex rel. Lincoln County v. George has no application to the facts in this case. A statement of the facts in People ex rel. Lincoln County v. George will readily disclose the reasons for the language of Justice Morgan, quoted in the majority opinion. It follows: "On the 3d of March, 1891, the legislature passed an act entitled 'An Act to Create and Organize the Counties of Alta and Lincoln, to Locate the County Seats of Said Counties, and to Apportion the Debt of Logan County.' The first section establishes the county of Alta, composed of the territory of Alturas county as it then existed, and about half of the contiguous territory of Logan. Section 2 establishes the county of Lincoln from the residue of the territory theretofore belonging to Logan." After this statement of the facts, Mr. Justice Morgan says: "The question that must determine this case is, Can a portion of the territory of one county be cut off and attached to another, without a vote of the people residing in the segregated portion consenting thereto in the manner adopted in this act?" He further says: "It is evident that the whole intent and object of the act were to cut this body of territory from the county of Logan and attach it to the county of Alturas. In fact, I understand the counsel did not deny that this was the sole object." Mr. Justice Huston, in his concurring opinion in the George Case, says: "The obvious intent, purpose, and effect of the act in question were to cut off or segregate a portion of Logan county, and attach the same to Alturas county, not for the purpose of creating a new county in the sense that term is evidently used in § 3, but solely, entirely, and exclusively for the purpose of enlarging the area of Alturas county." Mr. Chief Justice Sullivan, who dissented in the George Case, quoted a number of authorities in support of his views; and, whilst the facts in the case at bar differ very materially from the George Case, yet some quotations from his opinion will not be inappropriate. A careful reading of the three opinions in the George Case discloses that Mr. Justice Morgan declined to pass upon the question of the right of the legislature to abolish a county, asserting it was not necessary to determine that question; Mr. Justice Huston holding that no such power was given to the legislature by the Constitution; whilst Mr. Chief Justice Sullivan took the broad, and I think more liberal, view, that after the adoption of the Constitution the creation of new counties and abolishment of old ones was entirely within the legislative power of the state. I do not wish to be understood as agreeing entirely with the views expressed by Mr. Chief Justice Sullivan in the George Case. I am more inclined to agree with the position of Mr. Justice Morgan; that is, that the legislature attempted to do something indirectly which was prohibited by the Constitution from being done directly. In other words, when they attempted to take half of the territory of Logan county and give it to Alturas county by merely changing the name of Alturas to Alta, and Logan to Lincoln, and without submitting the question to a vote of the people affected by the change, it was an infringement upon the constitutional rights of the people residing within the boundaries of such territory. No such condition arises in the case at bar. It is purely and simply an attempt to make two counties out of one, evidently, in the view of the legislature, to better accommodate the people of the territory comprising Kootenai county. In the George Case Mr. Chief Justice Sullivan says: "It is also a well-established rule that an express power to make laws is not necessary to enable the legislature to make them. The court is called upon in this case to declare a solemn legislative enactment unconstitutional and void." Then, quoting from Judge Cooley in his work on Constitutional Limitations, p. 192, he says: "The power to declare a legislative enactment void is one which the judge, conscious of the fallibility of human judgment, will shrink from exercising in any case where he can conscientiously and with due regard to duty and official oath decline the responsibility." Quoting further from the opinion: "Courts have not the power to declare acts of the legislature void simply because, in the opinion of the court, such acts are repugnant to natural justice and expediency."

When the Constitution of Idaho was framed it was known that the legislature had exercised the power of changing the boundaries of counties and creating new ones, and that certain consequences resulted therefrom. The framers of the Constitution saw fit to prohibit the legislature from striking off a part of one county, and attaching it to a county then in existence, without submitting the question to a vote of the people residing in the part to be stricken off; but expressly provided that such inhibition shall not apply to the creation of new counties. From a careful reading of the act under consideration, and the three opinions filed in People ex rel. Lincoln County v. George, it occurs to me that the author had carefully studied the three opinions, and attempted to so draft the bill that it would be free from objections of at least one, if not both, of the majority opinions. I am thoroughly convinced that, with the same state of facts before the court in People ex rel. Lincoln County v. George as we have before us in this record, if a dissenting opinion had been written, it would have been by Mr. Justice Huston, instead of Mr. Chief Justice Sullivan.

My associates attempt to explain Doan v. Logan County, 3 Idaho, 38, 26 Pac. 167; Wright v. Kelley, 4 Idaho, 624, 43 Pac. 565; Bellevue Water Co. v. Stockslager, 4 Idaho, 636, 43 Pac. 568; Blaine County v. Heard, 5 Idaho, 6, 45 Pac. 890; People ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Alturas County, 6 Idaho, 418, 44 L. R. A. 122, 55 Pac. 1067,—by saying none of them have passed directly upon the question before us. Be that as it may, the fact exists that two counties that were upon the map of our state at the time of the adoption of our Constitution have been abolished, destroyed, blotted from the map of the state. To wit, Alturas and Logan, and we have in their stead Blaine and Lincoln. Every step looking toward the destruction of these two counties was vigorously resisted, and learned counsel from Salt Lake, Boise, and elsewhere were employed to guard the interests and existence of the two old counties. But history speaks for itself. This court did uphold the legislature, and the two counties were abolished.

The majority opinion says: "The purpose of creating and organizing counties is to obtain for the people local and county government. . . . The Constitution was adopted for the establishment and in aid and furtherance of government, and not for the disorganization and abolition of government." Certainly no one will dispute that proposition. But is it not true that the bill provided for the immediate organization of government for both of the counties created out of the territory of Kootenai? And is it not also true that the governor, in compliance with the provisions of the law, appointed officers for both counties, who qualified and entered upon the discharge of their several duties? In James County v. Hamilton County, 89 Tenn. 237, 14 S. W. 601, cited in the majority opinion, the legislature attempted to take all the territory of one county and parcel it out to the neighboring counties; thus entirely abolishing a county and leaving nothing in its place. Instead of dividing James county, and from a portion of its territory creating a new county, and leaving the remaining territory in the name of James county, or giving it a new name, the entire territory was given to other counties. This the Tennessee court said could not be done, and I see no objection to the decision.

It is said in the majority opinion: "Suppose some county should so far forget itself as to elect a set of officers distasteful to the powers that dictate political fortunes, and the legislature should suddenly conclude that the county ought, as a matter of political expediency, to be abolished, and a new county organized from the same territory," etc. Of course not. The supposition is violent. Legislatures are not supposed to do vain, useless, or vicious things. Their acts are entitled to full faith and credit in all things. They are elected by the people, and are responsible to the people for their every act.

Section 2 of article 1 of our Constitution says: "All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for their equal protection and benefit, and they have the right to alter, reform, or abolish the same whenever they may deem it necessary; and no special privileges or immunities shall ever be granted that may not be altered, revoked, or repealed by the legislature." It occurs to me that the framers of the Constitution intended to clothe the legislature with large discretionary powers in the future upbuilding of the state. What government may be altered, reformed, or abolished by the legislature? Does it mean state government, or does it mean state and county government? Alturas and Logan counties answered, by the action of the legislature, and afterward by the decisions of this court, that it meant county government, at least. I might prolong this discussion, but it seems unnecessary. The importance of the question to the people of the state in its future legislation warned me that I should not pass the question by without recording my views. It is well known to every resident of our great and growing state that we must soon meet the demands of the people for better accommodations in our large counties, some of which are empires in area, and rapidly filling up with population sufficient for two or more counties. It seems that one of the great objections to the law is that it attempts to remove the county seat from Rathdrum without a vote of the people. There is no force in this position, as I view it; but, if so, why could not that part of the law have been declared unconstitutional, and that part creating Lewis county, with the county seat at Sandpoint, been permitted to stand?

I am entirely satisfied that none of the provisions of the act do violence to any of the provisions of the Constitution, and the petition should have been granted.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Sullivan, J., on May 26, 1905, handed down the following additional opinion:

This is an original proceeding brought in this court to test the constitutionality of a certain act of the legislature, whereby it attempted to abolish the county of Kootenai, and to create out of its territory the counties of Lewis and Clark. The case was argued at the March, 1905, Lewiston term of this court, and the court held said act unconstitutional. A petition for rehearing has been filed herein, and counsel for the defendant have filed their objections to the consideration of said petition by this court, and state three reasons therefor: The first is that this cause is an original proceeding, and that the rules of this court do not contemplate or provide for a rehearing in an original proceeding; second, that on the 27th day of March, 1905, this court entered its decision in the above-entitled case, and the alternative writ of mandate was quashed, and that the petition for a rehearing was not filed within twenty days thereafter, as required by rule 22 of the rules of this court; and, third, that the questions raised in the petition for rehearing were all argued at length when the cause was heard, and no new question is suggested by the petition.

In support of the first contention, the defendant cites the decision of this court in Washington County Abstract Co. v. Stewart (Idaho) 74 Pac. 955. In that case it was held by this court that it was not the practice in this court to consider petitions for rehearing in original proceedings, but, owing to the peculiar position taken in this case, the court concluded to pass upon that application. In Hill v. Morgan (Idaho) 76 Pac. 323, a petition for a rehearing was filed, and in disposing of that petition it is said that the provisions of rule 22 of the rules of this court do not apply to cases of original jurisdiction in this court, for, if they did, a writ could not be issued until the time had expired for filing such petition, and thus the very purpose of the writ would often be defeated by such delay. Under the second point above suggested, we would say that rule 22 of this court provides that all applications for rehearing shall be upon petition, and shall be presented within twenty days after the judgment or order made by the court shall be placed on file; and it is contended that, as the order was made in open court on March 27, 1905, the time for filing a petition for rehearing expired on April 17, 1905, and the petition was not filed until May 1, 1905, long after the expiration of the twenty-day period. The fact is, counsel for the petitioner were informed by some of the members of this court that they could have twenty days after the opinion in this case was filed in which to present their petition for rehearing, provided they desired to file one, and for that reason the second point made by defendant is not well taken. The third point suggested is that all of the questions suggested in the petition for rehearing were argued at length when the cause was first heard, and that no new question is suggested in the petition. That contention is correct, and nothing new is suggested, except that one authority is cited that was not cited on the original hearing, which we will refer to hereafter. While it is true the rules of this court do not authorize a rehearing, or an application therefor, in original proceedings in this court, yet, owing to the importance of this case, we have gone carefully through the petition, and shall proceed to make a few observations on the questions suggested or raised by it.

Counsel, in their petition, first contend that that part of the act creating Lewis county is constitutional, and may be segregated from that part of the act which abolishes Kootenai county and creates Clark county, and be permitted to stand, and contend that where a statute attempts to accomplish two or more objects, and is void in one, it may still in every respect be complete and valid as to the other, and in support of that contention quote from Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 6th ed. p. 210; 69 L. R. A.

Id. 7th ed. p. 246, as follows: "Where, therefore, a part of a statute is unconstitutional, that fact does not authorize the courts to declare the remainder void, also, unless all the provisions are connected in subject-matter, depending on each other, operating together for the same purpose, or otherwise so connected together in meaning that it cannot be presumed that the legislature would have passed the one without the other. The constitutional and unconstitutional provisions may even be contained in the same section, and yet be perfectly distinct and separable, so that the first may stand, though the last fall. The point is not whether they are contained in the same section, for the distribution into sections is purely artificial, but whether they are essentially and inseparably connected in substance. If, when the unconstitutional portion is stricken out, that which remains is complete in itself, and capable of being executed in accordance with the apparent legislative intent, wholly independent of that which was rejected, it must be sustained." We recognize the principle there laid down by Judge Cooley as a correct rule of law. The author, at page 247, further states as follows: "The difficulty is in determining whether the good and bad parts of the statute are capable of being separated, within the meaning of this rule. . . . And if they are so mutually connected with and dependent on each other, as conditions, considerations, or compensations for each other, as to warrant the belief that the legislature intended them as a whole, and if all could not be carried into effect the legislature would not pass the residue independently, then, if some parts are unconstitutional, all the provisions which are thus dependent, conditional, or connected must fall with them." It was held in Allen v. Louisiana, 103 U. S. 80, 26 L. ed. 318, that "where unconstitutional provisions [of an act] are so connected with the general scope of the law as to make it impossible, if they are stricken out, to give effect to what appears to have been the intent of the legislature, the whole law is invalid;" and in Redell v. Moores, 63 Neb. 219, 55 L. R. A. 740, 93 Am. St. Rep. 431, 88 N. W. 243, that, where it is apparent that the unconstitutional part of an act was an inducement to the adoption of the remainder, the whole act must fail.

When measured by the well-settled rule above stated, the question arises, Can that part of the act which creates Lewis county be permitted to stand? We will here make a short analysis of the bill. The first section of said act abolishes the county of Kootenai, and provides that the counties of Lewis and Clark shall be created out of the territory included within the boundary lines of said Kootenai county. Section 2 describes the boundaries of Lewis county. Section 3 describes the boundaries of Clark county. By section 4 the governor is authorized and directed, within ten days after the act shall become a law, to appoint county officers for each of said counties (designating them); and it also provides that such officers shall qualify within ten days from the date of their appointment. Section 5 establishes the county seat of Lewis county at the town of Sandpoint, and also provides that the question of the permanent location of the county seat of said county shall be submitted to the voters of said county at the next general election. Section 6 of said act establishes the county seat of Clark county at Cœur d'Alene city, and provides that the question of the permanent location of the county seat of said county shall be submitted to the voters of said county at the next general election. The 7th section provides that all of the personal property, county records, books, papers, money, credits, furniture, and fixtures belonging to the former county of Kootenai shall become the property of Clark county, and further provides that, after the proper officers of Clark county shall have been appointed and qualified, all such books, papers, etc., belonging to the former Kootenai county, shall, by the custodian of the same, be immediately delivered to the proper officers of Clark county; and provides that the county commissioners of Clark county shall provide suitable officers within the corporate limits of Cœur d'Alene city for the accommodation of such records and the county officers of said Clark county. The 8th section provides that the indebtedness of Kootenai county at the date this act takes effect shall be apportioned between the counties of Lewis and Clark, and goes into detail of the way in which such indebtedness shall be apportioned between said counties, and also provides the manner that all property belonging to Kootenai county shall be divided between said Lewis and Clark counties. Section 9 provides for the appointment of competent accountants to ascertain the amount of indebtedness of the former Kootenai county, and directs such accountants to proceed and ascertain from the books and records of the auditor's and recorder's and treasurer's offices the whole amount of the indebtedness of Kootenai county, and to compute from the assessment roll for the year 1904 the total taxable property of each of the counties of Lewis and Clark, and directs them to make a list of all county property, and report the same in writing to the judge of the district court of the first judicial district, which judge is directed to fix the reasonable cash value of such property, and apportion said indebtedness according to § 6 of said act, and to ascertain other things not necessary to mention here. Section 10 directs the recorder of Clark county within ninety days after the establishment of such counties to transcribe all matters of record from the record books of Clark county that should be recorded in Lewis county, and deliver the same to the recorder of Lewis county. Section 11 provides for a disposition of the school money in the hands of the treasurer of Clark county. Section 12 provides that said counties of Lewis and Clark shall form a part of the first judicial district of the state, and provides for the holding of terms of court in such counties. Section 13 provides that the judge of the probate court of Clark county shall proceed at once to transfer all civil and criminal actions and unsettled estates of deceased persons, and all other business required to be transferred, to the probate court of Lewis county. Section 14 provides that the county commissioners of said Clark and Lewis counties shall, within five days after receiving notice of their appointment, meet at their respective county seats, and organize for the transaction of county business, and shall establish precincts in their respective counties, and appoint precinct officers thereof. Section 15 provides that said counties of Lewis and Clark shall constitute the thirteenth senatorial district, and that each of said counties shall elect one member of the house of representatives. Section 16 provides that all laws of a general nature applicable to the several counties of this state and the officers thereof are made applicable to said counties. Section 17 repeals all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with said act. Section 18 declares that an emergency exists therefor, and that this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and approval. Said act was approved on the 28th day of February, 1905.

From the various provisions of said act, it is clear to me that all of the provisions thereof in regard to the creation of Clark county, and the establishment of the county seat at Cœur d'Alene city, were the main inducement for the adoption of the remaining part of said act. The very first section of said act abolishes Kootenai county, and the abolishment of that county was no doubt an inducement for the passage of said act. That being true, the part of said act creating Lewis county cannot stand when tested by the rule above laid down by Judge Cooley, the Supreme Court of the United States, and the supreme court of Nebraska. This act is so connected and so related in substance, as I view it, as to preclude the supposition that the legislature would have created Lewis county without having created Clark. The act is so drawn, and the section so constructed, and the provisions so interdependent, as to clearly indicate that the legislature intended the act to operate as a whole, and that it would not have created Lewis county alone. That being true, the entire act must be held invalid. If you would cut out of this act all of the provisions except those applicable to Lewis county, the remaining part would be unintelligible—would in part, at least, be a jumble of words without meaning, "sound without sense." In considering this question, I think the unconstitutional part of said act was an inducement to the legislature for a passage of the other portions. It may be insisted that this question must be determined solely by an inspection of the act itself. We concede that proposition, with a slight qualification, however, which qualification is referred to in Sibley v. Smith, 2 Mich. 486, where the court said: "Courts are authorized to collect the intention of the legislature from the occasion and necessity of the law,—from the mischief felt and the objects and remedy in view."

The Supreme Court of the United States, in United States v. Union P. R. Co. 91 U. S. 72, 23 L. ed. 224, said: "Courts, in construing a statute, may with propriety recur to the history of the times when it was passed; and this is frequently necessary in order to ascertain the reason as well as the meaning of particular provisions in it." In Stout v. Grant County, 107 Ind. 343, 8 N. E. 222, it was held that the history of a country, its topography and general conditions, are elements which enter into the construction of the laws made to govern it, and are matters of which the court will take judicial notice; and it has been held that the general state of opinion, public, judicial, and legislative, at the time of an enactment of a measure, may be considered by the courts in construing it. See Redell v. Moores, 63 Neb. 219, 55 L. R. A. 740, 93 Am. St. Rep. 431, 88 N. W. 243, and authorities there cited. It is a part of the legislative history of this state that a bill was introduced in the legislature for the creation of Lewis county out of substantially the same portion of Kootenai county that the Lewis county referred to in this act contains, and that said bill failed to become a law because of supported the present act. And the inducement opposition of members who afterward ment in said act to such members was, no doubt, the creation of Clark county, and the removal of the county seat from Rathdrum to the city of Cœur d'Alene. Those facts are matters of common knowledge. One of the chief inducements to the passage of said act was the abolishment of Kootenai county, and the creation of Clark county, with the removal of the county seat. That feature of the bill was the main inducement for its passage.

The act under consideration was approved by the governor on the 28th day of February, 1905, and contained the emergency clause, and hence became a law, if ever, on that day. As the 1st section abolished Kootenai county, if the act is valid the people of that county were without county government from the 28th day of February to the 7th day of March, 1905, when the officers appointed by the governor qualified. Said act did not provide that the officers of Kootenai county should continue in office until their successors were appointed and qualified, and, if the act be held valid, the people of that county were without county government for a number of days. The legislature cannot deprive the people of any county of such local or self government as the several counties of the state are entitled to under the Constitution. If they can deprive a people of local government for six days, they may do so for six months or six years. The legislature is prohibited from depriving the people of any county of local self-government. Article 18 of our Constitution, which is in regard to county organization, requires the legislature to establish a system of county governments which shall be uniform throughout the state, and prohibits the legislature from depriving the people of any county of such government. In People ex rel. Bolton v. Albertson, 55 N. Y. 50, the court held that this right of self-government lies at the foundation of our institutions. Section 2 of article 18 of the Constitution is as follows: "No county seat shall be removed unless upon petition of a majority of the qualified electors of the county, and unless two thirds of the qualified electors of the county, voting on the proposition at a general election, shall vote in favor of such removal. A proposition of removal of the county seat shall not be submitted in the same county more than once in six years, except as provided by existing laws. No person shall vote at any county-seat election who has not resided in the county six months, and in the precinct ninety days." By the provisions of that section the legislature is prohibited from changing a county seat, and the people themselves are prohibited from changing it, except on a two-thirds vote of the qualified electors; and under those provisions the legislature will not be permitted to change a county seat under the guise or pretense of creating a new county. They will not be permitted to do thus indirectly what they are prohibited from doing directly. In this case, under the pretense of creating a new county the legislature has removed a county seat. They attempted to abolish Kootenai county, and attempted to create a new county out of the northern part thereof, and in the same act changed the name of the southern part of Kootenai county, and changed the county seat from Rathdrum to Cœur d'Alene city. Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, 7th ed. p. 244, says: "There is no difficulty in saying that any such act, which, under pretense of exercising one power, is usurping another, is opposed to the Constitution and void."

The case of People ex rel. Bolton v. Albertson, 55 N. Y. 50, is a remarkable one of the intention of the legislature to avoid and evade the provisions of the Constitution, and still keep within its terms. I think the principle laid down there is applicable to the case at bar. It is there held that a legislative enactment evading the terms and frustrating the general and clearly expressed or necessarily implied purposes of the Constitution is as clearly void as if in express terms forbidden. And in Taylor v. Ross County, 23 Ohio St. 22, the supreme court of Ohio found itself under the necessity of declaring that that which was forbidden by the Constitution could no more be done indirectly than directly, which has now become a well-recognized rule of law.

Knowing the bitterness and strife engendered in county-seat fights, the framers of the Constitution provided stringent provisions in regard to the removal of county seats, and prohibited such removal except on a two-thirds vote of the qualified electors, and also prohibited the submission of such questions to the voters oftener than once in six years. Is it possible that the framers of the Constitution intended to permit the legislature to change the county seats of every county in the state at each session of the legislature thereof, by simply giving the county a new name, and changing the county seat under the guise and pretense of creating a new county? I think not.

Counsel for the petitioner, in their original arguments in this case, contend that, under the provisions of the Constitution, the legislature could abolish a county and create a new one out of identically the same territory, and change the county seat. If that contention be true, the county seat of every county in the state could be changed as often as the legislature held a session. That certainly would leave the location of the county seat of the several counties of the state to the "mutatious whims" of the legislature, while by the terms of the Constitution the people themselves are prohibited from removing their county seat oftener than once in six years. I am not in accord with that contention, and, in my view of the matter, the creation of a "new county," as contemplated by our Constitution, requires something more than the change of the name of a county and the change of its county seat. Under the pretense of exercising the power to create a new county, the legislature has usurped the power reserved by the people to change a county seat.

In People ex rel. Lincoln County v. George, 3 Idaho, 72, 26 Pac. 983, in a dissenting opinion, I held that the legislature had a right to abolish a county in the creation of new counties; but, upon a further investigation of this question, I am not satisfied that my views in that opinion on that point were correct. However, that case was not decided upon that point.

In addition to the cases cited on the original hearing, counsel for petitioner cited Frost v. Pfeiffer, 26 Colo. 338, 58 Pac. 147. That involved the constitutionality of an act of the general assembly of Colorado creating the county of Teller out of portions of the counties of El Paso and Fremont. By that act no county was abolished, and no county seat removed. The act, after creating Teller county, left the counties of El Paso and Fremont simply with reduced areas. We are unable to see wherein the decision in that case has any application whatever to the questions under consideration in the case at bar.

I therefore hold that if this court had the authority, under the law or its rules, to grant a rehearing in a case originally brought in this court, the showing made by the petition for a rehearing in this case is not sufficient to warrant a rehearing. A rehearing is denied.

Ailshie, J., concurs. Stockslager, Ch. J., dissents from the conclusion reached.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

Joseph A. WILLIAMS et al., Appts.,

v.

Richard M. NEELY et al.

(87 C. C. A. 171, 134 Fed. 1.)

*1. Any fact which renders it against

*Headnotes by SANBORN, Circuit Judge.

NOTE.—As to equitable jurisdiction to enjoin judgments, see note to Jarrett v. Goodnow, 32 L. R. A. 321.
69 L. R. A.

conscience to enter or execute a judgment at law, and which was not available to the defendant at law, confers jurisdiction upon a court of equity to enjoin the proposed entry or execution.

2. A sound reason, inhering in the same transaction from which a promissory note springs, why the holder ought not, in equity and good conscience, to recover its face value, is a good equitable

- defense to it, although this defense constitutes neither an offset, a counterclaim, nor an affirmative cause of action against the holder of the note.
2. A partial failure of consideration which results from a defect of title is a good defense pro tanto to an action by the vendor upon a promissory note given for the purchase price of land which the vendor has conveyed with covenants of warranty and against encumbrances.
 4. An injunction should issue to stay an action at law upon a promissory note for the purchase price of land until this equitable defense of reduction is allowed whenever the remedy at law is less certain, prompt, and efficient to attain the ends of justice, either because the interests of the parties require that the title to the land should be perfected, that their rights should be adjudicated, and that the litigation should be closed,—a result which no remedy at law is adequate to accomplish,—or because it entails circuity of action, or because there is imminent danger of unjustifiable loss or injury to the payee of the note, which a court of equity may, and a court of law cannot, prevent.
 5. The adequate remedy at law which will deprive a court of equity of jurisdiction must be a remedy as certain, complete, prompt, and efficient to attain the ends of justice as the remedy in equity.
 6. The assignee of a chose in action takes it subject to all the defenses which could have been set up against it in the hands of the assignor at the time of the assignment.
 7. One who purchases for value of a creditor the obligation of his debtor, and obtains the latter's promissory note, payable to himself, as evidence of his obligation, with full knowledge of the consideration thereof, and of the facts which condition the inception of the original obligation, takes the note subject to all the defenses which existed against it in the hands of the original creditor.
 8. The basis of waiver is estoppel, and where there is no estoppel there is no waiver.
 9. The defense of reduction or recoupment, which arises out of the same transaction as the promissory note or claim, survives as long as a cause of action upon the promissory note or claim exists, although an affirmative action upon the subject of the defense may be barred by the statute of limitations.
 10. The doctrine of laches is that courts of equity are not bound by, but usually act in analogy to, the statute of limitations governing actions at law of like character. Under ordinary circumstances a suit in equity will not be stayed for laches before, and will be stayed after, the time fixed by the analogous statute of limitations at law; but, if unusual conditions or extraordinary circumstances make it inequitable to allow the prosecution of a suit after a briefer, or to forbid its maintenance after a longer, period than that fixed by the statute, the chancellor will not be bound by the statute, but will determine the extraordinary case in accordance with the equities which condition it.
 11. It is not culpable laches for one who has an equitable defense of reduction to a promissory note, which has been and is the subject of pending litigation in another court, and which, if available at law, would survive as long as the cause of action upon the note existed, to wait until an affirmative action at law upon the subject of the defense is barred, and until the equitable defense is rejected in an action at law upon the note, before invoking the aid of a court of equity to enjoin the prosecution of the latter action until his equitable defense is allowed.
 12. The court which first acquires jurisdiction of specific property by the issue and service of process in a suit to enforce a lien upon it, in which it may be necessary to take possession or control of it, retains jurisdiction until the end, free from the interference of any court of co-ordinate jurisdiction.
 13. A subsequent suit involving rights in the same property in a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction should not be dismissed, but, before a seizure of the property under it, should be stayed until the proceedings in the earlier suit are terminated, or ample time for their termination has elapsed.

(Hook, Circuit Judge, dissents.)

(November 18, 1904.)

A PPEAL by complainants from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nebraska dismissing a bill to enjoin the prosecution of an action at law to enforce payment of a promissory note. Reversed.

Statement by Sanborn, Circuit Judge:

This is an appeal from a decree which dismissed a bill in equity exhibited by the complainants below, Joseph A. Williams and Annie Williams, to enjoin the prosecution of an action at law which the defendant Richard M. Neely had brought against them in the court below to enforce the payment of their promissory note for $3,500, dated March 1, 1893, and due March 1, 1898, and to obtain a decree adjudicating the claims of the defendants in this suit to three quarter sections of land in the state of Nebraska. The material facts disclosed at the final hearing were these: Under the will of Richard S. Malony, Sr., Richard S. Malony, Jr., and Annie H. Neely owned three quarter sections of land, subject to the liens of two legacies which were charged upon the lands by the will,—one of $200 per year payable to the defendant Hannah Blake, and one of $100 per year payable to the defendant Sarah Foss. They sold one of these tracts to the defendant Stanley B. Wilson, another to the defendant Wenzel Herdlichtka, and the third to the complainant Joseph A. Williams. Before the sale of the third tract, Richard S. Malony had conveyed his share in it to Annie H. Neely, who made the contract of sale and the deed to the complainants. Each sale was made for $6,000, the full value of a title to each tract free from all encumbrances, and Wilson and Herdlichtka have paid for their quarters in full. The facts and conclusions which have been recited are res judicata between the parties to this suit by virtue of a decree of the district court of Richardson county, in the state of Nebraska, in a suit to which they were parties; and that suit is still pending under an order of the supreme court of that state to the district court to ascertain the amount owing by the complainant Joseph A. Williams herein on account of the purchase of his tract, to take control thereof, and, in case the law and the facts should be found to justify that course, to apply that amount in payment of the amounts due to the annuitants, Hannah Blake and Sarah Foss.

On February 6, 1902, Annie H. Neely and Richard S. Malony, Jr., as principals, and the defendant Richard M. Neely and others as sureties, executed a bond in the penal sum of $1,000 to the county judge of Richardson county, conditioned, among other things, that they should pay and discharge all legacies chargeable upon the estate of Richard S. Malony, Sr., or such dividends thereon as should be decreed by the county court. The defendant Richard M. Neely was the agent of his mother, Annie H. Neely, to sell the quarter section of land which was purchased by the complainant Joseph A. Williams. In October, 1892, he made and signed a written contract, as the agent of his mother, to sell and convey this land to Williams for $6,000, $500 of which was then paid, and the remainder was to be paid $2,000 on March 1, 1893, and $3,500 on March 1, 1898. About March 1, 1893, in performance of this contract, Williams paid this $2,000, and he and his wife made a note and a mortgage upon the property for $3,500, and Annie H. Neely executed a warranty deed of it to him. These instruments were prepared by Annie H. Neely, or by one of her agents, and the note and mortgage were made payable to Richard M. Neely; but the only consideration for them was the land the complainants purchased. Richard M. Neely never paid them anything for the note or mortgage. What amount, if anything, he paid his mother for them, is left in grave doubt by the 69 L. R. A.

evidence, and, in our view of the case is not material.

On April 18, 1902, Richard M. Neely brought an action at law against the complainants on the note, and they answered the facts which have been recited. The court held at the trial of that action that these facts constituted no defense to the note at law, and this suit was instituted, and the action at law was stayed to abide its determination. The same court has now held that these facts present no reason for relief in equity, and this conclusion is challenged by the appeal.

Argued before Sanborn, Van Devanter and Hook, Circuit Judges.

Mr. J. H. Broady, for appellants:

Before complainants had anything to do with the land or the estate, respondent Neely, in the executors' bond, promised to pay said legacies, and thereby enabled said executors to get hold of said land and sell and convert the same to their own use, leaving the legacies thereon unpaid. The general doctrine of equity jurisprudence is to avoid circuity of actions, and bring in all the parties and do justice between them. In such cases as this the doctrine of equitable set-off comes in. That bond obligation is such.

Blount v. Windley, 95 U. S. 177, 24 L. ed. 428; Ferris v. Burton, 1 Vt. 439; Foot v. Ketchum, 15 Vt. 258, 40 Am. Dec. 678; Hooper v. Armstrong, 69 Ala. 343; North Chicago Rolling Mill Co. v. St. Louis Ore & Steel Co. 152 U. S. 615, 617, 38 L. ed. 571, 572, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 710.

The equity court, in a proper case, will go above the penal sum of the bond.

Burnside v. Wand, 170 Mo. 531, 62 L. R. A. 427, 71 S. W. 337.

In equity, the note in the hands of the payee, the respondent herein, is subject to defenses the same as if he had made the covenants of warranty in the deed.

Vorce v. Rosenberg, 12 Neb. 448, 11 N. W. 879.

It is a legal impossibility that Richard M. Neely can be an innocent purchaser of the note.

Chariton Plow Co. v. Davidson, 16 Neb. 374, 20 N. W. 256; Camp v. Sturdevant, 16 Neb. 698, 21 N. W. 449.

Where different instruments are executed as evidences of different parts of one transaction, they are to be construed as constituting but one single contract.

Wilson v. Roots, 119 Ill. 386, 10 N. E. 204; Keith v. Miller, 174 Ill. 73, 51 N. E. 151; Breuer v. Penn. Mut. L. Ins. Co. 36 C. C. A. 289, 94 Fed. 347; Low v. Black- ford, 31 C. C. A. 15, 58 U. S. App. 737, 87 Fed. 395; South Baptist Soc. v. Clapp, 18 Barb. 35; Abele v. McGuigan, 78 Mich. 415, 44 N. W. 393; Lamb v. Davenport, 1 Sawy. 609, Fed. Cas. No. 8,015.

The respondents cannot invoke the doctrine of novation.

Murphy v. Hanrahan, 50 Wis. 489, 7 N. W. 436.

The transaction here can be considered in no other light than as a convenient form of assignment by Mrs. Neely to her son of a chose in action, or as a promise of Williams for her benefit and at her instance and request.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 662; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 1079, 1080; Allen v. Rundle, 45 Conn. 528; Gaston v. Owen, 43 Wis. 103; Clark v. Billings, 59 Ind. 508; Shamp v. Meyer, 20 Neb. 225, 29 N. W. 379.

The right of action on the one instrument may be used as a defense against an action on the other.

Rawle, Covenants, § 350; 3 Sedgw. Damages, 8th ed. § 1053; 2 Sutherland, Damages, § 632-640; Schuchmann v. Knoebel, 27 Ill. 175; Scantlin v. Allison, 12 Kan. 85; Cross v. Noble, 67 Pa. 78; Beecher v. Baldwin, 55 Conn. 428, 3 Am. St. Rep. 57, 12 Atl. 401; Avery v. Brown, 31 Conn. 403.

Breaches of covenants in the deed, in transactions of which the note is a part, are good defenses and counterclaims against the note.

The vendee does not have to pay off the encumbrances in order to get substantial relief, but he can hold the security in his hand as a protection.

Jaques v. Esler, 4 N. J. Eq. 463; Union Nat. Bank v. Pinner, 25 N. J. Eq. 495; White v. Stretch, 22 N. J. Eq. 76; Coy v. Downie, 14 Fla. 544; Lowry v. Hurd, 7 Minn. 356, Gil. 285; Walker v. Wilson, 13 Wis. 523; Wamsley v. Hunter, 29 La. Ann. 628; Applegarth v. Robertson, 65 Md. 493, 4 Atl. 896; Wilber v. Buchanan, 85 Ind. 42; Mondel v. Steel, 8 Mees. & W. 858; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 806, 807.

The cause of action for breach of covenants in this case is not barred by the statute of limitations, because the whole contract is up and concurrent, and the obligations are mutual, the one part being consideration for the other, and, as between the parties thereto, equity will hold that one part is not barred as a counterclaim against the other so long as the other is not barred.

Avery v. Brown, 31 Conn. 405; Beecher v. Baldwin, 55 Conn. 428, 3 Am. St. Rep. 69 L. R. A.

57, 12 Atl. 401; Angell, Limitations of Actions, § 75; Wood, Limitation of Actions, 3d ed. § 282; White v. Stretch, 22 N. J. Eq. 76.

Messrs. Wharton, Baird, & Sons, for appellees:

The alleged defense of total failure of consideration is not maintainable.

Saddler v. White, 14 La. Ann. 173; Glascok v. Rand, 14 Mo. 550.

The alleged defense of set-off or counterclaim cannot be maintained in favor of appellants and against appellees.

Stannus v. Stannus, 30 Iowa, 448; Van Buskirk v. Day, 32 Ill. 260; Steadwell v. Morris, 61 Ga. 97; Brashear v. West, 7 Pet. 606, 8 L. ed. 801; Simpson v. Jennings, 15 Neb. 671, 19 N. W. 473; Spencer v. Johnston, 58 Neb. 44, 78 N. W. 482; Fuller v. Steiglitz, 27 Ohio St. 355, 22 Am. Rep. 312; Thompson v. Emery, 27 N. H. 269; Frick v. White, 57 N. Y. 103; Graham v. Tilford, 1 Met. (Ky.) 112; Computing Scale Co. v. Churchill, 109 Wis. 303, 85 N. W. 337.

In no view of this case would the court be justified in granting the injunction prayed.

Scott v. Neely, 140 U. S. 106, 35 L. ed. 358, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 712; Marine Ins. Co. v. Hodgson, 7 Cranch, 332, 3 L. ed. 362; Truly v. Wanser, 5 How. 141, 12 L. ed. 88; Buchanan v. Alvoell, 27 Tenn. 516; Wimberg v. Schwoegeman, 97 Ind. 528; Miller v. Avery, 2 Barb. Ch. 582; Wilkins v. Hogue, 55 N. C. (2 Jones, Eq.) 479; Vick v. Percy, 7 Smedes & M. 256, 45 Am. Dec. 303; Patton v. Taylor, 7 How. 133, 12 L. ed. 638; Refeld v. Woodfolk, 22 How. 318, 16 L. ed. 370; Senter v. Hill, 5 Sneed, 505; Elliott v. Thompson, 4 Humph. 99, 40 Am. Dec. 630; Gayle v. Fattle, 14 Md. 69; Titcomb v. Potter, 11 Me. 218; Mutter v. Hamilton, Brun. Col. Cas. 27, Fed. Cas. No. 9,974.

On petition for rehearing.

From counsel's own statement it is clear that he intended to present in his bill the same defense which he pleaded in the law action, which was that of counterclaim, and not equitable recoupment.

The opinion as rendered was based upon an issue which was not before the trial court, and for that reason should be modified.

Dermott v. Jones, 23 How. 235, 16 L. ed. 448.

Recoupment as a defense is available only when there are mutual obligations between the plaintiff and defendant growing out of the same transaction.

Winthrop Sav. Bank v. Jackson, 67 Me. 570, 24 Am. Rep. 56; Hill v. Parsons, 110

Ill. 107; Widrig v. Taggart, 51 Mich. 103, 16 N. W. 251; Blair v. Reid, 20 Tex. 311.

Sanborn, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit in chancery. The theory upon which counsel for the complainants seeks to maintain it is this: In equity and good conscience, Richard M. Neely ought not to be permitted to recover upon the complainants' note the full amount of the unpaid purchase price of the land which they bought of his mother, Mrs. Annie H. Neely, through him as her agent: but the amount of his recovery should be reduced by the diminution of the value of the title which resulted from the liens upon the land which they bought. The purchase price which the complainants agreed to pay was the full value of a perfect title to the property, free from all encumbrances. The vendor agreed to give them such a title. They have not received it, but have obtained one of much less value, since the encumbrances upon it are about equal to the unpaid purchase price evidenced by their note. Neely, the payee of this note, knew of these encumbrances before he took or paid for the note. He knew that his mother, in performance of her agreement of sale, gave to the complainants a covenant against encumbrances upon the title to the land, and that the note evidenced the unpaid part of the purchase price. He knew—for he cannot escape knowledge of the law—that against his mother, and against all who took the note with knowledge of its consideration and of the facts and circumstances under which it was made, the obligation of the complainants to pay it was conditioned by the faithful performance by the vendor of her obligation to vest in them a title free from encumbrances. She has failed to comply with her agreement, and the complainants invoke the aid of this court to reduce the amount to be paid upon their note by the damages which they must sustain by the failure of the vendor to comply with the conditions subsequent of the complainants' obligation to pay,—her contract to furnish them a perfect title free from encumbrances. This theory of counsel for the complainants does not at first blush appear to be irrational; nor does the relief they seek seem to be either unjust or inequitable.

The purpose of the bill is to present and enforce an equitable defense to the action for payment of complainants' note. That defense is not, as counsel for the defendants seem to suppose, either a set-off or a counterclaim. Hence neither an independent cause of action in the defendant to recover damages of the complainant, nor a claim for liquidated damages, is an indispensable element of it. The defense is simply an equitable reason why the amount which the defendant should recover upon his note should be reduced below the amount which appears to be due upon its face. It springs out of and is a part of the same transaction from which the note arises. It is reduction or equitable recoupment, for it is analogous to the defense of recoupment at law. That defense crept from courts of chancery into the practice at law to enable courts of law to avoid the expense of suits in equity, to prevent circuity of action, and to obtain its benefit. Reab v. McAllister, 8 Wend. 109; Nashville Trust Co. v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 91 Tenn. 336, 15 L. R. A. 710, 714, 18 S. W. 822.

In Wheat v. Dotson, 12 Ark. 699, 711. Mr. Justice Scott, in an exhaustive and learned opinion, shows that recoupment is, in its nature and essence, an equity; that it was derived from the civil law; that it is now uniformly applied where one brings an action for a breach of a contract, and the defendant can show that some stipulation in the same contract was made by the plaintiff, which he has violated; and that under the modern practice at law a defendant in an action upon any contract to pay the purchase price of land, the title to which was warranted to him, may reduce the recovery by way of recoupment by proof of a partial failure of consideration which has resulted from a diminution in the quantity or quality of the land conveyed, but that a partial defect in the title to the land is inadmissible at law for this purpose, because equity has exclusive and peculiar jurisdiction over the title to real estate, and has the power to perfect it, because, in general, the vendee sustains no injury by a defect of title so long as he retains the possession and use of the land, and because courts of law lack the peculiar jurisdiction to cause defective titles to be perfected, and are unable to do final and complete justice between the parties, and to terminate all possible litigation over the controversy.

Recoupment is the keeping back of something that is due because there is an equitable reason for holding it. Ives v. Van Epps, 22 Wend. 155, 156. As the defense in this suit is not based upon a set-off or a counterclaim, but upon an equitable reason, inhering in the transaction out of which the note springs, why the claim of Neely ought, in equity and good conscience, to be reduced, and, as it presents no affirmative cause of action for a recovery against Neely, the authorities cited by his counsel relative to the essential attributes of set-offs and counterclaims (Simpson v. Jennings, 15 Neb. 671, 19 N. W. 473; Spencer v. Johnston, 58 Neb. 44, 78 N. W. 482; Fuller v. Steiglitz, 27 Ohio St. 355, 22 Am. Rep. 312; Frick v. White, 57 N. Y. 103; Graham v. Tilford, 1 Met. [Ky.] 112; Brashear v. West, 7 Pet. 608, 616, 8 L. ed. 801, 804; and Computing Scale Co. v. Churchill, 109 Wis. 303, 85 N. W. 337) have no relevancy to the issues presented in this case, and they will not be farther noticed.

Bearing in mind the nature of this suit, and the ground of the equitable defense it seeks to present, let us consider the questions which condition its maintenance.

In an action by the vendor upon a promissory note for the unpaid purchase price of real estate which he has conveyed to the vendee by a deed with covenants of warranty and against encumbrances, the latter may reduce the amount of the recovery by proof of a partial failure of consideration which has resulted from a defect of title. 3 Sedgw. Damages, § 1053; Sutherland, Damages, § 641; Davis v. Bean, 114 Mass. 358; Schuchmann v. Knoebel, 27 Ill. 175; Jaques v. Esler, 4 N. J. Eq. 461, 462; Union Nat. Bank v. Pinner, 25 N. J. Eq. 495; White v. Stretch, 22 N. J. Eq. 76, 80; Johnson v. Gere, 2 Johns. Ch. 546; Walker v. Wilson, 13 Wis. 522; Wilson v. Cochran, 46 Pa. 229, 231; Clarke v. Hardgrove, 7 Gratt. 399, 407; Soanlin v. Allison, 12 Kan. 85; Cross v. Noble, 67 Pa. 74, 78; Beecher v. Baldwin, 55 Conn. 419, 431, 3 Am. St. Rep. 57, 12 Atl. 401; Avery v. Brown, 31 Conn. 398, 402; Coy v. Donnie, 14 Fla. 544, 562; Lovry v. Hurd, 7 Minn. 356, Gil. 282, 285; Wamsley v. Hunter, 29 La. Ann. 628, 629; Youngman v. Linn, 52 Pa. 413, 416; Crenshaw v. Smith, 5 Munf. 415, 417. The reason for this rule is that the covenants in the deed and the promise in the note are mutual covenants, and the performance of each is the consideration of and the condition of the obligor's promise to perform the other. This is an evident proposition so long as the contract of sale is executory, and the covenant to vest good title and the promise to pay the purchase price are embodied in a single written instrument, which is signed by both the parties. Partial failure of the plaintiff to perform is always a good defense pro tanto to an action for damages for the defendant's failure to keep his agreement, or to a suit to enforce its specific performance. The reason for the rule, and its appropriate application to a covenant against encumbrances and a promissory note for the purchase price, would be equally obvious if these mutual covenants which accompany the transfer of title were embodied in a single written agreement which was signed by the parties. A moment's reflection will, however, convince that it can make no difference in the rights of the parties to the sale, or in the legal effect of the transaction, that the covenant of the vendor is in one writing, and the promise of the vendee is in another. The performance of the one is still the consideration and the condition subsequent of the other, and a partial failure to perform one ought to be, and is still, a defense pro tanto to an action or suit upon the other. Hence it is that in Davis v. Bean, 114 Mass. 358; Schuchmann v. Knoebel, 27 Ill. 175; Jaques v. Esler, 4 N. J. Eq. 461, 462; Union Nat. Bank v. Pinner, 25 N. J. Eq. 495; White v. Stretch, 22 N. J. Eq. 76, 80; and Wilson v. Cochran, 46 Pa. 229, 231,—the courts held, in actions by vendors upon promissory notes for portions of the purchase price of land which the vendors had conveyed to the defendants with covenants against encumbrances, that the vendees might reduce the amounts of the recoveries by the amounts of the encumbrances upon the titles. And, on the other hand, in Beecher v. Baldwin, 55 Conn. 419, 3 Am. St. Rep. 57, 12 Atl. 401, the supreme court of Connecticut decided that, in an action by a vendee upon a covenant against encumbrances, his recovery could be reduced by the amount of his unpaid notes for a part of the purchase price.

Upon a breach of a covenant of warranty or of a covenant against encumbrances, the obligee has a choice of remedies. He may pay the purchase price and bring his action on the covenant, or he may reduce the vendor's recovery for the purchase price by the amount of the diminution of the value of the title on account of the defect in it. He may do this upon the ground that his obligation to pay the price was subject to the condition that the vendor would perform his obligation to furnish a title free from encumbrances, and that he has violated that condition, and upon the further ground that the performance of that condition was a part of the consideration of his agreement. Lyon v. Bertram, 20 How. 149, 154, 15 L. ed. 847, 849; Dorr v. Fisher, 1 Cush. 271, 273, 274. The general rule upon this subject is stated in these words by the Supreme Court in Winder v. Caldwell, 14

How. 434, 443; 14 L. ed. 487, 491, an action on a building contract, to which the defense of delay, poor materials, and poor workmanship was interposed: "For, although it is true, as a general rule, that unliquidated damages cannot be the subject of set-off, yet it is well settled that a total or partial failure of consideration, acts of nonfeasance or misfeasance, immediately connected with the cause of action, or any equitable defense arising out of the same transaction, may be given in evidence in mitigation of damages or recouped, not strictly by way of defalcation or set-off, but for the purpose of defeating the plaintiff's action, in whole or in part, and to avoid circuity of action." Withers v. Greene, 9 How. 214, 13 L. ed. 109; Van Buren v. Digges, 11 How. 461, 13 L. ed. 771.

The application of this rule to an action on a note or a bond for the purchase price of land, in which the defense of a breach of a covenant through a defect of title is interposed, is perhaps nowhere better shown than by the supreme court of Pennsylvania (a state under whose system of jurisprudence legal and equitable rights are enforced in the same action) in Wilson v. Cochran, 46 Pa. 229, 231 (an action on bonds for the purchase price of land, in which the defendant, who held a warranty deed, was permitted to reduce the recovery by the diminution in the value of the title which resulted from the encumbrance of a right of way, of which both parties had constructive notice from the records at the time of the sale). That court said: "The detention of purchase money on account of breaches of the vendor's covenant is a mode of defense that is peculiar to our Pennsylvania jurisprudence, but the principle is well settled with us that, where a vendor has conveyed with covenants on which he would be liable to the vendee in damages for a defect of title, the vendee may detain purchase money, to the extent to which he would be entitled to recover damages upon the covenant, and he is not obliged to restore possession to his vendor before or at the time of availing himself of such a defense. Where there is a known defect, but no covenant or fraud, the vendee can avail himself of nothing; being presumed to have been compensated for the risk in the collateral advantages of the bargain. But where there is a covenant against a known defect, he shall not detain purchase money unless the covenant has been broken. If the covenant be for seisin or against encumbrances, it is broken as soon as made, if a defect of title or an encumbrance exist; but, if it be a covenant of warranty, it binds the grantor to defend the possession against every claimant of it by right, and is consequently a covenant against rightful eviction."

The broken covenant in the case in hand is a covenant against encumbrances, and it was broken as soon as it was made.

The later case of Cross v. Noble, 67 Pa. 74, 78, demonstrates the fact that it was not the intention of the Pennsylvania court in the case last cited to hold that the defense of a partial failure of consideration arising from a defect of title is not available in the absence of a covenant, for Mr. Justice Sharwood there says: "Mr. Justice Kennedy, in Roland v. Miller, 3 Watts & S. 390, has stated the rule as it has always been understood and acted upon in this state: 'The doctrine of Steinhauer v. Witman, 1 Serg. & R. 438, is that, if the consideration money has not been paid, the purchaser, unless it plainly appear that he has agreed to run the risk of the title, may defend himself in an action for the purchase money by showing that the title was defective, either in whole or in part, whether there was a covenant of general warranty or of right to convey or of quiet enjoyment by the vendor, or not, and whether the vendor has executed a deed of conveyance for the premises, or not.' Lloyd v. Farrell, 48 Pa. 73, 86 Am. Dec. 563; Weakland v. Hoffman, 50 Pa. 513, 88 Am. Dec. 560; Herrod v. Blackburn, 56 Pa. 103, 94 Am. Dec. 49; Dankel v. Hunter, 61 Pa. 382, 100 Am. Dec. 651." Grand Lodge of Masons v. Knox, 20 Mo. 433; Ives v. Van Epps, 22 Wend. 155; M'Allister v. Reab, 4 Wend. 485.

These authorities perhaps sufficiently illustrate the general rule that a partial failure of consideration wrought by a defect of title is a good defense pro tanto to an action upon a promissory note for the purchase price of land conveyed by a warranty deed.

The next question for consideration is, When is this defense available at law, and when in equity? There is much diversity of opinion in the courts of the states upon the question when a partial defect of title is available to reduce a recovery in an action at law for the purchase price. A review of many of the decisions upon this subject may be found in 2 Sutherland on Damages, §§ 632-641. Naturally the use of the equitable remedy of an injunction against the prosecution of an action at law for the purchase price varies in the different states with the different rules which they have adopted for the admission of this defense at law. But the power to protect purchasers is more ample, and is more freely exercised in courts of equity than in courts of law; and, where the remedy at law is not clearly adequate, their jurisdiction is never invoked in vain. The Supreme Court has repeatedly declared that "a court of chancery regards the transfer of real property in a contract of sale and the payment of the price as correlative obligations. The one is the consideration of the other, and the one failing leaves the other without a cause." Refeld v. Woodfolk, 22 How. 318, 327, 16 L. ed. 370, 375; Slide & S. Gold Mines v. Seymour, 153 U. S. 509, 517, 38 L. ed. 802, 805, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 842.

And the general rule upon this subject may be safely stated in these words: A court of equity should issue an injunction to stay an action at law upon a promissory note for the purchase price until the defense of reduction arising out of the same transaction is allowed whenever the remedy at law is less certain, prompt, and efficient to attain the ends of justice, either because the interests of the parties require that the title to the land should be perfected, that their rights should be adjudicated, and that the litigation over it should be closed,—a result which no remedy at law is adequate to accomplish,—or because it entails circuity of action, or because there is serious danger of unjustifiable loss or injury to the vendee, which a court of equity may, but a court of law cannot, prevent. Jaques v. Esler, 4 N. J. Eq. 461, 462; Johnson v. Gere, 2 Johns. Ch. 546; Koger v. Kane, 5 Leigh, 606, 607; Clarke v. Hardgrove, 7 Gratt. 399, 407; Union Nat. Bank v. Pinner, 25 N. J. Eq. 495; White v. Stretok, 22 N. J. Eq. 76; Coy v. Downie, 14 Fla. 544; Walker v. Wilson, 13 Wis. 523.

The case at bar falls well within this rule. The liens of the annuities have been fastened upon the land of the complainants by the decree of the state court, and they cannot escape their payment. A court of law has not the power to determine their amounts, to require their present payment and release, or to perfect the title to the land, in the action for the purchase price, or in an action on the covenant against encumbrances, because that court cannot grant relief of that nature. On the other hand, a court of equity has plenary jurisdiction to render a decree in this suit which will determine the amounts of the liens and the parties who must pay them, which will perfect the title to the land, and put an end to the litigation concerning it. Moreover, if, as counsel for Richard M. Neely contend, the action upon the covenant against Annie H. Neely is barred by the 69 L. R. A.

statute of limitations, the complainants have no remedy at law by an action upon that covenant; and, if it is not barred, she is not a resident of the state of Nebraska, and an action at law in another jurisdiction is not as prompt and efficient a remedy as a suit in equity to determine the rights of the parties in the jurisdiction which Neely has invoked. North Chicago Rolling Mill Co. v. St. Louis Ore & Steel Co. 152 U. S. 596, 617, 38 L. ed. 565, 572, 14 Sup. Ct. 710; Quick v. Lemon, 105 Ill. 578; Taylor v. Stowell, 4 Met. (Ky.) 175; Forbes v. Cooper, 88 Ky. 285, 11 S. W. 24; Robbins v. Holley, 1 T. B. Mon. 191; Edminson v. Baxter, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 112, 9 Am. Dec. 751; Davis v. Milburn, 3 Iowa, 163; Green v. Campbell, 55 N. C. (2 Jones, Eq.) 446.

The cases presented in opposition to this conclusion do not rule the issue which this case presents. A class of authorities is cited to the effect that a partial or total failure of the title conveyed by a warranty deed presents no defense in equity to the payment of the purchase price, unless the vendee has been evicted from, or has surrendered possession of, the land, because until that time there is no breach of the covenant against rightful claims for title and possession. Patton v. Taylor, 7 How. 133, 159, 12 L. ed. 638, 649; Elliott v. Thompson, 4 Humph. 99, 40 Am. Dec. 630; Buchanan v. Alucell, 8 Humph. 516, 518; Wimberg v. Schwegegan, 97 Ind. 529, 530; Wilkins v. Hogue, 55 N. C. (2 Jones, Eq.) 479, 481; Vick v. Percy, 7 Smedes & M. 256, 45 Am. Dec. 303. These decisions seem to adopt the ancient rule of the common law that a partial failure of consideration is no defense to a promissory note. That rule has long since been abolished, both at law and in equity; and an application of the modern rule evidenced by the decisions cited in the earlier part of this opinion leads logically to a different conclusion from that announced in these opinions. If, however, we concede their correctness, they go no farther than to hold that until the covenant against rightful claims to the title and possession, which was under consideration in those cases, is completely broken, and all the possible damage from the breach has accrued, equity will grant no relief. The relief sought in those cases was denied because the covenant against lawful claims to title and possession was not broken, and the damage from it had not accrued, so long as the vendee enjoyed the undisturbed possession and use of the land, and because an action upon that covenant, when broken, would furnish a complete remedy to the vendee. The facts of this case do not bring it within this rule. The covenant in question here is not the covenant against rightful claims to title and possession, but the covenant against encumbrances. That covenant was broken when it was made. The decree of the state court judicially established the paramount liens of the encumbrances. It judicially determined that the breach of the covenant against them, and the damages therefrom, had arisen when the covenant was made. It as effectually demonstrated the complete breach of the covenant against encumbrances at the time it was made as a judgment at law, and eviction thereunder, would have established a breach of the covenant against rightful claims to the title and possession. Boyd v. Bartlett, 36 Vt. 9, 15; Turner v. Goodrich, 26 Vt. 707. In this way the complete breach of the covenant against encumbrances is established by the record before us, and an action upon it will furnish the complainants no adequate remedy, because it will not settle the claims to, or perfect the title to, the land, because it is probably barred by the statute, and, if it is not, it presents a more dilatory, circuitous, and doubtful remedy than the pending suit.

The cases of Miller v. Avery, 2 Barb. Ch. 582; Senter v. Hill, 5 Sneed, 505, and Gayle v. Fattle, 14 Md. 69, cited for Neely, rest upon the conceded proposition that averment or proof of an adverse action by a third party, without allegation or evidence that it is founded on a superior lien or title, is insufficient to invoke the aid of a court of equity. Nor does the decision in Refeld v. Woodfolk, 22 How. 318, 327, 16 L. ed. 370, 375, that a vendee who has completed the payment of the purchase price is not entitled to a decree that the vendor shall perfect the title, have any relevancy to the question under consideration in the case at bar. The equity of a vendee who has voluntarily paid the purchase price differs radically from that of one who resists its payment. There is no opinion of any court in these authorities cited for Neely inconsistent with the view that a court of equity has jurisdiction to grant the relief which the complainants in this case seek. In Davis v. Wakelee, 156 U. S. 680, 688, 39 L. ed. 578, 584, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 555, we find these words: "It is a settled principle of equity jurisprudence that, if the remedy at law be doubtful, a court of equity will not decline cognizance of the suit. . . . Where equity can give relief, plaintiff ought not to be compelled to speculate upon the chance of his obtaining relief at law."

The adequate remedy at law which will deprive a court of equity of jurisdiction is a remedy as certain, complete, prompt, and efficient to attain the ends of justice 69 L. R. A.

as the remedy in equity. Boyce v. Grundy, 3 Pet. 210, 215, 7 L. ed. 655, 657; Springfield Mill. Co. v. Barnard & L. Mfg. Co. 26 C. C. A. 389, 393, 49 U. S. App. 438, 81 Fed. 261, 265; Brown v. Arnold, 67 C. C. A. 125, 131 Fed. 723. The complainants have no such remedy at law. A court of equity alone has the power to grant them adequate relief, and its jurisdiction of this suit is complete.

But counsel for Richard M. Neely insist that, while an assignee of a chose in action takes its subject to all the defenses that could at the time of the assignment be presented against it in the hands of the assignor, yet he is exempt from these defenses because he is the payee of the note. They say that the complainants waived the defense which they now present by signing the note payable to Neely. But the essence of waiver is estoppel. Where there is no estoppel, there is no waiver. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Wolff, 95 U. S. 326, 332, 24 L. ed. 387, 389; Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Bldg. Assn. 183 U. S. 308, 357, 46 L. ed. 213, 233, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. McElroy, 28 C. C. A. 365, 372, 49 U. S. App. 548, 83 Fed. 631, 640; Rice v. Fidelity & D. Co. 43 C. C. A. 270, 278, 103 Fed. 427, 435; United Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 47 L. R. A. 450, 27 C. C. A. 42, 45, 53 U. S. App. 517, 82 Fed. 406, 408; Unsell v. Hartford Life & Annuity Ins. Co. 32 Fed. 443, 445; Warren v. Crane, 50 Mich. 300, 301, 15 N. W. 465. The indispensable elements of an estoppel are ignorance of the party who invokes the estoppel, a representation by the party estopped which misleads, and an innocent and deleterious change of position in reliance upon that representation. There were none of these elements in the case at bar. Neely was not ignorant. He knew that the covenant of his mother against encumbrances and the covenant of the complainants to pay the note were mutual covenants, that each was a part of the consideration of the other, and that the violation of one was a defense to the other. He knew that the covenant against encumbrances was broken when he took the note, for these encumbrances rested upon the title to the land, and he must have known the law. The complainants made no misrepresentations. They did not declare that the note was good and that they would pay it, as did the defendant in Thompson v. Emery, 27 N. H. 269, cited by counsel for Neely. Neely never loaned to the complainants, or paid to them, any consideration whatever for the note. Conceding that he paid to his mother its full value, he was but her assignee of the complainants' obligation to pay the purchase price of the land, with full knowledge of all the equities between the original parties to the sale, and he took the note which evidenced that obligation subject to every defense which could have been asserted against it in the hands of the vendor. The legal presumption is that the payee of a promissory note knows its consideration and the facts which condition its execution. The fact that Neely was the payee here, and not the indorsee, instead of strengthening his position, adds this legal presumption to the conclusive proof of his actual knowledge which the record presents. One who buys of a creditor, for value, the obligation of his debtor, and takes the latter's promissory note, payable to himself, as evidence thereof, with full knowledge of its consideration and of the facts which conditioned the inception of the original obligation, takes the note subject to all the defenses which existed against the claim in the hands of the original creditor. Vorce v. Rosenberg, 12 Neb. 448, 451, 11 N. W. 879; Chariton Plow Co. v. Davidson, 16 Neb. 374, 377, 20 N. W. 256; Camp v. Sturdevant, 16 Neb. 693, 698. 21 N. W. 449; Knapp v. Lee, 3 Pick. 452, 460.

The authorities cited by counsel for Neely in opposition to this conclusion are not relevant to the facts of this case, and they fail to convince. Saddler v. White, 14 La. Ann. 173, 174, was a case in which the purchaser, who was not the payee of the note, which was given by a tenant for rent, was aware when he bought it that defenses to it might arise, although none had then arisen. The court held that this notice was not sufficient to subject him to a defense of partial failure of consideration which subsequently resulted from the ouster of the tenant by a paramount title before his term had expired. The court, however, remarked that the result would have been different if the defense had existed and the purchaser had been aware of it when he bought the note. In the case at bar the covenant against encumbrances was broken, the defense to the note existed, and Neely knew it when he purchased the note. In Glascok v. Rand, 14 Mo. 550, and Van Buskirk v. Day, 32 Ill. 260, 267, 268, all that is said upon this question is obiter dictum, and it goes no farther than to express a supposition and a doubt. The only question decided in the former case was that an affidavit for continuance did not disclose diligence to procure testimony, and the only issue determined in the latter case was decided by the jury, which found that there was no fraud in procuring the note, and hence no defense to it in the hands of anyone. In Steadwell v. Morris, 61 Ga. 97, a husband gave to his wife the note of his partners in payment of a debt which he owed to her. She accepted it without notice that it was founded in a mistake in the accounting between the partners, and the court held that this mistake would not defeat an action on the note in her behalf. It is evident from the opinion, however, that if she had obtained actual knowledge of the defense to the note before she received it, as Neely did in the case at bar, she would not have been permitted to recover. In Thompson v. Emery, 27 N. H. 269, Simpson, the plaintiff in interest, took the note of the defendant as collateral security to the obligation of another. Before or when he obtained it he asked the defendant if it was good, and he replied that it was, and that he would pay it. Simpson knew of no defense to it, and there was none. When action upon it was brought, no defense was interposed, except that the note was not properly indorsed to Simpson. Of course the plaintiff recovered. There is nothing in these cases in conflict with our conclusion that Richard M. Neely, the payee of the note, who had knowledge when he obtained it of its consideration, and of all the facts which conditioned the obligation which it evidenced, took it subject to every defense which could have been urged against the obligation to pay the purchase price of the land in the hands of the vendor. He stood in the shoes of his mother.

69 L. R. A.

There is another defense to this note, to the extent of $1,000, available to the complainants. It is that Richard M. Neely, as surety for Annie H. Neely, executed the bond to pay the legacies which constitute the encumbrances upon the title to this land. That bond is an obligation which he has never discharged, and which, in equity and good conscience, he ought to fulfil,—an obligation which a court of equity may and should permit the complainants to set off against the amount owing upon their note. But, as their defense to the full amount of the damage which they have sustained from the encumbrances upon their title is complete by way of equitable recoupment, it is unnecessary and would be useless to consider farther the defense pro tanto by way of the bond.

The next contention is that the defense to the note by way of equitable reduction is unavailable to the complainants because the cause of action upon the covenant against encumbrances is barred by the statute of limitations. Conceding, without deciding, that the bar of the statute had fallen upon the action on this covenant before this suit was instituted, that fact is not fatal to the defense of the complainants, nor to this suit to enforce it. That defense, as we have seen, is not set-off or counterclaim, but an equitable reason why the amount payable by the terms of the note should be reduced. It is reduction. It is that because the consideration of the note failed in part, and because the condition subsequent that the covenant against encumbrances should be kept was not fulfilled, the full amount of the note ought not to be paid. This defense attaches to and inheres in the note itself, and while the cause of action upon that obligation survives, the defense lives and runs with it. The defense of reduction or recoupment which arises out of the same transaction as the note or claim survives as long as the cause of action upon the note or claim exists, although an affirmative action upon the subject of it may be barred by the statute of limitations. Ord v. Ruspini, 2 Esp. 569; Beecher v. Baldwin, 55 Conn. 419, 432, 3 Am. St. Rep. 57, 12 Atl. 401; C. Aultman & Co. v. Torrey, 55 Minn. 492, 57 N. W. 211; Wood, Limitation of Actions, 3d ed. § 282; Conner v. Smith, 88 Ala. 300, 7 So. 150; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 561, ¶ 9.

Finally it is insisted that the complainants have been guilty of such laches that they are entitled to no relief. In the application of the doctrine of laches the settled rule is that courts of equity are not bound by, but that they usually act or refuse to act in analogy to, the statute of limitations relating to actions at law of like character. Rugan v. Nabin, 3 C. C. A. 578, 582, 10 U. S. App. 519, 53 Fed. 415, 420; Billings v. Aspen Min. & Smelting Co. 2 C. C. A. 252, 262, 263, 10 U. S. App. 1, 51 Fed. 338, 349; Bogan v. Edinburgh American Land Mortg. Co. 11 C. C. A. 128, 135, 27 U. S. App. 348, 63 Fed. 192, 199; Kinne v. Webb, 4 C. C. A. 170, 177, 12 U. S. App. 137, 54 Fed. 34, 40; Scheftel v. Hays, 7 C. C. A. 308, 312, 19 U. S. App. 220, 58 Fed. 457, 460; Wagner v. Baird, 7 How. 234, 258, 12 L. ed. 681, 691; Godden v. Kimmell, 99 U. S. 201, 210, 25 L. ed. 431, 434; Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U. S. 135, 139, 25 L. ed. 807, 808. The meaning of this rule is that, under ordinary circumstances, a suit in equity will not be stayed for laches before, and will be stayed after, the time fixed by the analogous statute of limitations at law; but if unusual conditions or extraordinary circumstances make it inequitable to allow the prosecution of a suit after a briefer, or to forbid its maintenance after a longer, period than that fixed by the statute, the chancellor will not be bound by the statute, but will determine the extraordinary case in accordance with the equities which condition it. Kelley v. Boettcher, 29 C. C. A. 14, 21, 56 U. S. App. 363, 85 Fed. 55, 62. This defense of equitable recoupment or reduction, if it were available at law, would have survived as long as the cause of action upon the note was available. If the holder of the note had invoked the aid of a court of equity to foreclose the mortgage which secured it, this defense would have conditioned his recovery there. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Denver, L. & G. R. Co. 60 C. C. A. 588, 593, 126 Fed. 46, 51. By analogy with these rules, the complainants are not guilty of culpable laches in enforcing their defense as long as the action on the note survives. Indeed, they were not fairly chargeable with any laches as long as no action upon the note was commenced, because they might well rest in the belief that no action would be taken by Neely to collect it until his bond and the covenant of the vendor had been fulfilled, and the encumbrances upon the title and the defense to the note had been alike removed. Moreover, there are unusual conditions and extraordinary circumstances in this case which would appeal with compelling force to the conscience of a chancellor to allow the prosecution of this suit, even if the analogous limitation at law had expired. The complainants have long been involved in a tedious litigation in the courts of the state of Nebraska, where they doubtless hoped and expected that the rights of all the parties to this controversy would be judicially determined. That litigation alone furnishes ample excuse for their failure to invoke earlier the aid of other courts. The fact that they interposed their defense in the action at law upon the note, and pressed it until it was disallowed there, is not evidence of fatal laches, but rather of reasonable diligence. The facts that the same judge presided at law and in equity in the court below, and that his decision must determine in the first instance the somewhat vexed question whether their defense should be made at law or in equity, relieve their action below of any just criticism or of any legitimate charge of unreasonable delay.

69 L. R. A.

It is not culpable laches for one who has an equitable defense of reduction to a promissory note, which has become the subject of pending litigation in another court, and which, if available at law, would survive as long as the cause upon the note, to wait until an affirmative action at law upon the subject of the defense is barred, and until his defense is overruled in an action at law upon the note, before he invokes the aid of a court of equity to enjoin the prosecution of the latter action until his defense is allowed.

The result is that the court below has tried the action at law, and is about to enter a judgment against the complainants for the full amount of their note,—an amount which, in equity and good conscience, they ought not to pay. The power was vested in the court of equity below, and the duty was imposed upon it, to enjoin the prosecution of this action at law until the amount of damages which the complainants have suffered from the encumbrances upon their title can be ascertained and applied in reduction of the recovery there sought, and to adjudicate the claims to the land in question and close this litigation, and in that way to prevent a rank injustice which the court at law was powerless to avoid. Any fact which renders it against conscience to enter or execute a judgment at law, and which was not available to the defendant in a court of law, confers jurisdiction upon a court of equity to enjoin the proposed entry or execution of the judgment. Marine Ins. Co. v. Hodgson, 7 Cranch, 332, 336, 3 L. ed. 362, 363; National Surety Co. v. State Bank, 61 L. R. A. 394, 56 C. C. A. 657, 120 Fed. 593.

The court below, sitting in equity, may and it should proceed to ascertain the present values of the annuities which constitute the encumbrances upon the title of the complainants, and to require the annuitants, upon the payment of those values, to release the three quarter sections of land from those liens, and to perfect the title thereto. In case it shall appear, as counsel have intimated, that since the final hearing below the complainants have paid and secured releases of these liens, the court should reduce the amount of the recovery in the action at law upon the note by the amount, not exceeding the value of the annuities at the time such payments were made, which the complainants have necessarily expended in paying the liens of the annuities upon their land and in defending their title against them. That court undoubtedly has jurisdiction to adjudicate the rights and interests of all the parties to this suit in the three quarter sections of land to which the liens attach, and to put an end to this litigation.

The only question determined by the court below, and which this appeal was taken to review, was, Were the complainants entitled to any relief? The circuit court answered that question in the negative. It has now been answered in the affirmative. Issues of law and fact may arise in view of this decision which are not fairly presented by this record, and which have not received the attention of court or counsel. It is unwise and inopportune to suggest or discuss them now.

There is, however, one other question which must not be overlooked. The district court of Richardson county, in the state of Nebraska, acquired jurisdiction of the real estate in controversy in this suit long before either the action at law or the suit in equity in the circuit court was instituted. The suit in the state court was commenced by the annuitants for the purpose of subjecting the three quarter sections of land to the payment of their annuities, and they obtained a decree that the liens of their legacies were paramount to the titles of the purchasers from the residuary legatees of Malony, and that the land should be sold to pay them. This portion of the decree was affirmed by the supreme court of the state, and it remains unassailed and unmodified. That suit, however, is still pending under an instruction from the supreme court to the court below to determine whether or not the complainant Joseph A. Williams may lawfully be required to pay the amount owing upon his note to Neely to the complainants in that suit. The court which first acquires jurisdiction of specific property by the issue and service of process in a suit to enforce a lien upon it, where in the subsequent proceedings it may find it necessary or convenient to take possession or control of it, is entitled to retain that jurisdiction to the end, without interference by any court of co-ordinate power. Gates v. Bucki, 4 C. C. A. 116, 128, 129, 12 U. S. App. 69, 53 Fed. 961, 969; Memphis Sav. Bank v. Houchens, 52 C. C. A. 176, 190, 191, 115 Fed. 96, 110. Where a subsequent suit involving the rights of the parties to the same property is commenced in a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, that suit should not be dismissed, but, before a seizure of the property is made therein, it should be stayed until the proceedings in the court which first obtained jurisdiction are concluded, or ample time for their termination has elapsed. Zimmerman v. So Relle, 25 C. C. A. 518, 521, 49 U. S. App. 387, 80 Fed. 417, 420.

The decree below is reversed, and the case is remanded to the Circuit Court, with directions to enjoin or stay the farther prosecution of the action at law upon the promissory note signed by the complainants until the amount of the reduction to which the complainants are equitably entitled shall be ascertained and allowed, to permit the parties to file a supplemental bill and answers presenting material events which have occurred since the former hearing, and to take farther testimony, and, when this shall have been done, to take further proceedings in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion.

Hook, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

The facts in this case—some admitted, and the others established by the overwhelming weight of the evidence—are as follows: Through the will of her father and a deed from a codevisee, Annie H. Neely became the owner of a tract of land, subject to a mortgage given by the testator in his lifetime, and to two annuities which he bequeathed. The mortgage was the prior lien. Mrs. Neely was an executrix of the will. Richard M. Neely an appellee herein, is her son. Acting as the agent of his mother, he made a contract with Williams for the sale of the land for $6,000, $500 of which was paid at the time, $2,000 was to be paid when the sale was consummated, and the remaining $3,500 was to be evidenced by a note secured by a mortgage upon the property. There is no pretense that he practised any deception upon Williams; that he made any covenant against encumbrances, or personally obligated himself in any way or to any degree whatsoever. He was professedly acting for his mother in the making of the contract of sale, and Williams so understood it. The existence of the mortgage and the annuities were equally apparent from the public records. The contract of sale was susceptible of exact performance. It could have been fully carried out, and all of the liens against the land could have been discharged. Between four and five months afterwards the sale was consummated. Williams received a deed from Mrs. Neely containing covenants of warranty and against encumbrances. He paid the $2,000, and executed his note and mortgage for the remaining $3,500. But Richard M. Neely was not present at the time. He prepared none of the instruments, and did not in any manner participate in the closing of the transaction. For some reason not disclosed in the record Williams did not require the release or satisfaction of the annuities when he took the deed, paid the money, and gave his note and mortgage. Whether this arose from mistake of fact or of law does not clearly appear, but there is not even the slightest ground for attributing it to Richard M. Neely. He was not 69 L. R. A.

there, and was wholly innocent in fact and intent. The note and mortgage for the balance of the purchase price were made by Williams direct to Richard M. Neely, instead of to his mother, for the reason that he paid to her and for her benefit the full sum of $3,500 for such securities. Nearly $2,500 of this amount was applied by Mrs. Neely's agent, who attended to the consummation of the sale, towards the discharge of the old mortgage which it is conceded was a first lien on the property. There is no reasonable doubt that the full value of the new securities was paid from the funds of Richard M. Neely to his mother, or for her benefit, in the clearing of the title to the property, and the record shows that counsel for Williams assisted materially in proving this fact. The sources from whence the money was obtained were fully and conclusively shown. Williams knew that his note and mortgage were not made to Mrs. Neely, the vendor, but were made to the absent Richard M. Neely. And now, many years after the consummation of the transaction, when Richard M. Neely seeks payment of that which he bought and paid for innocently and in good faith there is set up against his demand a breach of the covenant against encumbrances arising from the existence of the lien of the annuities. The majority of the court hold in the foregoing opinion that this may be done, but I am unable to bring myself to the conclusion that any just application of legal or equitable principles can accomplish that result.

In Glascock v. Rand, 14 Mo. 550, it was held: "If a purchaser of land executes a negotiable note for the purchase money to an apparent stranger to the title, and fails to secure himself by a proper penal covenant, he has no one to blame but himself, and cannot set up as a defense to the note the failure of the parties in interest to execute proper conveyances to him."

In Cagle v. Lane, 49 Ark. 465, 5 S. W. 790, a similar rule was announced. Cagle purchased from Cummings an interest in a patent right, for which he was to give his note. At Cummings's direction, Cagle made the note direct to Lane, the plaintiff, who paid Cummings a consideration therefor. The patented invention proved to be worthless, and Cagle refused to pay the note; claiming inter alia a failure of consideration, and that the plaintiff was not a bona fide purchaser. The court held that the transaction was the same, in substance, as if the note had been drawn in favor of Cummings, and by him indorsed to the plaintiff, and that the defense was not maintainable.

In South Boston Iron Co. v. Brown, 63

Me. 139, the court said: "Where, at the request of the party with whom he deals, one makes his promissory note (which is to be a partial payment for a piece of work to be done for him), payable to a third party, who is a creditor of the party with whom he contracts for the work, and it is credited by the payee to such party in good faith, the maker cannot set up a failure of consideration, as between himself and the party with whom he deals, in defense of a suit upon such note in the name of the payee."

The English rule is the same. Munroe v. Bordier, 8 C. B. 862; Poirier v. Morris, 2 El. & Bl. 89.

Moreover, it is common doctrine, no longer open to debate, that knowledge of the conditions surrounding the consideration of a promissory note, without knowledge of a breach, will not affect the rights of a purchaser. Miller v. Ottaway, 81 Mich. 196, 8 L. R. A. 428, 21 Am. St. Rep. 513, 45 N. W. 665; Rublee v. Davis, 33 Neb. 779, 29 Am. St. Rep. 509, 51 N. W. 135.

In United States Nat. Bank v. Floss, 38 Or. 68, 84 Am. St. Rep. 752, 62 Pac. 751, it was held that knowledge in the purchaser of a note that it was given in consideration of a good title to land does not affect his right to recover, in case of a breach of the contract to convey, unless he knew the breach had already occurred.

In Parsons on Notes & Bills it is said that knowledge on the part of the holder, at the time he took the note, that it was not to be paid on a specified contingency, is not sufficient to defeat his right to recover, although the contingency had then happened, if he was ignorant of the fact. Vol. 1, p. 261.

In Tiedeman on Commercial Paper it is said: "The authorities generally hold that the purchaser of commercial paper is not burdened with the requirement to see to the execution and full performance of the consideration merely because he knows what it is." § 300.

Under the settled rule of the Supreme Court, a much stronger case could be assumed against Richard M. Neely than the record justifies, and yet not impair his right to recover from Williams. That rule is that bad faith alone will defeat the right of the purchaser, but a suspicion of a defect or knowledge of circumstances that might excite such suspicion in the mind of a cautious person, or even gross negligence at the time, is insufficient. Hotchkiss v. National Shoe & Leather Bank, 21 Wall. 354, 359, 22 L. ed. 645, 649; Murray v. Lordner, 2 Wall. 110, 17 L. ed. 857.

With these principles in mind, I am unable to find any support for the reversal 69 L. R. A.

of the decree of the circuit court. It is not asserted in the foregoing opinion that Richard M. Neely personally obligated himself in respect of existing encumbrances, nor that he was guilty of bad faith, nor, except by suggestion or inference, that he was aware, or even had any suspicion, that his mother had failed to lift or make satisfactory provision concerning the annuities during the months succeeding his sole connection with the transaction. Nor is the result rested on a contention that he did not pay his mother full value for the note and mortgage.

It is said in the foregoing opinion that the deed, note, and mortgage "were prepared by Annie H. Neely, or by one of her agents." A cursory reading of the opinion would convey the inference that Richard M. Neely may have been the agent, or may have been present. But the record shows, without dispute, that he was not present, did not prepare any of the instruments, and did not in any manner participate in the closing of the sale. And it does not appear that he was aware of any default of his mother when the deed was delivered. It is also said in the foregoing opinion that what amount, if any, he paid his mother for the note and mortgage, was "left in grave doubt by the evidence;" and while this is said to be immaterial, in the view of the case which is adopted, its tendency is to support an inference that, after all, a just result was attained by the opinion of the court. I have already observed that it was overwhelmingly shown that the consideration was paid, and where it came from, and that counsel for Williams assisted in showing it. The greater portion of it came from the payment for another tract of land, which belonged to Richard M. Neely and a brother, and in which their mother had no interest whatever. Again, the fact is referred to in the foregoing opinion that Richard M. Neely was one of the sureties upon the bond of his mother as executrix. It is true that he was, but I am at a loss to perceive why that fact was referred to as even remotely justifying the conclusion which was reached. The suit was not one directly or indirectly to reach Richard M. Neely's responsibility as a surety. Moreover, the maximum of his liability as a surety was limited by the bond to $1,000, and that is not the limit which the court in the foregoing opinion has placed upon his liability to respond for the breach of his mother's covenant against encumbrances. On the contrary, it is expressly said that the undischarged encumbrances are about equal to the amount of the note, which is now several times the penal sum of the bond of the executrix. The case of Williams is solely supported by a number of unrelated facts and circumstances which are consistent with his own mistake, negligence, or voluntary acquiescence when the sale was consummated, but which neither singly nor in combination show bad faith on the part of Richard M. Neely, or knowledge of the failure of consideration for the note and mortgage, or absence of consideration for his purchase of them.

For these reasons, I am of the opinion that the decree of the circuit court should be affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied February 10, 1905.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

Charles N. STEPHENSON, Plff. in Err.,
v.

Terra CORDER, by Next Friend.

(.....Kan.....)

*A farmer had driven a team of eleven-year-old horses 17 miles to a wagon loaded with about a ton's weight; had hitched one of them, as he had been frequently in the habit of doing, to a hitching rail in front of a store; was engaged in unloading his wagon, going back and forth for this purpose but a short distance. The halter with which the horse was hitched was apparently in good condition, and no defect therein was shown. While the team was standing quietly, a boy, in turning over the hitching rail near the head of the team, struck the nose of the one hitched with his foot, which frightened the team and caused them to break loose, by breaking the halter, and run away, causing damage. Held, that the striking of the horse by the boy was the proximate cause of the accident.

(May, 6, 1905.)

ERROR to the District Court for Sumner County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Herriek & Herriek and Ivan D. Rogers, for plaintiff in error:

It was the duty of the court to determine what was the proximate cause of the injury to the plaintiff, and any determination of the question, made by the jury, is not binding or conclusive on the court.

Missouri P. R. Co. v. Columbia, 65 Kan. 390, 58 L. R. A. 399, 69 Pac. 338.

In order to warrant a finding that negligence, or an act not amounting to wanton wrong, is the proximate cause of an injury, it must appear that the injury was the natural and probable consequence of the negligence or wrongful act, and that it ought to have been foreseen in the light of the attending circumstances.

*Headnote by CUNNINGHAM, J.

Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 460, 24 L. ed. 256; Oleghorn v. Thompson, 62 Kan. 727, 54 L. R. A. 402, 64 Pac. 605.

Mr. C. E. Elliott, for defendant in error: Leaving a horse or team unhitched, or negligently hitched, renders the owner liable to any and all damages that may occur by reason of a runaway.

Phillips v. Devoald, 79 Ga. 732, 11 Am. St. Rep. 458, 7 S. E. 151; Pierce v. Connors, 20 Colo. 178, 46 Am. St. Rep. 279, 37 Pac. 721; Griffiths v. Olift, 4 Utah, 462, 11 Pac. 609.

If the jury found that Stephenson was negligent, that was their province.

Union P. R. Co. v. Rollins, 5 Kan. 167; Caulkins v. Mathews, 5 Kan. 191; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Prouty, 55 Kan. 503, 40 Pac. 909; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Rowan, 55 Kan. 270, 39 Pac. 1010; Kinchlow v. Midland Elevator Co. 57 Kan. 374, 46 Pac. 703.

A defendant is not liable in negligence where no injurious consequences could reasonably have been contemplated as a result of the act or omission complained of, but is liable where injuries might have been anticipated or foreseen.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 486; Martin v. Levagood, 47 Kan. 36, 27 Am. St. Rep. 277, 27 Pac. 122.

It is immaterial that a boy frightened the horse, causing him to run, where the defendant was negligent in leaving him.

McCahill v. Kipp, 2 E. D. Smith, 413; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 487.

NOTE.—On the question of proximate cause as affected by intervening agency, see also, in this series, notes to Smith v. County Court, 8 L. R. A. 82, and Smithwick v. Hall & U. Co. 12 L. R. A. 279; also the later cases of Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hammill, 24 L. R. A. 531; 69 L. R. A.

Goodlander Mill Co. v. Standard Oil Co. 27 L. R. A. 583; Stone v. Boston & A. R. Co. 41 L. R. A. 794; Southern R. Co. v. Webb 59 L. R. A. 109; Cole v. German Sav. & L. Soc. 63 L. R. A. 416; and Nelson v. Narragansett Electric Lighting Co. 67 L. R. A. 116.

The question of proximate cause is a matter for the jury.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 508; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Byrne, 40 C. C. A. 402, 100 Fed. 359; Central Branch Union P. R. Co. v. Hotham, 22 Kan. 41; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. McCandless, 33 Kan. 374, 6 Pac. 587; Southern Kansas R. Co. v. Sanford, 45 Kan. 372, 11 L. R. A. 432, 25 S. W. 891; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Hildebrand, 52 Kan. 284, 34 Pac. 738.

Cunningham, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is the action of Terra Corder to recover for her personal injuries. There is no material conflict of the evidence as to the facts of the case.

Mr. Stephenson was a market gardener living about 17 miles from the city of Wellington, to which city, during the season for marketing fruit and vegetables, extending about four months through the summer, during the term of over twelve years, he drove two or three times a week with his loads of produce. For four years of this time prior to August 5, 1901, he drove the same team that he did upon that day. It consisted of a horse and a mare, each eleven years old. They had been raised and broken by Mr. Stephenson, and used upon his farm and for road purposes. His young daughters were accustomed to drive the team, and it was considered safe and trustworthy by him. On one occasion, two years prior to the date above named, a team consisting of the mare in question and another horse, while standing unhitched in a field, became frightened, at the sudden appearance through a nearby hedge, of Mr. Stephenson's young daughter, and ran off with a plow to which they were attached. On another occasion the same mare, with another horse, becoming unhitched in some unknown way in the town of Belle Plain, ran about a block and a half. No other instances of misconduct or viciousness by this team or either of them was shown. They were well broken and quiet, and had never been known to pull at the halter when hitched. On August 5, 1901, Mr. Stephenson, in accordance with his custom, having driven to Wellington from his home, 17 miles away, late in the afternoon, with a load weighing from 1,800 to 2,200 pounds, stopped his team in front of a grocery store in order to unload his produce. He drove up in an angling direction toward the hitching rail, so that the mare being on the inside, and nearest the rail, he hitched her only. The headstall of the halter with which she was hitched was made of 1¼-inch leather; the hitching part was a rope ½ inch or more in diameter. It was a halter which he had been in the habit of using, but for how long does not appear, but it was apparently in a fair condition. When he drove up he noticed some boys standing around. They not infrequently came to him to get such damaged fruit or melons as he might wish to give them, and for that purpose frequently climbed upon the hind part of the wagon. After hitching the team, he proceeded to unload his produce, passing back and forth from the wagon to the grocery. While he was passing into, or while in, the grocery on one of these trips, a boy, in turning over the hitch rail, or, as the witness termed it, making a "flip-flop," struck the mare on the nose with his foot, frightening the team, and causing them to rear back with such force as to break the chin strap of the halter with which the mare was hitched, so that the team became loosened, ran down the street and collided with a buggy in which Miss Corder was riding, threw her out and very severely injured her. Before the boy struck the mare with his foot the team had been standing quietly. It was accustomed to being hitched in this manner and place. A verdict was returned in favor of the plaintiff below, and judgment entered thereon.

Many errors are assigned, some of which might serve to reverse and remand for a new trial. We prefer, upon the plain facts of the case, to address ourselves to vital questions, rather than mere matters of practice.

The basis of defendant's liability, of course, was his alleged negligence. This was in his leaving his team standing insecurely hitched or fastened. The only delinquency in this respect which can be claimed for the evidence is that the chin strap of the halter was not sufficient, and the only evidence to support such a claim is that it broke. It may well be questioned whether, under the evidence in this case, the fact of its breaking draws with it any presumption that it was defective so as to make its use under ordinary circumstances negligence. In Missouri & K. Teleph. Co. v. Vandervort (Kan.) 79 Pac. 1068, where a neck-yoke strap was broken by the sidewise plunge of a frightened team, this court said: "There is no evidence from which the jury might have found that the harness was defective; the only evidence being that of the plaintiff himself, where he said: 'My harness had been used about five months, or scarcely that.'" There was little, if anything, more shown in the case at bar.

Ordinary care is all that was required of the defendant, and ordinary care does not require that all possible means for avoiding accident should be availed of. Quite true. The accident would not have occurred had the horses been hitched to an unbreakable rack with an unbreakable chain. Neither would it have occurred had not the defendant driven to the city on that day, but ordinary care does not require the use of such precautions; if it did, it would, in the language of this court in Cleghorn v. Thompson, 62 Kan. 727, 54 L. R. A. 402, 64 Pac. 605, "paralyze human effort and action on all lines." What the defendant was doing at the time was what he had done many times before without injury, and apparently what he or any reasonably prudent man would have done under the circumstances. It is suggested that the fact that he saw boys about there ought to have warned him that some of them might do the thing that the boy in question did. We hardly think this suggestion can be seriously urged; certainly it cannot be seriously entertained. Neither do we see anything in the character of the team which warrants any extraordinary precaution in the matter of fastening them. Whatever of dereliction was shown was not because of their breaking loose when tied, but because the mare had run away on two separate occasions upon sufficient provocation or otherwise. Ordinarily the team was roadworthy, being well broken and quiet, and it is shown that neither of them had ever been known to pull at the halter when hitched.

Did affirmance rest upon a sufficient showing of defendant's negligence, we should greatly hesitate to affirm. The further question of the proximate cause of the injury, however, demands our attention, and we pass to its consideration.

The jury, in answer to one of the special questions, and, as we think, in exact accordance with the evidence, found that the horses were caused to become frightened and to run away because the boy struck the one that was tied, on the nose, with his foot. So, granting that the team was not tied as securely as ordinary care would have required, we are confronted with the fact that this neglect did not cause the accident, and it is well settled that it is the proximate cause of an injury which must bear the burden of the result. Many law-writers and courts have attempted to give us a definition of proximate cause, fairly intelligible, which should be of such flexibility as to be adapted to general application. They have but indifferently succeeded; neither will they in the future succeed any better. A definition from one of the most recent authors, and, perhaps, from all considerations, one of the fairest, is the following: "Negligence is the failure to exercise the ordinary care of prudent men under all the attending circumstances. It follows that the negligence of a person cannot be the proximate cause of a harm to another following it, unless, under all the attending circumstances, ordinary prudence would have admonished the person sought to be charged with the negligence that his act or omission would probably result in injury to someone. The general test as to whether negligence is the proximate cause of an accident is therefore said to be whether it is such that a person of ordinary intelligence should have foreseen that an accident was liable to be produced thereby. Proximate cause is therefore probable cause, and remote cause is improbable cause." 1 Thomp. Neg. § 50. This court early attempted to analyze the philosophy and make a definition of proximate cause. It said in the case of Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Stanford, 12 Kan. 377, 15 Am. Rep. 362, in speaking of a wrongdoer: "He is responsible for any number of injurious results consecutively produced by impulsion, one upon another, and constituting distinct and separate events, provided they all necessarily follow from the first wrongful cause. Any number of causes and effects may intervene between the first wrongful cause and the final injurious consequence; and if they are such as might, with reasonable diligence, have been foreseen, the last result, as well as the first and every intermediate result, is to be considered in law as the proximate result of the first wrongful cause. But whenever a new cause intervenes which is not a consequence of the first wrongful cause, which is not under the control of the wrongdoer, which could not have been foreseen by the exercise of reasonable diligence by the wrongdoer, and except for which the final injurious consequence could not have happened, then such injurious consequence must be deemed to be too remote to constitute the basis of a cause of action." The court, in Wright v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 27 Ill. App. 212, quotes the foregoing with approval, and adds that the words in italics point out the correct distinction. In Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Bell, 1 Kan. App. 71, 41 Pac. 209, the law relative to proximate cause is stated as follows: "Before an act of negligence can be made the basis for a recovery of damages, it must appear that such act was the natural and proximate cause of the injury, or directly contributed thereto." In Cleghorn v. Thompson, 62 Kan. 727, 54 L. R. A. 402, 64 Pac. 605, the following from Allegheny v. Zimmerman, 95 Pa. 295, 40 Am. Rep. 649, was quoted with approval: "One is answerable in damages for the consequences of his faults only so far as they are natural and proximate, and may therefore have been foreseen by ordinary forecast, and not for those arising from a conjunction of his own faults with circumstances of an extraordinary nature." In Missouri P. R. Co. v. Columbia, 65 Kan. 390, 58 L. R. A. 399, 69 Pac. 338, this court has given its most recent views upon the question; which case in its ultimate conditions bears a strong analogy to the one at bar. In the syllabus of the case the court announces the law as follows: "In a case where two distinct, successive causes, wholly unrelated in operation, contribute toward the production of an accident resulting in injury and damage, one of such causes must be the proximate, and the other the remote, cause of the injury." "A prior and remote cause cannot be made the basis of an action for the recovery of damages, if such remote cause did nothing more than furnish the condition, or give rise to the occasion, by which the injury was made possible, if there intervened, between such prior or remote cause and the injury, a distinct, successive, unrelated, and efficient cause of the injury." "In a case where it is either admitted, or from the facts as found established, that two distinct, successive causes, unrelated in their operation, conjoined to produce a given injury, the question of remote and proximate cause becomes one of law for the decision of the court, and not of fact for the determination of the jury, and the determination of this question of law by the jury is not binding or conclusive on the court." In the body of the opinion this further discussion was had: "The existence or nonexistence of negligence in any given case wherein the facts are disputed is a question of fact to be determined by the jury. When the facts are undisputed, and only one inference or deduction is to be drawn from them, a question of law is presented for the court. Dewald v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. 44 Kan. 586, 24 Pac. 1101. However, it is not every act of negligence that furnishes a basis for recovery of damages sustained. In the case of Cleghorn v. Thompson, 62 Kan. 727, 54 L. R. A. 402, 64 Pac. 605, this court held: 'Negligence, to be actionable, must result in damage to someone, which result, in the absence of wantonness or malus animus, might have been reasonably foreseen by a man of ordinary intelligence and prudence, and be the probable result of the initial act. The allegation of negligence is not sustained by evidence of acts resulting in damage to another, which result is not the reasonable and ordinary outcome of such acts, and which would not have been foreseen or anticipated by the exercise of ordinary prudence and foresight under all the circumstances of the case. . . . Negligence is not the proximate cause of an accident, unless, under the circumstances, the accident was a probable as well as natural consequence thereof,—one which might reasonably have been foreseen by a man of ordinary intelligence and prudence.' . . . In cases of this character, where two distinct, successive causes, unrelated in operation, to some extent contribute to an injury, it is settled that, where there is an intervening and direct cause, a prior and remote cause cannot be made the basis for recovery of damages, if such prior cause did no more than furnish the condition, or give rise to the occasion, by which the injury was made possible. It seems to be sound in principle, and well settled by authority, that where it is admitted or found that two distinct, successive causes, unrelated in their operation, conjoin to produce a given injury, one of them must be the proximate, and the other the remote, cause of the injury, and the court, in passing on the facts as found or admitted to exist, must regard the proximate as the efficient and consequent cause, and disregard the remote cause."

60 L. R. A.

Now, if we grant that the chin strap of the halter was defective, and that this sufficiently appeared in the evidence, and that Stephenson knew of this defect, can it be said, in view of the law as heretofore laid down by this court, that such defect was the proximate cause of the accident? The injurious result would not have followed had not the new and independent cause intervened. This new cause had no causal connection with the negligence of Stephenson. The hitting of the mare on the nose by the boy was not caused by the defect in the halter, neither was it under the control of Stephenson, neither can it be said with the slightest fairness that it could have been foreseen by the exercise of reasonable diligence on his part. The most that can be said is that the defect in the halter,—if defective,—and the frightening of the team by one of them being struck on the nose by the boy's foot, were two distinct successive causes, wholly unrelated in operation, which contributed to the production of the accident resulting in the injury and damage; and therefore the frightening of the team, being the immediate and probable cause, is the proximate cause, and the defect in the halter, being the secondary and improbable cause, is the remote cause. This being so, the defendant, Stephenson, was not liable for the unfortunate accident, and his request that the jury be so instructed should have been granted.

The judgment will be reversed, and the case remanded for further proceedings.

All the Justices concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

W. E. SNYDER, Plff. in Err.,
v.

Charles N. MILLER et al.

(.....Kan.....)

*1. A mortgage securing a series of notes due at intervals of one year provided that nonpayment of any one of them, together with nonpayment of taxes due on the mortgaged premises, should mature the entire debt. None of the notes was paid at maturity. At the date of the maturity of the first note, taxes on the land were due and unpaid, and such default continued until after all the notes were due. A purchaser of the land from the mortgagor, who did not assume payment of the mortgage, then paid the taxes. Subsequent to the payment of taxes, and more than five years from the date of the default upon the first note and taxes, the mortgagee brought suit to foreclose the mortgage. Held:

a. The statute of limitations commenced to run at the date of the default upon the first note and taxes.

b. The running of the statute of limitations was not suspended by the payment of taxes.

c. By paying the taxes the landowner did not waive the right to plead the statute of limitations, or estop himself from so doing.

2. The case of First Nat. Bank v. Peck, 8 Kan. 663, approved and followed, and the case of Douthitt v. Farrell, 60 Kan. 195, 56 Pac. 9, criticised.

(May 6, 1905.)

ERROR to the District Court for Ottawa County to review a judgment in favor of defendants in an action brought to foreclose a mortgage securing certain promissory notes. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. C. Sweet and Garver & Larimer, for plaintiff in error:

Where the condition of the mortgage is that the whole debt shall become due upon the failure to pay "interest and taxes," both conditions must exist.

Lewis v. Lewis, 58 Kan. 563, 50 Pac. 454.

But, even where both such conditions have existed so as to start the running of the statute of limitations, the subsequent payment of the taxes by one interested in their payment suspends the operation of the statute.

Douthitt v. Farrell, 60 Kan. 195, 56 Pac. 9.

A payment by Miller, the subsequent grantee of the land, had the same effect as if such payment had been made by the mortgagor himself.

*Headnotes by BURCH, J.

NOTE.—As to effect of statutory bar of principal debt on right to foreclose a mortgage or deed of trust, see, in this series, Kulp v. Kulp, 21 L. R. A. 550.
69 L. R. A.

Schmucker v. Sibert, 18 Kan. 104, 26 Am. Rep. 765; Mo Lane v. Allison, 60 Kan. 441, 56 Pac. 747.

Messrs. Thompson & King, for defendants in error:

When a default matured all the notes, and this default continued until after the time when the notes became due by their terms, the purpose of the conditions had been accomplished, and they were functus officio; and the payment of taxes on the mortgaged premises after that time, when the statute of limitations was running on the face of the notes, and not under the conditions in the mortgage, could not affect the operation of the statute.

Lewis v. Lewis, 58 Kan. 564, 50 Pac. 454; Green v. Goble, 7 Kan. 301; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Atchison Grain Co. 68 Kan. 585, 75 Pac. 1051.

Burch, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This proceeding in error grows out of an action commenced in the district court of Ottawa county on December 12, 1903. The petition prayed for the foreclosure of a mortgage securing four promissory notes due respectively on February 18, 1890, February 18, 1897, February 18, 1898, and February 18, 1899. The mortgage contained a provision to the effect that, if any one of the notes secured and the taxes upon the mortgaged premises should not be paid when due and payable, the entire mortgage debt should at once mature. The absence of the makers of the notes from the state was pleaded to avoid the running of the statute of limitations. The answer pleaded default in the payment of taxes for the year 1895, resulting in a tax sale of the land in 1896 followed by an indorsement on the tax-sale certificate of taxes paid by the certificate holder for the years 1896, 1897, and 1898. The defendant purchased the land subject to mortgage on November 18, 1897, and was not charged with any personal liability on the notes. Because of the default in the payment of the taxes for the year 1895, and the default in the payment of the note due February 18, 1896, he claimed the entire mortgage debt matured on the date last mentioned, and prayed the benefit of the statute of limitations. The reply pleaded payment of the delinquent taxes by the defendant on August 21, 1899. A demurrer to the reply was sustained, and the correctness of this ruling is the matter now in question.

As long ago as 1871 this court decided that a stipulation in a mortgage of the same character as that under consideration was not a one-sided affair, vesting a mere option in the mortgagee, but that the mortgagor had an equal right with the mortgagee to insist upon it, and to receive whatever advantages it might confer upon him. Mr. Justice Brewer, speaking for the court, said: "This clause is inserted in mortgages usually for the benefit of the mortgagee; but, being a valid stipulation, the mortgagor has equal right to insist upon it, and receive whatever advantage he can from its enforcement. When the payor, at the expiration of six months, failed to pay the note then due, by the terms of the contract all three notes became due. The statute of limitations began to run on all, and a subsequent purchaser purchased after maturity." First Nat. Bank v. Peck, 8 Kan, 663. The same rule was announced in England at least as early as 1843. A defendant gave a warrant of attorney to secure a debt payable by instalments; the plaintiff having the right in case of any default to have judgment and execution for the whole, as if all the periods for payment had expired. In an action of assumpsit it was held that the defendant might show, under a plea of the statute of limitations, that the first default was made more than six years before action, and that this was a complete defense, not only as to instalments due more than six years before, but also as to those due within that period. Lord Denman, Ch. J., said: "We are of opinion that the defendant is right, and that the cause of action accrued upon the first default for all that then remained owing of the whole debt. . . . In this case there was a default more than six years ago, and upon that the plaintiff might, if he pleased, have signed judgment, and issued execution for all that remained due, or he might have maintained his action. If he chose to wait till all the instalments became due, no doubt he might do so; but that which was optional on the part of the plaintiff would not affect the right of the defendant, who might well consider the action as accruing from the time that the plaintiff had a right to maintain it. The statute of limitations runs from the time the plaintiff might have brought his action, unless he was subject to any of the disabilities specified in the statute; and, as the plaintiff might have brought his action upon the first default, if he did not choose to enter up judgment we think that the defendant is entitled to the verdict upon the plea of the statute of limitations." Hemp v. Garland, 4 Q. B. 519, 523, 524. This case was expressly approved in 1891 by the court of appeal, on appeal from the Queen's bench division, in the case of Reeves v. Butcher [1891] 2 Q. B. 509. Lindley, L. J., said: "I am of opinion that we cannot differ from the judgment below without altering the law. The agreement is one reasonably easy to be understood. It provides for a loan for five years, subject to a provision that, if 'default is made in punctual payment of interest, the principal shall be recoverable at once. Now, the statute of limitations (21 Jac. I. chap. 16) enacts that such actions as therein mentioned, including 'all actions of debt grounded upon any lending or contract without specialty,' shall be brought 'within six years next after the cause of such action or suit, and not after.' This expression, 'cause of action,' has been repeatedly the subject of decision, and it has been held, particularly in Hemp v. Garland, decided in 1843, that the cause of action arises at the time when the debt could first have been recovered by action. The right to bring an action may arise on various events, but it has always been held that the statute runs from the earliest time at which an action could be brought." The reason for allowing the debtor to take advantage of the stipulation is well stated by the supreme court of Texas in the case of Harrison Mach. Works v. Reigor, 64 Tex. 89, 90, 91, as follows: "The purpose of statutes of limitation is 'to compel the settlement of claims within a reasonable period after their origin, and while the evidence upon which their enforcement or resistance rests is yet fresh in the minds of the parties or their witnesses.' Wood, Limitation of Actions, § 5. If the holder of a note may, at his option, treat the claim as due at a later date than the maker has agreed that it shall mature, and thus prescribe a different date at which it shall be barred, the evidence for its enforcement may be preserved, whilst that for its resistance may be destroyed, and thus the purpose of the statute be wholly defeated. . . . Here no option was left to the creditor. He was forced to treat the debt as due. It is true he was not obliged to bring suit upon it upon default in payment of the first note. Neither is any creditor compelled to sue upon a claim so soon as it becomes due. But the statute was put in motion without consulting his wishes, by the very terms of the contract, which neither party had any right to change without the consent of the other." So in Noell v. Gaines, 68 Mo. 649, 656, it is said: "It cannot, with any show of reason, be urged that the notes could, under the terms of the contract, fall due for one purpose and not for another. If they fell due when the contingency happened, and because it happened, and because the parties, upon valid consideration, had thus contracted, it must needs follow that the face of the notes, under the circumstances mentioned, ceased to furnish any guide as to their maturity." And the benefit to be derived by sureties from a contract providing that nonpayment of a part of the debt shall mature the whole is forcefully stated by the Kentucky court of appeals as follows: "It is easy to conceive that a surety might require such a clause as a condition for his own protection. He might be unwilling to bind himself for five years unconditionally, whereby he might be compelled to pay at the end of that time both the principal and interest, and might very prudently say: 'Insert a clause which requires the interest to be paid quarterly, and which provides that, if not so paid, the debt is to become due, so that, if not paid, I will have the right to pay it or secure myself.'" Ryan v. Caldwell, 106 Ky. 543, 50 S. W. 968, 967. The reasoning of these cases applies with peculiar force to the situation of one who has purchased subject to a mortgage which he has not assumed, and especially so if the mortgagors have left the state, and he may be deprived of their aid in making proper defenses to a belated claim. When on the United States circuit bench, Mr. Justice Brewer said: "Now, here, according to the averments of this petition, this mortgage and this deed of trust were executed at the same time, and to secure these notes; they were parts and parcels of one transaction, and are to be construed as one instrument; and if there were but one instrument, and that containing a promise to pay money at three separate times, with a proviso that, upon a failure to pay the first sum at the time named, all should become due, I cannot see how, logically, we can escape the conclusion that the parties have made an absolute, unconditional stipulation, operative under all circumstances and for all purposes. I had occasion when I was on the supreme bench of my own state to consider this matter in two or three cases, and that was the conclusion I then came to, and it is unchanged. I am aware that Judge Hough, in his dissenting opinion, suggests certain contingencies in which the application of this rule, where there are several negotiable promissory notes secured by mortgages or deeds of trust, might work out some embarrassments; but still I do not think that the possibility of such embarrassments can avoid the clear force of the language the parties have used. I do not see why they cannot make such a contract, and if they made it, and its language is clear, I do not see why the courts should not give force and effect to it." Wheeler & W. Mfg. Co. v. Howard, 28 Fed. 741. Although the courts of some of the states and some of the Federal courts have taken a different view, the doctrine propounded in First Nat. Bank v. Peck has been steadily adhered to by this court. It has been carried to the extent of holding that a tender of delinquent taxes, whose nonpayment constituted the sole breach of the contract, and the payment of all accrued costs, would not, after suit had been commenced, discharge the default and reinstate the contract as to notes otherwise not due for a long period of time. Stancil v. Norton, 11 Kan. 218. The legislature has not seen fit to interfere, and the rule thus early announced is now definitely established as a part of the law of this state. Darrow v. Scullin, 19 Kan. 59; Meyer v. Graeber, 19 Kan. 165; Ellwood v. Wolcott, 32 Kan. 526, 4 Pac. 1056; Lewis v. Lewis, 58 Kan. 564, 50 Pac. 454; Douthitt v. Farrell, 60 Kan. 195, 56 Pac. 9; Kennedy v. Gibson, 68 Kan. 612, 75 Pac. 1044. At a date earlier than that of the decision in First Nat. Bank v. Peck this court held: "As a general rule, when a statute begins to run, it continues to run until the demand is barred. This principle is laid down with great uniformity in all the authorities, and may be considered as settled. Undoubtedly the legislature may prescribe differently, and in this state several exceptions are made, but none such as is claimed in this case." Green v. Goble, 7 Kan. 297, 301.

By applying the rules recognized in these cases to the facts of the case under consideration, it becomes plain that the demurrer to the reply was properly sustained. But the defendant claims that the court should have been guided by the case of Douthitt v. Farrell, 60 Kan. 195, 56 Pac. 9, the syllabus of which reads as follows: "Where a promissory note was given, by the terms of which the principal became due in five years from date, with interest payable semiannually; and a real-estate mortgage securing it was given, which provided that upon default in payment of any of the interest when due, and the taxes on the mortgaged premises when due, the whole indebtedness should mature; and both such defaults occurred; and the statute of limitations thereupon commenced to run against the indebtedness; and the delinquent taxes were thereafter paid by the mortgage debtor,—held, that the running of the statute in his favor was ended by his voluntary correction of the one default; and, although more than five years elapsed from the occurrence of the two defaults mentioned, the cause of action on the note and mortgage was not barred." This decision was based upon the case of Smalley v. Ranken, 85 Iowa, 612, 52 N. W. 507. Smalley v. Ranken refers, in turn, to Watts v. Creighton, 85 Iowa, 154, 52 N. W. 12, and Watts v. Creighton discusses and expressly rejects the doctrine of First Nat. Bank v. Peck. The argument in the Smalley Case is as follows: "What did the parties stipulate that the taxes should be paid by defendant for? To protect the plaintiff from the loss or impairment of his security. At the filing of the amendment every right of the plaintiff in this respect was fully protected. The object of the condition of the mortgage was to enable the plaintiff to treat the debt as due, and save himself from loss because of the default. After the payment of the taxes, all such liability for loss was at an end. His situation was exactly as if there had been no default, as far as the conditions for forfeiture were concerned. To justify a forfeiture under such circumstances would work an injustice that the court ought not to permit." This reasoning proceeds upon premises wholly incompatible with those employed in the decisions of this court already quoted and cited. Stipulations for the acceleration of the maturity of debts do not provide penalties or forfeitures. "It is therefore settled by the overwhelming weight of authority that if a certain sum is due, and secured by a bond, or bond and mortgage, or other form of obligation, and is made payable at some future day specified, with interest thereon made payable during the interval at fixed times, annually or semiannually or monthly, and a further stipulation provides that, in case default should occur in the prompt payment of any such portion of interest at the time agreed upon, then the entire principal sum of the debt should at once become payable, and payment thereof could be enforced by the creditor, such a stipulation is not in the nature of a penalty, but will be sustained in equity as well as at law. In exactly the same manner, if a certain sum is due, and is secured by any form of instrument, and is made payable in specified instalments, with interest, at fixed, successive days in the future, and a further stipulation provides that, in case of a default in the prompt payment of any such instalment in whole or in part at the time prescribed therefor, then the whole principal sum of the debt should at once become payable, and payment thereof could be enforced by the creditor, such stipulation has nothing in common with a penalty, and is as valid and operative in equity as at the law." 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. 2d ed. § 439. "Provisions such as that under consideration are not in the nature of penalties; nor have they anything in common with forfeitures, but are to be regarded as nothing more than agreements between the parties fixing the time and the conditions upon which the whole debt may become due. Such an agreement may be as advantageous to the payor as to the payee. Buchanan v. Berkshire L. Ins. Co. 96 Ind. 510; Malcolm v. Allen, 49 N. Y. 448; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 439; 2 Jones, Mortg. § 1186." Moore v. Sargent, 112 Ind. 484, 485, 14 N. E. 466. Indeed, the supreme court of Iowa itself, in a later case, has expressly held that such stipulations are not to be regarded as providing for penalties or forfeitures. Swearingen v. Lahner, 93 Iowa, 147, 26 L. R. A. 765, 57 Am. St. Rep. 261, 61 N. W. 431.

But a more fundamental consideration is that the parties made the contract, and the courts cannot make another to take its place. Its language excludes the idea that the creditor may or may not "treat the debt as due." It becomes due in fact. If an election were all that the parties intended, words appropriate to that purpose should have been used. "It is not necessary to assume that the parties to such a contract intended to provide for none but wrongful refusals to pay instalments. It might happen that the debtor, upon good grounds, would afterwards deny his liability upon the contract, and therefore refuse to pay instalments, in which case the provision would serve him a useful purpose, in bringing the question at issue to a prompt test, and not leave it entirely with the creditor to delay until, perhaps, evidence of the defense had been lost. The question at last is one of construction of the language used, and that which makes it mean just what it says is not without reason or good authority to support it. Where the purpose is only to give the option to the creditor, language expressive of it may be easily inserted." San Antonio Real Estate Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Stewart, 94 Tex. 441, 86 Am. St. Rep. 864, 868, 61 S. W. 386. This distinction was recognized, and, indeed, controlled the decision, in the very recent case of Kennedy v. Gibson, 68 Kan. 612, 75 Pac. 1044. The opinion reads: "The note provided that a default should mature the entire debt, at the option of the holder, while the provision in the mortgage was that a default made the whole debt due, regardless of an election by the holder. Which of these provisions should control? In the absence of an option clause in the note, the stipulation in the mortgage would have operated to mature the whole debt upon a default, and the mortgagors could have taken advantage of the stipulation. First Nat. Bank v. Peck, 8 Kan. 660. The stipulation in the note as to default, however, conflicts with that of the mortgage, and, of necessity, the former controls. The note contains the obligations of the mortgagors, and the mortgage, concurrently executed, is an incident to and security for the note. The stipulation in the note must therefore prevail, and, unless the holder exercised the option and elected to declare the whole debt due, the statute would not run earlier than the time originally fixed for the maturity of the note." Such being the established position of this court the Smalley Case must be eliminated as a support for the conclusion reached in the Douthitt Case. In deciding the Douthitt

Case the court in effect declared reciprocal estoppels against the parties. The debtor lost the right to plead that the statute was running on account of his default, and the creditor lost the right to sue on account of the same default. The wound was healed without a scar. The condition in the mortgage that the creditor could, under certain circumstances, insist upon payment of the note before maturity according to its terms, was restored to the status of an unbroken covenant for the future protection of the indebtedness secured, and the indebtedness itself was restored to the status of an unmatured claim. The opinion reads: "We have no doubt but that the voluntary payment of the taxes by the debtor was a waiver by him of the conditions under which the statute of limitations was running in his favor, and was a restoration by him of the plaintiff to the status of a holder of an unmatured indebtedness." Manifestly no such rehabilitation of rights could be accomplished in this case. The last note had matured by its own terms six months before the taxes were paid. The plaintiff could not be reinvested with the rights of a holder of an unmatured indebtedness, and the mutual modification of the legal relations of the parties adverted to in the Douthitt Case was impossible. True, the term "voluntary waiver" is used in that decision, but, as already observed, the waiver was of such a character that it necessarily worked a change in the rights of the opposite party. That the conduct of a single party to the contract may have such a far-reaching effect, unless the other party has been influenced in some manner by it, is not conceded by those courts which enforce the rule of peremptory maturity adopted in this state. Thus, in the case of San Antonio Real Estate Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Stewart, 94 Tex. 441, 86 Am. St. Rep. 864, 368, 61 S. W. 386, it is said: "It is not in the power of the creditor, by his acts alone, to change the rights of the parties resulting from the maturity of the debt. But both parties, by their joint action, may so alter such rights that the creditor would no longer have the right to demand, nor the debtor to pay, the entire indebtedness. . .

While neither party, by his separate action or nonaction, could impair the rights of the other, each could waive his own rights as they accrued from the default in payment of an instalment so as to estop him from relying upon such default. To accomplish this, it would only be necessary that each should so act as to justify the other in believing, and acting upon the belief, that the effect of the failure to pay an instalment was to be disregarded, and that the contract should stand as if there had been no default." Likewise, in the case of

Moore v. Sargent, 112 Ind. 484, 485, 14 N. E. 466, it is said: "The provision in the mortgage for accelerating the time when the whole debt should become due and collectible did not make the maturity of the debt evidenced by the second note depend upon the election of the mortgagee. The second note became absolutely due upon failure to pay the first note at maturity. According to the terms of the contract, upon the happening of that event the whole debt became as effectually and absolutely due as if further credit had not been, in any contingency, agreed upon. The mortgagor had then the right to pay or tender the whole debt, and by that means suspend the accumulation of interest. The acceptance of a part by the mortgagee did not defeat the right of the mortgagor to pay or tender the balance at once, nor did it, without a new agreement, extend the time or prevent the former from enforcing payment of what remained unpaid. . . . Under a provision which gives the creditor the exclusive right to elect, within a time fixed, whether or not he will treat the whole debt as due in case the debtor makes default in paying interest, it may well be that the unconditional acceptance of interest by the creditor, after the expiration of the time, without notice of the election, would waive the default. 2 Jones, Mortg. § 1186. Or if the default was induced by the fraudulent or inequitable conduct of the creditor, or by any agreement or promise upon which the debtor might rely which operated to mislead or throw the debtor off his guard, a court of equity would interfere to stay proceedings, or the action might be abated upon the facts being properly pleaded."

But under either theory the judgment of the district court in this case was correct, because the condition in the mortgage now in controversy had spent its force when the taxes were paid. No acceleration of the maturity of the notes secured could occur by virtue of it. Failure to comply with it could not start the running of the statute, and a payment of taxes could not stop the statute from running. No rights could be gained or lost on account of the stipulation. On February 18, 1896, a cause of action accrued in plaintiff's favor, and the statute of limitations then commenced to run against it. From February 18, 1896, until the notes matured by their terms, the plaintiff had an indisputable right to bring suit upon them, and during all that time the statute of limitations continued to run. After the notes matured by their terms, the cause of action continued to exist, unimpaired, and the statute continued to run. The payment of taxes on August 21, 1899, could not prevent suit on the notes, and hence could not suspend the operation of the statute, and it continued to run after that date as before. Such having been the condition of affairs for more than five years before suit was commenced, the right to recover was then barred. The taxes were paid by one who bore no privity to the debt, and owed the mortgagee no duty concerning it. His conduct implied no recognition either of the existence of the notes or of the right to enforce them. It was entirely independent of, and unrelated to, any cause of action the plaintiff might have. It had and could have no effect whatever upon the conduct or rights of the mortgagee, and waiver cannot be predicated upon it.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

Evalyn ALLEN, Appt.,

v.

NORTH DES MOINES METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH et al.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. In the absence of fraud, a creditor of a religious corporation has no right to enforce his claim against property formerly belonging to it after it has been sold on mortgage foreclosure, the corporation dissolved, a new corporation organized out of the old members and new ones, and the property bought from the purchases at the foreclosure sale, although the new corporation proceeds to carry on the work of the old one at the old location, and maintains the same relation as the old one to the general religious denomination.

2. A creditor of a religious corporation has no right of action against the individual members of it as such.

3. A religious corporation is not bound by the act of its minister in making use of the membership roll of a former corporation, the title to whose property it acquired through a foreclosure sale, so as to make such act significant upon the question of the identity of the two corporations.

4. Refusal to grant leave to amend the NOTE.—Liability of member of religious society for its debts.

I. Scope, 255.

II. Early rule in Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Maine, 255.

III. Incorporated societies, 256.

IV. Unincorporated societies, 257.

V. Résumé, 258.

I. Scope.

This note is confined to a consideration of those cases in which the liability of the members of a religious society for its debts as members merely is decided, and does not include cases in which the members whom it is attempted to hold liable acted as officers of the church, or in some representative capacity, as that of deacons, vestrymen, members of building committees, etc.

II. Early rule in Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Maine.

The early cases and dicta on this subject in Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Maine have been placed in a division by themselves because of the existence of the parish system in those states, and the peculiar character of these ecclesiastical societies before the adoption of modern constitutions. They were neither private corporations, nor yet mere voluntary, unincorporated associations, but were in fact municipal and public corporations, the parishes being originally coextensive and identical with the several towns, which at first exercised parochial powers; and, when in some instances the parishes became separate communities, they still retained their public and political character. They embraced substantially all the persons residing within their territorial limits, and no act was necessary to constitute membership. It followed residence within the limits of the parish as a matter of course. To support and maintain religious instruction and worship through the agency of religious societies was a public duty enjoined by law. By immemorial usage the inhabitants of a town had been held liable for its debts; and it is said in Richardson v. Butterfield, 6 Cush. 191, that it was probably this strong resemblance between towns and parishes as to the locality of members and the general features of their organization that led to the application of a similar rule to members of parishes. The court in this case added that now the fact of residency within the territorial limits of a parish no longer constitutes membership thereof, and that territorial parishes are now to all intents and purposes, as regards their relation to their members, as much close or exclusive corporations as poll-parishes, or incorporated societies. The law now makes no compulsory provision for the support of ecclesiastical societies, and no person can become a member of such a society until he has voluntarily united with it. These societies, therefore, seem now to differ in no way, so far as the rights and liabilities of their members are concerned, from any other associations or corporations.
69 L. R. A.

In Massachusetts and Connecticut this early rule has been repudiated, but in Maine the question seems not to have come before the courts in recent years.

The property of an individual member of a territorial parish may be taken to satisfy an execution against the parish; but such an execution cannot be levied on the property of one who has ceased to be a member of the parish before the levy, although he was a member when judgment was recovered. Chase v. Merrimack Bank, 19 Pick. 564, 31 Am. Dec. 163.

So, execution against a parish for the cost complaint so as to set up a new issue, after the introduction of the evidence, is not reviewable on appeal.

(March 10, 1905.)

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the District Court for Polk County dismissing a bill filed to subject certain real estate to the lien of a judgment which complainant held against the Prospect Park Methodist Episcopal Church. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William M. Wilcoxon and Bowen & Brockett for appellant.

Messrs. S. F. Prouty, W. L. Smith, and E. D. Samson, for appellees:

The question whether or not a new corporation has been created, or an old one continued, is a question of intent.

1 Thomp. Corp. 1895 ed. p. 256; Bellows v. Hallowell & A. Bank, 2 Mason, 31, Fed. Cas. No. 1,279.

The North Des Moines corporation, being a separate and distinct corporation, cannot be held liable for the debts of the Prospect Park corporation, unless it is pleaded and proved that it received from the older corporation, or from other sources, assets belonging to the Prospect Park corporation.

1 Thomp. Corp. § 263; Beach, Corp. § 796; Austin v. Tecumseh Nat. Bank, 49 Neb. 412, 35 L. R. A. 444, 59 Am. St. Rep. 543, 68 N. W. 623; Hopper v. Moore, 42 Iowa, 565; Texas State Fair & D. Exposition Assn. v. Caruthers, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 474, 29 S. W.

of repairs on its meetinghouse cannot be levied on the property of a member who has withdrawn from the parish, but only on the property of those who are members at the time of the rendition of the judgment, or at most at the commencement of the action. Fernald v. Lewis, 6 Me. 264. The court refers to the fact that at common law corporators are not answerable in their persons or their private property for the debts or liabilities of the corporation, but says that, "by the usage and practice—for it does not seem to have any other foundation—of Massachusetts and Maine, the case of towns and parishes forms an exception to this principle."

And in 5 Dane's Abridgment, 158, it is said that, to the principle that an individual member of an aggregate corporation is not liable for debts or demands against it, towns or parishes in Massachusetts are, by immemorial usage, an exception, for on an execution against one of them the body or estate of any inhabitant may be taken to satisfy it, and he has his remedy over against the corporation.

Ecclesiastical societies incorporated before the adoption of the Connecticut Constitution stood upon the same footing with respect to the liability of their members for debts as towns, school societies, cities, etc. Dictum in McLoud v. Selby, 10 Conn. 395, 27 Am. Dec. 689.

It is also said, obiter, in Beardsley v. Smith, 16 Conn. 368, 41 Am. Dec. 148, that theretofore it had not been doubted that the inhabitants of located ecclesiastical societies were individually liable for debts of the society.

And in a case where the property of the member of an ecclesiastical society was taken by distress for the payment of a tax levied against the society, and in which it was contended that the property of a member could not be taken for the debt of the society, the court said that, if the tax was properly laid, he could not see but that the distress was warranted, reasoning by analogy from the practice of New England to hold the inhabitants of a town liable for the town's debts, which practice also obtained in England. But it was held that the tax was illegal because the society was exempt. Atwater v. Woodbridge, 6 Conn. 227, 16 Am. Dec. 46.

III. Incorporated societies.

The members of a religious corporation are 69 L. R. A.

not individually liable, as such, to a creditor of the corporation. ALLEN v. NORTH DES MOINES M. E. CHURCH.

The property of a member of an incorporated religious society organized by voluntary association, having no territorial limits, cannot be seized on execution against the society itself for debt. Richardson v. Butterfield, 6 Cush. 191.

A debt against a voluntary religious corporation without local limits cannot be enforced by levying an execution against the corporation upon the private property of one of its members. Jewett v. Thames Bank, 16 Conn. 510. The court said in this case that, although this society was without a special charter, it was essentially incorporated by virtue of the statute relating to religious societies and congregations.

But persons who were members of a religious corporation at the time of the death of its minister are individually liable to his estate for arrears of salary due him, where at that time there existed a fund which had been raised by the society for the support of the minister, sufficient to pay the indebtedness, and this money passed into the hands of the members, who formed a new society, and, instead of appropriating the fund to the payment of the former minister's salary, as was their duty, permitted it to be wasted or used for other purposes. Bigelow v. Congregational Soc. 11 Vt. 283. The court in this case says, however, that the individuals composing the society were not personally liable, unless they had made themselves so by some act or default, and that an execution against the society for the debt could not be levied on the separate property of the individual members. A receiver was appointed to collect whatever might remain of the fund, and apply the same, and the case was referred to a master to ascertain the situation of the fund at the time of the death of the minister, and who were members of the society at that time. The master's report was excepted to, and the matter again came before the chancellor, who overruled the exceptions, and decreed that certain individuals found to have been members of the society at the death of the minister should pay to the clerk the amount found due, with costs, and this decree was affirmed in 15 Vt. 370.

48; National Foundry & Pipe Works v. Oconto City Water Supply Co. 105 Wis. 48, 81 N. W. 125.

Weaver, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Briefly stated, the plaintiff claims that in the year 1887 the defendant was incorporated for religious purposes under the laws of this state, and assumed the name of Prospect Park Methodist Episcopal Church, and that thereafter, by proper proceedings, the name of the corporation was changed to North Des Moines Methodist Episcopal Church. It is further alleged that prior to the beginning of this action plaintiff obtained a judgment against the corporation in the district court of Polk county, Iowa, under the name of Prospect Park Methodist Episcopal Church, which judgment is still unpaid, and that since the change in the name of the organization it has become the owner of certain real estate upon which the plaintiff asks to have the lien of such judgment established and confirmed. By a second count of her petition the plaintiff alleges that the present church organization is identical with the one against which she obtained judgment, and that the change in its name and designation was a fraudulent scheme or device to hinder and delay its creditors. The defendants admit that the North Des Moines Methodist Episcopal Church is a corporation, and owns the real estate above referred to, but deny that said corporation is identical with the Prospect

IV. Unincorporated societies.

Members of a voluntary unincorporated religious association are not individually liable for its debts, unless they authorized the incurring of the obligation, or subsequently ratified the same. First Nat. Bank v. Rector, 59 Neb. 77, 80 N. W. 269.

And it is said obiter, in Devoss v. Gray, 22 Ohio St. 159, that a member of an unincorporated religious society cannot be held personally responsible for the debts of the society, unless it be shown that he in some way sanctioned or acquiesced in their creation.

This statement was quoted with approval in Males v. Murray, 7 Ohio N. P. 614, Affirmed in 23 Ohio C. C. 396, although the point was not directly involved in the case.

Members of an unincorporated religious society, who participated in a business meeting at which it was agreed to employ a pastor at a certain salary, are not liable to him individually for arrears of his salary; and such contract of employment created at most an obligation, if any, upon such members to pay their apportioned share only of such expense, where the pastor accepted his position with full knowledge that a fund to pay his salary would be raised by voluntary contribution of the members, to which alone he could look for compensation. Riffe v. Proctor, 99 Mo. App. 601, 74 S. W. 409.

But members of an unincorporated religious society, who were actively instrumental in incurring liabilities for it, are liable either as principals or agents having no legal principal behind them; members of the society who either authorized or ratified the transactions are also liable, while those who did not are exempt from liability. Clark v. O'Rourke, 111 Mich. 108, 66 Am. St. Rep. 389, 69 N. W. 147.

And in Burton v. Grand Rapids School Furniture Co. 10 Tex. Civ. App. 271, 31 S. W. 91, it is also said, obiter, that in case of a debt against an unincorporated religious society the members who incurred the liability, assented to it, or subsequently ratified it, became personally liable.

So members of an unincorporated religious association, governed in their secular affairs by a priest and trustees having power to incur debts for the association, who, through such agents, stated an account with their priest for money advanced to build a church and for arrears of salary, and who agreed in writing, jointly and severally acting by their trustees and agents, to pay such sum, are individually liable for the indebtedness. Sheehy v. Blake, 72 Wis. 411, 39 N. W. 479, Affirmed in 77 Wis. 401, 9 L. R. A. 564, 46 N. W. 537. But the court stated explicitly that this responsibility does not rest upon the mere fact that the defendants were members of the association when the debt was incurred, but upon the ground that they approved of, or participated in, contracting it, and subsequently assumed and agreed to pay it through their authorized agents.

A member of an unincorporated religious society, who purchases an obligation against the society contracted while he was a member, and who is still a member at the time the action is brought, cannot recover a personal judgment against the other members of the society. German Roman Catholic Church v. Kaus, 6 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 1028. The court refers to the fact that the supreme court of the state has decided that members of such a society, who personally participate in creating a debt, may be held liable personally therefor. The evidence in this case tended to show that the persons against whom the judgment was sought had participated actively in the borrowing of the money, but, because the party suing on the claim was also a member, it was held that he could not recover. His remedy was held to be in equity against the property of the society.

A member of an unincorporated religious society, who brings an action against the other members of the society on a promissory note which declares on its face that all the property of the church is held for the payment thereof, is not entitled to a personal judgment against the members; but, inasmuch as he was a member of the society, and must have received some part of the benefit arising from the money loaned, there should be an accounting in order to determine who are the members and what proportion of the amount loaned the members other than himself must pay. Meyer v. Lipski, 8 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 584, 7 Ohio N. P. 366.

In Georgia it has been held that the members of an unincorporated religious society are liable on its contracts as joint promisors or partners. Thurmond v. Cedar Spring Baptist Church, 110 Ga. 816, 36 S. E. 221.

And in another Georgia case,—Wilkins v. St.

Park Methodist Episcopal Church, or is in any way responsible for the debts of such church. They deny all allegations of fraud. It is also alleged that the organization known as the Prospect Park Church became indebted beyond its ability to pay, and its church property, which is the property now owned by the defendants, was sold under foreclosure of mortgage, and the title wholly lost; that in such condition it was impossible to obtain contributions for the support of the society, or to purchase or erect a new building, and the corporation and society were disbanded. Under these circumstances it is said the North Des Moines Methodist Episcopal Church was organized, and an incorporation effected as a new and independent body having no connection with or responsibility for the debts of the old organization.

From this outline of the issues it will be readily seen that the one question to be considered is whether the reorganized North Des Moines Church is a mere continuation of the old corporation under a new name, or is a new corporation, which is under no legal liability for the debts of its predecessor. That the members, or some of the members, of an insolvent or dormant corporation may organize a new corporation for the promotion of the same purposes to which the old one is dedicated without becoming chargeable with its debts or obligations is too well settled for dispute. On the other hand, it is equally well settled that the mere change in the name of a corporation has no effect upon its legal status, or upon the rights of creditors. Among corporations organized for business purposes it has been, and still is, a matter of most frequent occurrence that in the initial struggle for existence they become hopelessly insolvent. Under such circumstances, the organization of a new corporation to build, if possible, a successful business on the ruins of the old is entirely legitimate, whether considered as a proposition of law or of morals. The fact that the new organization embraces the old membership is immaterial, and in itself affords no reason why it should be held liable for the debts of the old corporation. True, the courts will watch such reorganization with care, that no fraud be accomplished, and to that end will insist that there shall be a bona fide intention to make a new and independent organization, and that it shall not take over, absorb, or convert to its use, the property or assets of the old corporation to the prejudice of its creditors. There must be something more than a mere succession in business to charge the successor with the debts or delinquencies of the party succeeded. Hopper v. Moore, 42 Iowa, 563; Wyman v. Hollowell & A. Bank, 14 Mass. 58, 7 Am. Dec. 194; National Foundry & Pipe Works v. Oconto City Water Supply Co. 105 Wis. 48, 81 N. W. 125; Memphis Water Co. v. Magens, 15 Lea, 37; Texas State Fair & D. Exposition Assn. v. Caruthers, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 474, 29 S. W. 48. The legal identity of the new corporation with the old ordinarily depends upon the intention of the incorporators. 1 Thomp. Corp. 256; Miller v. English, 21 N. J. L. 317; First Soc. of M. E. Church v. Brownell, 5 Hun, 464; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 812.

There can be no doubt in the present case that the incorporators of the North Des Moines Church intended to create a new and independent organization, which should not be chargeable with the debts of the Prospect Park Church. Their legal right to perfect such an organization is also clear. If, then, their organization was in regular statutory form, and no fraud was practised upon the plaintiff as a creditor of the old corporation, the conclusion of the trial court must be upheld as correct. No question has been raised as to the formal or statutory sufficiency of the methods pursued, and we shall therefore confine our inquiry to the question of fraud.

Mark's Church, 52 Ga. 351,—where it was held that a suit against an unincorporated religious association could not be maintained, the court said that, had all its members been served, they might have been charged as joint promisors or partners.

Resumé.

It would seem that the liability of a member of a religious association for its debts should be the same as that of a member of any other corporation or association, and the majority of the decisions, which are not numerous, are decided on this theory. If the society is incorporated, the members cannot be held liable individually. If it is not incorporated, the general rule is that the members can be held liable only when they have in some way been instrumental in creating the debt, or have ratified it afterward. In Georgia, however, the rule seems to be different, as it is there held that the members of an unincorporated religious society are liable on its contracts as joint promisors or partners. But it has been frequently declared by the courts that a partnership is an association of persons formed to carry out some undertaking from which it is expected to make a profit, and that any association from which the element of profit is absent cannot be considered a partnership.

In some of the New England states, also, the members of a religious society have been held liable for its debts, but this liability is the result of the peculiar character of such associations, and the peculiar relation of the members to them, as shown in division II. The early cases that declare this liability are now of but little value, aside from their historical interest, since, with the passing of the parish system, the reason for holding individual members liable also passed away.

F. H. L.

The Prospect Park Church was organized and incorporated in the year 1887, and obtained title to the tract of land mentioned in the pleadings. Encouraged by persons interested in the values of residence property in that neighborhood, and relying upon subscriptions and promises which eventually proved valueless, it erected a church building out of proportion to its financial ability, and incurred expenses beyond its power to meet. The property was heavily mortgaged, and this burden, with others incident to the mismanagement or misfortune attending the first years of the society's existence, proved too great to be removed or successfully carried. In the year 1899 the mortgage was foreclosed for something more than $5,000, and, the property having been sold, and not redeemed, the purchaser took a sheriff's deed. The record discloses no fact or circumstance indicating that the foreclosure was a collusive transaction, or that the corporation had any agreement, express or implied, with the mortgagee, for the repurchase of the property. The loss of the title left the society wholly without assets. Corporations of this character issue no stock, and are wholly without power or authority to levy assessments upon, or enforce contributions from, their members. As is quite sure to be the case in organizations which depend solely upon voluntary good-will offerings for income and support, an excessive indebtedness proved an insurmountable obstacle to prosperity and growth. At the end of some thirteen years' effort, the society found itself without a church building, and without means or ability to obtain another, or to pay its outstanding obligations. Its assets had been wholly eliminated. It had neither property, money, nor franchises which creditors could subject to their claims. There is nothing to indicate that its members had not contributed to the full extent of their ability and duty under the circumstances. Its corporate organization even had ceased to be available for the society's future needs, because the existence of its indebtedness and the discredit attaching to its failures in the past were quite sure to paralyze every effort to enlist the help, support, and sympathy which were essential to success. Under this stress, it was determined to disband the old organization, and from its membership, with such others as could be induced to co-operate, endeavor to create a new one. This was done. The new organization was made up largely from the old members, but with a new list of officials, and incorporated as the North Des Moines Methodist Episcopal Church. The owner of the church property under the sheriff's deed, finding it no doubt an undesirable and profitless asset, consented to sell it for less than one half the mortgage debt for which it had been sold, and the new corporation purchased it, and now holds the title. It is against this property that the plaintiff now seeks to enforce her judgment. In none of the circumstances of the case do we discover anything on which a charge of fraud may be justly predicated. It is true, we have said the new church is principally made up from the membership of the old; that it is affiliated with the same conference, acknowledges the same ecclesiastical authority, professes the same faith, occupies the same locality, and pursues the same general policy; but these do not constitute corporate identity. Had the North Des Moines Church taken over any property or valuable thing which the plaintiff was entitled in law or equity to subject to her claim, a different question would arise. But even then her remedy would be confined to a subjection of such property to the payment of her judgment. In other words, the new corporation would not ordinarily be chargeable as her debtor, but as a trustee, liable to account for such assets of the old corporation as it may have received. 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 811; Marshall v. Western North Carolina R. Co. 92 N. C. 322; Bruffett v. Great Western R. Co. 25 Ill. 353; Donnelly v. Hearndon, 41 W. Va. 519, 23 S. E. 646; 1 Thomp. Corp. § 263. Plaintiff is not the creditor of the members. She has not, and never has had, a right of action against them as such. The only duty owed to her by the individual members was the moral duty to use all reasonable effort by their own contributions, and by such assistance as might properly be obtained from others, to maintain the solvency of the corporation. There is nothing before us to show that this full measure of duty was not performed, while the proved fact that the church struggled with its difficulties for so many years before surrendering to the inevitable affords some presumption that its members were not unmindful of their obligations.

© L. R. A.

It is suggested in argument that some few articles of furniture and miscellaneous supplies belonging to the old church went into the possession of the appellee. It is true the evidence indicates that a portable organ, which was placed in the church before the foreclosure, has remained there, and that the pastor makes use of the original membership roll. As to the first item, we can only say that, if such property was liable to seizure and sale upon the plaintiff's judgment, it may still be reached in the hands of the appellee; but no such relief is sought in this proceeding. Of the other matter, it may be said that the pastor is not an officer of the corporation, and it is not bound by his act in the premises. Moreover, it appears that under the rules and regulations of the church a formal dismissal of its members from the old organization and reception into the new one were not essential to a transfer of membership, and under such circumstances the retention and use of the roster is without special significance.

Counsel argue with much earnestness that the new corporation, being devoted to the same purposes and to the same faith as the first one, should be held to be the same legal entity under another name, and bound by law as well as by the principles of common honesty to pay the debts of its predecessor. They further say that, "if a new organization had been effected for the purpose of maintaining the doctrines of the Baptist or any other church, and the membership had allied themselves with it, we should have an entirely different proposition." If, in fact, the membership were legally or morally bound to the plaintiff for the payment of this debt, it is not easy to understand just how a change of denominational lines or a merger into the "Baptist or any other church" would serve to cancel the obligation. Men and women cannot rid themselves of a debt in law or in honor by a change of church relations. Were we to announce otherwise, the title of interchurch migration might soon reach embarrassing proportions. But the truth is that no such obligation as counsel contends for exists. As already suggested, the member of the church is never under any legal obligation for the payment of its corporate debts, and his only moral obligation is to contribute of his means and of his influence to the extent of his ability to meet the just demands upon that organization so long as he is a member of it. When he has done all which his own enlightened conscience indicates to be his duty, or when, for any reason which satisfies himself, he ceases to be a member and refuses further assistance, neither court, creditor, nor counsel is entitled to arraign him as a recreant. He who gives credit to a church organization knows that the only source to which he is entitled to look for payment is the property or assets of which the corporation is owner, and to the voluntary offerings or gifts of the members and friends who may be moved or persuaded to contribute to that purpose. If the people, for any reason, will not contribute to meet his demand, but will help build up another organization, he suffers no legal wrong. In this instance the church property had been lost. The membership was under no obligation to purchase it simply to see it sold on the plaintiff's judgment. They could have abandoned all further effort to maintain a church organization of any kind without incurring any liability or exposing themselves to any just demand on part of plaintiff,— a result which doubtless would have followed if the organization of a new church, liable for no obligations except those of its own making, were not allowable.

69 L. R. A.

In short, our conclusion is that the intent to form a new corporation is clearly shown, that in carrying such intent into execution no fraud was committed, and that plaintiff's bill was therefore properly dismissed.

After the introduction of evidence in the court below, the plaintiff asked for and was refused leave to file an amendment to her petition seeking relief on the ground that the old corporation was a mere trustee for the benefit of the membership, and that the new corporation was but the successor in the same trust. Counsel have argued this proposition, but we think the issues are not broad enough to cover it, nor does it seem to have been tried or passed upon by the district court. The granting of leave to amend at that stage of the case, setting up a new and distinct issue, was addressed to the discretion of the court, and the refusal of the request is not an error requiring a reversal.

The conclusion of the District Court upon the merits is right, and is affirmed.

C. E. KLEIS

v.

James McGRATH and Wife.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. Giving a note for interest upon a larger note already barred by the statute of limitations, which does not mention or in any way refer to the earlier note, does not revive it under a statute providing that causes of action founded on contract are revived by an admission in writing, signed by the party to be charged, that the debt is unpaid, or by a like new promise to pay the same.
2. A note given for interest on another note which is secured by mortgage is itself so secured, and the mortgage may be foreclosed to satisfy it, although the prior note is barred by the statute of limitations.
3. A note for principal, and one for interest, signed by the same maker and secured by the same mortgage, may be enforced in one action.

(May 6, 1905.)

NOTE.—As to what acknowledgment of debt, or promise to pay, is sufficient to remove bar of statute of limitations, see also, in this series, note to Opp v. Wack, 5 L. R. A. 743; and the later cases of Krueger v. Krueger, 7 L. R. A. 72; Kerper v. Wood, 15 L. R. A. 636; Bralthwaite v. Harvey, 27 L. R. A. 101; Slaughter's Succession, 58 L. R. A. 408; and cases in note to Trimble v. Rudy, 53 L. R. A. 353.

CROSS-APPEALS from a judgment of the District Court for Dubuque County rendered in an action brought to foreclose a mortgage securing payment of certain promissory notes; plaintiff appealing from so much as refused to hold that the principal note was revived by a note given for interest, and defendants appealing from so much as permitted a foreclosure to satisfy the interest note. Affirmed on both appeals.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hurd, Lemchan, & Kiesel, for plaintiff:

The giving of a note to secure the payment of interest accrued on a note previously given is a sufficient acknowledgment of the existence of continued indebtedness upon the latter.

Angell, Limitations of Actions, 5th ed. p. 251; Wood, Limitation of Actions, 2d ed. pp. 271, 272, 301, 302; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 327, and notes; Lyman v. Warner, 51 C. C. A. 73, 113 Fed. 87; Kelly v. Leachman, 3 Idaho, 629, 33 Pac. 44; Pracht v. McNee, 40 Kan. 1, 18 Pac. 925.

It was competent to establish by parol testimony the identity of the sum embodied in the note given for interest with the interest due upon the pre-existing debt, and that it was given for that debt.

Kelly v. Leachman, 3 Idaho, 629, 33 Pac. 44; Harrison v. Dayries, 23 La. Ann. 216; Tilden v. Morrison, 33 La. Ann. 1068; Kincaid v. Archibald, 73 N. Y. 189; Miller v. Beardsley, 81 Iowa, 720, 45 N. W. 756; First Nat. Bank v. Woodman, 93 Iowa, 668, 57 Am. St. Rep. 287, 62 N. W. 28; McConaughy v. Wilsey, 115 Iowa, 589, 88 N. W. 1101; Campbell v. Campbell, 118 Iowa, 132, 91 N. W. 894.

There was no misjoinder of parties or causes of action.

The mortgage securing the original note was not the cause of action. The mortgage was a mere incident of the debt.

Crow v. Vance, 4 Iowa, 434; Vandercook v. Baker, 48 Iowa, 199.

The mortgage given to secure the original note became security for the second note as part of the indebtedness.

Port v. Robbins, 35 Iowa, 208; Fetes v. O'Laughlin, 62 Iowa, 532, 17 N. W. 764; Cook v. Gilchrist, 82 Iowa, 277, 48 N. W. 84.

Messrs. McCarthy, Kenline, & Reedell, for defendants:

The second note is insufficient to constitute a revivor of the first one.

Chambers v. Garland, 3 G. Greene, 322; Parsons v. Carey, 28 Iowa, 431; Oakson v. Beach, 36 Iowa, 171; Carpenter v. District Twp. 58 Iowa, 335, 12 N. W. 280; Hale v. Wilson, 70 Iowa, 311, 30 N. W. 739; Lawrence v. Baker, 44 Hun, 582; Davidson v. 60 L. R. A.

Harrison, 33 Miss. 41; Stout v. Marshall, 75 Iowa, 498, 39 N. W. 808; Stewart v. McFarland, 84 Iowa, 55, 50 N. W. 221; Nelson v. Hanson, 92 Iowa, 359, 54 Am. St. Rep. 568, 60 N. W. 655; Porter v. Chicago, I. & D. R. Co. 99 Iowa, 357, 63 N. W. 724.

A statement in writing by a debtor that there is a specific amount due is not such an admission or acknowledgment of the balance of the claim over such amount as will take it out of the statute.

Porter v. Chicago, I. & D. R. Co. 99 Iowa, 357, 63 N. W. 724; Hale v. Wilson, 70 Iowa, 311, 30 N. W. 739.

Weaver, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The petition, which was filed December 9, 1903, declares upon two promissory notes, and seeks the foreclosure of a mortgage, and is stated in two counts. In the first count it is alleged that on June 29, 1888, the defendant James McGrath made and delivered to plaintiff's assignor his promissory note for $2,250, payable five years after date, with interest at 7 per cent per annum, which note is now owned by the plaintiff, and is due and unpaid. In the same count plaintiff further alleges that on June 30, 1902, the defendant James McGrath made and delivered to plaintiff another promissory note in writing for $28.75, which note, it is further alleged, was given for interest accrued on the note first described, and the instrument is set out in said first count for the purpose of showing an admission in writing that the principal debt was then unpaid, thus avoiding the plea of the statute of limitations thereon. The second count declares solely upon the note of $28.75, above mentioned. Judgment is asked for the unpaid balance on both notes, and foreclosure is prayed of a mortgage alleged to have been given by James McGrath and his wife, Ann McGrath, at the date of the first note, to secure its payment. The defendants demurred to each count of the petition on the ground that the allegations thereof show the debt sued upon to be barred by the statute of limitations, and for the further reason that the pleading shows a misjoinder of causes of action and of parties, and because the two counts are inconsistent and contradictory. The district court sustained the demurrer to the first count of the petition, and overruled it as to the second count. Both parties having elected to stand upon the record thus made without further pleading, the court dismissed plaintiff's action upon the first-mentioned promissory note, and entered judgment in his favor for the amount of the smaller note and for a foreclosure of the mortgage. Both parties appeal, but the plaintiff, being first to serve notice, will be herein denominated the appellant.

The one question presented is whether the making and delivering of the second note, when aided by parol evidence that it was given for unpaid interest on the first note, is such a written admission of the debt evidenced by the latter as will operate to revive the right of action thereon and prevent the interposition of the statute of limitations. The suit was confessedly begun more than ten years after a right of action had accrued upon the first note, and it is therefore barred unless we give the second note the effect claimed for it by the appellant. Code, § 3456, reads as follows: "Causes of action founded on contract are revived by an admission in writing signed by the party to be charged, that the debt is unpaid, or by a like new promise to pay the same." It is manifest that the note for $28.75 described in the petition is not a promise in writing, signed by the defendant, to pay the note for $2,250. Can it be construed as a written admission of the continued existence of the debt represented by the larger note? Counsel for appellant have called our attention to several cases decided in other states which give some color of support to their contention that this question must be answered in the affirmative. There is a wide variance, however, among the courts of the several states in the strictness with which statutes as to the revivor of causes of action by written promises or acknowledgments are interpreted and applied. Some cases, especially those of an earlier date, seem to proceed upon the theory that the defense of the statute of limitations is not meritorious and that all doubts are to be solved in favor of the creditor; others have adopted the view that the statute is one of repose, and that the cause of action, once barred, ought not to be revived unless the plaintiff bring this case within the letter and spirit of the provisions permitting such revivor. Moreover, the statutes of the states creating a time limit upon the right to sue, and providing for the revival under some circumstances of a right once barred, are by no means uniform, and the decisions based thereon are ordinarily without decisive value as authority outside of the jurisdiction in which they have been announced. Referring to this statute, this court has already said: "We have found no statute like ours, and the cases in other states therefore give but little aid." Parsons v. Carey, 28 Iowa, 436. The prevailing tendency seems to be to permit a revivor by acknowledgment of the debt only where the writing relied upon is clear, explicit, and unequivocal in its terms. Says the Supreme Court of the United States: "If there be no express promise, but a promise is to be raised by implication of law from the acknowledgment of the party, such acknowledgment ought to contain an unqualified and direct admission of a previous subsisting debt which the party is liable and willing to pay. . . . Any other course would open all the mischiefs against which the statute was intended to guard innocent persons, and expose them to dangers of being entrapped in careless conversations and betrayed by perjuries." See also Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. 362, 7 L. ed. 179; Smith v. Fly, 24 Tex. 353, 76 Am. Dec. 109; Shepherd v. Thompson, 122 U. S. 236, 30 L. ed. 1157, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1229; Kensington Bank v. Patton, 14 Pa. 481, 53 Am. Dec. 564; Macrum v. Marshall, 129 Pa. 506, 15 Am. St. Rep. 730; 18 Atl. 640; Pierce v. Merrill, 128 Cal. 473, 79 Am. St. Rep. 63, 61 Pac. 67. It is an accepted doctrine that an acknowledgment of the existence of a debt is allowed to remove the bar of the statute, because such acknowledgment or admission carries with it an implied promise to pay. For that reason the acknowledgment must be express, clear, and direct, for it will not do to infer or imply the acknowledgment, and therefrom imply the promise to pay; thus piling implication upon implication. But this is just what must be done in order to sustain the position taken by the appellant. Moreover, the implication which he asks the court to indulge in cannot be drawn from the writing alone, but from the writing and other alleged facts which he proposes to establish by parol. The note itself contains not a word or suggestion recognizing the existence of any other obligation from the maker to the payee, and this gap it is proposed to bridge by parol proof that the consideration of the written promise was interest earned or accrued on the debt represented by the other note. But when all this has been done the acknowledgment relied upon is still a matter of implication, and is in no sense of the word an acknowledgment in writing of the existence of any debt save the sum of $28.75, which he promises to pay. If the defendant, in addition to his written promise to pay said sum, had added thereto by way of explanation the words "interest on my note now held by said payee," this would have been an acknowledgment that appellant held an unpaid note against him, and parol testimony would have been competent to point out and identify the note to which reference was made. Penley v. Waterhouse, 3 Iowa, 418. By so doing we simply identify the subject-matter to which the acknowledgment or promise applied. We add nothing whatever to enlarge or extend the clear meaning and import of the writing which the defendant has subscribed.

But, as we have already noted, the writing before us in this case is a simple, unequivocal promise to pay to the plaintiff the sum of money therein mentioned. There is no ambiguity or uncertainty requiring the aid of parol testimony for an explanation of the defendant's meaning or to identify the subject-matter of his promise. Such being the case, if we open the door for parol proof of facts and circumstances in no manner suggested by the writing, and from such facts and circumstances find an implied acknowledgment of an existing indebtedness upon another and different instrument, we shall, in effect, by judicial construction abolish the statute by which there can be no revivor of a demand against which the limitation has run except by a written promise or acknowledgment subscribed by the party to be charged.

None of the cases cited by the appellant from this court go farther in recognizing the competency of parol testimony than we have above indicated. In Miller v. Beardsley, 81 Iowa, 720, 45 N. W. 756, the defendant wrote to the plaintiff stating that he had paid plaintiff's agent the interest on $9,000, referred to interest not yet due and to a note or notes which he "had not yet paid." In McConaughy v. Wilsey, 115 Iowa, 589, 88 N. W. 1101, the defendant wrote, making express reference to a note, and promising to "try and pay it this fall." The acknowledgment relied upon in Campbell v. Campbell, 118 Iowa, 131, 91 N. W. 894, was contained in a letter containing a remittance, of which the writer says, "I think it pays the interest on my note to February, 1892," a date then in the future. In First Nat. Bank v. Woodman, 93 Iowa, 671, 57 Am. St. Rep. 287, 62 N. W. 28, the writing was also contained in letters remitting money to "pay interest on notes," and other letters stating that the writer hoped to be "able soon to pay the interest, . . . and, . . . if possible, to pay the principal." In each of these cases it will be readily seen there is a clear and express reference by the defendant, in writing, to the existence of an unpaid indebtedness, the obligation of which is acknowledged by him; and in each case parol evidence was held admissible to identify the particular note or other form of indebtedness thus acknowledged. Beyond this well-established rule, we have never gone, nor can we do so without disregarding the statute. In Wise v. Adair, 50 Iowa, 104, we said, with reference to an alleged written acknowledgment: "We should not extend the defendant's liability beyond what he admitted in writing." In other words, it is not competent to add by parol anything or any amount to the liability there admitted. In Nelson v. Hanson, 69 L. R. A.

92 Iowa, 356, 54 Am. St. Rep. 568, 60 N. W. 655, we reviewed our earlier cases permitting the identification of the debt by parol evidence, and said: "But in all these cases the language used by the debtor was an unqualified admission of indebtedness either in words or in legal effect." The position of this court is also clearly indicated in First Nat. Bank v. Woodman, 93 Iowa, 671, 57 Am. St. Rep. 287, 62 N. W. 28, where, referring to language contained in certain writing or letters as an acknowledgment of the debt, we said: "While the letters relied on as containing the requisite admissions and promises to revive the cause of action are mostly those of remittances, it is not the fact of payment that is relied on, but the statements in the letters signed by the party." See also Stout v. Marshall, 75 Iowa, 498, 39 N. W. 808; Hale v. Wilson, 70 Iowa, 312, 30 N. W. 739. As bearing to some extent upon the same general proposition here discussed, see also, Lehman v. Mahier, 34 La. Ann. 319; Trainer v. Seymour, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 674, 32 S. W. 154; Boothby v. Bennett, 73 Me. 117; Eckford v. Evans, 56 Miss. 18; Wells v. Hill, 118 N. C. 900, 24 S. E. 771; Canton Female Academy v. Gilman, 55 Miss. 148; Gartrell v. Linn, 79 Ga. 700, 4 S. E. 918; Leonard v. Hughlett, 41 Md. 380; Davis v. Davis, 98 Me. 135, 56 Atl. 588. Under our statute the common-law rule by which the partial payment of a claim operates to set the period of limitation running anew has been abrogated, and this court has never been inclined to indulge in overrefined construction to defeat the legislative will thus expressed. Parsons v. Carey, 28 Iowa, 431; Harrencourt v. Merritt, 29 Iowa, 71; Roberts v. Hammon, 29 Iowa, 128; Hale v. Wilson, 70 Iowa, 312, 30 N. W. 739.

If, then, a partial payment is to be no longer construed as an acknowledgment of the debt or promise to pay it, it is difficult to frame the statement of any good reason for giving such effect to a mere promise to make a partial payment. The Hale Case, 70 Iowa, 312, 30 N. W. 739, differs but little in principle from the one before us. There the defendant, the maker of a promissory note, made a payment to the holder, and himself wrote and signed an indorsement thereof upon the note as follows: "Paid on the within note forty dollars, John Wilson." This we held not to be an acknowledgment of the debt which would prevent or avoid the defense of the statute of limitations. We said: "The mere payment of an amount of money upon a note is not an admission that no other payments have been made, nor that any other or farther sum than that paid was due. The rule for which plaintiff contends obtained at a time when it was competent to prove by parol that the payment was but a part of what was admitted to be due. By our statute the rights of the parties are fixed by the writing, and unless, by its terms, a further sum is admitted to be due, or a new promise is made, the operation of the statute is not arrested. The law does not authorize the construction of a writing stating the mere fact of the payment of a sum of money on a note to be in effect, a statement that more is due and unpaid." This principle is clearly applicable to the controversy now under consideration. The demurrer to the first count of the petition was rightfully sustained.

2. There is, in our judgment, no merit in the defendants' appeal. The note there set out was not barred by the statute of limitations. The demurrer admits that it was given for interest earned on the earlier note which was secured by the mortgage. If this be true, the note thus made was secured by the mortgage, and plaintiff was entitled to a foreclosure to enforce its payment. A mortgage given to secure payment of a debt secures also the payment of the interest accruing thereon, and the mere fact that the debtor has given the mortgagee his note for such interest has no effect as a waiver or release of the lien. Barbour v. Tompkins, 31 W. Va. 410, 7 S. E. 17. There was no misjoinder of the parties or causes of action. The defendant James McGrath was the sole maker of both notes. They were both secured by the same mortgage, and it is needless to say that it was entirely proper to make his wife a party to the proceeding.

The judgment of the District Court is, upon both appeals, affirmed.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

UNION CENTRAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

Harry C. SPINKS.

(.....Ky.....)

1. Retaining and attempting to collect an overdue premium note on an insurance policy will waive a provision in the policy that nonpayment of the note at maturity will terminate the contract.
2. A provision of a life insurance policy that suit shall be brought on it within a period less than that fixed by the statute of limitations is void as against public policy.

On Rehearing.

3. Failure to credit overdue premium notes on a life insurance policy in entering judgment thereon, as provided in the contract, is cause for reversal.

(Paynter, J., dissents.)

(December 9, 1904.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Campbell County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a life insurance policy. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Robert Ramsey, W. W. Helm, and Maxwell & Ramsey, for appellant:

The insurance terminated, without action on the part of the company, upon Spinks's failure to pay his note at maturity.

Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Duwall, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 441, 46 S. W. 518; Moreland v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. 104 Ky. 129, 46 S. W. 516.

The agent's attempt to collect after maturity was not effective to reinstate the lapsed policy, for want of authority on his part.

Hartford Life & Annuity Ins. Co. v. Hayden, 90 Ky. 39, 13 S. W. 585; Marcus v. St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. 68 N. Y. 625.

The policy terminated when the company formally canceled it and notified the insured.

The defendant is not estopped by the retention of the premium note.

Deppen v. Southern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 8 Ky. L. Rep. 57.

The one-year limitation clause in the policy was valid.

Lee v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1712, 56 S. W. 724; Owen v. Howard Ins. Co. 87 Ky. 571, 10 S. W. 119; Kentucky Mut. Security Fund Co. v. Turner, 89 Ky. 665, 13 S. W. 104; Riddlesbarger v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 7 Wall. 386, 19 L. ed. 257; 2 May, Ins. 478; 1 Wood, Limitation of Actions, 42.

NOTE.—As to validity of contract limitation for presenting claim or bringing suit to time shorter than period of limitations, see also cases in note to Case v. Sun Ins. Co. 8 L. R. A. 48; and the later cases, in this series, of Suggs v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 1 L. R. A. 847, and cases 69 L. R. A.

in note thereto; Dwelling House Ins. Co. v. Brodle, 4 L. R. A. 458, and cases in note; Kirby v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 30 L. R. A. 612; and Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Eubank, 36 L. R. A. 711.

Messrs. L. J. Crawford and Hazelrigg, Chenault, & Hazelrigg for appellee.

O'Rear, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was upon a ten-year-term life policy issued by appellant upon the life of Charles Spinks for $10,000. The policy was issued February 1, 1894. The annual premium was $396.80. The policy contained the following provisions:

"All premiums or notes, or interest upon notes, given the company for premiums, shall be paid on or before the days upon which they become due," etc.

"Upon the violation of any of the foregoing conditions this policy shall be null and void, without action on the part of the company, or notice to the insured or beneficiary," etc.

"The contract of insurance between the parties hereto is completely set forth in this policy and the application for the same, and none of its terms can be modified, nor any forfeiture under it waived, save by an agreement in writing signed by the president, vice president, or secretary of the company, whose authority for this purpose shall not be delegated."

"No suit to recover under this policy shall be brought after one year from the death of the insured."

The insured paid three of the annual premiums, and on December 15, 1897, executed to appellant a six months' note for $396.80 for annual premium due on that date. The note was not paid at maturity. On the day following the maturity of the note defendant's general agent at Cincinnati wrote the insured as follows:

Cincinnati, O., June 16, 1898.

Charles Spinks, Esq.,
Newport, Ky.

Dear Sir:—

Your note of $396.80 ($11.90 interest) on policy 114,386 was due and unpaid on the 15th day of June, 1898. Your immediate attention to the above is of the utmost importance to the validity of your policy in the event of sudden misfortune. Please call and arrange to pay the same at once.

Yours respectfully,

E. W. Jewell,

General Agent.

The insured made no reply to this letter, so far as the proof shows.

On June 21st the general agent sent the note to a bank, with the following letter of advice:

60 L. R. A.

Cincinnati, O., June 21, 1898.

Newport National Bank,
Newport, Ky.

Gentlemen:—

I inclose you the note of Charles Spinks for collection.

Note$396 80

Interest 11 90

$408 70

Yours respectfully,

E. W. Jewell,

General Agent.

The bank, as agent of the insurance company, presented the note to the insured and demanded payment. But it was not paid. On July 7th following it was returned to appellant. On that day appellant wrote the insured as follows:

Cincinnati, O., July 7th, 1898.

Charles Spinks, Esq.,
Newport, Ky.

Dear Sir:—

The note given in payment of the annual premium on your policy 114,386 was due and unpaid June 15th, and, according to the rules of the company, you must furnish us a satisfactory certificate of good health before settling this note. If you will kindly take the indorsed health certificate to the medical directors of the company, they will fill it out and pass upon it.

Yours respectfully,

E. W. Jewell,

General Agent.

It is claimed for appellant that it about the same time forwarded to its local agent at Newport, where insured lived, a formal notice canceling the policy for nonpayment of premium; but there is no evidence that it was ever received by the insured. Omitting, therefore, the last-named act from the proceedings, we have, so far as the insured was advised, that the insurance company held his premium note, was endeavoring and intending to collect it in full, which represented the premium on his policy to December 15th following, and had taken no action looking to a cancellation of the policy. As a matter of fact, it is testified that the company, immediately upon default, when the note was due, marked the policy on its policy register "Canceled." The insured had been in the habit of executing notes to appellant for his premiums, and of paying them some time after maturity. They were always received, so far as this record shows, without question. The insured, however, died on the 14th of September, 1898. This suit is by the beneficiary of the policy, a son of the insured.

It is the well-settled law of this state that, if an insurer desires to avail itself of conditions in its policy to declare it forfeited for the nonpayment of a premium note, it must unequivocally elect to so treat it, and in fact then and thereafter so treat it. It will not be allowed, though, to claim both that it is not bound on the policy, but that the insured is bound to pay the note. Its action must be consistent. While it may retain the note, as evidence of its nonpayment, it must not retain it or treat it as an evidence of that much indebtedness. Moreland v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. 104 Ky. 129, 46 S. W. 516; Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Duvall, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 441, 46 S. W. 518; Johnson v. Southern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 79 Ky. 406; Walls v. Home Ins. Co. 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1452, 71 S. W. 650. In the case at bar appellant must not retain the note after its maturity, but repeatedly endeavored to collect it in full thereafter. It thereby claimed that the insured owed to it $396.80 as an enforceable debt. If he did, then appellant was bound to him, as the consideration for it, upon the policy of insurance. Even though such provisions in policies of insurance are automatic, they may be waived by the parties, and this waiver may be indicated by conduct, as well as by express language. The fact that the insured marked on its private books that the policy was canceled, did not cancel it, if thereafter it continued to assert the note as an enforceable obligation against the insured, thereby evincing to him that it was not canceled. Upon principle and authority we hold that the evidence here shows a waiver by the insurer of the condition of forfeiture in the policy.

The more important question is that of special limitation of one year provided for by the policy. The suit was not brought till more than one year after the death of the insured. We are aware that this or a similar provision is contained in nearly all insurance policies, fire and life. We are further aware that the provision is upheld by many courts, including the United States Supreme Court (Riddlesbarger v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 7 Wall, 386, 19 L. ed. 257), and is approved by text writers. This court has also, though with hesitation and misgiving, followed the other courts in approving it. We therefore have come to the reconsideration of this question with a deep sense of its importance and difficulty, and of our duty in the premises. The legal question is, Can parties by contract substitute a period of limitation, binding upon the courts, for the statutes of limitation enacted by the legislature? If they can, it must be upon some general principle, the breadth and far-reaching effect of which cannot logically be limited to mere contracts of insurance, but must incontrovertibly be applicable to all contracts; for, if it is a matter of agreement alone between parties competent to contract, the only inquiry that can ever be made is, Have they agreed upon it?

Pleas of limitation were allowed long before there was any statute on the subject. The courts applied them upon the theory of a fiction to the effect that after so long a lapse of time, during which the claimant made no assertion of his rights in a personal demand, a presumption was raised that the obligation had been paid or discharged, and, in the case of real estate, that a conveyance had been executed but lost. The fiction was justified in the reasoning of the courts by the evident justness of its effect; it being argued that one who had so long neglected his rights as to allow the other party to suffer by it, by the loss of evidence and the like, ought not to be heard to disturb a condition he had suffered to come about. But statutes of limitation have come to be enacted everywhere. They are not mere rules of evidence, presumptions of the payment or extinguishment of the obligation sued upon, but are statutes expressive of a public policy, and are favorably regarded by the law. They are not in operation or suspense at the mere will of the parties, but in spite of them. While the statutes themselves make provision for their suspension, it is to be noted that in every instance it is allowed for the purpose of continuing or prolonging a pre-existing right to sue, and never to close the door against suits by any kind of waiver in favor of an obligee.

Many statutory provisions are made for the protection of personal rights, which the parties may avail themselves of or not, in their transactions, as they may please. But, where the statute is expressive of the public policy, any contract made in contravention of it is ipso facto void. Parties will never be heard to say that they elect to waive the public policy, and are willing to abide by their own substituted policy. The public policy, as the term indicates, is impersonal, and essentially of universal and exclusive application within the territory of the authority declaring it. There could be no public policy otherwise, and the whole people would be powerless to enforce any wholesome general rule of conduct in business transactions, where any number chose to ignore or violate it. Statutes of limitation belong to this class. They pertain to the administration of justice by the courts of the state,—a subject of paramount concern to the whole public. That there may be a period of repose against stale claims is provided, recognizing the old idea that, but for the loss of evidence, death or removal of witnesses, forgetfulness, and so on, an apparent condition might have been explained away. The statute means more than that no suit shall be maintained upon the class of claims treated of by it after the lapse of the time fixed by it. It means, also, that until that time has elapsed the courts are open to hear the claim. The statutes are substituted in lieu of the common-law rules of presumptions and practice, and establish the public policy of the state on the subject of limitation of actions. They supersede, not only the fictions of the common law, but also supersede the hitherto uncontrolled capacity of parties to themselves limit the time in which either may rightfully appeal to the courts for redress under their contracts. Agreements in advance to waive statutes of limitation altogether are held void on the grounds that such statutes are for the repose, the peace, and the welfare of society. Greenhood, Pub. Pol. 504; Kellogg v. Dickinson, 147 Mass. 432, 1 L. R. A. 346, 18 N. E. 223; Trask v. Weeks, 81 Me. 325, 17 Atl. 162; Green v. Coos Bay Wagon Road Co. 10 Sawy. 625, 23 Fed. 67.

It is old and familiar doctrine that the courts will not enforce a contract by which the parties have bound themselves not to sue at all, or to leave the difference exclusively to arbitrators. If parties by contract can lawfully provide when the suit shall be instituted (or when it shall not be, which is the same thing), why not let them go further within the same principle and stipulate as to the nature of the action; whether it shall be tried by a jury, and what evidence shall be receivable to establish or impeach the right; and, by force of the same logic, why not close the matter consistently by concluding how and out of what estate the execution upon the judgment may be levied, and within what time the judgment of the court may be enforced. If the fact be that by contract one party becomes bound to another, the policy of the law is to regulate in what forums, by what nature of proceedings, by what forms of practice, and within what period it may be enforced. An agreement in advance not to apply to any court for redress is admittedly void. An agreement to confer jurisdiction upon a court not provided with it by law is likewise void. An agreement not to avail oneself of the statutes regulating practice would be held void for the same reasons. Now, the remaining question, Can a party bind himself by an agreement in advance not to sue, not to appeal to the courts having jurisdiction of the matter, for fourteen years of the fifteen which are allowed by statute, thus confining himself to one fifteenth of the time the statutes give?

It is difficult, if not inadvisable, to attempt an exact definition of the term "public policy." Story says of it (Story, Contr. § 546): "It has never been defined by the courts, but has been left loose and free of definition, in the same manner as fraud. This rule may, however, be laid down, that, wherever any contract conflicts with the morals of the time, and contravenes any established interest of society, it is void, as being against public policy." In Brooks v. Cooper, 50 N. J. Eq. 761, 21 L. R. A. 617, 35 Am. St. Rep. 795, 26 Atl. 978, the subject appears to have been thoroughly considered, and exhaustively treated. In summing up a number of considered cases, the court wrote: "It has been declared that public policy is a variable quality, but the principles to be applied have always remained unchanged and unchangeable, and public policy is only variable in so far as the habits, capacities, and opportunities of the public have become more varied and complex. The relations of society become from time to time more complex, statutes defining and declaring public and private rights multiply rapidly, and public policy often changes as the laws change, and therefore new applications of old principles are required. Davies v. Davies, L. R. 36 Ch. Div. 364. Whatever tends to injustice or oppression, restraint of liberty, restraint of legal right; whatever tends to the obstruction of justice, a violation of a statute, or the obstruction or perversion of the administration of the law; whatever tends to interfere with or control the administration of the law as to executive, legislative, or other official action,—whenever embodied in and made the subject of a contract, the contract is against public policy, and therefore void, and not susceptible of enforcement." "When we speak of the public policy of the state, we mean the law of the state, whether found in the Constitution, the statutes, or judicial records." People v. Hawkins, 157 N. Y. 12, 42 L. R. A. 490, 68 Am. St. Rep. 736, 51 N. E. 257. These citations will serve to show the scope of the principle. Particular instances by way of illustration and application will be given further along. We cannot hope to reconcile the public policy of this state with that of other states. Each state necessarily establishes its own public policy, confined to its own territory. That they may not be uniform throughout the Union is neither surprising nor discouraging; for what may be deemed inimical by one may be treated as immaterial by another, and, indeed, may be so.

We will come directly to the question whether statutes of limitation are in this state indications of its public policy. The strength of every contract lies in the right of the promisee to resort to the courts of public justice for redress for its violation. It is not enough that the parties may have voluntarily agreed, nor that there was a satisfactory consideration, nor that they have contractual capacity; for, if one has in such agreement bound himself to forego some positive right given to him by the law by which justice is secured, he should not be bound, for to do so is to bind oneself to oppression, which is contrary to the well-being of society. Courts are established at the public expense to redress wrongs, including breaches of contracts. They are open at all times for that purpose. Such is the public good. The knowledge of that fact exercises no small influence upon the conduct of individuals. It is useless for the oppressor to try to get what he knows the courts will not allow. So he regulates his conduct by knowledge of that fact. Stale claims, if allowed, would tend to encourage perjury and fraud. Therefore a statute is passed to restrict their assertion in the courts. On the other hand, claims which are not outlawed, for the reason just assigned, ought to have a forum in which they may be asserted against an unwilling or dishonest obligee. The existence of that right is of great value to the claimant, but it is likewise of great importance to the public, as by it the weak are assured of their rights against the strong,—the sum of all government. A contract agreeing in advance that the obligee will not resort to the courts for its enforcement after one year, when the statutes of the state allow fifteen years within which to begin the action upon it, is merely an agreement not to resort to the courts, in spite of the policy and laws of the state which give the right. To enforce such is to put it in the power of one party to practise oppression, and to close the courts against its relief.

Now for the instances in which the principle being discussed has been applied in this state. In Wright v. Gardner, 98 Ky. 454, 33 S. W. 622, 35 S. W. 1116, an agreement in advance waiving the statute of limitation provided for that class of transactions and extending the time beyond the statutory period was held void, because against the public policy of the state.

An agreement in a contract between a telegraph company and the sender of a message limiting the time to which claims should be presented and prosecuted against the former for a breach of the contract to a period shorter than that fixed by statute was held void as against public policy in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Eubanks, 100 Ky. 604, 36 L. R. A. 711, 66 Am. St. Rep. 361, 38 S. W. 1068. This was followed and approved in Davis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 107 Ky. 527, 92 Am. St. Rep. 371, 54 S. W. 849. It is true that 69 L. R. A.

in the Eubanks Case, 100 Ky. 604, 36 L. R. A. 711, 66 Am. St. Rep. 361, 38 S. W. 1068. it was intimated that the contract was void for the additional reason that it violated § 196 of the Constitution, prohibiting a common carrier from contracting against its common-law liability. In the later Case of Davis, 107 Ky. 527, 92 Am. St. Rep. 371, 54 S. W. 849, the decision was rested solely on the ground that the stipulation was void because contrary to public policy. It was probably doubted whether the statute of limitation was any part of a common carrier's liability.

A familiar feature of life insurance policies is the provision that after a given number of payments the insured shall be entitled to a paid-up policy proportioned as the number of payments bear to the maximum number required to be made by the policy, provided the insured shall within six months, or some such time, surrender his policy and demand the paid-up policy. In a number of cases it has been held that the provision limiting the time within which to demand the paid-up policy was not of the essence of the contract, was in the nature of a forfeiture, and was void. Montgomery v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 14 Bush, 51; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Jarboe, 102 Ky. 80, 39 L. R. A. 504, 80 Am. St. Rep. 343, 42 S. W. 1097 (Overruling Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Barbour, 92 Ky. 427, 15 L. R. A. 449, 17 S. W. 796, and Heater v. United States L. Ins. Co. 91 Ky. 356, 15 S. W. 863); Washington L. Ins. Co. v. Miles, 112 Ky. 743, 66 S. W. 740; Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Patterson, 109 Ky. 624, 53 L. R. A. 378, 95 Am. St. Rep. 393, 60 S. W. 383; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Warren Deposit Bank, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 326, 75 S. W. 234; Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Savage, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 483, 63 S. W. 278; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. O'Neil, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 983, 76 S. W. 839.

Under § 700, Kentucky Statutes, it is provided that, in case of total loss of an insured building by fire, the insurer shall pay the amount of its policy, except in case of fraud or deterioration in value since the policy was issued. Contracts attempting in advance of loss to waive the statute, and agreeing upon a different basis of settlement, are held void as being against the public policy evinced by the statute, in Caledonian Ins. Co. v. Cooke, 101 Ky. 412, 41 S. W. 279; Hariford F. Ins. Co. v. Bourbon County Court, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1850, 72 S. W. 739; Thuringia Ins. Co. v. Malott, 111 Ky. 917, 55 L. R. A. 277, 64 S. W. 991; Palatine Ins. Co. v. Weiss, 109 Ky. 464, 59 S. W. 509.

A contract in advance waiving the statute of exemption is held void in Mosley v. Ragan, 10 Bush. 156, 19 Am. Rep. 61. Agreements to pay attorney's fee in case of suit to enforce a contract are held void, because in contravention of the public policy, in Thomason v. Townsend, 10 Bush, 114, and Witherspoon v. Musselman, 14 Bush, 214, 29 Am. Rep. 404.

The Constitution of this state (§ 59) prohibits the legislature from passing special or local acts concerning quite a number of enumerated subjects, including "(5) to regulate the limitation of civil or criminal actions." Under this provision, it has been held that a statute limiting actions against cities of the first class in this commonwealth to six months, whether based upon torts or contracts,—the general law providing different periods,—was void. Gorley v. Louisville, 104 Ky. 372, 47 S. W. 263; Louisville v. Kuntz, 104 Ky. 584, 47 S. W. 592. In the last-named case, it was said: "When the Constitution prohibits the legislature from passing special laws upon any given subject, it means that all laws upon that subject shall operate alike upon all whether individual or corporate, public or private. It is a safeguard provided by the Constitution for the protection of the weak as well as the strong."

A contract between an express company and a shipper, limiting its liability for a breach of its bill of lading to six months, when the statutory period was longer, was held void, as contrary to public policy, in Adams Exp. Co. v. Walker, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1025, 67 L. R. A. 412, 83 S. W. 106.

Unless these cases are to be followed, and the principle which governed them applied to all cases, we will have it that everybody except express and telegraph companies may by contract abrogate the statutes of limitation by stipulating for a shorter period. Each contract will have its own barrier, which the courts will be bound to observe. And, though the legislature is prohibited by the Constitution from providing any but general and uniform laws of limitation, parties to contracts may have as many different periods as there may be contracts. Railroad operators, merchants, bankers, and employers of labor may all contract for such periods as may suit their whim or avarice, to which the other party may be compelled to submit by his present necessities. It would make the law a subject of barter, and the courts of justice to open or close as the result of a dicker. It seems to us to logically follow that, if part of a contract of insurance is not forfeited by a failure to comply with a stipulation in the policy that it will be unless it is claimed within six months, all of the policy will not be forfeited by a similar failure to sue for it within one year, according to the stipulations of the policy to that effect. In each instance the essence of the proviso in the policy is 69 L. R. A.

to work a forfeiture of the vested interest—a property right—because the person entitled to it does not sue for it within an agreed time, less than the statutory period of limitation.

The statutes of limitation of this state, like statutes of exemption, are enacted, not solely for individual welfare, but for the public well-being. They are, under our Constitution, of general and universal application within the state, and are indications of the state's public policy on those subjects. Contracts in contravention of them are void. In Owen v. Howard Ins. Co. 87 Ky. 571, 10 S. W. 119, the policy contained a provision that suit upon it must be begun within one year from the accrual of the cause of action. The question presented for decision was whether the year had gone. The court decided that it had not, as the last day of the year fell on Sunday, which was excluded by the court so as to allow the 365th day to fall on a secular day, when the suit could be filed. Having decided that the year had not run, it was not necessarily involved whether the stipulation was valid. The court, for the purposes of the case, assumed that it was; and this it might have done, whether it was or was not valid. In Kentucky Mut. Security Fund Co. v. Turner, 89 Ky. 665, 13 S. W. 104, a policy of life insurance contained a similar clause, limiting the cause of action to one year, should a cause arise. A cause of action did accrue upon it. Demand was made of the insurer within one year, and it made a partial payment upon it. Failing to pay the balance, suit was brought upon the policy to recover it. The insurer pleaded the contract limitation. The replication, in avoidance, was that the partial payment had operated to start anew the period of limitation within which suit might be brought. The question presented for decision, and decided, was that a partial payment within the year did operate to start anew the limitation period. A recovery was allowed. Counsel for the plaintiff admitted that the one-year provision was valid. The court likewise assumed that it was. There was no controversy about it in the case. It was passed over in the opinion, without citation of authority or statement of reason for its support. As in the case of Owen v. Howard Ins. Co. 87 Ky. 571, 10 S. W. 119, it was obiter dictum. In Lee v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1712, 56 S. W. 724, the question was directly presented, and was finally decided on rehearing by an equally divided court. In Smith v. Herd, 110 Ky. 56, 60 S. W. 841, 1121, the question was again squarely presented, and was decided in conformity to the reasoning in Riddlesbarger v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 7 Wall. 386, 19 L. ed. 257, and citing Owen v. Howard Ins. Co. 87 Ky. 571, 10 S. W. 119.

The gist of the reasoning advanced in the Riddlesbarger Case, and in the text-books which have adopted it, is that it is essential to the insurer to have the claim promptly presented and adjusted, as by a great lapse of time the circumstances of the transaction are apt to fade from the memory of disinterested witnesses, or the evidence will be lost, and the insured or beneficiary, being on the ground, would have an undue advantage, which might be turned into the fabrication of evidence and the like to support unmeritorious claims. The argument, when presented to the legislature, might justify that body's enacting a general law of limitation for this class of contracts different from that applied to ordinary written obligations. But it is not a good reason why the statute now in force and applicable to such contracts—the statute of fifteen years (Ky. Stat. 1903, § 2514)—should not be applied by the courts. Beside, the condition of the law in this state does not warrant the application of the reasoning. For here we enforce the provision of the contract requiring that the insured or beneficiary furnish promptly notice and proof of loss as a condition precedent to his right to sue. This puts before the insurer the fact that it is claimed to be liable on the policy, and the circumstances and names of witnesses by which it is proposed to establish it. Etna L. Ins. Co. v. Milward, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 589, 68 L. R. A. 285, 82 S. W. 364. It is then open to the insurer to protect itself, if it deems the claim unfounded in merit, in two ways: (1) To proceed under the Code to perpetuate its evidence, so that, whenever the action may be brought against it, it has lost nothing by deaths and removals of witnesses; (2) or it may sue at once to be relieved of the liability claimed, on the ground that it has been discharged, or that the contract has terminated, or for whatever reason, and it may thus at once force a trial of the matter, getting such advantages as accrue from that fact.

While recognizing the great ability of the justices of the supreme court, and the learning and wisdom of the courts of final resort of the states that have adopted a different policy, yet we feel constrained to declare that the public policy of Kentucky is a matter peculiarly for her own construction and application. The reasoning applied to uphold the distinction made in favor of insurance contracts to us is unsatisfying, while the objections to the principle on which it rests are insuperable. The supreme courts of two other states have come to the same conclusion at which we have arrived. Barnes v. McMurtry, 29 Neb. 184, 45 N. W. 285, and 69 L. R. A.

Georgia Masonic Ins. Co. v. Davis, 63 Ga. 471. And there may be others. Smith v. Herd, 110 Ky. 56, 60 S. W. 841, 1121, is overruled. Lee v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1712, 56 S. W. 724, will not longer be considered authority on this point.

We conclude that the provision in the policy that no suit should be maintained upon it, unless begun within one year from the death of the insured, was in contravention of the public policy of this state, and is void. It follows that the judgment of the circuit court, having been in conformity to this conclusion, is affirmed, with damages.

Paynter, J., dissents.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, O'Rear, J., on February 15, 1905, handed down the following additional opinion:

The policy provides that any indebtedness of the assured to the company will be deducted from the face of the policy if the latter becomes a claim against the company. The note for $396.80 and interest from December 15, 1897, spoken of in the opinion, ought to have been credited on the sum payable to appellee under the terms of the policy. For the error in failure to do so, the judgment must be reversed, and cause remanded, to enter judgment on the verdict subject to the credit herein indicated. The opinion in other respects is adhered to.

On March 9, 1905, a further opinion was handed down by Hobson, Ch. J., to the effect that, upon withdrawal of the transcript from the clerk's office, he could not tax costs as for two copies, although it was used by both parties, which throws no light on the main proposition in the case, and is therefore omitted.

A. H. HARGIS et al.

v.

Watts PARKER, Judge, etc

(.....Ky.....)

1. The supreme court may exercise its

NOTE.—As to superintending control of superior over inferior tribunals, see also, in this series, State ex rel. Fourth Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 51 L. R. A. 33, and note, and Re Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 67 L. R. A. 761.

As to jurisdiction of crime begun in one state or county and consummated in another, see also, in this series, Watt v. People, 1 L. R. A. 403; Ex parte McNeely, 15 L. R. A. 226; and Graham v. People, 47 L. R. A. 731.

As to crime committed by shooting across state boundary, see State v. Hall, 28 L. R. A. 59, note.

As to effect of prosecution in one county to bar prosecution in another county, where offense was partly consummated in both, see Coleman v. State, 64 L. R. A. 807.

constitutional power to prevent an inferior court from exceeding its jurisdiction, before the question of jurisdiction has been presented to such court, where the situation disclosed is such that to take the ordinary course would be of itself to subject the complaining party to irreparable loss.

2. The supreme court has jurisdiction to intervene by a writ of prohibition to stay an inferior court from proceeding out of its jurisdiction, under a constitutional provision empowering it to issue such writs as may be necessary to give it a general control of inferior jurisdictions.

3. A constitutional right to trial by jury of the vicinage does not prevent the trial taking place in either county, in case a crime is begun in one and consummated in another.

4. The arrest at their own instigation, for the purpose of preventing a trial elsewhere, of persons accused of crime, by a magistrate of the county where the commission of the crime is commenced, and blinding them over to await the action of the grand jury, will not prevent proceedings against them in the county where the crime is consummated, under a statute providing that, if the jurisdiction of any offense be in two counties, the accused shall be tried in the county in which he is first arrested.

5. An accessory before the fact to a murder in which the wound is inflicted in one county and the injured person dies in another may be tried in either county, although his acts are committed only in the former, under statutes providing that accessories shall be liable to the same punishment as principals, and may be prosecuted jointly with them, and, in case of a crime committed jointly in two counties the prosecution may be in either.

(March 10, 1905.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of prohibition to restrain defendant from taking jurisdiction of an indictment charging petitioners with murder. Denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. B. Hanna, John M. Stevenson, and J. J. C. Bach, with Messrs. J. Smith Hays, Lewis McQuown, and Hazelrigg & Hazelrigg, for petitioners:

The jurisdiction of this court attached under the averments of the petition in this case.

Com. v. Jones, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 867, 82 S. W. 643; Const. § 110; Weaver v. Toney, 107 Ky. 419, 50 L. R. A. 105, 54 S. W. 732; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Miller, 112 Ky. 464, 66 S. W. 5.

If every friend that the plaintiffs have in this case had gone to the magistrate at the instance of the plaintiffs, and implored him, in advance of any actual proceeding in Fayette county, to make the affidavit, to issue the warrant in this case; and implored the sheriff to execute it; and implored the magistrate to grant the bail; and even implored the Breathitt grand jury to indict them,—still it would and could have been no legal fraud on the commonwealth, or on the jurisdiction of Fayette county.

The justice, having jurisdiction of the charge, had the undoubted right to admit to bail.

Com. v. Kimberlain, 6 T. B. Mon. 43; Com. v. Nimmo, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 286; Vias v. Com. 7 Ky. L. Rep. 742; 3 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 200.

While the court would not sustain the plea of action pending where the penalty was wholly inadequate, yet in a case where the penalty is fixed by law, and "the offender cannot lessen it by misrepresentation," it will be upheld.

Hamilton v. Williams, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 15.

If the jurisdiction is concurrent in two or more counties, an election must be made by somebody; and it is clear, if the commonwealth has not made such an election the accused may do so.

State v. Casey, 44 N. C. (Busbee, L.) 209; State v. George, 53 Ind. 434.

The justice of the peace residing nearest the courthouse had jurisdiction to issue the warrants of arrest and take bail bonds.

Act 1886, § 3, Carroll's Crim. Code, § 71; Act 1886, § 8, Carroll's Crim. Code, § 71; Com. v. Kimberlain, 6 T. B. Mon. 43; Oreokmore v. Com. 5 Bush, 312; Com. v. Nimmo, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 286; Vias v. Com. 7 Ky. L. Rep. 742; 3 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 200; State v. George, 53 Ind. 434.

The section of the Kentucky statutes (1147) under which jurisdiction is claimed for Fayette is unconstitutional.

Parker v. Com. 12 Bush, 194; 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 113; United States v. Guiteau, 1 Mackey, 498, 47 Am. Rep. 247; Bill of Rights, § 11; 1 Ky. Stat. 1796, Littell, p. 472; 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 57, subsec. 2; State v. Carter, 27 N. J. L. 499; Riley v. State, 9 Humph. 646.

Messrs. J. R. Allen, N. B. Hays, C. H. Morris, J. R. Morton, A. F. Byrd, and B. R. Jowett for respondent.

O'Rear, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The respondent the Honorable Watts Parker is the judge of the twenty-second judicial district of Kentucky, comprising Fayette county. The plaintiffs were indicted by the grand jury of Fayette county, charged with the murder of James Cockrill. A bench warrant issued upon the indictment, and was about to be served upon the plaintiffs in this proceeding, when they appeared in this court, and asked that a writ of prohibition issue against the respondent Parker to prevent his taking or exercising jurisdiction over the persons of the plaintiffs. The facts upon which the application is based are that James Cockrill was shot and wounded in Breathitt county, this state, in July, 1902. He was immediately conveyed to Fayette county for treatment of his wound, but shortly thereafter died in Fayette county. He was shot and killed, it is alleged, by Curtis Jett, who has since been tried and convicted of the crime, and sentenced to death. Jett was indicted by the grand jury of Breathitt county, though he was tried in Harrison county upon a change of venue. The claim of the plaintiffs is that, as alleged by the state, they were accessories before the fact to the murder, and that their acts, if done as claimed, were committed wholly in Breathitt county; that on December 3, 1904, warrants were issued against the plaintiffs by one James W. Edwards, a justice of the peace for Breathitt county, charging them with this murder. They were arrested upon the warrants, carried before the magistrate, and were by him held over to answer such indictment as the grand jury might find against them, and were in the meantime released upon bail. On January 24, 1905, the Fayette county grand jury returned the indictment charging the plaintiffs with the same murder in that county, and it is under this last-named indictment that the Fayette court is proposing to take jurisdiction of the plaintiffs and to try the case. Since January 24, 1905, and in fact since the original petition was filed in this court, the grand jury of Breathitt county has been convened in regular session, has examined into the alleged murder of James Cockrill, and has returned in that court several indictments charging the plaintiffs with the murder of Cockrill. Upon these facts the plaintiffs assert that the authorities of Breathitt county first took jurisdiction of the offense and of the persons of the accused, and thereby affixed the exclusive jurisdiction to try them in the courts of that county. It is also contended by plaintiffs that the provision of the statutes and Code of this state allowing a trial to be had in either county where any part of an offense may have been committed is violative of the Constitution.

Judge Parker disclaims any intent or purpose in the proceeding other than to discharge his official duty as he sees it. The commonwealth of Kentucky, at the request of the attorney general and of the commonwealth's attorney of the twenty-second judicial district, was allowed to be made a party defendant, and has defended this suit. The contentions of the commonwealth are as follows: (1) That the writ should not be issued until the petitioners have first applied to the circuit court and had the question of its jurisdiction passed on by that court. (2) That under the statutes of this state Fayette and Breathitt counties have concurrent jurisdiction of the offense charged in the indictment, and that the county where proceedings were first begun takes the exclusive jurisdiction. (3) That proceedings were first begun in Fayette county. (4) That the alleged proceedings in Breathitt county previous to the indictment returned in January are a myth; or, if in fact had, were the result of collusion between the accused and the officers, including the examining magistrate, were originated for the fraudulent purpose of preventing any prosecution, and were never intended to have been made public except as a defense to the jurisdiction of Fayette county.

The 110th section of the Constitution of Kentucky reads: "The court of appeals shall have appellate jurisdiction only, which shall be coextensive with the state, under such restrictions and regulations, not repugnant to this Constitution, as may from time to time be prescribed by law. Said court shall have power to issue such writs as may be necessary to give it a general control of inferior jurisdictions." The last sentence was not in any previous Constitution of this state. From that fact, and inasmuch as it had been held under the former Constitutions that this court might issue the common-law writ of prohibition against any inferior court proceeding out of its jurisdiction (Arnold v. Shields, 5 Dana, 18, 30 Am. Dec. 669; Sasseen v. Hammond, 18 B. Mon. 673), provided this court had appellate jurisdiction of the subject-matter, it was said that the last sentence of § 110 of the Constitution "seems to have been intended . . . to give to the court of appeals plenary power to issue writs in every case when necessary to give it general control of inferior jurisdictions." Hindman v. Toney, 97 Ky. 413, 30 S. W. 1006. Ordinarily, this court might well refuse to issue the writ before the question of jurisdiction had been made in the lower court, for it might be presumed that until that court had proceeded out of its jurisdiction, or had evinced by an order of court that it proposed doing so, it would not, or, at any rate, that the complainant was not injured, nor threatened with injury till then. But this is not necessarily so in all cases. If the situation disclosed be such as that to take the ordinary course would be of itself to subject the complainant to irreparable loss, the writ should issue without the objections having been made below. The matter of judicial courtesy should yield to substantial personal rights of litigants, such as a sacrifice of their liberty. If it be true that the Fayette court is proceeding without jurisdiction, it is not substantial justice that it should be allowed to take the bodies of the complainants, confine them in jail without bail, as it might do at its discretion, subject the parties to enormous expense in defending the case, even if it went no further than a trial of the question of jurisdiction, and say to them, "Your remedy is solely by appeal if you have been wronged." We think the section of the Constitution, though it be deemed only declaratory of the common law on the subject, confers the power and jurisdiction on this court to intervene by the writ of prohibition to stay the inferior courts of the state from proceeding out of their jurisdiction. It may issue whether or not there is an appeal. Whether it ought to issue in advance of the decision of the lower court, or whether the party will be left to his remedy by appeal, will depend on whether that remedy is given, and whether it is adequate or not. This court will be slow to use the writ where there is an appeal, but its valuable office to the citizen who is being oppressed by unlawful assumption of judicial authority will not be limited by set rules. It is believed the general principles regulating the use of this writ are so well established and understood that it is unnecessary to further define them.

It is not an open question in this state whether an offense committed partly in two counties may be tried in either. Whatever may have been the common-law rule, though it seems to have been substantially as now declared by our statute, legislation in this state has settled it, unless it be said that the Constitution is violated thereby. Section 1147, Ky. Stat. 1903, provides: "If a mortal wound, or other violence or injury, be inflicted, or poison be administered, in one county or corporation, and death ensues in another, the offense may be prosecuted in either." And § 21 of the Criminal Code of Practice provides: "If an offense be committed partly in one and partly in another county, or if acts and their effects constituting an offense occur in different counties, the jurisdiction is in either county." If such was the common law—as we think it was—"a jury of the vicinage," at common law, was a jury selected from the neighborhood of the crime, which might be either county where it was in part committed. Com. v. Jones, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 867, 82 S. W. 643. It has always been understood that the right to trial by a "jury of the vicinage" was subject to certain necessary exceptions, such as changes of venue, and the like. Parker v. Com. 12 Bush, 191; Adkins v. Com. 96 Ky. 539, 32 L. R. A. 108, 33 S. W. 948; Smith v. Com. 108 Ky. 53, 55 S. W. 718. This was held to be the law under the old 69 L. R. A.

Constitution, before the provision found in § 11 of the present Constitution was adopted. Com. v. Davidson, 91 Ky. 162, 15 S. W. 53. As it is admitted that the shot that killed Cockrill was fired in Breathitt county, and that his death from the wound occurred within one year and a day thereafter in Fayette county, they each had concurrent jurisdiction of the crime. Manifestly, the courts of two counties could not try the same defendants for the same offense. There must be a time when the jurisdiction of one county becomes exclusive and that of the other county is lost. Section 24, Crim. Code Prac., is: "If the jurisdiction of an offense be in two or more counties, the defendant shall be tried in the county in which he is first arrested, unless an indictment for the offense be pending in another county." A literal application of the last section might lead to absurdities certainly never contemplated in the purpose of its enactment. It was so held in Massie v. Com. 90 Ky. 485, 14 S. W. 419. Horse stealing is punishable by statute in the county where the horse may be stolen, or in any county into which it may be carried. Massie took a horse in Montgomery county, and carried it into Bourbon. At the instance of the Montgomery county authorities, and before an indictment in that county or elsewhere, they caused him to be arrested in Bourbon, and brought back to Montgomery, for trial, where he was convicted. He relied on § 24, Crim. Code Prac., in bar of the jurisdiction of the Montgomery court. It would seem that literally his objection was well taken. But this court said: "This provision was not inserted in the Code for the benefit of the criminal, but to prevent a conflict of jurisdiction in cases where it belonged to more than one county." It is conceded, as it must be under the statute quoted, and the decisions of this court, if adhered to, that, where two or more counties have concurrent jurisdiction of an offense committed partly in each of them, no substantial legal right of the accused can be invaded whether one or the other takes cognizance of the matter. So long as the accused is not put in jeopardy by the proceedings in both counties, it cannot be the subject of complaint from him which of them takes the jurisdiction and proceeds with his trial, so long as only one does so.

The fact may be accepted as established by the proof in this case that Magistrate Edwards issued warrants against plaintiffs on December 3, 1904, charging them with the murder of James Cockrill. It may also be accepted as established, for the purposes of this hearing, that the accused were arrested or voluntarily surrendered themselves to the custody of the magistrate, who signed an order committing them to the circuit court of Breathitt county for examination of the charge by the grand jury of that county, and that they executed bonds for their appearance before that court. It is contended for the commonwealth, though,—and this is the main question presented for decision,—that these proceedings are void. For the plaintiffs the argument is that, whatever may have been the motives of the officers of Breathitt county, or however their action might have been induced, the fact is that, having jurisdiction to do what was done, the accused are actually bound by the proceedings, and, the law's machinery being set in motion, under § 24, Crim. Code Prac., the jurisdiction of Breathitt county becomes exclusive. The court has come to the conclusion, upon the evidence before it, that the arrests of the plaintiffs in Breathitt county were procured upon their own instigation, or that of some of them acting for all, with the design not to have a trial of the charge there or elsewhere, but as a cloak to prevent the trial elsewhere. If such be not the fact, the plaintiffs are peculiarly unfortunate in the matter of certain coincidences shown in the proof, as well as certain discrepancies between the record of the squire's proceedings and the admitted truth. Being of this opinion as to the facts, the question recurs, Do the proceedings in Breathitt before the examining magistrate confer exclusive jurisdiction of the plaintiffs on the courts of that county? A judgment of a court may be a punishment or it may be a protection. It may or may not be a bar, according to whether he who relies on it is in a position to do so. If it be obtained by fraud, the one procuring it ought not to be permitted to use it as a protection. That would be to allow one to profit by his own fraud, which is a doctrine repugnant to the law, and wholly untenable by any kind of right thinking. It is said that the commonwealth has acted in the matter in Breathitt through her legally constituted officers, whose authority is as complete to bind the commonwealth as is that of the officers of Fayette or any other county. If the commonwealth is bound, it is upon principles analogous to agency that he who sets another to do his business is bound by such agent's acts within the scope of his authority; which is as it should be. But there is a necessary exception to that rule, which is, if the agent, in fraud of his principal, colludes with his opponent, so that, instead of acting for his principal, he becomes the tool or accomplice of the opponent, then the principal ought not to be bound by his agent's acts; nor is he. As between two persons, this is undeniably the law. The state will not be given less consideration in matters of public concern than any individual. The courts which administer the law may protect their own jurisdictions from machinations, from palpable subterfuges intended merely to defeat their jurisdiction. The sovereignty of the law depends upon the power of the courts to maintain the integrity of their jurisdiction against mere devices that would defeat them. Judgments obtained by extrinsic fraud ought not to bind anybody not a party to the fraud. They ought to be and are subject to impeachment either by direct or collateral attack. This is so although the court rendering them had jurisdiction of the subject-matter. Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. 319, 11 L. ed. 283; United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 68, 25 L. ed. 96; Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 112, 33 L. ed. 541, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269; Brunk v. Means, 11 B. Mon. 214; Talbott v. Todd, 5 Dana, 190. In Carrington v. Com. 78 Ky. 83, the accused was indicted for a violation of the liquor laws. His offense was a misdemeanor. A statute provided that, "whenever any person shall be lodged in jail, in default of bail, being charged with a misdemeanor," whether under an indictment or not, the judge of the quarterly court, the circuit court not being in session, had jurisdiction to try the case. The defendant surrendered to the jailer, failed to give bond, and was brought before the quarterly court, tried, convicted, and fined. Notwithstanding, the circuit court proceeded afterwards to try him under the same indictment, rejecting his plea of former conviction in bar. This court said: "The circuit court properly refused to permit its jurisdiction to be ousted, and to allow the prisoner, by a device so transparent, to choose the tribunal in which he would be tried. A judgment of acquittal thus procured was not a bar, and was properly disregarded." Plaintiffs seek to distinguish Carrington's Case from this one upon the suggestion that the quarterly court had not jurisdiction of the case, because Carrington was not in fact in jail, but was simply in the custody of the jailer. The court, however, did not rest its decision upon that feature of the case. It was referred to only as indicating a lack of good faith in the matter. The court said: "The evidence in this case shows that the prisoner never was committed to jail, nor was he in good faith committed to the custody of the jailer." From this it appears that, had the defendant been in good faith committed to the custody of the jailer, it would not have been necessary to have gone through the idle form of locking and unlocking the jail door. Emphasis was laid upon the lack of good faith in the defendant's surrendering himself to the jailer's custody in this language: "Whatever was done toward bringing the case within the letter of the statute was evidently done, not to avoid the imprisonment of the defendant, but to secure a trial before the county judge. . . . The evidence in this case shows conclusively that the surrender of the prisoner to the jailer was merely formal, and merely with the design to give the quarterly judge jurisdiction, and not for the safe-keeping of the prisoner, or because he was either unable to give bail or unwilling to do so, except for the purpose of bringing his case within the statute." Of all this the court said: "It is to be treated as if the prisoner had procured himself to be accused, arrested, and tried, and then attempted to plead the judgment thus obtained in bar; for, although he had been regularly indicted, he procured a trial in the quarterly court by a fraud upon the statute giving that court jurisdiction." In applying that decision to this case, it follows, a fortiori, that one accused of a crime cannot procure himself to be arrested and bound over under form of law to give jurisdiction to a county of his preference, in fraud of the right of the prosecuting officers acting in good faith to fix it elsewhere, if they choose to do so in the interest of a fair trial. The position of this court on this subject appears to be in harmony with the trend of authority elsewhere. State v. Colvin, 11 Humph. 599, 54 Am. Dec. 60; Watkins v. State, 68 Ind. 427, 34 Am. Rep. 273; Com. v. Dascom, 111 Mass. 404; State v. Simpson, 28 Minn. 66, 41 Am. Rep. 270, 9 N. W. 78. No reflection can be indulged against the judge and prosecuting attorney of the Breathitt circuit court. Their fitness and willingness to enforce the law is in no sense involved. This case, as made up on the trial, has to do solely with what occurred before the prosecution took any form in the Breathitt circuit court. In view of the language of § 24 of the Criminal Code of Practice, the case is resting upon the bona fides of the alleged prior arrest in Breathitt county. If that was not, properly speaking, an arrest of the accused, then, as the Fayette circuit court first indicted them for the offense of murdering James Cockrill, it took jurisdiction of the matter by virtue of § 24 of the Criminal Code of Practice, to the exclusion of the Breathitt circuit court.

69 L. R. A.

The final contention of the plaintiffs is that they are charged as accessories before the fact to the murder of Cockrill, and, as their alleged acts are admitted to have been done in Breathitt county, under the authority of Tully v. Com. 13 Bush, 142, that county alone has jurisdiction to try them. Tully was accused as accessory after the fact to a murder committed in Scott county. The Scott court was held to be without jurisdiction, as the act of 1796 (1 Stat. Laws, 530), held in that case not to have been repealed. 69 L. R. A.

but expressly continued in force by the Revised Statutes then in effect, provided: "An accessory to a murder or felony committed shall be examined by the court of that county and tried by the court in whose jurisdiction he became accessory, and shall answer upon his arraignment, and receive such judgment, order, execution, pains, and penalties as is used in other cases . . . of felony." But the saving clause contained in the Revised Statutes, which continued the practice provided by the act of 1796, is not in the present statutes or Code of Practice. Section 3 of the present Criminal Code of Practice reads: "All laws coming within the purview of this act shall become repealed when this act goes into effect, except as provided in the preceding section." (The preceding section relates alone to prosecution begun before January 1, 1877.) The Criminal Code of Practice regulates the trial of all criminal prosecutions. But it does not contain the provision from the act of 1796 just quoted. Section 1128, Ky. Stat. 1903, provides: "In all felonies, accessories before the fact shall be liable to the same punishment as principals, and may be prosecuted jointly with principals, or severally, though the principals be not taken or tried, unless otherwise provided in this chapter." This section is found under the title of Crimes and Punishments, in Kentucky statutes (Barbour), in which this court declared in Buchannon v. Com. 95 Ky. 334, 25 S. W. 265, "to be a complete system of statutory law relating to crimes and punishments, and, as a consequence, to supersede or repeal all existing statutes on that subject." If accessories before the fact can be indicted jointly with principals, and if the principals could be indicted in Fayette, the accessory before the fact could also be indicted and tried there, although his act may have been committed elsewhere. It follows that the present statute and the act of 1796 are incompatible in their provisions, and the latter must of necessity supersede the former. In Com. v. Parker, 108 Ky. 673, 57 S. W. 484, this precise question arose. The accessory before the fact, whose sole connection with the crime was shown to have been in Kenton county, was indicted and tried in Jefferson county. The court said: "We do not desire to go further than is necessary to decide the question here presented; i. e., that an accessory before the fact, who devises in one county a scheme to commit a crime in another, thereafter actually committed, or who in one county procures the commission of a crime in another, is, under § 21 of the Code, properly triable in either county."

The court is of opinion that the Fayette circuit court has now exclusive jurisdiction to try the case made by the indictment returned by the grand jury, and that the proceedings before Justice of the Peace Edwards are a nullity in so far as they attempt to confer jurisdiction upon the courts of Breathitt county. The application for the writ of prohibition against the judge of the Fayette Circuit Court is consequently denied. The temporary writ heretofore issued is discharged.

Cantrill, J., did not sit.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

City of CROWLEY

v.

M. ELLSWORTH, Appt.

(.....La.....)

- *1. On an appeal coming to this court solely under the grant of jurisdiction to this court over suits involving the constitutionality or legality of a fine or penalty imposed by a municipal corporation, the question of whether the facts were sufficient to justify the conviction of the appellant cannot be considered.
2. An ordinance is not informal or illegal because the cause or reasons of its enactment are not given, nor because it punishes as a nuisance what neither by it nor by another ordinance is expressly declared to be such.
3. An ordinance which applies alike to all persons, firms, or corporations engaged in the business legislated against is not discriminatory.
4. Authority to a municipal corporation to regulate the storage of combustible and inflammable materials includes authority to prohibit the storage of refined and other explosive oils within the corporate limits; and an ordinance so providing is not unreasonable.
5. A special ordinance granting to a particular person permission to store refined oils within the corporate limits of a town is repealed by a subsequent general ordinance, applicable to all persons alike, making such storage of oils a criminal offense.
6. Though an ordinance prohibiting the storage of explosive oils in large quantities within the corporate limits happens to have the effect of putting an end to a business, and of rendering valueless certain structures used in connection with the business, its enforcement will not constitute a depriving of property without due process of law, when the circumstances justified its adoption as a police regulation.

(February 27, 1905.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Crowley City Court convicting him of violating a municipal ordinance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

*Headnotes by PROVOSTY, J.

NOTE.—As to ordinances regulating the storage of oil within corporate limits, see also, in this series, Richmond v. Dudley, 10 L. R. A. 187, 13 L. R. A. 587.
69 L. R. A.

Messrs. Medlenka & Taylor, for appellant:

Before any lawful business can be prohibited or regulated by a municipal corporation, it must first be shown to be and declared to be a nuisance.

Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. New Iberia, 47 La. Ann. 863, 17 So. 343; Dill. Mun. Corp. p. 454.

A particular law is not repealed by a general law, unless the two are so repugnant that they cannot stand together under any circumstances.

State v. Callac, 45 La. Ann. 27, 12 So. 119; Cooley, Const. Lim. last ed. p. 216; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 87; Bond v. Hiestand, 20 La. Ann. 140; State ex rel. Carcass v. First Dist. Judge, 32 La. Ann. 723; Concordia v. Natchez, R. River & T. R. Co. 44 La. Ann. 613, 10 So. 809; Johnston v. Pilster, 4 Rob. (La.) 77.

Where the law enables a corporation to make by-laws or ordinances in certain cases and for certain purposes, its power of legislation is limited to the cases and objects specified, all others being excluded by implication.

New Orleans v. Philippi, 9 La. Ann. 44; Crowley v. West, 52 La. Ann. 531, 47 L. R. A. 652, 78 Am. St. Rep. 355, 27 So. 53; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. ¶ 379.

In order to hold an officer or agent criminally liable individually for an offense committed by the corporation, or by its officers or agents, it must be shown that he had some actual, personal connection with the illegal acts charged.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 896.

The power vested by legislation in a corporation to make ordinances for its own government does not give the power to enlarge, diminish, or vary its powers by its ordinances.

Thompson v. Roe, 22 How. 422, 16 L. ed. 387; Thomas v. Richmond, 12 Wall. 349, 20 L. ed. 453; New Orleans v. Ursuline Nuns, 2 La. Ann. 611.

Mr. Thomas R. Smith, for appellee:

Officers, directors, or agents of a corporation participating in a violation of law in the conduct of the company's business may be held criminally liable individually therefor.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 896; Clark, Crim. Law, p. 102.

One indicted for a nuisance cannot defend on the ground that he acted as the agent of another in maintaining the nuisance.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 712; Williams v. Hendricks, 115 Ala. 277, 41 L. R. A. 657, 67 Am. St. Rep. 32, 22 So. 439.

Under power to pass an ordinance if necessary, the necessity for its enactment, being implied from its mere passage, need not be recited in the ordinance, nor averred in proceedings to enforce it.

Dill. Mun. Corp. p. 395, note 2.

An ordinance need not recite the authority under which it is enacted.

Elliott, Mun. Corp. p. 183.

The mere fact that an ordinance, general in its application, injures in a peculiar way a particular individual, will not authorize the courts to presume that it was executed for the purpose of annoying him and depriving him of his rights, and, for that reason, to declare it void.

17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 253.

The regulation of petroleum and other inflammable substances is not the taking of private property without due process of law; nor is it in restraint of trade.

Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. New Iberia, 47 La. Ann. 863, 17 So. 343; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 249, note; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. p. 396, note 2; Elliott, Mun. Corp. p. 202.

Provosty, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant is the local agent of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, of Missouri, which company does a wholesale oil business in the city of Crowley. In April, 1898, said company obtained permission from the city council "to construct and erect three iron storage tanks" at a designated place within the corporate limits, "for the purpose of storing illuminating, lubricating, and other oils for the sale and supply of the demand in the town of Crowley and vicinity." In July, 1904, the city council adopted an ordinance providing that "hereafter it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation to keep on their premises or in storage tanks within the corporate limits of the city of Crowley, at any one time, more than two barrels of gasoline, coal oil, or other refined oils of an explosive nature," and punishing by fine of not less than $5, nor more than $100, or by imprisonment in the city jail for not less than two nor more than thirty days, any violation of the ordinance. Defendant was prosecuted and convicted in the city court for a violation of the ordinance, was fined $100, and he has appealed.

His first contention is that the city authorities have hold of the wrong man; that he is a mere employee executing orders, and therefore not responsible. With this defense this court has nothing to do. The case comes here under the provision of the Constitution granting appellate jurisdiction to this court of "suits involving the constitutionality or legality of any . . . fine or penalty imposed by a municipal corporation;" and no question can be inquired into except that as to which jurisdiction is thus specially conferred. Burguières v. Sanders, 111 La. 109, 35 So. 478.

Defendant claims that the ordinance under which he has been prosecuted and fined is unconstitutional for six reasons, which we now proceed to consider in regular order.

First. That no grounds are assigned as a cause for passing the ordinance, and that, although the storage of oil of an explosive nature in quantities greater than two barrels is not a nuisance per se, the ordinance punishes it as a nuisance without having declared it to be such.

The first branch of this objection is clearly without merit. Clearly, a legislative body does not have to give any reasons for its enactments; not though such reasons "were plentiful as blackberries in June." Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d ed. § 318, note 2; Elliott, Mun. Corp. p. 183.

The second branch is no better than the first. An ordinance which makes an act unlawful, by necessary implication declares it of a noxious character, and any further declaration on the subject would be mere useless tautology.

Second. "The said ordinance is discriminatory, unreasonable, arbitrary, and unequal in its operation and effect, for the reason that it is confined exclusively to refined oils handled by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, when in truth and in fact, to the express knowledge of the city of Crowley, other oils of an explosive nature are stored in large quantities within the city limits of Crowley, by other persons, firms, and corporations."

The ordinance applies alike to all persons, firms, or corporations engaged in the business legislated against, and is certainly not discriminatory. The discrimination is said to consist in that the ordinance applies only to refined oils, and not to crude oils. Conceding that this discrimination in favor of crude oils would be fatal to the ordinance if crude oil were shown to be equally explosive as refined oil, the evidence fails to show that fact, and every presumption is in favor of the fairness of the ordinance. Elliott, Mun. Corp. p. 202.

Third. "That the city of Crowley exceeded its chartered authority as conferred upon it by paragraph 9, § 16, of act No. 136 of 1898, p. 232, in excluding (which exclusion is an absolute prohibition of conducting of the wholesale oil business in the said city from its limits) the storage of refined oils of an explosive nature in quantities greater than two barrels; the said ordinance not regulating, but absolutely prohibiting, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company from carrying on its business."

The "chartered authority" thus referred to is conferred in the following terms: "The following additional powers are conferred upon the mayor and aldermen of cities and towns: . . . Ninth. To regulate the storage of powder, pitch, turpentine, rosin, hemp, hay, cotton, and all other combustible and inflammable materials.

In the case of the same Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. New Iberia, 47 La. Ann. 863, 17 So. 343, a similar ordinance was sustained by this court, although the authority to pass it was not so clearly conferred as in the present case.

Fourth. "That the said ordinance is unreasonable, and in restraint of a lawful and legitimate business carried on and surrounded with the greatest precaution against danger of fire, explosion, or accident likely to entail the loss of life or property."

Clearly, an ordinance prohibiting the storage of oils of an explosive nature within the built-up parts of the city would not be unreasonable. Inasmuch as the ordinance is made to apply to the entire corporate limits, the inference is that there is no place within the corporate limits where, in the judgment of the council, it would be safe to store the inflammable and explosive substance mentioned in the ordinance. The evidence shows that there are buildings within dangerous proximity to the storage tanks of which the defendant is in charge.

Fifth. That the ordinance is unconstitutional in so far as it affects the employer of defendant, because it does not repeal the former ordinance granting permission to the said employer of defendant to erect tanks, etc.

The question here raised is that of repeal vel non, and therefore, at best, of the legality of the fine, and not of the constitutionality, vel non, of the ordinance.

Surely, the first ordinance, in so far as it may authorize the doing of anything which the second prohibits and punishes as a crime, is inconsistent with it, and therefore repealed. The manifest intention of the second ordinance is that the storing of explosive oil in large quantities shall be unlawful for defendant's employers as well 69 L. R. A.

as for all others. To such a case the rule as to a special statute not being repealed by a general has no application.

Sixth. "That the said ordinance is further illegal and unconstitutional, and deprives the Waters-Pierce Oil Company of its property without due process of law, without compensation or indemnity, and violates the Constitution and the laws of the United States and of this state, and more particularly the 4th, 5th, and 14th Amendments of the United States Constitution, articles 1, 2, 166, and 167 of the Constitution of Louisiana, and article 497 of the Civil Code of Louisiana."

This exact point was passed on in the case of the same Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. New Iberia, 47 La. Ann. 863, 17 So. 343. Judgment affirmed.

Rochbert P. RICHARD

v.

SPRINGFIELD FIRE & MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

(.....La.....)

- *1. Where a nonresident fire insurance company appointed a local agent in this state, and supplied him with blank policies signed by the president and secretary of the company, to be filled up, countersigned, and issued as occasion may require, such agent will be considered as having the powers of a general agent as to policies issued by him under such circumstances.
- *2. An agent authorized to issue policies binds the company by all waivers, representations, or other acts within the scope or requirements of his business, unless the insured has notice of the limitation of his power.
- *3. Such an agent has the apparent power to waive, prior to a loss, a breach of the iron-safe clause by him attached to the policy, resulting from the failure of the insured, through illness, to make a complete inventory of stock within 30 days from the date of the issuing of the policy.

(May 8, 1905.)

APPPLICATION by plaintiff for a writ to review a judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, which reversed a judgment for the Parish of St. Landry in

*Headnotes by LAND, J.

NOTE.—As to power of general agent of insurance company to waive condition in policy, see also, in this series, Smith v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 1 L. R. A. 216, and cases in note; Lamberton v. Connecticut F. Ins. Co. 1 L. R. A. 222; German Ins. Co. v. Gray, 8 L. R. A. 70; and Carey v. German American Ins. Co. 20 L. R. A. 267.

his favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a fire insurance policy. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Lewis & Lewis, for applicant:

Notice given to an agent relating to business which he is authorized to transact, and while actually engaged in transacting it, will inure as notice to the principal.

McEwen v. Montgomery County Mut. Ins. Co. 5 Hill, 101; American Ins. Co. v. Gallatin, 48 Wis. 36, 3 N. W. 772; Mattocks v. Des Moines Ins. Co. 74 Iowa, 233, 37 N. W. 174; Aetna Ins. Co. v. Eastman (Tex. Civ. App.) 80 S. W. 255.

Knowledge of an agent authorized to countersign, issue, and deliver policies of insurance, and collect the premiums therefor, is knowledge imputable to the company.

1 May, Ins. 617, ¶ 294 E; May, Ins. p. 130, ¶¶ 70a, 131, 132, 143, 152, p. 247; Kerr, Ins. pp. 218 et seq.; Clement, Ins. p. 415, rule 11; Elliott, Ins. p. 91; Wood, Fire Ins. ¶¶ 372-374, 435; Richards, Ins. p. 25; Stage v. Home Ins. Co. 76 App. Div. 509, 78 N. Y. Supp. 555; Brooks v. Erie F. Ins. Co. 76 App. Div. 275, 78 N. Y. Supp. 748; Bennett v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. 203 Ill. 439, 67 N. E. 971; Hunt v. State Ins. Co. 66 Neb. 121, 92 N. W. 921; German-American Ins. Co. v. Paul (Ind. Terr.) 83 S. W. 60; Continental F. Ins. Co. v. Cummings (Tex. Civ. App.) 78 S. W. 378; Carnes v. Farmers' F. Ins. Co. 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 634; Born v. Home Ins. Co. 120 Iowa, 299, 94 N. W. 849; State Ins. Co. v. Hale, 1 Herdman (Neb.) 191, 95 N. W. 473; Union Assur. Soc. v. Nalls, 101 Va. 613, 99 Am. St. Rep. 923, 44 S. E. 896; Modern Woodmen v. Coleman, 64 Neb. 162, 89 N. W. 641; Anderson v. Manchester F. Assur. Co. 59 Minn. 182, 28 L. R. A. 609, 50 Am. St. Rep. 400, 60 N. W. 1095, 63 N. W. 241.

If the insurer receives a premium with full knowledge, through its agent, of the facts constituting a breach of one of the conditions of the policy, the right to insist that the policy is forfeited for the cause is gone.

Elliott, Ins. p. 129; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Daviess, 87 Ky. 541, 9 S. W. 812; Dunbar v. Phenix Ins. Co. 72 Wis. 492, 40 N. W. 386; Continental Ins. Co. v. Pearce, 39 Kan. 396, 7 Am. St. Rep. 537, 18 Pac. 291; Pickel v. Phenix Ins. Co. 119 Ind. 291, 21 N. E. 898; Cotten v. Fidelity & C. Co. 41 Fed. 506; Reynolds v. Iowa & N. Ins. Co. 80 Iowa, 563, 46 N. W. 659; Manhattan F. Ins. Co. v. Weill, 28 Gratt. 389, 26 Am. Rep. 364; Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Hick, 125 Ill. 361, 8 Am. St. Rep. 384, 17 N. E. 792; Anderson v. Manchester F. Assur. Co. 59 Minn. 182, 28 L. R. A. 609, 50 Am. St. Rep. 400, 60 N. W. 1095, 63 N. W. 241; Gans v. 69 L. R. A.

St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 43 Wis. 108, 28 Am. Rep. 535; Bennett v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co. 70 Iowa, 600, 31 N. W. 948.

Unless instructions limiting the authority of a general agent of an insurance company, whose powers would otherwise be coextensive with the business intrusted to him, are communicated to the party with whom he deals, the company is bound to the same extent as though such special instructions had not been given.

Southern L. Ins. Co. v. McCain, 96 U. S. 84, 24 L. ed. 653; Murphy v. Royal Ins. Co. 52 La. Ann. 778, 27 So. 143.

The agent, though representing his principal in a particular locality, or within a limited territory, and therefore called "local agent," is in fact a general agent. He is supplied with blank policies, properly signed by the company, which he is authorized to fill up, countersign, and deliver to the assured.

Continental Ins. Co. v. Ruckman, 127 Ill. 364, 11 Am. St. Rep. 121, 20 N. E. 77; Elliott, Ins. Cases, p. 156; Pitney v. Glen's Falls Ins. Co. 65 N. Y. 6; Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Kinnier, 28 Gratt. 98; Viele v. Germania Ins. Co. 26 Iowa, 9, 96 Am. Dec. 83; Carroll v. Chadler Oak, Ins. Co. 40 Barb. 292; Aetna Ins. Co. v. Maguire, 51 Ill. 342; 1 May, Ins. ¶ 126, p. 235; Post v. Aetna Ins. Co. 43 Barb. 351; Ruggles v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 114 N. Y. 415, 11 Am. St. Rep. 674, 21 N. E. 1000.

An agent's authority to alter or modify a policy by oral or written agreement may be inferred from a course of dealing acquiesced in by the principal, even though the policy provided to the contrary.

Kerr, Ins. ¶ 100, p. 223; Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. v. Norton, 96 U. S. 234, 24 L. ed. 689; Powell v. Factors' & Traders' Ins. Co. 28 La. Ann. 19.

The assured was not required to keep books of account until the taking of the inventory:

St. Landry Wholesale Mercantile Co. v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. (La.) 37 So. 988; St. Landry Wholesale Mercantile Co. v. Teutonia Ins. Co. 113 La. 1053, 37 So. 967; Continental Ins. Co. v. Waugh, 60 Neb. 348, 83 N. W. 81; Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Sprague, 8 Ind. App. 275, 35 N. E. 720; McCullum v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 61 Mo. App. 352; Bayless v. Merchants' Town Mut. Ins. Co. 106 Mo. App. 684, 80 S. W. 289.

Messrs. Clegg & Quintero and Kenneth Baillio, for respondent:

The burden of proof as to all the facts going to establish a waiver is upon the assured.

Wood, Ins. 2d ed. p. 71, note; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 529, 29 L.

ed. 937, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837; Murphy v. Royal Ins. Co. 52 La. Ann. 775, 27 So. 143.

Defendant cannot be held to be bound, either by the first extension granted to the plaintiff in this suit, or by the second extension, which was an attempted waiver of the forfeiture of the policy, which had ensued some ten days before said second extension was granted.

Wood, Ins. ¶ 423; Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. v. Norton, 96 U. S. 234, 24 L. ed. 689; 2 May, Ins. ¶ 511, p. 144; Kenyon v. Knights Templar & M. Mut. Aid Asso. 122 N. Y. 257, 25 N. E. 299.

A local or soliciting agent having no authority as to losses cannot waive the provisions of the iron-safe clause.

Clements, Valid Contr. p. 271; 2 May, Ins. p. 1197.

Land, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On August 25, 1903, plaintiff was insured by defendant against loss by fire in the sum of $1,000 on a small stock of merchandise. The policy was countersigned and issued by the Roos-Edwards Agency, of the town of Opelousas, Louisiana. The usual "iron-safe clause" was attached to the policy, and the following indorsement appears thereon, to wit:

"Permission is hereby given for thirty days to take complete inventory of stock."

No inventory was taken, and on November 5, 1903, the agency made the following indorsement on the policy, to wit:

"The assured, under the above named and numbered policy, having been prevented through illness from completing the inventory of his stock of merchandise, a further period of thirty days additional is hereby given in which to complete said inventory."

On November 8th, five days later, the stock of merchandise was destroyed by fire. The company received notice of the total loss before it received notice by mail of the extension of thirty days.

Payment of the policy having been refused, plaintiff brought suit thereon to recover the full amount, and obtained judgment in the district court. The insurance company appealed to the court of appeal, which reversed the judgment, and the case is now before us on a writ of review.

The court of appeal held that the policy was forfeited by the failure of the assured to make the inventory within thirty days, as stipulated, and that the agents had no power, express or implied, to waive such forfeiture by granting an extension of time for the completion of the inventory. It is to be noted that the written extension for thirty days is indorsed on the "rider" containing the iron-safe clause. It does 69 L. R. A.

not appear whether the agent overlooked the fact that the clause itself granted this delay, or intended to grant a further delay of thirty days. Defendant's counsel, in their brief, suggest this doubt, and argue that the agent had no power to grant an extension of any kind.

The policy in question was signed by the president and secretary, and was to become valid when "countersigned by the duly authorized agent of the company at Opelousas." This agent had full power to make the contract of insurance, to fill in the blanks, and to attach or indorse on the policy other provisions, agreements, or conditions. He was intrusted by the nonresident company with blank forms of policy, and the assured had no notice of the mandate, other than that conveyed by the policy itself, and the nature of the agent's employment. The last clause of the policy reads as follows, viz; "This policy is made and accepted subject to the foregoing stipulations and conditions, together with such other provisions, agreements, or conditions as may be indorsed hereon or added hereto, and no officer, agent, or other representative of this company shall have power to waive any provision or condition of this policy except such as by the terms of this policy may be the subject of agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, and, as to such provisions and conditions, no officer, agent, or representative shall have such power, or be deemed or held to have waived such provisions or conditions, unless such waiver, if any, shall be written upon or attached hereto, nor shall any privilege or permission affecting the insurance under this policy exist or be claimed by the insured unless so written or attached."

It follows from the terms of this clause that "provisions, agreements, or conditions" indorsed on, or added to, the policy were subject to waiver written upon or attached to such instrument. The iron-safe clause formed no part of the printed conditions of the policy, but was added thereto by the agent, and hence was subject to the written waiver referred to in the last clause of the policy.

The agent had power to issue and renew policies, to make waivers, and grant permits, and the only question for discussion is whether his mandate or employment included the power to waive the forfeiture of the policy resulting from the failure of the insured to complete his inventory within the thirty days stipulated. Doubtless the company or its agent could have insisted on the forfeiture as a legal right, but at the same time would have been compelled to return the unearned premium for eleven months. The agent, being informed of the facts, was called upon to take some action in the premises. He elected to waive the forfeiture, rather than to cancel the policy and return the unearned premiums. This action induced the assured to rely on the policy as a still subsisting protection against loss by fire. This waiver was sent to the company by mail in the usual manner, but was not received until the day after the happening of the loss. The company did not notify the assured or the agent that the waiver was repudiated, and, after proofs were furnished, sent an adjuster to investigate the loss. The adjuster, however, acted under a nonwaiver agreement, and therefore all the defenses of the company were preserved.

The agent was furnished with blank policies signed by the president and secretary of the company, and was in the habit of issuing policies without requiring an application, and without referring the subject-matter to the company, in Springfield, Massachusetts. The agent had apparently undoubted power to issue policies, and to attach thereto all the usual and customary agreements and "riders."

It is argued, however, that the agent had no power to waive conditions added to, or attached to, the policy at the time of the issuance. The last clause of the policy authorized a written waiver of such conditions, provided it be annexed to the policy. The district judge said: "The term stipulating for the completion of the inventory is a mere incidental portion of the contract entered into exclusively for the benefit of the insurer. The extension of time and implied waiver of the expiration of the original period for the completion of the inventory were acts done by the agent solely for the purpose of making the contract of insurance available to the insurer as well as to the insured."

The district judge cited authorities to show that the agent had general powers, and argued that, as the agent had authority to issue a new policy to the assured on the same conditions as those contained in the original policy, he had implied authority to recognize the validity of the subsisting contract, and to grant additional time for the completion of the inventory.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment of the district court on the authority of the case of Murphy v. Royal Ins. Co. 52 La. Ann. 775, 27 So. 143.

While the case cited is a mine of insurance law, the decision simply recognized and enforced the last clause of the policy, to the effect that no officer or agent of the company should have power to waive, or be deemed to have waived, any condition of the policy, unless such waiver should be written upon or attached thereto, against the contention that at the very time of the making of the contract the parties thereto had entered into a verbal contract waiving the iron-safe clause and the three-fourths value clause, which were attached to the policy. The court decided correctly that the plain terms of the policy notified the assured that the agent had no power to waive, unless by writing on or attached to the policy.

In the case at bar the waiver was in writing attached to the policy, and was made several months after the contract was executed. The waiver was in due form, and the only question is one of power in the agent. There is in the last clause of the policy a necessary implication that agents, officers, or representatives may waive provisions, agreements, or conditions indorsed on, or added to, the policy, and may grant privileges or permissions affecting the insurance.

The iron-safe clause was therefore a subject-matter of waiver. The printed policy is a general form applicable to all fire insurance business, and, by its terms, contemplates that the agent making the contract shall have power to add other "provisions, agreements, and conditions," and to grant permits or privileges affecting the insurance. The policy bristles with forfeitures for causes existing at the date of the contract, or arising subsequently, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed on or added to the policy. It is clear that the agent making the contract of insurance under such a policy may modify or change the forfeiture clauses by indorsements on, or additions to, the instrument. With such power over the matter of forfeitures, it is not difficult to conclude that such an agent may waive a subsequent forfeiture, in the interest of the company which he represents.

"An agent authorized to issue policies binds the company by all waivers, representations, or other acts within the scope of his business, unless the insured has notice of a limitation of his powers. The question always is not what power the agent did in fact possess, but what power the company held him out to the public as possessing." 1 May, Ins. 4th ed. § 126. "A person authorized to accept risks, to agree upon and settle the terms of insurance, and to carry them into effect, . . . must be regarded as the general agent of the company pending negotiations." Id. p. 235. "And the possession of blank policies and renewal receipts signed by the president and secretary is evidence of such general agency." Ibid. "If a foreign company appoints A.

and B. as local agents, and supplies them with blank policies signed by the company, and which they may fill up and counter-sign, they are its general agents. Continental Ins. Co. v. Ruckman," 127 Ill. 364, 11 Am. St. Rep. 121, 20 N. E. 77. Id. note. "That an insurance agent authorized to make contracts of insurance and issue policies may waive forfeitures, and reinstate and restore a void policy, . . . is held by numerous cases." 2 Wood, Ins. § 415.

In the Murphy Case this court cited with approval the doctrine that an insurance company is bound by the acts of its agent "in all matters within the scope of his real or apparent authority," and that third persons, in dealing with such agent, are not bound to go beyond the apparent authority conferred on him. Murphy v. Royal Ins. Co. 52 La. Ann. 782, 27 So. 143. In the case at bar the agent apparently had original powers to make contracts of insurance without previous applications, and without referring the matter to the company. In issuing the policy in question he exercised such original powers, and the company acquiesced therein. The agent had a power of attorney, but the assured knew nothing of its provisions, and it therefore matters not whether it was general or special. The testimony of the agent is positive that the second extension was not subject to the approval or ratification of the company, but was simply notified as in other instances. It is certain that it was written and attached to the policy prior to notice to the company.

Speaking of general agents, Ostrander says: "Having power to make a completed contract, they will also be presumed to have power, by agreement with the assured, to change, alter, or nullify its terms and conditions at any time after the delivery of the contract, and after it has become binding between the parties, unless limitations are imposed, of which assured has notice." Fire Ins. § 265, p. 551.

Hence there can be no real distinction between a local agent with power to make contracts of insurance and issue policies, and general agents having the same power. The power to make and complete contracts differentiates such agents from solicitors and other intermediaries between the assured and the company.

Agents, whether local or general, with power to contract, represent the company within the territorial limits to which they are assigned. Their knowledge is imputed to the company, and their acts bind the company within the scope of their employment. The question of the forfeiture of insurance policies comes clearly within such scope, and is within the apparent authority of such local agents. Every policy of insurance is full of forfeiture clauses, many of which do not affect the soundness of the risk, but at the same time may avoid the policy at the option of the insurer. We consider that it is within the province of a local agent in such cases to decide whether the policy shall continue in force or be canceled. Justice to the insured requires an immediate decision of such questions, which could not be had if the rules of the company required the reference of such cases to the general management, perhaps in a distant state or foreign country. No holder of a policy could afford to await the result of such a reference, nor could any insurance company afford to transact business under such conditions. The agent is present as the representative of his company in all matters of insurance within his territorial district, and his apparent authority cannot, as to the public, be limited by private instructions.

"The authority of an agent must be determined by the nature of his business, and is prima facie coextensive with its requirements." May, Ins. 4th ed. § 126, p. 231. "With respect to waiver of the breach of a condition in a policy, the most liberal view is that the agent's authority is coextensive with the business intrusted to his care." Id. p. 232, note, citing Weed v. London & L. F. Ins. Co. 116 N. Y. 106, 22 N. E. 229; German Ins. Co. v. Gray, 43 Kan. 497, 8 L. R. A. 70, 19 Am. St. Rep. 150, 23 Pac. 637.

In the case at bar we are of opinion that the agent had the apparent power to waive the forfeiture resulting from the failure of the insured to complete the inventory within the thirty days specified in the contract.

This was the only issue discussed or decided by the court of appeal. As to keeping a set of books, the obligation did not arise until after completion of the inventory.

As to the charges of fraud and bad faith, they were decided by the district judge to be unsupported by evidence, and were not noticed by the court of appeal. The writ of review is intended to correct errors of law, and this court will not review questions of fact, save in exceptional cases.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment of the Court of Appeal herein rendered be annulled and reversed, and it is further ordered that the judgment of the District Court be affirmed, and that defendant pay costs in both appellate courts.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SIXTH CIRCUIT.

THREE STATES LUMBER COMPANY,
Plff. in Err.,
v.

H. B. BLANKS.

(133 Fed. 479.)

1. A plaintiff in replevin who obtains actual possession of property seized under the writ is estopped from claiming that the writ was wrongfully executed, upon a proceeding to assess damages against him for seizure of property upon which he had no rightful claim.
2. The Federal court is not bound to follow a decision of the courts of the state in which it is sitting, declaring that a plaintiff in replevin is not bound to return the property replevied if prevented by act of law, which is based not upon a statute, but upon general principles.

3. A plaintiff in replevin who took into his possession, under the writ, lumber to which he was not entitled, cannot plead, in defense of his liability to return the property, that he had caused it to be sold to satisfy his own claim for salvage in recovering and preserving the property, after the vessel on which it was stored, while in his possession, had sunk.
4. A plaintiff in replevin cannot claim salvage for rescuing the replevied property after it had sunk while in his possession, since it was his legal duty to care for and preserve it.

(December 1, 1904.)

NOTE.—Duty to preserve and return property seized under writ of replevin.

I. Loss or destruction of the property.

a. In general, 283.

b. Emancipation of slaves, 286.

II. Depreciation of the property, 286.

I. Loss or destruction of the property.

a. In general.

With the exception of a few decisions, which have in almost every instance been subjected to criticism and disapproval, the rule is that the plaintiff in replevin, in possession of the property under a replevin bond, or the defendant in replevin, retaining possession of the property under a forthcoming bond, is liable, at all events, for its return, if the action is decided against him, and the fact that his failure to make return is caused by an act of God or other circumstance beyond his control, and notwithstanding all due care upon his part, is of no avail to relieve him from his obligation. The principle upon which the rule rests is the old common-law theory that one in possession of property seized in replevin, under a replevin or forthcoming bond, is claiming the property as owner, not as a bailee during the pendency of the action, and, if his claim is decided against him, his possession has been wrongful and in violation of the rights of the true owner; and therefore he cannot escape liability under his bond for a failure to return the property, as conditioned therein, by showing that the failure comes from circumstances beyond his control, and notwithstanding such reasonable care by him as is required of bailees or others rightfully in possession.

This principle first appears in 7 Hen. IV., 18. "So, if the defendant claims property, or says that he did not take, etc. If in the meantime the beasts die, or are sold, so that he cannot have a return, he may recover all in damages, if it be found for him." Hale's Notes, Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 69.

The question does not arise, so far as discovered, in any other English decisions, but in this country, where the old common-law action of replevin has, by statutory enactment in almost every state, been adapted and enlarged to meet modern needs, the following decisions are found:

60 L. R. A.

One who replevins cattle, which, without negligence upon his part, die while in his possession, will not, upon that account, be excused from satisfying a judgment for their return or value. De Thomas v. Witherby, 61 Cal. 92, 44 Am. Rev. 542. The court says: "A plaintiff, not being the owner of goods, who takes them out of possession of the real owner, holds them in his own wrong, and at his own risk. He has deprived the real owner of the possession, and has also deprived him of the means of disposing of the property pending the litigation; and when, at the end of perhaps a protracted litigation, it is determined that the plaintiff in the replevin suit had no right to the possession of the goods, and judgment is rendered against him for the return of the property or its value, he cannot, on principle or authority, be excused from satisfying said judgment under a plea that the property has been lost in his hands, even by the act of God."

If it appear that the property in controversy has been hopelessly lost or destroyed, a judgment for its value only, without a demand for its return, will be regarded as a technical error merely, not requiring reversal. Brown v. Johnson, 45 Cal. 76.

It appearing that corn which had been replevied had perished or been consumed, a verdict and judgment for the value thereof is proper. Clark v. Adair, 3 Harr. (Del.) 113.

Plaintiffs in replevin, detaining property without a valid claim, act at their peril, and the destruction of the property by fire does not release them from the liability assumed to return it or respond in damages for a failure to do so. Supplier v. Gruaz, 137 Ill. 216, 27 N. E. 22, Affirming 38 Ill. App. 60.

This last decision was expressly followed in Schott v. Youree, 142 Ill. 233, 31 N. E. 591, Affirming 41 Ill. App. 476, sustaining demurrer to the plea that property was burned after it was replevied, and that it was therefore impossible to make return in accordance with the judgment in the replevin suit.

So, one who wrongfully takes the property of another, although under a writ of replevin, cannot escape liability for the value thereof by showing that it was destroyed by act of God. Scott v. Rogers, 56 Ill. App. 571.

A defendant in replevin, who gave a delivery bond in the statutory form, and retained possession of horses replevied, cannot be dis-

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee to review a judgment awarding damages to defendant in a replevin suit for failure to return the property. Affirmed.

Statement by Lurton, Circuit Judge:

The plaintiff in error instituted an action of replevin in the court below to recover 250,000 feet of lumber which it claimed had been unlawfully taken out of its possession by the defendant. The writ was returned as executed "by taking the within-described property out of the possession of the within-named H. B. Blanks, and delivering the said property to O. H. Scoggins, agent of the Three States Lumber Company. . . ."

charged pro tanto thereunder, by the fact that one of the horses died while in his possession. His undertaking is absolute to become liable in damages for a failure to return the property in as good condition as it was when the action was commenced. Hinkson v. Morrison, 47 Iowa, 167.

And so, notwithstanding part of the animals die while in plaintiff's possession, a successful defendant in replevin may recover the value of all the property, including that which died. Lillie v. McMillan, 52 Iowa, 463, 3 N. W. 601.

Evidence in a replevin action that sheep detained by defendant in replevin under a redelivery bond died from unavoidable causes is inadmissible, since one wrongfully detaining property cannot be excused from satisfying a judgment therefor under a plea that it has been lost in his hands, even by the act of God. Blaker v. Sands, 29 Kan. 551.

The death of a slave pending an action in replevin does not relieve from the obligation to account for the value thereof. Gentry v. Barnett, 6 T. B. Mon. 113. This decision is based upon a similar holding in Carrel v. Early, 4 Bibb, 270, which was an action in detinue. The court, in discussing that case, says: "It is hard to conceive of a reason supporting this decision [Carrel v. Early] which will not equally apply to the death of a slave pending the action of replevin. Indeed, the reason in the latter case is much stronger. In the first case the defendant is charged because of his wrong only; in the latter, he is not only guilty of the same wrong, but has expressly stipulated in the replevin bond that he will restore, not excepting the death of the slave."

And so, the death of a slave while in the possession of a defendant in replevin, during the pendency of the action, is not a sufficient plea in avoidance of a judgment de retorno habendo. Scott v. Hughes, 9 Mon. 104.

And, likewise, in a statutory action in analogy to the common-law action of replevin, the claimant of attached property may not escape liability upon his bond by reason of the death of the animal in question during the pendency of the action, since by his wrongful interference he protracted the litigation, resulting in the loss of the attached property. Dear v. Brannon, 4 Bush, 471.

The court says, obiter, in Stevens v. Tuite, 104 Mass. 328: "Even in the case of perishable property, or such as has been worn out or depreciated by use, or been destroyed by fire or other accident . . . since the service of the writ, the bond would still continue to represent it; and the remedy upon the bond is understood to be its equivalent."

The defendant, by special plea, admitted plaintiff's title to 15,000 feet of lumber so replevied, and pleaded the general issue as to the remainder. Upon the issues joined, the jury found for the defendant as to 235,000 feet of lumber, and assessed the value at time of taking at $2,820 and interest thereon from that time, amounting to $241.11. They also awarded the defendant $822.50 as damages for the seizure and detention. A judgment was thereupon rendered for the return of the lumber so assessed, or its value, with interest, and for the damages for wrongful detention, as assessed by the jury. From this judgment the plaintiff has sued out this writ of error.

A defendant in replevin, who had given a bond for the forthcoming of the property, is not released from her liability thereunder by the destruction of the property, even though it resulted from circumstances beyond her control and without her fault. George v. Hewlett, 70 Miss. 2, 35 Am. St. Rep. 626, 12 So. 855.

Such as the burning of the property while in his possession. McPherson v. Acme Lumber Co. 70 Miss. 649, 12 So. 857.

When the defendant in replevin gives a forthcoming bond, liability for the goods is thereby fixed upon him and his sureties, which is not affected by the partial destruction of the property; and a tender of the partially destroyed property will not relieve them. Hazlett v. Witherspoon (Miss.; 25 So. 150).

A tender in money of the value, as found by the court, of articles replevied, but which are lost or cannot be returned, is the proper course. Reavis v. Horner, 11 Neb. 479, 9 N. W. 643.

It appearing that the property replevied was destroyed by fire, a failure to render an alternative judgment is not prejudicial error. Richardson Drug Co. v. Teasdale, 59 Neb. 150, 80 N. W. 488. To the same effect is Brown v. Johnson, 45 Cal. 76, supra.

In a few states—Maine, New York, and Tennessee—decisions more or less at variance with the rule above shown are found.

Thus, in Maine, the natural death of a horse without the fault of anyone, while in the possession of the plaintiff in replevin, but before the determination of the action, was held a valid excuse for a failure to return it according to the condition of the replevin bond, in an action thereon. Melvin v. Winslow, 10 Me. 397. This decision is expressly disapproved in De Thomas v. Witherby, 61 Cal. 92, 44 Am. Rep. 542, supra.

In a subsequent Maine case, Walker v. Osgood, 53 Me. 422, the court distinguishes Melvin v. Winslow and limits the rule therein laid down by holding that the death of an animal without fault, pending the replevin action, exonerates the plaintiff in replevin from liability in an action upon the replevin bond, if the replevin suit was instituted and prosecuted in good faith and in the honest belief of a good title.

In New York, upon the principle that wher Argued before Lurton, Severens, and Richards, Circuit Judges.

Mr. W. A. Percy for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Tim E. Cooper, for defendant in error:

When performance of the condition of a bond becomes impossible by the act of the obligor, such impossibility forms no answer to an action on the bond.

Bestwick v. Swindells, 3 Ad. & El. 883; Broom, Legal Maxims, 200; Doe ex dem. Muston v. Gladwin, 6 Q. B. 963; Keys v. Harwood, 2 C. B. 905; Walker v. Walker, 2 De G. F. & J. 255, 29 L. J. Ch. N. S. 856; Dunlap v. Clements, 18 Ala. 778; Jøger v. Stoelting, 30 Ind. 341; Swain v. Bartlett, 82 Mo. App. 642; Duchess of Kingston's Case, 20 How. St. Tr. 355, 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 435.

a bond becomes impossible of performance by the act of God or of the law, the obligors are excused, it was held in Carpenter v. Stevens, 12 Wend. 589, an action upon a replevin bond, that a plea that, before judgment de retorno habendo in the replevin action, the animal replevied died, without the act or default of the plaintiff in replevin, but by the act of God, was a good plea, the legal presumption being that it would have died had it not been taken from the possession of the legal owners. This decision was expressly disapproved in De Thomas v. Witherby, 61 Cal. 92, 44 Am. Rep. 542, supra; and in a subsequent New York case, Snydam v. Jenkins, 3 Sandf. 643, the court says in regard to it: "The decision is one of those which we regret, but are constrained to say we cannot follow. It appears to us to be wrong in principle, and it is plainly contradicted by many authorities. The undertaking of the plaintiff in the replevin bond, we conceive, is absolute to return the goods, or pay their value at the time of the execution of the bond. We cannot think that a wrongdoer is ever to be treated as a mere bailee, and that the property in his possession is to any extent at the risk of the owner." The point in this last decision was the proper measure of damages upon a recovery in replevin upon election to take judgment for value.

In Tennessee a statute has existed since 1845-46 to the effect that, if the issue be found for the defendant, the judgment shall be that the goods be returned to him, or, on failure, that he recover their value, etc. Shannon's Code, § 5144. A statutory bond is provided for, conditioned to perform the judgment of the court in the premises. Shannon's Code, § 5131.

The early case of Mosely v. Baker, 2 Sneed, 367, is not strictly an action of replevin. One claiming slaves under a bill of sale obtained in equity an injunction forbidding their sale, and, upon giving a forthcoming bond, obtained possession of them to abide the decree of the court. The slaves died of cholera while in his possession. Upon the ground that the plaintiff acted in good faith, although without sufficient legal cause, it was held that the death of the slaves, occurring, as it did, without any want of proper care upon his part, was an act of God operating to make the performance of the condition of redelivery in the bond impossible, and therefore excusing the obligors therein 69 L. R. A.

No error was committed in the assessment of damages, of which the plaintiff in error can complain.

Mayberry v. Cliffe, 7 Coldw. 117.

The judgment is in accordance with the statute.

Dornan Bros. v. Benham Furniture Co. 102 Tenn. 303, 52 S. W. 38.

The return of the marshal is conclusive.

Crane v. McCoy, 1 Bond, 422, Fed. Cas. No. 3,354. ..

Lurton, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

Many errors have been assigned, but in the argument those which are relied upon may, in substance, be reduced to two: (1) That the court erred in not instructing the from its performance. This decision is expressly disapproved in Suppliger v. Gruaz, 137 Ill. 216, 27 N. E. 22, supra.

Upon the same theory, it was held in Bobo v. Patton, 6 Helsk. 172, 19 Am. Rep. 593, in the words of the opinion: "The plaintiff in replevin who takes possession of the property pending the litigation, takes the possession with a view to litigating the title. If, during such possession and before the trial, by the act of God or without the fault of the plaintiff, the property be lost or destroyed, the plaintiff is not to be held liable for its value. . . . The principle is that if a bond or obligation possible of performance . . . becomes impossible by the act of God, or of the law, . . . the obligation will be saved." The court, so far as appears, bases its conclusion entirely upon the principle above stated, evidently regarding the provisions of the statutes above set out subject thereto. This decision was expressly disapproved in Suppliger v. Gruaz, 137 Ill. 216, 27 N. E. 22, supra.

All the other Tennessee cases in which the point under discussion arose are cases of the replevy of attached property, especially in regard to which the Code provides: § 5275. "The death or destruction of the property, without any fault of the defendant, after the replevy, is no defense to the liability on such bond."

So, sureties in replevin bonds in cases of attachment levied are liable thereunder notwithstanding the death or destruction of the property by act of God. Barry v. Frayser, 10 Helsk. 206.

And where property attached is replevied the bond represents the debt, and stands in lieu of the property, so that upon proof of the destruction of the latter, it not appearing whether by plaintiff's fault or not, a judgment for the value of the property as stated in the bond is proper, without being in the alternative for a return of the property. Epperson v. Van Pelt, 9 Baxt. 74. The principle of Bobo v. Patton, 6 Helsk. 172, 19 Am. Rep. 593, supra, was declared not to apply on account of the statute above set out.

The court says, in Kuhn v. Spellacy, 3 Lea, 282, a case of the replevy of attached property, that, if a forthcoming bond be construed as a common-law, rather than a statutory, bond, then, if the return of the property becomes impossible by act of God, the obligors are re-jury to return no verdict for the return of the lumber replevied, nor for the value, nor for any damages for detention. (2) That the court erred in not instructing the jury that any verdict in favor of the defendant must be limited to the market value of the lumber replevied on the day of its seizure, less a pro rata part of the award to plaintiff as salvage in a certain admiralty proceeding against same, to be mentioned hereafter.

That the plaintiff did not have the title, or right of possession, or any sort of special property, in the 235,000 feet of lumber seized under its writ of replevin was conceded, and the only controversy was in respect of the character of the judgment in favor of defendant. In Tennessee the action of replevin is regulated by statute, and the plaintiff is required to give a "bond in double the value of the property, payable to the defendant, and conditioned to be void if the plaintiff abide by and perform the judgment of the court in the premises." Shannon's Code (Tenn.) § 5131. By § 5144 it is provided that, "if the issue is found for the defendant, or the plaintiff dismisses, or fails to prosecute, his suit, the judgment shall be that the goods be returned to the defendant, or, on failure, that the defendant recover their value, with interest thereon and damages for the detention, the value of the property and the damages to be assessed by the jury trying the cause."

The defense against a judgment in favor of the defendant for the value of the proper-leased; citing Mosely v. Baker, 2 Sneed, 369, supra.

Thus, it is apparent that in Tennessee the courts have been inclined to depart from the almost universal rule upon this question, except where held closely to it by the statute in the case of the replevy of attached property. The decision in THREE STATES LUMBER CO. v. BLANKS is in harmony with the great weight of authority, but, as recognized in the opinion therein, is in conflict with the trend of the Tennessee cases which, so far, have had the question up.

b. Emancipation of slaves.

The few cases as to the effect of the emancipation of slaves seized in replevin, upon the obligation to return them, are unanimous in holding the obligors thereby relieved from their obligation.

In Alabama, where special provision is made by statute in regard to the death of replevied property, it was held not to extend to cases of the destruction of property by emancipation, but that, under such circumstances, the condition of a replevin bond to return slaves is excused. Glover v. Taylor, 41 Ala. 124.

So, it was held in Tennessee that the emancipation of slaves held under a replevin bond excuses the obligors therein from the condition to return the property; that the emancipation of slaves is not embraced in the statute providing that the death or destruction of the property is no defense to liability on the bond. Green v. Lanier, 5 Helsk. 602.

And so, where an injunction against the sale of negroes by creditors of a husband was allowed to the wife, who claimed property in them, and they were delivered to her to abide a decree in the cause, upon her giving a forthcoming bond, the emancipation of the negroes was held to absolve her from her obligations under the bond, on the ground that the negroes were in custodia legis during the pendency of the action, and, upon the condition becoming impossible by act of God, the obligation was saved. Green v. Smith, 4 Coldw. 440.

One in possession of a slave under a replevy bond under the belief that his possession is rightful is not liable under the condition to return in the bond when that condition becomes impossible of performance by reason of the slave's emancipation. Pait v. McCutchen, 43 Tex. 291.

II. Depreciation of the property.

There is no doubt as to the liability of one in possession of property seized under writ of replevin, for its depreciation in value during the time of its detention by him, if the action is decided against him, and judgment de retorno habendo is rendered.

"It would be anything but an act of justice to permit a person who has wrongfully deprived another of his goods, and retained them in his possession until they were nearly destroyed by time and use, afterwards, when judgment was rendered against him for his wrongful act, to save a forfeiture of the bond by an offer to return the article in its depreciated condition. Nor can the sureties be placed in any better situation than the principal." Gibbs v. Bartlett, 2 Watts & S. 34, obiter.

The real owner in an action for wrongful taking and detention may recover the value of any injury the property may have sustained. Phillips v. Harriss, 3 J. J. Marsh. 122, 19 Am. Dec. 166.

The rule of damages in replevin includes damages for depreciation, if any, between the time of taking and the time of the trial. Miller v. Bryden, 34 Mo. App. 602.

Compensation for any actual injury to the property wrongfully taken is one of the elements of damage assessable against the defendant by a successful plaintiff in replevin. Aber v. Bratton, 60 Mich. 357, 27 N. W. 564; Teel v. Miles, 51 Neb. 545, 71 N. W. 296; Mitchell v. Burch, 36 Ind. 529; Brennan v. Shinkle, 89 Ill. 604; Wadleigh v. Buckingham, 80 Wis. 230, 49 N. W. 745; Deveridge v. Welch, 7 Wis. 465.

Or in the action to recover possession of personal property provided by the Code as a substitute for the action of replevin. Young v. Willet, 8 Bosw. 486.

But a plaintiff in replevin, who retained possession of the articles replevied until rendition of judgment, cannot claim damages for depreciation in their value during that period. Gordon v. Jenney, 16 Mass. 465. The court says: "Any deterioration of the goods while in possession of the defendant after the unlawful taking is a proper subject of damages. But after they are restored, if they should be injured, decayed, or otherwise impaired in ty and for damages for detention was grounded upon the following circumstances:

The lumber seized was upon a barge lying at the bank of the Mississippi river. The defendant had contracted to sell to the Chicago Mill & Lumber Company a large amount of lumber, and had loaded upon a barge belonging to that company something more than 400,000 feet when the marshal executed the plaintiff's writ of replevin. This writ he returned "as executed as the law directs by taking the within-described property out of the possession of the within-named H. B. Blanks, and delivering said property to O. H. Scoggins, agent of the Three States Lumber Company, for the said Three States Lumber Company." Although there was upon the barge considerably more than 250,000 feet of lumber, no separation appears to have been made, and there was evidence tending to show that, although the plaintiff's agent claimed possession of only 250,000 feet, he took possession of the barge and all of the lumber thereon, and made no effort to separate that seized or claimed from that not so claimed. However defective such a levy may be as against the defendant or a stranger, in a proceeding where such a question might be properly made, it is clear that, if the plaintiff obtained the actual possession of the lumber of the defendant under his replevin writ, whether by right or by wrong, he is, for the purposes of the questions here to be considered, estopped to say that the writ was wrongly issued or executed, or to contradict value, it must be at the plaintiff's risk, if he prevails in the suit, however long the process may continue; because he may always convert them into money, under such circumstances as will furnish proper evidence of their value, when he comes to be answerable upon his bond, or he may keep them in possession, at his election."

If the property has depreciated in the hands of the plaintiff, such depreciation should be considered in fixing the damages, when the defendant is successful. Mix v. Kepner, 81 Mo. 93; Rowley v. Gibbs, 14 Johns. 385.

The court recognized in Harrison v. Chappell, 84 N. C. 258, the recoverability by defendant of damages for deterioration.

A surety on a replevin bond is liable for depreciation caused by the wrongful conduct of the person replevying the property. Bradley v. Reynolds, 61 Conn. 271, 23 Atl. 928.

It is said in Capital Lumbering Co. v. Learned, 36 Or. 544, 78 Am. St. Rep. 792, 59 Pac. 454, that, when a return of personal property is adjudged in an action for its recovery, it is the duty of the plaintiff, if he has secured possession thereof pending the litigation, and would escape the penalty of his undertaking, to take active measures to redeliver it to the defendant within a reasonable time in the same condition as when taken.

A statute providing that plaintiff is to "return the said property in case such shall be the final judgment" was not intended to do away with the theretofore existing obligation to return it in like good order and condition as when taken, and therefore, when part of the goods were deteriorated and much depreciated in value, a proper allowance will be made for the depreciation. Parker v. Simonds, 8 Met. 205.

"If the property is damaged or deteriorated in actual value while in the plaintiff's custody in any respect, . . . this damage or deterioration must also be allowed in the calculation; otherwise it would be in the power of the plaintiff, by returning the damaged or deteriorated property, to throw upon the defendant the loss which he himself ought to sustain." Mayberry v. Cliffe, 7 Coldw. 117, obiter.

Mere restoration by the plaintiff in replevin of the goods replevied, if damaged, will not be a compliance with the bond which requires them to be restored in like good order and condition as when taken. Berry v. Hoeffner, 56 Me. 170.

Where a plaintiff in replevin fails to return some of the goods, and those which are returned are injured, the damages, in a suit on his bond, include the value of the goods not returned, and the deterioration in value resulting from the injury of those returned. Franks v. Matson, 211 Ill. 338, 71 N. E. 1011.

A sheriff entitled to a return of property replevied is entitled to damages on account of its depreciation while in the hands of the plaintiff in replevin. Bowersock v. Adams, 59 Kan. 779, Appx. 54 Pac. 1064.

But after a redelivery of the property involved in claim and delivery proceedings to the defendant, he is not entitled, upon being successful in the action, to recover on plaintiff's bond any damage to, or depreciation in the value of, the property subsequent to that time. Katz v. Hlavac, 88 Minn. 56, 92 N. W. 506.

A plaintiff in replevin may recover the depreciation in value of a horse, caused by improper care and attention. Riley v. Littlefield, 84 Mich. 22, 47 N. W. 576.

If a horse, while detained, was injured through the carelessness or neglect of the defendant, the plaintiff in replevin may recover his expenses in taking care of and doctoring the horse, over and above what his expenses would have been had the animal not been injured. He may also recover for permanent depreciation in value of the horse, resulting from the injury. Zitske v. Goldberg, 38 Wis. 216.

Deterioration of a buggy, harness, and horse between the time of taking and the day of trial is one of the just and proper elements of damage for the detention of the property. Hinchey v. Koch, 42 Mo. App. 230.

But in one case, Odell v. Hole, 25 Ill. 204, it is held that the natural depreciation in value of a mare while in the possession of a plaintiff in replevin cannot be recovered; for any depreciation, however, caused by abuse or want of reasonable care, it is conceded that recovery may be had.

A tender of a piano in a worse condition than it was in when taken possession of under writ of replevin, the depreciation being due to the ordinary wear and tear resulting from use, will not fulfil the requirement of the replevin bond. Johnson v. Mason, 70 N. J. L. 13, 56 Atl. 137.

The tender of an engine in a condition much the return of the marshal. 6 Bacon Abr. Wilson's ed. * * 59, 60.

This barge, while lying at the bank of the river, sank through stress of storm, and about half of the lumber was submerged. The plaintiff thereupon raised the barge, and loaded the lumber upon other barges hired by it, and carried the lumber to Cairo, Illinois. There the plaintiff caused the entire 400,000 feet of lumber to be libeled in a proceeding started by itself in the district court of the United States for the southern district of Illinois, for the purpose of enforcing against same a claim in favor of itself for salvage and towage. By due course of proceedings in said cause, said lumber was seized, and a salvage allowance of $1,833.29 made in favor of the libellant, and said lumber was exposed and sold under decree of said court for the sum of $2,000. After satisfying costs and libellant's salvage claim there remained in court the sum of about $50 for the owners, whoever they may be, who had shared in the benefit of the libellant's salvage services.

The decree of the district court in this proceeding is now relied upon as a complete defense to any demand of the defendant for a judgment for the return of the lumber seized, or for its value, or for its detention, although the plaintiff had no shadow of title or right to the lumber taken under its writ of replevin. The conclusiveness of that decree as a decree in rem is not and cannot be collaterally disputed. By that decree it is effectually determined that the plaintiff had rendered salvage services to the extent of $1,833.29, and that the same could be enforced, at its demand, against the lumber in question. Under the sale made in pursuance of that decree, the title and right of possession have effectually passed to the purchaser.

The question we must decide is whether that proceeding operates as a discharge of the plaintiff's obligation to prosecute his suit with effect, or return the property re-deteriorated from its condition when taken is not a compliance with a judgment requiring it to be in as good condition as when taken. Nichols & S. Co. v. Paulson, 10 N. D. 440, 87 N. W. 977.

The plaintiff in replevin may recover damages for depreciation in ice replevied, caused by its melting away. Findlay v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. 104 Wis. 375, 80 N. W. 436.

A plaintiff in replevin is liable for the depreciation in value of a portion of ice replevied, which was returned in not as good order and condition as when taken. Washington Ice Co. v. Webster, 125 U. S. 426, 31 L. ed. 799, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 947.

Depreciation in the market value of the property while detained will also render the one detaining it liable therefor, if unsuccessful in the action.

Thus, depreciation in the value of a note while retained by a plaintiff in replevin is recoverable. Fair v. Citizens' State Bank, 69 Kan. 353, 76 Pac. 847.

The plaintiff, in an action of replevin for the possession of bonds, is entitled to recover any depreciation of value in the bonds between the time he became entitled to their possession and the time when he actually received them. Clow v. Yount, 93 Ill. App. 112.

The allowance of damages for a decrease in the market value of cattle during the time they were wrongfully detained by the defendant in replevin is not error. Russell v. Smith, 14 Kan. 366.

And deterioration in iron and in the market price thereof during the pendency of the replevin action is a proper element of the damages recoverable by the defendant. Boylston Ins. Co. v. Davis, 70 N. C. 485.

The measure of damages upon a return of part of the goods in a damaged condition on account of bad packing and storage is the difference between the value of the property so damaged and its value when taken. Yelton v. Slinkard, 85 Ind. 190.

But the recovery of damages for depreciation 60 L. R. A.

is conditioned, however, upon the return of the property,—if an alternative judgment for the value is had, the value therein is fixed as of the day of taking. Schrandt v. Young, 62 Neb. 254, 86 N. W. 1085.

An allowance of $5,000 for depreciation upon property worth $2,000 at the time of trial, in the absence of any evidence to warrant it, is erroneous. Crossley v. Hojer, 11 Misc. 57, 31 N. Y. Supp. 837, Affirmed in 158 N. Y. 734, 53 N. E. 1124.

If special damages on account of depreciation are claimed, they must be specially pleaded. Whitney v. Levon, 34 Neb. 443, 51 N. W. 972.

So, in an action to recover a mare, a plaintiff may not recover special damage caused by reason of the mare's having been placed in poor pasturage by defendant, unless the facts are specially averred in the complaint. Stevenson v. Smith, 28 Cal. 102, 87 Am. Dec. 107.

In a few instances the courts have not regarded the damages for depreciation recoverable in the replevin action.

Thus, damages for injury and depreciation to the property while in the hands of the plaintiff in replevin are properly recoverable in an action separate from the replevin action. Colby v. Yates, 12 Helsk. 267.

And, according to Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Oldham, 136 Mass. 515, damages for deterioration should not be allowed in the replevin action. The remedy is an action upon the bond.

So, damages sustained by reason of depreciation in value of the replevied property may be recovered by the defendant in replevin in a suit on the replevin bond. Dalby v. Campbell, 26 Ill. App. 502.

But it is decided in Douglass v. Douglass, 21 Wall. 98, 22 L. ed. 479, that if the defendant in replevin injured the property, or culpably suffered it to become injured while it was in his possession, the remedy is not a suit on the bond, when the bond stipulated only for a return of the property, and nothing else in regard to it.

M. M. M.

plevied to the defendant, or pay its value, and damages for detention. Replevin is one of the most ancient and well-defined writs known to the common law. The plaintiff in replevin does not take or hold the goods replevied as a bailee or custodian, nor are the goods in any sense in custodia legis. It is an ancient common-law proceeding by which the owner recovers possession of his own. It is defined in the old books as "a redelivery to the owner, by the sheriff, of his cattle or goods distrained upon any cause, upon surety that he will pursue the action against him that distrained. If he pursue it not, or if it be adjudged against him, then he who took the distress shall have it again, and for that purpose may have a writ of retorno habendo." 6 Bacon, Abr. Wilson's ed. *52. By the statute of Westminster II., chap. 2, § 3, 13 Edw. I., the sheriff was required to take pledges from the plaintiff in an action of replevin that he would prosecute the suit and return the property replevied if the court should so direct, and by a later statute of the time of George II. he was required to take a bond with sureties that he would prosecute without delay, and for the return of the property in case its return should be awarded. 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 529. If the goods were not restored under the writ of retorno habendo, this was a breach of obligation to return, and the return of elongata, or eloinement, by a sheriff on a writ de retorno habendo is conclusive in an action on the replevin bond. Caldwell v. West, 21 N. J. L. 411. The plaintiff's possession of the goods is for himself. His pledges or sureties are substituted for the goods, and he holds subject to his own disposition, free from any lien in behalf of his sureties. 6 Bacon, Abr. *67. His failure to establish his title fixes his status as a wrongdoer. Being a wrongdoer, he is not permitted to set up even a blameless loss or destruction of the defendant's property, while wrongfully withheld from him, as a discharge of his obligation to return the goods or pay their value and damages. Cobbey, Replevin, § —; Shinn, Replevin, § 812; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 536; 6 Bacon, Abr. Wilson's ed. *67; Wells, Replevin, §§ 455, 601. The case of Whitfield v. Whitfield, 44 Miss. 254, cited to the contrary, is overruled by George v. Hewlett, 70 Miss. 2, 35 Am. St. Rep. 626, 12 So. 855. Carpenter v. Stevens, 12 Wend. 589, is also overruled by Suydam v. Jenkins, 3 Sandf. 643. The other Mississippi cases cited in brief of plaintiff in error are likewise explained away in George v. Hewlett, 70 Miss. 2, 35 Am. St. Rep. 626, 12 So. 855.

The Tennessee Code provisions prescribing the bond to be executed and the judgment to be rendered when the plaintiff fails in his suit do not materially depart from the common law and the terms of the ancient statutes requiring the plaintiff to give security for the return of the property if it shall be so adjudged, unless it be in respect to interest upon the value, and the option to the plaintiff to return or pay value. The statute in no wise deals with the consequence if the plaintiff is unable to return by reason of the loss or destruction of the property replevied. The Tennessee supreme court, in Bobo v. Patton, 6 Heisk. 172, 19 Am. Rep. 593, held that the death of an animal replevied, without fault, relieved the plaintiff from his obligation to either return or pay value. But this was put upon the ground that, "if a bond or obligation possible of performance at the time of execution becomes impossible by the act of God, or of the law, or of the obligee himself, the obligation will be saved;" citing Comyns, Dig. Condition, D; 1 Co. Litt., and certain earlier Tennessee cases, dealing with bonds made under decree of courts of equity for the forthcoming of property committed to the custody of the obligor as receiver or custodian. The decision did not profess to be an interpretation or construction of any statute, but was put upon principles of general law. It is, therefore, not a decision which a court of the United States is required to follow with respect to the liability of a plaintiff in replevin whose suit was prosecuted in a court of the United States, under a bond made in such court according to the requirement of the Tennessee statute. The general principles governing courts of the United States in respect of state laws and state decisions are so fully considered in Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. 1, 10 L. ed. 885; Venice v. Murdock, 92 U. S. 494, 23 L. ed. 583; Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black, 418, 17 L. ed. 298; and Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368-376, 37 L. ed. 772-777, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914; and by this court in Wilson v. Perrin, 11 C. C. A. 66, 22 U. S. App. 514, 62 Fed. 629; Byrne v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 24 L. R. A. 693, 9 C. C. A. 666, 22 U. S. App. 220, 61 Fed. 605; Zacher v. Fidelity Trust & S. V. Co. 45 C. C. A. 480, 106 Fed. 593; and Elliott v. Felton, 56 C. C. A. 75, 119 Fed. 270,—that it is unnecessary to further consider the matter.

The question as to what will excuse a plaintiff for the nonreturn of property replevied when he fails to establish his title is clearly a question of general law, and was so regarded by the Tennessee court in the case cited. It is not a decision establishing a rule of property, as in Warburton v. White, 176 U. S. 484, 44 L. ed. 555, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 404; nor does it involve the construction of a state statute, as in Byrne v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 24 L. R. A. 19

693, 9 C. C. A. 666, 22 U. S. App. 220, 61 Fed. 605; nor the effect or validity of a chattel mortgage, as in Wilson v. Perrin, 11 C. C. A. 66, 22 U. S. App. 514, 62 Fed. 629; nor the title of a foreign receiver to local property under a general assignment, as in Zacher v. Fidelity Trust & S. V. Co. 45 C. C. A. 480, 106 Fed. 593; nor the extent of the powers and liability of a local municipal corporation, as in Detroit v. Osborne, 135 U. S. 492, 34 L. ed. 260, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1012. The obligation of the plaintiff in a replevin suit does not become impossible of performance by the loss or destruction of the goods replevied, because his obligation is an alternative one, and, if it has become impossible to return to the defendant the goods wrongfully taken, it is not impossible to pay their value. And under Shannon's Code (Tenn.) § 5144, he is given the option to return the goods or pay their value.

Nor is such a plaintiff a mere custodian, responsible only for negligence. As we have seen, replevin is a redelivery to the owner of goods wrongfully taken or detained. If in fact he is not the owner, his claim was groundless, and he must restore that wrongfully taken, and will not be heard to say that he held at the risk of the true owner, and was liable only for negligence as a receiver or other bailee. But if we shall regard the case of Bobo v. Patton, 6 Heisk. 172, 19 Am. Rep. 593, as a case which we should follow as defining the local law in reference to replevin bonds instituted under the Code provisions of Tennessee, that decision is by no means controlling in the case now under consideration. The property replevied in that suit was an animal, which died from disease contracted without plaintiff's fault or agency. This was held to relieve the plaintiff from liability to return, that being, of course, impossible, and to also relieve him from his obligation to pay her value. The death of the animal wholly without the agency or fault of the plaintiff was, in fact, a blameless misfortune. But in the case at bar the plaintiff, through his own act and active agency, elected to cause the goods replevied to be exposed to sale for the satisfaction of an alleged salvor's lien in its own favor. How can it be said that this property has been lost or destroyed or taken from him without any active agency of his own? Quite another question might arise if this proceeding had been adverse to the plaintiff. The proceeding was one in rem. The defendant did not appear or defend, so that no judgment in personam was rendered.

Considering the conclusiveness of the proceeding as to the lumber, and its liability as a whole to the salvage and towage claim asserted by the plaintiff as sole libellant, the fact remains that the lumber was 69 L. R. A.

so seized and subjected to this claim only at the instance of the plaintiff and solely for its own benefit. There was evidence that the plaintiff's agent was not only in the possession of the replevied lumber, but of the entire cargo, as well as the barge. Whether it be regarded as in possession of the replevied lumber as owner, or only as a bailee or custodian, it was under obligation to protect it against loss or injury, and in taking it off the submerged boat it was but saving its own or that committed to it as a bailee. Fleming v. Lay, 48 C. C. A. 748, 109 Fed. 952, 956. But whatever its rights against the barge and the remainder of the cargo, it could not have a salvor's lien against its own property or that in its care which it was under legal obligation to save. Salvage is a reward for services successfully rendered in saving property from maritime danger by one under no obligation or duty to render the service. The Neptune, 1 Hagg. Adm. 227, 236; Firemen's Charitable Asso. v. Ross, 9 C. C. A. 70, 13 U. S. App. 643, 60 Fed. 456; The Lydia A. Harvey, 84 Fed. 1000; Murphy v. The Suliste, 5 Fed. 99; The Nebraska, 21 C. C. A. 448, 24 U. S. App. 559, 75 Fed. 598. The barge upon which this lumber was situated was sunk at the bank, and in such shallow water that only about half of the entire cargo of lumber was submerged. By the services of the plaintiff the barge was raised, the lumber taken off, and reloaded upon another barge chartered by the plaintiff.

Conceding, for the purposes of this case only, that the plaintiff was wholly without fault, and that under the case of Bobo v. Patton the injury sustained by the replevied lumber should be regarded as a loss or destruction pro tanto, and allowance made for this in the recovery against plaintiff for damages for detention, the question remains whether the subsequent carrying of the lumber to Cairo, and there enforcing against it both a salvage and towage claim, by means of which the lumber has passed beyond the control of the plaintiff, is a discharge of his liability to pay the value of defendant's lumber. What plaintiff did in saving the defendant's lumber from loss and injury by water it was under obligation to do as one in possession under claim to ownership. What it did in carrying it, after it was saved, to Cairo, and there causing it to be seized and sold, it did voluntarily and in its own exclusive interest. The obligation to return the replevied lumber or pay its value and damages for detention has not become impossible through an "act of God, or of the oblige, or of the law," except as the law was put in force by the plaintiff for its own purpose. An obligation which is excused by act of law is where a covenant or condition subsequent, which is law when made, becomes subsequently unlawful by a change in the law. Thus, when property was conveyed to be used for burial purposes, and such use becomes subsequently unlawful, the forfeiture is excused. Mahoning County v. Young, 8 C. C. A. 27, 16 U. S. App. 253, 59 Fed. 96. Other illustrations are found in Doe ex dem. Anglessea v. Rugeley, 6 Q. B. 107; Brewster v. Kitchin, 1 Ld. Raym. 317, 321; Briok Presby. Church v. New York, 5 Cow. 538. We have not been referred to any case which gives sanction to the claim that a plaintiff in replevin may relieve himself from his obligation to return or pay for property replevied in case he is cast in the suit, when he, as in this case, by his own institution of a suit in rem disables himself from the duty of returning. In Washington Ice Co. v. Webster, 68 Me. 449, taxes assessed against the defendant on the replevied property were paid by the plaintiff voluntarily, no seizure having been made to enforce collection. The payment was disallowed in reduction of damages for detention.

The judgment below was for the value of the lumber at the time it was taken, with interest. That much was in strict accordance with § 5144, Shannon's Code (Tenn.) as construed in Mayberry v. Cliffe, 7 Coldw. 117. The jury also found, upon evidence, that there had been a rise in the value, and they accordingly assessed the difference between the value when seized and the value at date of trial as damages for detention. This, too, is in accord with the construction placed on the act by the case cited above. But the court told the jury that they might mitigate damages for detention if they found that this lumber had been damaged by the sinking of the barge, without fault of the plaintiff. The jury rendered a special verdict in these words and figures:

We, the jury, find for the defendant:
235,000 feet of cottonwood lumber at $12.00 per thousand, amounting to	$2,820 00
Interest from January 22, 1902, to date	241 11
	<hr/> $3,061 11
We also fix damages at.....	822 50
	<hr/>
Total	$3,883 61
We arrive at the damage in the following manner:
117,500 feet, at $18.00 per thousand	$2,115 00
117,500 feet, at $13.00 per thousand	1,527 50
	<hr/>
Total	$3,642 50
Less value at time of seizure	2,820 00
	<hr/>
Damage	$ 822 50

It thus appears from the verdict that the jury found that one half of the lumber seized had not been damaged at all, and that the other half had sustained a damage of $5 per thousand, which reduced the value of the lumber at date of trial by $587.50, and this was accordingly deducted from the damages for detention. The plaintiff has thus been allowed to reduce the damages, recoverable otherwise by the amount of the injury done the lumber by the sinking of the barge while it was in its possession. This was admissible only upon the theory that plaintiff was liable only for a loss due to its own negligent act. The plaintiff in error cannot complain of this, and the defendant in error has not.

In our view of the case, the plaintiff has obtained a better result than it was entitled to, and the judgment must be affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

John PRESSLY, Appt.,
v.

STATE of Tennessee.

(.....Tenn.....)

1. A general consent in writing, by a mother, that liquor may be furnished by the person to whom the NORM.—For a case in this series holding that written authority from parent or guardian for selling or furnishing intoxicating liquor to a minor must be special for each occasion, and that a general permit without limitation as to time or quantity is void, see Gill v. State, 12 L. R. A. 433.

69 L. R. A.

writing is addressed, to her minor child, whenever he may desire to do so, will not bar a prosecution of such person for furnishing liquor to minors without the parent's consent, since such consent would frustrate the purpose of the statute.

2. Where a statute prescribes a fine as the punishment for giving liquor to minors, the court has no authority to impose imprisonment therefor.

3. The appellate court may correct a judgment which erroneously imposes imprisonment in addition to a fine for a statutory misdemeanor, by striking out the erroneous portion and affirming the judgment as modified.

(March 18, 1905.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Putnam County convicting him of violating the statute against furnishing liquor to minors. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John Tucker for appellant.

Mr. Charles T. Cates, Jr., Attorney General, for the State.

Neil, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error was indicted and convicted in the circuit court of Putnam county on a charge of giving liquors to a minor without the consent of his parents. He was thereupon sentenced to pay a fine of $10 and to six months' confinement in the county workhouse. From this judgment he has appealed and assigned errors.

The statute under which he was indicted is found in Shannon's Code, § 6786, and reads as follows: "It shall be unlawful for any person or individual, or firm or corporation, whether engaged or not in the manufacture or sale of any spirituous liquors, malt, or mixed liquors, their employees, agents, or servants, or other persons for them, knowingly to sell, give, furnish to, or procure for, any person under the age of twenty-one years, any spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors, or any mixture thereof with other liquors or ingredients, without the consent of the parents, guardian, or person having the care of such person under the age of twenty-one years."

The punishment is fixed by § 6789, which reads as follows: "Any person or persons violating the provisions of §§ 6786 or 6787 shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be fined not less than $10 nor more than $200."

Two objections are made in this court.

The first is that his honor erred in refusing to permit the defendant below to introduce the following paper in evidence, executed by the mother of the minor, viz.:

Mr John Pressly:—

You can give any of my children drinks of whisky or brandy at any time you may desire to do so. This December 1, 1903.

her

Angelina X Palmer.
mark

Attest J. L. Palmer.

The mother of the boy was a widow. The child to whom the whisky was given was only fifteen years old. The whisky was given to him during the month of July, 1904.

There was no error in the action of the trial judge in rejecting this paper. It was 69 L. R. A.

the specific purpose of the statute to restrain the giving, selling, or furnishing intoxicating beverages to minors, or procuring such beverages for them. An exception was permitted in case of the consent of "the parents, guardian, or person having the care of such" minor. It was supposed that parents and guardians, and other persons having charge of minors, would have concern for, and exercise care over, the children committed to them in the course of nature or by operation of law, and that they would use discretion in giving or withholding consent in every instance of a proposed gift or sale to such child or children. To admit the validity of such a general consent as the paper above set out purports to give would not only violate the spirit of the act, but would wholly frustrate the purpose which the legislature had in view; since a general consent of this character would be tantamount to a withdrawal of the child or children referred to in such paper from the protection of the act; at least, in favor of the person or persons to whom such writing might be addressed. If such consent should be held good, no sound reason could be offered against the validity of a writing addressed "to whom it may concern," conferring upon all persons who might choose to take advantage of it, the right to give intoxicating liquors to the children of any parent or guardian sufficiently heedless, or reckless, or wicked to consent to the debauching of the youth under their charge. The legislature did not intend to sanction such a course of conduct. Indeed, we believe that the legislature must have intended that a parent or guardian, or other person having the care of a minor, could give consent that another might give, sell to, furnish to, or procure liquors for, such minor only in cases of emergency; as, for instance, for medical purposes. It was never intended that a general permission should be given to enable minors to use intoxicating liquors as a beverage; on the contrary, authority to sell to, give to, furnish to, or procure liquors for, them, is limited to such occasions and emergencies.

The second objection raised against the judgment of the court below is that His Honor added imprisonment to the fine, and that he had no legal right to do so.

We are of the opinion that this objection is well taken, and must be sustained.

The rule at common law is thus stated by Mr. Bishop: "The ordinary common-law punishment for misdemeanor is fine and imprisonment, or either, at the discretion of the court. It is imposed whenever the law has not provided some other specific penalty. For example, when a statute forbids or commands an act of a public nature, but is silent as to the punishment, the common law provides fine and imprisonment."1 Bishop, New Crim. Law, § 940.

The foregoing rule is recognized in several of our own cases (Atchison v. State, 13 Lea, 275; Wickham v. State, 7 Coldw. 525; Durham v. State, 89 Tenn. 723, 18 S. W. 74; Kittrell v. State, 104 Tenn. 522, 58 S. W. 120; Thompson v. State, 105 Tenn. 177, 51 L. R. A. 883, 80 Am. St. Rep. 875, 58 S. W. 213), the fine being assessed by the court if $50 or under, and by the jury if over $50 (Shannon's Code, § 7212); and the imprisonment to be fixed by the court (Shannon's Code, § 7202). The Code further provides that when the performance of any act is prohibited by statute, and no penalty for the violation of such statute is imposed, the doing of such act is a misdemeanor. Shannon's Code, § 6437. See also Robinson v. State, 2 Coldw. 181; State v. Keeton, 9 Baxt. 559.

It has been held, however, that where the statute which creates an offense does not make it indictable, but prescribes a penalty, the specific remedy given, the penalty, excludes the resort to an indictment. State v. Maze, 6 Humph. 17; State v. Lorry, 7 Baxt. 95, 32 Am. Rep. 555; State v. Manz, 6 Coldw. 557. It would seem to be true, also, that where the statute creates an offense, and prescribes a special form of punishment, this would exclude any other different or additional punishment.

Such is the present case. The statute does not impose imprisonment, but declares that the punishment shall be a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $200.

We are of opinion, therefore, that His Honor erred in imposing the imprisonment. This court, however, has power to modify the judgment by striking out the imprisonment and then affirming it as modified. Griffin v. State, 109 Tenn. 17, 70 S. W. 61. This course will be pursued, and the judgment will be remanded to be executed as modified.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FIRST CIRCUIT.

STEAM DREDGE NO. 1.

MORRIS & CUMMINGS DREDGING COMPANY, Claimant, Appt.,

v.

William NELSON.

(184 Fed. 161.)

1. A government inspector whose duty it is to see that work is properly done by a dredge employed on a government contract is entitled to protection from negligent acts of those in charge of it, when upon it, even in the intervals when there is no occasion for him to be actually engaged in any immediate active duty.
2. The mere act of one rightfully on board a vessel, of leaning against, or wholly sitting upon, a bitt around which runs a line used in shifting the position of the vessel, is not negligence on his part.
3. Negligently sitting within the bight of a hawser which is subject to strain will bring one within the admiralty rule of apportionment of damages in case both parties are in fault, where, by reason of the negligence of the vessel, the strain is put upon the line in such a way that the bitt around which it runs gives way and he is thrown overboard by the sweeping forward of the line.

NOTE.—As to doctrine of last clear chance, see also, in this series, Bogan v. Carolina C. R. Co. 55 L. R. A. 418, and note, and the later case of Harrington v. Los Angeles R. Co. 63 L. R. A. 238.

69 L. R. A.

4. No peculiar rule which can be deduced from the doctrine of last clear chance, as originated in Davies v. Mann, can be applied in an admiralty case.
5. To make applicable the doctrine of last clear chance, it must clearly appear that the negligence of one person was subsequent to that of the other.

(December 22, 1904.)

A PPEAL by claimant from a decree in admiralty of the District Court of the United States for the District of Maine, holding Steam Dredge No. 1 liable for injuries alleged to have been negligently inflicted upon libellant. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Colt and Putnam, Circuit Judges, and Aldrich, District Judge.

Messrs. George E. Bird and William M. Bradley, for appellant:

The burden of proof is upon the libellant, and such burden must be sustained by evidence sufficiently clear, distinct, and preponderating to enable the court to find the fact without resort to conjecture or surmises.

The Baron Innerdale, 93 Fed. 492.

Libellant—a man of thirty-two years' experience in maritime matters—brought this misfortune upon himself by taking a position of known danger, within the bight of a rope which he knew was to be subjected to strain.

The libel should have been dismissed.

The Burgundia, 29 Fed. 464; The Lydia M. Deering, 97 Fed. 971; Elder Dempster Shipping Co. v. Pouppirt, 60 C. C. A. 500, 125 Fed. 732; Maryland use of Dombroska v. Westoll, 106 Fed. 233; The Samuel S. Thorpe, 99 Fed. 108.

The burden of showing freedom from fault was on libellant.

The Great Republic (Thompson v. The Great Republic) 23 Wall. 34, 23 L. ed. 59; The Lion, 1 Sprague, 44 Fed. Cas. No. 8,379; The Louisburg, 21 C. C. A. 424, 33 U. S. App. 543, 75 Fed. 424; Merchants' & M. Transp. Co. v. Hopkins, 48 C. C. A. 128, 108 Fed. 890; The Chattahoochee, 21 C. C. A. 162, 33 U. S. App. 510, 74 Fed. 903; The H. F. Dimock, 23 C. C. A. 123, 33 U. S. App. 647, 77 Fed. 230; The Carbonero, 45 C. C. A. 314, 106 Fed. 335; The Clara (Shepherd v. The Clara) 102 U. S. 203, 26 L. ed. 146; The Nereus, 23 Fed. 448.

A case brought in the admiralty for the recovery of damages for personal injuries is treated as if one of collision between two vessels.

The Max Morris (The Max Morris v. Curry) 137 U. S. 1, 34 L. ed. 586, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 29.

In case the dredge should be found in fault, the damages should be divided, by reason of fault and want of care on the part of libellant.

The Joseph Stickney, 31 Fed. 156; The Truro, 31 Fed. 158; The Nautique, 44 Fed. 399; Union Ice Co. v. Crowell, 5 C. C. A. 49, 5 U. S. App. 270, 55 Fed. 87; The Haverston, 31 Fed. 566; Lane v. The A. Denike, 3 Cliff. 117, Fed. Cas. No. 8,045.

The same rule, not only of damages, but as to fault or blame or error, is to be applied in cases brought for the recovery of damages for personal injuries as is applied in cases of collision.

Atlee v. Northwestern Packet Co. 21 Wall. 389, 22 L. ed. 619; The Max Morris (The Max Morris v. Curry) 137 U. S. 1, 34 L. ed. 586, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 29; Workman v. New York, 179 U. S. 587, 45 L. ed. 330, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 212.

Davies v. Mann, 10 Mees. & W. 546, has not been recognized by the admiralty courts of this country.

It is impossible, with any degree of security, to reason from the doctrines of the mere municipal code, in relation to purely home pursuits, to those more enlarged principles which guide and control the administration of the maritime law.

Reed v. Canfield, 1 Sumn. 195, Fed. Cas. No. 11,641; The Max Morris (The Max Morris v. Curry) 137 U. S. 1, 34 L. ed. 586, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 29; Waring v. Clarke, 5 How. 441, 12 L. ed. 226; McCord v. The Tiber, 6 69 L. R. A.

Biss. 409, Fed. Cas. No. 8,715; Greenwood v. Westport, 63 Conn. 587, 60 Fed. 560.

The common-law rule of contributory negligence is unknown to the maritime law, administered in courts of admiralty jurisdiction.

Pollock, Torts, 6th ed. p. 458; Wm. Johnson & Co. v. Johansen, 30 C. C. A. 675, 58 U. S. App. 104, 86 Fed. 888; Workman v. New York, 179 U. S. 552, 45 L. ed. 314, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 212; The Daylesford, 30 Fed. 633.

The rule of Davies v. Mann, 10 Mees. & W. 546, is a qualification of the rule of contributory negligence, and is of recent growth.

Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 429, 36 L. ed. 493, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679.

In all cases in admiralty where there is mutual fault (presenting facts under which the old rule of contributory negligence applied), the admiralty courts divide the damages.

Western Ins. Co. v. The Goody Friends, 1 Bond, 459, Fed. Cas. No. 17,436; The Clover, 1 Low Dec. 342, Fed. Cas. No. 2,908; The Marcia Tribou, 2 Sprague, 17, Fed. Cas. No. 9,002; O'Neil v. Sears, 2 Sprague, 52, Fed. Cas. No. 10,530; The Maud Webster, Haskell, 325, Fed. Cas. No. 9,303; The Mary Ann, 11 Fed. 336; McWilliams v. The Vim, 12 Fed. 906; The City of Merida, 24 Fed. 229; The Westerland, 24 Fed. 703; The Marion, 56 Fed. 271; The Passaic, 76 Fed. 460; The City of Norwalk, 46 C. C. A. 63, 106 Fed. 982; The Senator D. C. Chase, 47 C. C. A. 240, 108 Fed. 110; The Arthur, 108 Fed. 557; The William E. Ferguson, 108 Fed. 973; The Devonian, 110 Fed. 588; The James D. Leary, 110 Fed. 685; The Annex No. 5, 117 Fed. 754; Hall v. Chisholm, 55 C. C. A. 31, 117 Fed. 807; The De Veaus Powcell, 120 Fed. 522; The Caldys, 123 Fed. 802; The Catharine v. Dickinson, 17 How. 170, 15 L. ed. 233; Rogers v. The St. Charles, 19 How. 108, 15 L. ed. 563; Cushing v. The John Fraser (The James Gray v. The John Fraser) 21 How. 184, 16 L. ed. 106; Chamberlain v. Ward, 21 How. 548, 16 L. ed. 211; Nelson v. Leland, 22 How. 55, 16 L. ed. 272; The Gray Eagle (Pfister v. Greening) 9 Wall. 505, 19 L. ed. 741; The Ariadne (Pentz v. The Ariadne) 13 Wall. 475, 20 L. ed. 542; The Continental (New Haven Steam Transp. Co. v. The Continental) 14 Wall. 345, 20 L. ed. 801; The Sunnyside (Miner v. The Sunnyside) 91 U. S. 208, 23 L. ed. 302; The Stephen Morgan (The Stephen Morgan v. Good) 94 U. S. 599, 24 L. ed. 266; The Connecticut, 103 U. S. 710, 26 L. ed. 467; The Albert Dumois, 177 U. S. 240, 44 L. ed. 751, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 595; The Ottoman, 20 C. C. A. 214, 33 U. S. App. 443, 74 Fed. 316; The Louisburg, 21 C. C.

A. 424, 33 U. S. App. 543, 75 Fed. 424; The Newburgh, 124 Fed. 954; The Rabboni, 53 Fed. 952; The Parthian, 5 C. C. A. 171, 5 U. S. App. 314, 55 Fed. 426; The Mabel Comeaux, 24 Fed. 490; The James M. Thompson, 12 Fed. 189; The Pegasus, 22 Blatchf. 7, 19 Fed. 46; The David Dows, 16 Fed. 160; The Pennsylvania (The Pennsylvania v. Troop), 19 Wall. 136, 22 L. ed. 151, 1 Conkling U. S. Adm. 373; Ladd v. Foster, 31 Fed. 827; The Grace Girdler (Lockwood v. The Grace Girdler), 7 Wall. 203, 19 L. ed. 116; Memphis & St. L. Packet Co. v. H. C. Yaeger Transp. Co. 3 McCrary, 259, 10 Fed. 395; The Monticello, 15 Fed. 474; The Columbia, 27 Fed. 238; The Roman, 12 Fed. 219; Connolly v. Ross, 11 Fed. 342; The Richmond, 12 C. C. A. 1, 26 U. S. App. 183, 63 Fed. 1020; The Anerly, 58 Fed. 794; The Marion, 56 Fed. 271; Fristad v. The Premier, 51 Fed. 766; The John Henry, 3 Ware, 264, Fed. Cas. No. 7,350.

Messrs. William H. Looney and Benjamin Thompson, for appellee:

The dredge owed libellant the duty of prosecuting its work with reasonable skill, care, and prudence to provide for his safety.

The Calista Hawes, 14 Fed. 493; The City of Naples, 16 C. C. A. 421, 32 U. S. App. 613, 69 Fed. 794; Low v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 72 Me. 313, 24 Am. Rep. 331; Gerrity v. The Kate Cann, 2 Fed. 246.

He had a right to assume that the crew would properly perform their duties, and, if they were going to do anything out of the ordinary course, or subject the bitt to any unusual strain, that they would give him notice.

The Calista Hawes, 14 Fed. 493.

In the common-law courts, contributory negligence which will defeat the plaintiff's right of recovery must be a concurring negligence.

Gilbert v. Erie R. Co. 38 C. C. A. 408, 97 Fed. 747; Inland & Seaboard Coasting Co. v. Tolson, 139 U. S. 551, 35 L. ed. 270, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 653; Turnbull v. New Orleans & C. R. Co. 57 C. C. A. 151, 120 Fed. 783.

Where the negligence is concurrent, or both parties are at fault, courts of admiralty will apportion the damages, or give or withhold them, in the exercise of a sound discretion, according to principles of equity and justice, considering all the circumstances of the case.

Olson v. Flavel, 34 Fed. 477; Anderson v. The Ashbrooke, 44 Fed. 124; The Max Morris, 24 Fed. 860, Affirmed in 137 U. S. 1, 34 L. ed. 586, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 29; Heil v. Glanding, 42 Pa. 493, 82 Am. Dec. 537; Cayzer v. Carron Co. L. R. 9 App. Cas. 873; The Nereus, 23 Fed. 448; The E. A. Packer, 20 Fed. 327; McCord v. The Tiber, 6 Biss. 409, Fed. Cas. No. 8,715.
69 L. R. A.

On petition for rehearing.

The district judge, in reaching his conclusions upon the question of contributory negligence, did not rely upon Davies v. Mann.

Among the authorities which were before the district court, and upon which it relied, was Cayzer v. Carron Co. L. R. 9 App. Cas. 873, in which it was held that, even assuming that the Clan Sinclair had transgressed the rule, yet such transgression was not the cause of the collision; that ordinary care on the part of the Margaret would have enabled her to avoid the collision, and that she alone was to blame.

Cayzer v. Carron Co. L. R. 9 App. Cas. 873; The Nereus, 23 Fed. 448; The Pennland, 23 Fed. 551; The Britannia, 34 Fed. 546; The Titan, 44 Fed. 510; The Susquehanna, 35 Fed. 320.

Persons having business on board of a vessel do not commit a negligent act by permitting themselves to be in the bight of a line, especially when their duties require them to be there.

The Calista Hawes, 14 Fed. 493.

Putnam, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a libel brought in the district court for the district of Maine against Steam Dredge No. 1, a vessel engaged in dredging, under a contract with the United States, in Cape Porpoise harbor, in the district of Maine, for injuries to William Nelson, on the 4th day of September, 1900. The substance of the allegations of the libel is that at the time of the injury Nelson was employed by the United States, aboard the dredge, as an assistant inspector in regard to improvements then being made at Cape Porpoise harbor; that, as part of his duties, it was necessary for him to observe whether the work was being executed in accordance with the plans and specifications, and, as incidental thereto, to note the shifting of the position of the dredge from time to time; that about 4 o'clock on the afternoon of the day in question, he was sitting on a double bitt for the purpose of observing a change then being made; that the quarter line used in moving the dredge came in over the port quarter, was carried around the forward part of the double bitt on which he was sitting, and then inboard to a steam gypsy; that while the location of the dredge was thus being changed, either by reason of the heavy strain put on the quarter line by the use of the steam gypsy, or by reason of the insecure condition or the insufficiency of the bitt, the bitt suddenly broke off at the deck, thereby causing the line to sweep over the front side of the deck, striking Nelson and throwing him into a scow alongside; that the injury was caused wholly by the negligence of the crew of the barge in subjecting the quarter line to an improper strain, and by reason of the weak and insecure condition of the bitt; and that it was without negligence on the part of Nelson. We will refer again to such of these allegations as are disputed and also are material.

The barge, while at work, was held in position by spuds in the usual way; the outboard end of the quarter line which was used in moving her run out to an anchor, or some other permanent object, and it was kept taut to assist in holding the barge in position. The barge was moved by the use of this and other lines. The inboard end of the quarter line was run over a gypsy head, operated by a steam engine of considerable power. Before putting the gypsy head in gear, it was customary to raise the spuds, so that the dredge could be moved with the assistance of the engine. On this occasion the engine was started before the spuds were raised, with the gypsy head in gear, and the result was that the bitt broke off, as stated in the libel.

The answer alleges that the claimant of the dredge is ignorant for what purpose Nelson was sitting on the bitt. It denies it was necessary for him to sit there in the discharge of his duties. It denies that the injury was caused by the negligence of the crew in subjecting the quarter line to an improper strain, or by the weak and insecure condition of the bitt. It alleges that Nelson was, at the crucial time, in a sitting position on the bitt, facing forward, with his feet and legs on the forward side of the bitt, and within the bight of the quarter line. Also, that the breaking of the bitt and the consequent injury of the libellant were not caused by the negligence of any officer or any of the crew of the dredge, or of the owners thereof, but wholly by the negligence of the libellant in assuming an unnecessary position on the dredge, and that he, as a man of long experience as a sailor and inspector, knew the dangers.

It is not questioned that the bitt gave away, and that the cause of its giving away was the starting of the engine while the gypsy was in gear, and before the spuds were raised. Much of the evidence and many of the contentions of the parties relate to one Christiansen, one of the crew of the dredge, whose duty it was to take charge of the raising the spuds and to superintend the lines. The dredge claims that he was ignorant that the gypsy was in gear when the signal for moving was given, and also ignorant of the position of Nelson on the bitt. But the work was in open daylight, under circumstances where there was no difficulty in perceiving and understanding all the conditions in question; so that the issue cannot be cut down to a mere contention as to the personal negligence of any single member of the crew. The case, in this particular, comes within the well-known presumptions which were applied by us in Burr v. Knickerbocker Steam Towing Co. 65 C. C. A. 554, 132 Fed. 248. Likewise we pass by, as not of substantial importance, all criticisms arising from any suggestion that Nelson, at or about the time of the injury, was not actually engaged in his duties as inspector. Such duties required him to be quite constantly aboard the barge, and to pass from time to time, in his discretion, from one part of her deck to another. Of course, there would be intervals when there would be no occasion for him to be actually engaged in any immediate active duty; but his presence aboard and about such parts of the deck as he might reasonably select, even at those times, was proper, and entitled him to protection. The law does not apply to this so fine a rule as to be impracticable.

Neither can it be said that the mere act of leaning against the bitt, or wholly sitting on it, was one of negligence. There is no evidence in the record that there was any reason, arising either from the condition of this particular vessel, or from the customary course of events with reference to happenings in connection with bitts and lines, which would reasonably create any apprehension that, in case of an unusual strain, this bitt would give way instead of the line. It is common knowledge that it is customary to lean against or sit on the windlass or the bitt or the rail of a vessel; and yet each, especially the rail, under some circumstances, is subject to its own peculiar contingencies. In fact, it is difficult to say what part of a vessel is not at times so subjected; and yet it remains to be shown that a passenger, or other person rightfully aboard a vessel, performing duties thereon, is not entitled to be protected in any of these particular positions. For one, however, to take a position in the bight of a line, subject to a strain, is another matter: and to do this may well subject him to criticism as guilty of negligence if injury results to him.

The facts, as understood by the learned judge of the district court, are so fully detailed in his opinion that we need not touch on them further, except to a very limited extent. We have stated those parts of the case where there are questions of mixed law and fact, or where the topics are so far within the common knowledge that we could apprehend them clearly. As to the substantial questions of mere fact,—that is, as to negligence on the part of the libellant, so far as that is affected by the claim that he was within the bight of the quarter line,—and as to the negligence of those whose duty it was to attend to the movements of the barge with reference to the strain put on the bitt and its giving way, the proofs are contradictory, and, moreover, not entirely clear. The learned judge of the district court found that those who were at the time managing the barge were guilty of negligence as a matter of fact, and the effect of his other finding is that the libellant had so placed himself within the bight of the line that he, also, was guilty of negligence. He also held that the negligence of those who were maneuvering the barge supervened, so that, consequently, damages could not be divided. We have carefully examined the record, and, while there are unquestionably serious doubts on all the mere questions of fact,—whether the libellant, and also whether those in charge of the barge, were each guilty of negligence,—yet, under the circumstances stated, we cannot determine that any conclusion we might reach, different from those reached by the district court, would be more satisfactory to ourselves, or better supported by the record.

The allegations of the libel, in that it says that the sudden breaking of the bitt caused the quarter line “to sweep over the port side of said deck with tremendous force, striking the libellant, and throwing him” into the scow, gives strong support to the proposition that the libellant was within the bight of the line, although it does not necessarily lead to that conclusion. On the other hand, the proofs in the record that the construction of the parts of the barge involved were of an improved character, and the common knowledge that the bitt would reasonably have been expected to bear even the strain which was improperly put on it, leaves an impression that the injury to the libellant was not a consequence for which the barge, within the contemplation of the law, could be held responsible merely because the gypsy was put or left in gear unseasonably. Yet, in this case, the bitt consisted of a bedplate of nearly 5 feet in length, and of good width and thickness. The length of the bedplate was in line with the keel of the barge. From this bedplate came up two uprights, also in line with the keel of the vessel, and braced by a heavy cross-bar extending from one upright to the other. The line was run around the upright which was nearer the gypsy, so it failed to receive the support of both uprights, braced as they were by the cross-bar which we have described. The upright around which the line was run gave way at its base. To the common comprehension this would not have occurred; and, in lieu thereof, the line would have given way, if it had been run in such a way as to receive the support of both uprights of the double bitt, braced as they were by the cross-bar which we have described. Also other elements suggest themselves which might well have been considered by the district court, but which are not clearly solved by the record; as, for example, the reasonable probability that the power of the engine of the barge was so great, and its action was so sudden, and the quarter line itself so unyielding, that, whatever might be the reasonable apprehension ordinarily, the reasonable apprehension in this particular case must have been that, where only a single upright was availed of, as was the fact, the bitt would probably give way if anything gave way. However all these things may have been, we cannot, as we have already said, satisfy ourselves that, if we should reverse the conclusions of the district court on these mere questions of fact, we should reach any new conclusions which could be better supported than those of that court.

60 L. R. A.

It may be said that the district court did not positively find that the libellant was guilty of negligence in placing himself in the bight of the quarter line. It said that, in leaning upon an object within the bight of a rope, he assumed a position of some danger; that “as a reasonable man, he must have known that in placing himself in such a position he took some chances;” and that he must be charged with the knowledge of the ordinary risk incident thereto. The court also observed that it must be remembered that the libellant was not aware that the gypsy was in gear, and that the hawser would be subjected to the strain to which it was exposed as a consequence thereof; and that, therefore, this was a risk of which he had no knowledge, and which he cannot be held in law to have assumed. The court also adds later: “It is true that the libellant was guilty of some negligence in sitting within the bight of the hawser.” Notwithstanding the libellant was entitled to exercise a liberal discretion as to what parts of the barge he would visit, as we have already explained, yet certainly he could have had no occasion to put himself within the bight of the quarter line; so that, taking all in all, the observations of the district court must be held to amount to a finding that Nelson was guilty of negligence in this respect. That this negligence was specially contributory follows from the allegation of the libel that Nelson was struck and thrown by the quarter line. That it was of a lesser degree than the negligence of the barge, if it was such, it is settled cannot be taken account of in admiralty, unless the ratio was so overwhelming as to render his negligence trivial.

The district court does not find such to be the fact, nor are we impressed that it was.

The refusal to apportion the damages, and the assessment of the whole on the dredge, are sought to be justified on the strength of the line of cases represented by Davies v. Mann, 10 Mees. & W. 546, decided in 1842. As we have said, we must adopt the findings of the district court on questions of mere fact. They show that it was the duty of the dredge, in providing for the safety of all concerned, to take care that when the steam was to be given the engine, the spuds should be raised before the gypsy was put in gear, and that the managers of the dredge committed this duty to Christiansen. The findings, also show that if he had properly attended to that duty, he would have thrown the gypsy out of gear, and would have seen to it that it was kept out of gear until the spuds were raised. While the findings were that Christiansen knew that Nelson was in a negligent position, it does not appear that he knew that the gypsy was in gear, or how it happened to be in gear. The presumption is that it was through Christiansen's fault that it was in gear, but there is no presumption that he had in mind, at the time the whistle sounded, that such was the fact. In other words whatever negligence Christiansen was charged with, he was not charged with having allowed the engine to be started with a present appreciation of both facts,—that Nelson was sitting on the bitt and that the gypsy was in gear. If he had had both facts present in his mind, his conduct in allowing the whistle to be blown while the gypsy was in gear might have been so reckless or perverse that it might well be said to have been the sole proximate cause of the injury which resulted. But, for various reasons, Davies v. Mann cannot be held to apply.

Davies v. Mann must be taken in connection with Butterfield v. Forrester, 11 East, 60, decided in 1809, and Tuff v. Warman, 5 C. B. N. S. 573, decided in 1858. Of the three, the last-named case must be regarded as the leading one according to Pollock, Torts, 6th ed. 1901, 448, where it is said that those earlier than Tuff v. Warman are now material only as illustrations. In Butterfield v. Forrester, Lord Ellenborough said that the fact that a person was on the wrong side of the street would not authorize another purposely to ride up against him. This relates to mere perverseness. He also said some other things, more in line with Davies v. Mann. In Davies v. Mann, a donkey left unlawfully in the highway was run down by the defendant, driving a pair of horses. Lord Abinger said, in effect, that the plaintiff could recover, as the defendant might, by proper care, have avoided injuring the animal. The case, however, to which we call especial attention, is the one we have already referred to,—Tuff v. Warman,—decided in 1858, where a barge was run down by a steamer. It was shown that the barge was negligent in not having a lookout. Nevertheless, the steamer saw the barge, but failed to port her helm, as she should have done. It being a common-law suit, the steamer was charged with all damages, on the ground that she continued in a course which would inflict an injury, and was therefore liable, although the plaintiff had no lookout. We will have occasion to refer to this case again in a pointed manner. Davies v. Mann, as interpreted and applied in England, is undoubtedly the law of England, as was declared in the House of Lords. Radley v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 1 App. Cas. 754, 759. The difficulty, however, of applying Davies v. Mann, even in England at that late day (1876), is apparent from the fact that there, under the directions of the trial judge, a verdict was allowed to be taken for the defendant, which, on appeal to the divisional court, was set aside. The decision of the divisional court was reversed in the exchequer chamber by such eminent justices as Blackburn, Mellor, Lush, Brett, afterwards Lord Esher, and Archibald. An appeal was then taken to the House of Lords, which reversed the exchequer chamber, and restored the judgment of the divisional court. Lord Blackburn, who, pending the appeal, had taken a seat in the House of Lords, overruled himself, concurring with the other lords. In that case Lord Penzance, who delivered the opinion, in which the other lords briefly concurred, put Davies v. Mann in two different forms. One was (page 759) to the effect that if the defendant, by the exercise of ordinary care, might have avoided the mischief, the plaintiff's negligence would not excuse him; and the other (page 760) described the plaintiff's negligence as "a previous negligence." Therefore it was not a concurring, nor necessarily a contributing, negligence in any sense of either of those expressions.

In view of these varying applications, the observation of Pollock on Torts, at page 449, to the effect that Davies v. Mann has been much discussed in America, though not always wisely so, seems hardly suitable. This is very patent in the light of Sir Frederick Pollock's further observations as to Davies v. Mann. In connection with the discussion of this case, at page 451, he quotes with approval one whom he styles a "learned writer," although anonymous, who undertook to restate the rule of Davies v. Mann, as follows: "He who last has an opportunity of avoiding the accident, notwithstanding the negligence of the other is solely responsible." The same "learned writer" also said that, "if the plaintiff could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have avoided the accident, he cannot recover." He sums up the result of both rules to be that the law looks to the proximate cause, and "holds that person liable who was, in the main, the cause of the injury." As practically applied in England, it may, after all, be well doubted whether this whole line of cases means anything more than to illustrate and emphasize the distinction between causa causans, which the fundamental rules of the law regard, and causa sine qua non, which they do not regard.

As indicated by Pollock, Davies v. Mann is still the subject of discussion in America, except so far as it recognizes the rule of a subsequent, disconnected negligence, or the rule of causa causans, or that of perverseness or persistency, spoken of by Lord Ellenborough. It is in this light that the Inland & Seaboard Coasting Co. v. Tolson, 139 U. S. 551, 558, 559, 35 L. ed. 270, 272, 273, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 653, is to the implied effect that the negligence of the plaintiff is a defense unless the defendant had knowledge of the position. However, as the appeal at bar is in admiralty, it is not necessary for us to follow the intricacies of Davies v. Mann and its history. We do not know that Davies v. Mann, or any decisions of its kin, was ever cited in a maritime court. Attempts have been made in England to apply this class of cases in admiralty, with contradictory and unsatisfactory results. Marsden's Collisions at Sea, 5th ed. pp. 16-22. Certain it is that there are decisions of the highest authority in admiralty directly impugning Tuff v. Warman, and dividing the damages under the same substantial circumstances as those of that case, and disregarding any application of Davies v. Mann.

In the circuit court of appeals in the second circuit we find The James D. Leary, appearing in the district court in 110 Fed. 685, and affirmed in 51 C. C. A. 620, 113 Fed. 1019, on the opinion of the district court. Both vessels involved were steamers,—The James D. Leary and The Evelyn. The Evelyn was found at fault for coming to anchor east of the proper anchorage ground, as marked by buoys, but her anchor light was visible to the Leary from one to two miles. The damages were divided. There is no mistaking that this decision absolutely disregarded any rule found in Tuff v. Warman or in Davies v. Mann, although all the substantial circumstances were alike. The same must be said about The Providence, decided by this court, and reported in 38 C. C. A. 670, 98 Fed. 133, where a large Sound steamer coming into Fall river, was in collision with a schooner at anchor. The schooner was at fault. Nevertheless, the opinion observes at page 134, 98 Fed., page 671, 38 C. C. A., that, if the Providence had used proper precautions, the collision might have been avoided, or at least the consequences would not have been serious. Again the damages were divided.

In The America (The America v. Camden & A. R. Transp. Co.) 92 U. S. 432, 436, 23 L. ed. 724, 727, one vessel was a tug and the other a ferryboat. The ferryboat struck the tug on the port bow. The court states that the proofs were clear that each vessel was seen by the other in ample season to have prevented the collision, and yet, not only the ferryboat which struck the tug, but the tug, also, was held to half the damages. The New York, 175 U. S. 187, 209, 44 L. ed. 126, 135, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 67, is another very marked case. One steamer was in fault for not stopping when the other steamer failed to answer her signals. Both steamers saw each other, and both were held guilty, and damages divided. One of the most striking of all is Atlee v. Northwestern Packet Co. 21 Wall. 389, 392, 395, 397, 398, 22 L. ed. 619, 620, 621, 622, in which the circumstances were even more extreme than any which could be deduced from Davies v. Mann because in Davies v. Mann the object unlawfully left in the public highway was a donkey, only temporarily there, the presence of which might or might not be presumed to be known to travelers. In Atlee v. Northwestern Packet Co. the object unlawfully in the public highway—that is, in the river—was a pier of a permanent character, existing for so long a time that the court found that a skilful pilot was bound to know of it; and yet Atlee, who constructed and maintained the pier, as well as the steamer colliding with it, were both held liable, and the damages were apportioned equally between them. A more positive case is Cushing v. The John Fraser (The James Gray v. The John Fraser) 21 How. 184, 191, 16 L. ed. 106, 109, where the collision was with a vessel anchored in an improper place, without any light; but the other vessel was held in fault for not sighting her, and damages were equally divided. In every one of these cases the circumstances were known to the party who was guilty of the final negligent act. A multitude of other admiralty decisions to the same effect can be cited. Indeed, some of them go so far as to make it clear that the law of these tribunals is not strict with reference even to subsequent, and somewhat independent, disconnected negligences, as is the common law. In view of these propositions and decisions, we are not justified in applying in an admiralty case any peculiar rule which can be deduced, or ever has been deduced, from Davies v. Mann. Moreover, on this appeal it is not clear that one negligence did supervene on the other. It is not even known which party's negligence first originated. Certain it is that both were existing and concurring at the time of the accident. Moreover, as we have shown, it is not proved that Christiansen had an existing appreciation of all the conditions, or was guilty of perverseness. In any view, applying the practical rules of the decisions of the supreme court and of the courts of appeals which we have cited, neither party to this proceeding can escape the consequence of his own fault.

It may be, in view of the fact that the admiralty is, under no circumstances, as stringent as the common law in refusing to impose liability on one party on account of the contributory negligence of the other, that it need not apply the incidental rules of Davies v. Mann, and the cases akin to it, in any event. Its principal rule being amelioratory, it has no occasion to hold incidental rules too strictly for the purpose of avoiding results which otherwise might shock the common sense as to justice. However this may be, the decree of the district court must be modified to the extent of requiring a division of damages.

The decree of the District Court is reversed, and the case is remanded to that court, with directions to apportion to each party one half of the damages and of the interest thereon, and one half of the costs in the district court, and the appellant recovers its costs of appeal.

Petition for rehearing overruled March 17, 1905.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

George H. MARDEN

v.

PORTSMOUTH, KITTERY, & YORK STREET RAILWAY.

(.....Me.....)

1. Failure to look and listen before crossing a street car track at a public crossing cannot be said, as matter of law, to be negligence per se.
2. One in charge of an electric street car approaching a public crossing must anticipate that any person approaching the junction from either side may turn his team into the cross street, and must exercise all due care to have his car under such control as to be able to stop it at the crossing, if necessary, to avoid an accident.
3. The jury must decide whether or not, under all the circumstances of the case, a street car company is guilty of negligence in approaching a street crossing at an unreasonable speed, which results in a collision with a vehicle using the highway.
4. One about to drive across a street car track at a public street crossing is not required to look along the whole length of visible track to see if a car is coming, but only far enough to warrant an ordinarily careful and prudent man, having in mind his own safety, under like circumstances, to conclude that no car is in such proximity as, if properly managed, to endanger his safety in crossing.

5. The court will not, as matter of law, say that it is negligence for one driving a team to attempt to cross a street car track at a public crossing, after looking along the track 244 feet without seeing a car when he is only 20 feet from the track; but the question is for the jury.

(March 2, 1905.)

MOTION for new trial after verdict in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence, which was tried in York County. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. H. H. Burbank and John G. Smith, for plaintiff:

The fact that a person who, in attempting to cross a railroad, does not at the instant of stepping on it look to ascertain if a train is approaching, is not conclusive of a want of due care on his part.

Plummer v. Eastern R. Co. 73 Me. 593.

If the plaintiff looked back such a distance that a car in sight, moving at a proper rate of speed, and under proper management, could have been stopped before reaching the crossing, and saw no car, he was justified in crossing, or attempting to cross, the track.

NOTE.—As to measure of care required of person in crossing street car track, see also, in this series, Chicago City R. Co. v. Robinson, 4 L. R. A. 126; Carson v. Federal Street & P. Valley R. Co. 15 L. R. A. 257; Ehrisman v. East Harrisburg City Pass. R. Co. 17 L. R. A. 448; Newark Pass. R. Co. v. Bloch, 22 L. R. A. 374; McGee v. Consolidated Street R. Co. 26 L. R. A. 300; Cincinnati Street R. Co. v. Snell, 32 L. R. A. 276; Consolidated Traction Co. v. 60 L. R. A.

Scott, 33 L. R. A. 122; Baltimore Traction Co. v. Helms, 36 L. R. A. 215; Johnson v. St. Paul City R. Co. 36 L. R. A. 586; Evansville Street R. Co. v. Gentry, 37 L. R. A. 378; Hoelsel v. Crescent City R. Co. 38 L. R. A. 708; Tesch v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 63 L. R. A. 618; Roberts v. Spokane Street R. Co. 54 L. R. A. 184; Keenan v. Union Traction Co. 58 L. R. A. 217; and Kansas City Leavenworth R. Co. v. Gallagher, 64 L. R. A. 344.

Creavin v. Newton Street R. Co. 176 Mass. 529, 57 N. E. 994; Chaffee v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 104 Mass. 108; Williams v. Grealy, 112 Mass. 79; Duggan v. New England R. Co. 172 Mass. 337, 52 N. E. 519; Carlson v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 172 Mass. 388, 52 N. E. 520; Lahti v. Fitchburg & L. Street R. Co. 172 Mass. 147, 51 N. E. 524; Kelly v. Wakefield & S. Street R. Co. 179 Mass. 542, 61 N. E. 139.

Plaintiff's negligence, if any, was not a contributory cause. If defendant's car had been traveling at proper speed it could and should have been stopped.

Page v. Bucksport, 64 Me. 53, 18 Am. Rep. 299; O'Brien v. McGlinchy, 68 Me. 557; Pollard v. Maine C. R. Co. 87 Me. 55, 32 Atl. 735; Flewelling v. Lewiston & A. Horse R. Co. 89 Me. 594, 36 Atl. 1056; Atwood v. Bangor, O. & O. T. R. Co. 91 Me. 400, 40 Atl. 67; Conley v. Maine C. R. Co. 95 Me. 149, 49 Atl. 668; Ward v. Maine C. R. Co. 96 Me. 145, 51 Atl. 947; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 816.

The conduct of the motorman should be influenced by the fact that the vehicle is covered.

Tashjian v. Worcester Consol. Street R. Co. 177 Mass. 81, 58 N. E. 281.

An electric car has no paramount right of way over pedestrians or other vehicles at street crossings, but the rights of each are equal.

Joyce, Electric Law, § 589; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 992, 1028.

Due care of the plaintiff is a question of fact for the jury.

Hobbs v. Eastern R. Co. 66 Me. 575; Plummer v. Eastern R. Co. 73 Me. 591; Warren v. Bangor, O. & O. T. R. Co. 95 Me. 118, 49 Atl. 609; Treat v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 131 Mass. 371; Robbins v. Springfield Street R. Co. 165 Mass. 30, 42 N. E. 334; LeBlanc v. Lowell, L. & H. Street R. Co. 170 Mass. 567, 49 N. E. 927; Kelly v. Wakefield & S. Street R. Co. 179 Mass. 542, 61 N. E. 139.

Negligence of the defendant, and whether or not it was the proximate cause of the collision, are questions of fact for the jury.

Atwood v. Bangor, O. & O. T. R. Co. 91 Me. 400, 40 Atl. 67; Allen v. Boston & M. R. Co. 94 Me. 402, 47 Atl. 917; Conley v. Maine C. R. Co. 95 Me. 149, 49 Atl. 668; Ward v. Maine C. R. Co. 96 Me. 145, 51 Atl. 947; Griffin v. Boston & A. R. Co. 148 Mass. 143, 1 L. R. A. 698, 12 Am. St. Rep. 526, 19 N. E. 166; Kerrigan v. West 69 L. R. A.

End Street R. Co. 158 Mass. 305, 33 N. E. 523; Driscoll v. West End Street R. Co. 159 Mass. 142, 34 N. E. 171.

Messrs. J. C. Stewart, Emery & Sims, and O. D. Baker for defendant.

Spear, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on the case for negligence, resulting from a collision between the plaintiff's cart and the defendant's electric car. The case shows that the plaintiff, on the 15th day of June, 1901, was driving a covered butcher's cart along a public street in the town of Kittery in an easterly direction, parallel with the defendant's road, about 3 feet northerly thereof; the track being on the southerly side of the road. The highway and the track descend quite sharply towards the east, the grade being about 6 feet in 100. At the bottom of the grade, a cross-street called "Williams avenue" runs substantially at right angles and southerly from the highway on which the plaintiff was driving. When the plaintiff reached the mouth of Williams avenue he attempted to turn his team into it, thereby squarely crossing the defendant's rails. While crossing the track the front part of the off hind wheel of the plaintiff's cart was struck by the defendant's car, and the injuries were produced of which the plaintiff complains. After a long trial, involving more than 250 pages of testimony, the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff of $1,103.73. The case comes up on motion to set this verdict aside, as against the law and the evidence. The real issue to be considered is whether the defendant was guilty of negligence with respect to the speed with which it was running its car at the time the accident occurred, and whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. The evidence upon the one side and the other upon the point of speed is conflicting; the plaintiff and some of his witnesses contending that the car was running from 15 to 20 miles an hour down the grade towards the crossing, while those of the defendant assert the car was moving at a rate of only 4 or 5 miles an hour. There was also testimony on the part of the plaintiff bearing upon the question of speed, tending to show that the cart and horse were thrown bodily in the air when the car struck them,—the cart some 40 feet, and the horse half that distance,—and that the car itself ran from 150 to 200 feet beyond the center of the crossing before it could be stopped, although the motorman claims that he did all in his power to check the car in the quickest possible manner after he discovered that the plaintiff was about to cross the track in front of it. In finding the defendant guilty, the jury must have come to the conclusion that it was running its car at the time of the collision at an unsafe and unreasonable rate of speed.

But the defendant says, admitting its negligence as found by the jury, it is not guilty, because the plaintiff's own testimony, allow it to be true, clearly discloses the fact that by his own negligent acts he contributed to the accident which caused his injuries. Whether the plaintiff, in his connection with the accident, was guilty of contributory negligence, assuming the guilt of the defendant, may depend in a large degree upon the duty which the defendant, under the particular circumstances in this case, owed to the plaintiff. This consideration involves a question with respect to the relative rights and duties of electric cars and vehicles while concurrently approaching and passing over public street crossings. The law upon this subject seems to be well settled in many states. While the contention has been made that a person approaching an electric road with the intention of crossing the track should observe that same degree of watchfulness and care as when attempting to cross a steam road, it is readily obvious that the cases are entirely dissimilar. The steam road is invariably possessed of a private roadbed, protected by law, and vested with the right to punish as a trespasser any person who may invade its property outside of that part of its premises made public for the prosecution of its business. It is also permitted by law to propel its trains at a tremendous rate of speed, so that it is impracticable, if not impossible, to stop them quickly or within a short distance. The law recognizes these facts, and not only for the protection of the individual who may undertake to cross a steam railroad track, but for the safety of the many who may be riding in the public coaches, requires the individual, when he approaches the passageway of such an engine of destruction, within a proper distance of the track, to look and listen, not only with his eyes and ears, but with his mind, to discover whether a train is approaching. The law makes it imperative for travelers to do this, and a failure to comply with this law presumes them to be guilty of contributory negligence, if they are injured by a collision with a passing train. This is undoubtedly a wise and judicious law in its application to steam roads, but it should not be fully applied to the use of electric and other street railroads.

An electric road is installed and operated upon a principle entirely different from that of the steam road. Our court has said, in Briggs v. Lewiston & A. Horse R. Co. 79 Me. 367, 1 Am. St. Rep. 316, 10 Atl. 48, that "the laying down rails in the street, and the running street cars over them for the accommodation of persons desiring to travel on the street, is only a later mode of using the land as a way,—using it for the very purpose for which it was originally taken. It may be a change in the mode, but it is not a change in the use. The land is still used for a highway." This rule of law applies equally whether the motor for propelling the car is a horse, steam, or electricity. It is apparent, therefore, that the electric cars, which are now becoming of very common use, not only in our cities, but in our villages and country towns, are operated for the most part within the limits of the legally located highways, as said in Benjamin v. Holyoke Street R. Co. 160 Mass. 3, 39 Am. St. Rep. 446, 35 N. E. 95, where "the use of the street for electric cars and by the general public was concurrent; and the defendant was bound, in using the street, to have reference to its reasonable use by others." Unlike steam cars, the electric car runs, or may be run at times, through streets crowded with people and vehicles, and therefore, instead of being vested with the right to run at a rapid rate of speed, they are required to make a reasonable use of the streets, consistent with the rights of other persons and vehicles who may occupy the streets in conjunction with them. Upon this point, the court, in Driscoll v. West End Street R. Co. 159 Mass. 145, 34 N. E. 172, holds that "the drivers and conductors of street railway cars, whatever the motive power, have in general the same rights and duties with reference to other vehicles crossing their course that the drivers of omnibuses have, for example, or that the driver of any other vehicle has. O'Neil v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. 129 N. Y. 125, 26 Am. St. Rep. 512, 29 N. E. 84. In Com. v. Temple, 14 Gray, 69, 75, it is said: 'Where the entire public, each according to his own exigencies, has a right to the use of the highway, in the absence of any special regulation by law the right of each is equal. . . . Each may use it to his own best advantage, but with a just regard to the like right of others.'" See also Newark Pass. R. Co. v. Block, 55 N. J. L. 605, 22 L. R. A. 374, 27 Atl. 1067. But a reasonable use must be measured by the relative facility with which cars and other kinds of vehicles are able to move about, with respect to one another, in the streets. It must be recognized that cars are confined to a track, and are unable to turn to the right or to the left; that they are permitted to occupy the streets for the purpose of facilitating travel; and that teams and travelers, as far as practicable, must keep out of their way, and not impede their progress more than is absolutely necessary. It is perfectly obvious that a team can move with ease, while a car cannot, but is confined to one course; hence a reasonable use of the streets, having reference to the relative facility with which the locomotion of teams and cars can be controlled, necessarily gives the car between street crossings certain privileges over other vehicles. These superior privileges are well stated in O'Neil v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. 129 N. Y. 130, 26 Am. St. Rep. 512, 29 N. E. 85, as follows: "As the cars must run upon the tracks, and cannot turn out for vehicles drawn by horses, they must have the preference; and such vehicles must, as they can, in a reasonable manner, keep off from the railroad tracks, so as to permit the free and unobstructed passage of the cars. In no other way can street railways be operated. As to such vehicles, the railways have the paramount right, to be exercised in a reasonable and prudent manner."

But in the end, what is a reasonable use, is a question of fact, depending upon the circumstances of each particular case, having reference to the manner in which street railroads are obliged to be operated, and the purpose for which they are designed. Hall v. Ogden City Street R. Co. 13 Utah, 243, 57 Am. St. Rep. 729, 44 Pac. 1046; Driscoll v. West End Street R. Co. 159 Mass. 142, 34 N. E. 171.

Yet the defendant seems to assume in its brief that the same rule with respect to approaching a public street crossing traversed by electric cars applies to electric as to steam roads, and asserts that on this point this case falls clearly within the decision of Blumenthal v. Boston & M. R. Co. 97 Me. 255, 54 Atl. 747, and Day v. Boston & M. R. Co. 97 Me. 528, 55 Atl. 420. But the same rule does not apply. While it may be found, as a matter of fact, in any case involving an accident by crossing in front of an electric car, that it was the duty of the person undertaking to so cross to look and listen, it cannot be laid down as a rule of law that a failure to do this does per se constitute negligence. That is, whether the failure of the party injured to look and listen, before undertaking to pass in front of an electric car, constitutes negligence, is a question of fact, while the failure to do so in attempting to pass in front of a steam car is a matter of law. Our court has directly passed upon this distinction with respect to the duty imposed upon one approaching the crossing of steam and electric railroad tracks. Fairbanks v. Bangor, O. & O. R. Co. 95 Me. 60 L. R. A.

78, 49 Atl. 421, and Warren v. Bangor, O. & O. R. Co. 95 Me. 115, 49 Atl. 609. But the question is now so distinctly raised anew, and becomes so material in determining the rights of the parties in this case, that a more extended consideration may also be proper. The defendant claims, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff should have looked and listened immediately before going upon the crossing; but both of the cases last cited in 95 Me. and 49 Atl. hold to the contrary, and the weight of authority and the soundness of reasoning are also clearly the other way. This question was sharply raised in a recent Massachusetts case,—Robbins v. Springfield Street R. Co. 165 Mass. 30, 42 N. E. 334. The defendant requested the judge to give the following instruction: "If the plaintiff failed to look and listen, when by looking or listening he could have perceived the approach of the car, and the plaintiff drove in front of the car, and such failure to look and listen contributed directly to his injury, then he cannot recover, and the verdict should be for the defendant." The judge refused to give the instruction. Chief Justice Field, in passing upon the ruling of the court, said: "The questions of the due care of the plaintiff and of the negligence of the defendant's servants, we think, were for the jury, on the evidence which appears in the exceptions." He then holds, alluding directly to the above request, that "the third request could not properly have been given as an absolute rule of law. The decisions of this court show that a distinction has been taken with respect to the duty to look and listen when crossing the tracks of a steam railroad, where a railroad train has the exclusive right of way, and when crossing the tracks of a street railway company in a public street, where the cars have not an exclusive right of way, but are run in the street in common with other vehicles and with travelers. The fact that the power used by the street railway company is electricity, instead of that of horses, has not been deemed by the court sufficient to make the rule of law which has been laid down concerning the crossing of the track of a steam railroad exactly applicable to a street railway." In Hall v. West End Street R. Co. 168 Mass. 461, 47 N. E. 124, the court says: "There is no absolute rule of law that, to be in the exercise of due care, one about to cross a public street must look and listen for approaching vehicles;" and cites Robbins v. Springfield Street R. Co. 165 Mass. 30, 42 N. E. 334. In this case the verdict was directed for the defendant because, under the peculiar circumstances, the inference of fact was conclusive that the plaintiff's failure to look and listen constituted negligence and contributed to the accident. Again, it is held in Benjamin v. Holyoke Street R. Co. 160 Mass. 4, 39 Am. St. Rep. 446, 35 N. E. 95, that "the court rightly refused to instruct the jury that a mere failure to look would prevent her from recovering. This has been so held even in cases of collision. [Consolidated Traction Co. v. Scott, 58 N. J. L. 682, 33 L. R. A. 122, 55 Am. St. Rep. 629, 34 Atl. 1094;] Shapleigh v. Wyman, 134 Mass. 118; French v. Taunton Branch R. Co. 116 Mass. 537. The question was left to the jury, with proper instructions."

In Hall v. Ogden City Street R. Co. 13 Utah, 243, 57 Am. St. Rep. 733, 44 Pac. 1046, it is held: "Persons traveling on a public street along or across a street railway track are not held to the exercise of the same degree of care and precaution as they are when traveling along, or upon, or across, an ordinary steam railroad."

In Consolidated Traction Co. v. Scott, 58 N. J. L. 682, 33 L. R. A. 122, 55 Am. St. Rep. 629, 34 Atl. 1094, we find the rule stated in this way: "It may be said with reference to this request to charge that the proposition that one, to be in the exercise of due care, must look and listen before crossing a steam railway, is well established; but this duty does not apply with equal force to one in crossing the tracks of a street railway."

Wendell v. New York O. & H. R. R. Co. 91 N. Y. 429, holds: "The rules of conduct which should govern the approach of travelers to crossings over street railways, or in the track of vehicles whose rate of progress is under the control of their drivers, are necessarily quite different from those applicable to the crossing of the track of steam railroads, whose trains traverse vast distances, carrying great burdens, and moving with a momentum necessarily destructive to bodies with which they come in contact." This case was against a steam railway company, and the above quotation is employed to show the distinction between the rights and duties of steam and electric roads.

It is said in Evansville Street R. Co. v. Gentry, 147 Ind. 408, 37 L. R. A. 378, 82 Am. St. Rep. 423, 44 N. E. 311: "The rules that govern as to the crossing of steam railroads by travelers upon the highway are not fully applicable to street railroad crossings in cities. . . . The rule, therefore, to stop and look and listen, cannot apply, as it does to the crossing of a steam railroad track." In White v. Worcester Consol. Street R. Co. 167 Mass. 43, 44 N. E. 1052, Mr. Justice Holmes, as late as 1896, stated the proposition in this way: "But we suppose that the request was intended to embody a statement of the rights of electric cars, irrespective of practice, and to put street railways on very nearly the footing of steam railroads. Whatever may be the law as to the latter, there is great difference between the two cases. Electric cars are far more manageable and more quickly stopped than trains upon steam railroads."

The duty imposed upon street cars when approaching public street crossings also clearly shows that the same rule with respect to such crossings cannot be invoked for both electric and steam cars. The very fact that the law, as far as we have been able to discover, almost universally holds that, upon the approach of public street crossings, the rights of street cars and vehicles are equal, and that neither has a paramount right over the other, necessarily modifies the rule applicable to the approach of steam car crossings.

If it was not incumbent upon the plaintiff, as a matter of law, to look and listen, what was the duty of the defendant to the plaintiff in the management of its car in approaching a public crossing in conjunction with the plaintiff? We can readily see, if the law gave the defendant an absolute right of way, to the seclusion of all else, like a steam car, and also required the plaintiff to look and listen, and, if he saw a car coming, however far away, and was injured, made him guilty of negligence, and, if he did not see the car, made him guilty for not seeing it, that the defendant could run its cars at almost any rate of speed, however negligent, without being chargeable with liability, on account of necessary contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff.

But under the above principles of law, applicable to the reasonable use of the highway by electric cars, and to the duty of travelers in their relations with them, we think the safe rule to lay down with respect to the management of electric or other motor cars at street crossings is this: That the motorman, when approaching a public street, shall be held to anticipate that any person approaching such junction from either side may turn his team into it, and shall then exercise all due care to have his car under such control as to be able to stop it at the crossing if necessary to avoid an accident. This rule places upon the railroad using the highway only that degree of care that is commensurate with public safety and with a reasonable use of the road. It is also well-settled law. And it is proper to here observe that the decisions impose a special duty upon cars operated in the streets when approaching street crossings,—a duty which, instead of clothing them with the paramount rights conceded between crossings, places them upon an equal footing with other vehicles rightfully occupying the streets. In the great state of New York, with its numerous cities and large towns, in which, without doubt, the necessity for rapid transit is as imperative as in any state in the Union, we find the distinction fully and clearly stated in the O'Neil Case, 129 N. Y. 130, 26 Am. St. Rep. 512, 29 N. E. 85. After the quotations above alluded to, finding, as to vehicles moving in the streets, that the railways have a paramount right, to be exercised in a reasonable and prudent manner, the court then proceeds to define their rights upon approaching crossings in this language: "But a railway crossing a street stands upon a different footing. The car has the right to cross, and must cross, the street, and the vehicle has the right to cross, and must cross, the railroad track. Neither has a superior right to the other. The right of each must be exercised with due regard to the right of the other, and the right of each must be exercised in a reasonable and careful manner, so as not unreasonably to abridge or interfere with the right of the other."

Driscoll v. West End Street R. Co. 159 Mass. 142, 34 N. E. 171, involving an accident at a street crossing, also recognizes the difference between the privileges of street cars while moving along the streets and when approaching street crossings and expressly differentiates Com. v. Temple, 14 Gray, 69, relative to the rights of cars running between crossings. The court say: "Street railway companies, under the decision of Com. v. Temple, 14 Gray, 69, in running their cars, have certain rights in the streets, different from those which belong to the drivers of ordinary vehicles, but none of these rights is directly involved in the case at bar;" and then lay down the principle: "The drivers and conductors of street railway cars, whatever the motive power, have, in general, the same rights and duties with reference to . . . vehicles crossing their course that the drivers of omnibuses have, for example, or that the driver of any other vehicle has;" and cite and adopt the O'Neil Case, in 129 N. Y. 125, 26 Am. St. Rep. 512, 29 N. E. 84, which specifically distinguishes the rights of cars at street crossings.

In Richmond R. & Electric Co. v. Garthright, 92 Va. 627, 32 L. R. A. 220, 53 Am. St. Rep. 844, 24 S. E. 267, it is held: "The people of a city and vehicles have the same right to pass along an intersecting street as the car has to go across it. 'The car has a right to cross, and must cross, the street, and vehicles and foot passengers have a right to cross, and must cross, the railroad track. Neither has a superior right to the other.' O'Neil v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. 129 N. Y. 125, 26 Am. St. Rep. 512, 29 N. E. 84; Buhrens v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. 53 Hun, 571, 6 N. Y. Supp. 224, Affirmed in 125 N. Y. 702, 26 N. E. 752; Chicago City R. Co. v. Young, 62 Ill. 238; Booth, Street Railways, § 304, and cases there cited. And it is gross negligence in a street railway company to overcrowd and load down its cars with passengers beyond any reasonable and proper limit, and consequently not to be able to control and stop them readily as they approach an intersecting street, in case it may be necessary to do so to avert a collision or prevent an accident."

Evers v. Philadelphia Traction Co. 176 Pa. 376, 53 Am. St. Rep. 674, 35 Atl. 140, holds: "The fact that more caution should be exercised in running over crossings than on the street between them warrants no inference that the car can be run without caution except on approaching crossings. In the one case, rapid running is of itself evidence of negligence; in the other, it is not." This case distinctly holds that it is negligence per se to run an electric car rapidly over a crossing. Buhrens v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. 53 Hun, 571, 6 N. Y. Supp. 224; Western Paving & Supply Co. v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 25 Am. St. Rep. 477, note: "But at street crossings the right of a street railway company to the street, and its right to the use thereof, in respect to other vehicles, are precisely the same as those of such other vehicles."

Anderson v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. 42 Minn. 490, 18 Am. St. Rep. 525, 44 N. W. 518, also holds: The driver of a street car must be in a place and condition to exercise a reasonable degree of care and diligence in watching the street ahead of him, so as to prevent collision and avoid injuries to pedestrians lawfully traveling thereon.

In Evansville Street R. Co. v. Gentry, 147 Ind. 408, 37 L. R. A. 378, 62 Am. St. Rep. 423, 44 N. E. 311, it is held: "The street car, therefore, ought to be under full control as it passes over the crossing; and, as said in Cincinnati Street R. Co. v. Whitcomb, 14 C. C. A. 183, 31 U. S. App. 374, 66 Fed. 915, it is not the law that persons crossing street railway tracks in the city are obliged to stop as well as look and listen before going over such tracks, unless there is some circumstance which would make it ordinarily prudent to do so." See also other authorities cited, showing that the rules which must be observed in crossing the tracks of the steam railroads do not strictly apply to the crossing of electric or cable lines in cities.

In Joyce on Electric Law, § 589, we find the following: "An electric car has no paramount right of way over pedestrians or other vehicles at street crossings, and the rights of each are equal." See also numerous cases cited in the note.

If it was the duty of the motorman—and we find that it was—to run his car in approaching a public crossing at a rate of speed that would enable him to have it under the degree of control prescribed by the above rules of law, then arises the first question of fact put in issue in this case: Did the motorman, in approaching the crossing at which the plaintiff was injured, have his car under proper control, or, e converso, was he running it at an unreasonable and negligent rate of speed? The undisputed evidence shows that the approach to this crossing was down a sharp grade, upon which the speed of the car would, from gravity alone, naturally be rapid. As before stated, the testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses tends to show that the car was moving at a rate of 15 to 20 miles an hour, and this testimony seems to be corroborated by other evidence relative to the distance which the horse and cart were carried by the impact of the car, and the distance which the car traversed before it finally stopped. All this evidence is controverted by the defendant's witnesses, but a careful reading of the testimony, while it might leave the question of speed somewhat in doubt, nevertheless warranted the jury in concluding that, under all the circumstances, the defendant's car, in approaching the crossing, was propelled at an unreasonable and dangerous rate of speed. "In determining whether the cause should go to the jury, we must give plaintiff the benefit of the most favorable view of his facts, and of every reasonable inference therefrom." Buck v. People's Street R. & Electric Light & P. Co. 108 Mo. 186, 18 S. W. 1090.

Upon this point, then, assuming that the finding of the jury was correct, arises the legal proposition, Does an unreasonable rate of speed by a street car constitute negligence? Our courts have repeatedly held that the speed of a car is a fact from which negligence may be inferred, and that whether such speed in any particular case constituted negligence was peculiarly a question for the determination of the jury.

In Hall v. Ogden City Street R. Co. 13 Utah, 243, 57 Am. St. Rep. 726, 44 Pac. 1046, we find this principle: "Some courts hold that, where the speed is greater than that permitted by the ordinance, it is negligence per se; but the better rule, and the one sustained by the weight of authority, appears to be that it is a circumstance from which negligence may be inferred, and is always proper to be considered by the jury 69 L. R. A.

in determining the question whether or not the railway company was guilty of negligence."

In Birmingham R. & Electric Co. v. City Stable Co. 119 Ala. 615, 72 Am. St. Rep. 957, 24 So. 558, the court says: "But if he had a right to drive on the track for the purpose of crossing it at this particular place, then it became their duty, not only to keep a lookout to observe him, but also to run the car at such a rate of speed on approaching the place, and to retain such control over it, as to be able to bring it to a full stop before striking the horse." In Newark Pass. R. Co. v. Block, 55 N. J. L. 614, 22 L. R. A. 374, 27 Atl. 1067, in the court below the defendants requested the judge to rule, in effect, that they had a right to run their cars through the streets at a high rate of speed, to accomplish the object of "rapid transit," and that it was the duty of other occupants of the street, at their peril, to keep out of the way of a moving car; and the court held: "It is a proposition applicable to the crossing of the highway by the lines of a steam railroad. It is inapplicable to the crossing of the street railway, the cars on which must not exceed such speed as will permit the lawful customary use of the highway by others with reasonable safety."

But it is unnecessary to cite further decisions upon this point. Not only all the authorities, but good common sense, invoke such to be the law. We therefore must let the verdict of the jury stand with respect to the rate of speed at which the defendants were running their car in approaching the crossing at the time of the collision, causing the accident to which the plaintiff attributes his injuries.

The only remaining question to be determined is whether the plaintiff, under the circumstances in this case, in attempting to pass over the crossing as he did, was guilty of contributory negligence. We have already seen that he was not required, as a matter of law, to look and listen. The question therefore now arises whether, as a matter of fact, under all the testimony, the exercise of ordinary care and prudence required him to do so, otherwise than the undisputed testimony shows he did,—at a distance of 20 feet from the track? Upon this point the defendant's contention is that, "if the plaintiff looked at all when 20 feet away from the crossing, he looked carelessly, and failed to see what was in plain sight. There can be no legal difference between negligence in the manner of looking and negligence in not looking at all." This may be a correct proposition of abstract law, but it does not fully apply to the facts in this case. Whether the plaintiff was negligent, if he looked and did not see, was a question of fact, depending upon the measure of duty devolving upon him to see. If this had been a steam road, it would undoubtedly have been the duty of the plaintiff to have observed the track to the fullest extent of the view to see if a train was coming, because ordinary care in such a case requires it; the degree of care on his part being commensurate with the degree of danger incident to the irresistible degree of speed and momentum acquired by steam cars when in motion. In like manner the degree of care to be observed by the plaintiff in crossing the defendant's track at the street junction is to be measured by the correlative duty of the electric car in approaching the same junction. But we have already determined that a car in approaching a crossing has only the same rights as other vehicles, and must be under control. Hence, as a corollary of this proposition, the plaintiff had a right to rely upon the assumption that the defendant would discharge its legal duty in approaching the crossing by having its car under control, and such assumption is embraced within the rule of ordinary care in its application to the plaintiff's duty. Under this rule, the plaintiff was not necessarily required to look the whole length of the visible track to see if the car was coming, but along the track far enough to warrant an ordinarily careful and prudent man, having in mind his own safety, under like circumstances, to conclude that no car was in such proximity, if properly managed, as to endanger his safety in crossing. Hill v. West End Street R. Co. 158 Mass. 458, 33 N. E. 582.

The decisions amply sustain this position. Newark Pass. R. Co. v. Block, 55 N. J. L. 605, 22 L. R. A. 374, 27 Atl. 1067, is a case in which the relative rights and duties of a street railroad in operating its cars in the streets, and of other occupants of the street, are fully discussed and carefully considered. The decision arose upon the following request: "If the jury believe the account of the plaintiff and her witnesses as to the fact that one car stopped at Prince street and passed the other below that street, it was the duty of plaintiff to wait long enough before crossing to allow the down-car to pass far enough for her to see whether another was coming, and, if she neglected that duty, she was guilty of contributory negligence, and cannot recover, although the jury may believe that the up-car was going at an unusual rate of speed; the track being straight, and the car visible far enough to avoid it at any possible speed." The judge declined to give this request, otherwise than he had already done, and exceptions were taken. The court then proceeds to say: "The contention of plaintiff in error rather takes this shape: It asserts that its cars, propelled by electricity, are capable of being run at greater speed than other vehicles in the highway, and that the public convenience demands for passengers carried in such cars what is called 'rapid transit;' and it draws the inference that its cars may therefore be run at such speed as will satisfy this public demand, and that other persons lawfully using the highway in the customary modes must govern themselves and use the highway accordingly. Judicial opinions have been cited to us which appear to support these extraordinary propositions. I am unable to subscribe to the motion which, carried to its logical conclusion, would permit this company and other companies running cars in public highways, propelled by electricity, cables, etc., to run at any rate of speed which they may deem a demand undefined and unrecognized by law to require. . . .

"But the request before us brings into question the extent to which one crossing the roadway on foot must extend his observation. Its claim is that such observation must be extended to any approaching car, no matter how distant. But this is obviously an exaggerated notion of the duty required. The most prudent man would never suppose himself required to thus observe. If such rule of duty were adopted and practised in a crowded city, the crossing of many streets would be barred to pedestrians for a great part of the time. The general rule to which we have recurred does not justify this excessive view of the duty required. It will require one crossing the roadway on foot to extend his observation only to the distance within which vehicles proceeding at customary and reasonably safe speed would threaten his safety. . . .

"Prudence doubtless requires one about to cross a railroad track to use his eyes to observe any approaching car within his vision. But, as has been shown, prudence does not require one crossing the track of a street railway to extend his observation to the whole line of track within his vision, but only to such distance as, assuming the required care in their management, approaching cars would imperil his crossing."

While the last two paragraphs apply particularly to pedestrians, we think that they are equally applicable to the duty devolving upon teams in their use of the streets in connection with electric or other motor cars, or, as expressed in the opinion, upon "persons lawfully using the highway in the customary modes." In fact, tho opinion quoted bases its discussion of the principle therein enunciated upon the relative rights of cars using the streets, and of "persons lawfully using the highway in the customary modes," which, of course, embraces both teams and pedestrians. Under these rules of law governing the duty of the plaintiff, was he, in crossing the defendant's tracks, under all the circumstances involved, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence, or was the question whether his conduct on that occasion constituted contributory negligence one of fact for the jury?

The plaintiff testifies as to what he did with respect to the exercise of care in looking for the car as follows:

Q. Did you allow your eye that day, as you looked back, to travel back as far as you could see at your point of view?

A. That I could not say. I know I looked back to see if there was a car coming. I know I looked back beyond Mrs. Morse's.

The undisputed evidence shows that the Morse house, referred to, was 244 feet from the crossing. Another witness testifies positively that at the time the plaintiff was making a turn to cross the track into Williams avenue the electric car was just coming by the end of the Morse house,—as the evidence shows, 244 feet away.

The motorman testified as follows:

Q. When did you observe Mr. Marden turning to cross?

A. When I was most to the avenue.

Q. How far?

A. Between 40 and 50 feet,—somewhere along there.

Q. How near was Mr. Marden's team to the rails when he made the turn, or attempted to make the turn?

A. Five feet.

Q. Did Mr. Marden at any time, from the top of the hill until he made the turn to Williams avenue, drive his horse to the other side of the road?

A. I did not see him do that.

Q. Did Mr. Marden or anybody else look out from the front end of the cart back towards the car?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was the rear end of the cart closed or open?

A. Closed.

Q. Was the cart entirely covered, or an open cart?

A. Entirely covered.

Q. When Mr. Marden turned his horse to cross the track, what did you do?

A. I set up my brakes as hard as I could.

69 L. R. A.

And this, as far as the evidence shows, was the first act on the part of the motorman towards any effort to check the car so as to have it under control at the crossing.

Can the court say, under the law applicable to the duty respectively resting upon cars and teams in approaching a street junction, that it was negligence per se for the plaintiff to undertake to cross the car track into another street when the track was clear for a distance of 244 feet? We think it cannot. We think it was a question for the jury to determine. If the jury believed, as they might, that the plaintiff, 20 feet therefrom, looked up the track a sufficient distance to discover whether a car was in such close proximity as to imperil his crossing the track, and, discovering none, undertook to cross, they well might find that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, and that the failure of the motorman to apply the brakes until within 40 feet of the accident was a clear case of negligence.

Driscoll v. West End Street R. Co. 159 Mass. 146, 34 N. E. 171, already cited, is a case which, in many of its elements, is not unlike the case at bar. The court says: "In the present case we think the questions of due care on the part both of the plaintiff and of the defendant's servants were for the jury. One circumstance to be considered is that the plaintiff's horses were across the defendant's track at the time his wagon was hit. When two vehicles are approaching at reasonable rates of speed on converging lines, the question arises as to which should give way; and one circumstance to be considered is, which, according to the rates of speed they are going, will first reach the point where the lines of travel cross each other. The plaintiff's testimony is that the car was nearly 400 feet from him when he proceeded to cross Hanover street diagonally to Elm street. It seems to have been daylight, and, although it does not appear when the driver of the car first saw the plaintiff, no reason appears why he should not have seen him long before he applied the brakes. The evidence was that he put on the brakes five or ten seconds before the collision and when the front of the car was about 20 feet from the plaintiff. It was the duty of the driver of the car to keep a reasonable lookout for teams coming from cross streets and reasonable control of his car, so as to avoid collisions, and we think that there was evidence for the jury that this was not done. Neither can we say that there was not evidence for the jury that the plaintiff was in the exercise of due care. Apparently, if the speed of the car had been seasonably checked, the collision would have been avoided, and the danger was not immediate when the plaintiff undertook to cross the track."

This case, we think, is fully applicable to the one at bar. In this case the motor-man was running his car down a sharp grade in plain daylight, having the plaintiff in view all the time, approaching the crossing of a street at this time "considerably used for vehicles," as evidence shows, charged with the duty of anticipating that the plaintiff might turn into the avenue, as he did, and of having his car under control; and yet he did not set the brakes for the purpose of controlling his car until within 40 feet of the crossing. We feel inclined to affirm of this conduct what was said in the last case cited: "Apparently, if the speed of the car had been seasonably checked, the collision would have been avoided, and the danger was not immediate when the plaintiff undertook to cross the track."

Motion overruled.

Judgment on the verdict.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Henry SOUTHER et al.

v.

City of GLOUCESTER.

(187 Mass. 552.)

1. The fact that the construction of waterworks is a public use to be paid for by taxation does not require the basing of all rates upon the amount of water used in each instance, and on nothing else.
2. Owners of cottages in outlying districts of a city cannot complain that some discrimination is made in rates between them and consumers in the heart of the city, where special circumstances exist which justify it.
3. One charging that water rates imposed upon his property are unreasonable has the burden of establishing that fact.
4. Owners of summer cottages in outlying districts, who desire to use water from a city system during part of the year only, may be required to pay the same amount for such water as owners of property in the city are required to pay for service during the whole year, where the laying of special pipes and the construction of an additional reservoir are necessary to enable the city to furnish the water, which facts create special circumstances justifying a discrimination in rates between the two classes of consumers; and they cannot complain that the rule requiring payment in advance is applied to them.

(March 4, 1905.)

REPORT by the Superior Court for Essex County for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court of a bill filed to enjoin the cutting off of plaintiff's water supply. Dismissed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. D. Chauncey Brewer, for plaintiffs:

The plaintiffs cannot be discriminated against on the ground that special expense has been incurred in order to serve them.

The general expenses of providing a supply of water, and the general benefits to the municipality from the uses of water, which are not strictly public, are paid for by general taxation of the inhabitants.

Merrimack River Sav. Bank v. Lowell, 152 Mass. 556, 10 L. R. A. 122, 28 N. E. 97; Opinion of Justices, 150 Mass. 597, 8 L. R. A. 487, 24 N. E. 1084; San Diego Land & Town Co. v. National City, 174 U. S. 739, 43 L. ed. 1154, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 804.

Nothing differentiated the plaintiffs from the regular customers of the city of Gloucester (who used the water under the faucet system for household purposes) in such a way as to render them liable to a larger tax.

Ladd v. Boston, 170 Mass. 332, 40 L. R. A. 171, 49 N. E. 627.

Individuals have a constitutional right to insist that rates charged them by public-service corporations, and by municipalities performing similar offices, shall be reasonable.

Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 526, 42 L. ed. 842, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; Lowell v. Boston, NOTE.—As to regulation of municipal water supply generally, see note to State ex rel. Hallauer v. Gosnell, 61 L. R. A. 33.

As to validity of regulation of company requiring patron in default for rents to pay $1 as condition precedent to his right to be again furnished with water, see American Waterworks Co. v. State, 30 L. R. A. 447.

As to regulation that water will not be turned on in building until unpaid rents of previous owners or tenants are paid, see Turner v. Bevere Water Co. 40 L. R. A. 657.

As to right to remove meter and require consumer to pay according to number of fixtures, see Ladd v. Boston, 40 L. R. A. 171.

As to power to compel corporation to furnish water to individual, see note to Rushville v. Rushville Natural Gas Co. 15 L. R. A. 321; also Portland Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. State, 21 L. R. A. 639; Wood v. Auburn, 29 L. R. A. 376; and State ex rel. Milsted v. Butte City Water Co. 32 L. R. A. 697.

69 L. R. A.

111 Mass. 464, 15 Am. Rep. 39; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Turn Village Water Co. 98 Me. 214, 56 Atl. 763; Lumbard v. Stearns, 4 Cush. 60; Rogers Park Water Co. v. Fergus, 180 U. S. 628, 45 L. ed. 705, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 490.

When unreasonable rates are charged, or if the public is not served impartially, a company or city may be reached by the restraining hand of the court.

Kennebec Water District v. Waterville, 97 Me. 201, 60 L. R. A. 856, 54 Atl. 6.

A water company, or a municipality, abuses its franchises if it fails to furnish water; and it is its duty to supply all who apply for water on reasonable terms.

Turner v. Revere Water Co. 171 Mass. 329, 40 L. R. A. 657, 68 Am. St. Rep. 432, 50 N. E. 634; Lumbard v. Stearns, 4 Cush. 60; Young v. Boston, 104 Mass. 95; Kennebec Water District v. Waterville, 97 Me. 201, 60 L. R. A. 856, 54 Atl. 6; Opinion of Justices, 150 Mass. 597, 8 L. R. A. 487, 24 N. E. 1084; Wood v. Auburn, 87 Me. 292, 29 L. R. A. 376, 32 Atl. 906.

Rates and regulations must be uniform for parties charged by toll.

Young v. Boston, 104 Mass. 95; Mobile v. Bienville Water Supply Co. 130 Ala. 379, 30 So. 445; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 19; Griffin v. Goldsboro Water Co. 122 N. C. 206, 41 L. R. A. 240, 30 S. E. 319; Wood v. Auburn, 87 Me. 291, 29 L. R. A. 376, 32 Atl. 906; Twells v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.) 3 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 728.

The basis of all calculations as to the reasonableness of rates is reached by considering the right of the company to derive a fair income based upon the fair value of the property at the time of its being used by the public,—taking into account the cost of maintenance or depreciation and current operating expenses,—and, on the other hand, the right of the public, considered individually and not in the aggregate, to exact no more than the service is worth.

Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; San Diego Land & Town Co. v. National City, 174 U. S. 739, 43 L. ed. 1154, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 804; Covington & L. Turnp. Road Co. v. Sandford, 164 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 560, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 198; Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. (Cotting v. Godard) 183 U. S. 79, 46 L. ed. 92, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30; Kennebec Water District v. Waterville, 97 Me. 185, 60 L. R. A. 856, 54 Atl. 6.

Payments are to be exacted from water takers only for water "supplied at their request, and then only for what is furnished and for the time it is furnished."

Merrimack River Sav. Bank v. Lowell, 152 Mass. 556, 10 L. R. A. 122, 26 N. E. 97; Turner v. Revere Water Co. 171 Mass. 69 L. R. A.

329, 40 L. R. A. 657, 68 Am. St. Rep. 432, 50 N. E. 634.

A regulation providing that every taker of water shall be liable to pay rent for the whole year, whether he actually uses it for that length of time or not, and to make the payment in advance, is unreasonable.

Rockland Water Co. v. Adams, 84 Me. 472, 30 Am. St. Rep. 368, 24 Atl. 840.

A prospective water taker for two months, after tendering six months' advance payment (especially when it appears that this is all that is exacted of residents in the town), will not be required to pay for an additional six months' term, during which his tenement is unfitted for occupancy, even on the ground that he may have the privilege of bringing suit to recover back such excess.

Merrimack River Sav. Bank v. Lowell, 152 Mass. 556, 10 L. R. A. 122, 26 N. E. 97; Turner v. Revere Water Co. 171 Mass. 329, 40 L. R. A. 657, 68 Am. St. Rep. 432, 50 N. E. 634; Wood v. Auburn, 87 Me. 291, 29 L. R. A. 376, 32 Atl. 906; Rockland Water Co. v. Adams, 84 Me. 472, 30 Am. St. Rep. 368, 24 Atl. 840.

Messrs. Boyd B. Jones and Lincoln S. Simonds, for defendant:

The determination of rates by the water commissioners involves the exercise of their discretion, in which they may take into account, not only the quantity of water used by each taker, but also the use and benefit thereby accruing to the consumers, the number of persons served, the cost of supply, and the effect of a certain method of determining prices upon the revenues to be obtained by the city; and there is a presumption that in fixing rates they have acted fairly.

Ladd v. Boston, 170 Mass. 332, 40 L. R. A. 171, 49 N. E. 627; Parker v. Boston, 1 Allen, 361; St. Louis Brewing Asso. v. St. Louis, 140 Mo. 419, 37 S. W. 525, 41 S. W. 911.

There is a right to require payment in advance.

Turner v. Revere Water Co. 171 Mass. 329, 40 L. R. A. 657, 68 Am. St. Rep. 432, 50 N. E. 634.

Loring, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We do not stop to consider whether, on the evidence before the superior court, the plaintiffs were shown to have had any interest in the water rate for cottage B for the year in question, for we are of opinion that the finding of fact on the merits was not wrong as matter of law. As the bill must be dismissed, even if the preliminary difficulty which we have had is overcome, we prefer to dispose of the case on the ground on which it was tried and disposed of in the court below. The plaintiffs have undertaken to sweep aside any difference in rates charged them by reason of facts peculiar to the section of the city where the cottage in question is situated, on the ground that the construction of waterworks is a public use, to be paid for by taxation. From this they draw the inference that all rates are to be based on the amount of water used in each instance, and on nothing else. But that is not so. It was well said in Ladd v. Boston, 170 Mass. 332, 335, 40 L. R. A. 171, 49 N. E. 627: "Considerable discretion in determining the methods of fixing rates is necessarily given by the statute to the water commissioner. Money must be obtained from water takers to reimburse the city wholly or in part for the expense of furnishing water. An equitable determination of the price to be paid for supplying water does not look alone to the quantity used by each water taker. The nature of the use and the benefit obtained from it, the number of persons who want it for such a use, and the effect of a certain method of determining prices upon the revenues to be obtained by the city, and upon the interests of property holders, are all to be considered." See, in this connection, Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 546, 547, 42 L. ed. 819, 849, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; San Diego Land & Town Co. v. National City, 174 U. S. 739, 757, 43 L. ed. 1154, 1161, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 804; Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. (Cotting v. Godard) 183 U. S. 79, 95, 96, 46 L. ed. 92, 103, 104, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30. The special cost of extending the system to the "outlying section" in question; the fact that, even if water is wanted there for less than a year as a rule, the interest on the cost of the necessary special construction and on the construction of the works as a whole runs throughout the year; and the fact, if it is a fact, that there are but few persons who take water in this section, compared with the cost of extending the water system to it,—are all of them matters which can be taken into account in fixing a reasonable rate. It is proper, also, to take into account the additional fact that, "to enable the defendant to supply water to an increasing number of applicants therefor between the years 1900 and 1903, principally for summer houses, it was deemed necessary by the commissioners to construct during the year 1902 an additional reservoir or water basin at an expense of about $250,000." There may be other matters which have not occurred to us. It is true that the charge in question is not a charge for this district, but for summer houses generally, and there are 500 summer houses, of which the plaintiffs own but 92; that is to say, not quite one fifth. If the 69 L. R. A.

other four fifths are so situated that similar peculiar circumstances apply to them, no one could complain of this rate. The plaintiffs, in any event, cannot complain that some discrimination is made between them and water takers in the heart of the city, and they have gone no further than that in their proof in the case at bar. There is not enough here to enable us to say that, provided some discrimination can be made, the discrimination made is too great. The burden is on the plaintiffs to show that the rate in question is an unreasonable one, and they have not gone far enough to sustain the burden which rests on them.

The plaintiffs' objection that they are made to pay for a year in advance falls with their objection to paying for water in this "outlying section," for the part of the year as is paid for water for the whole year in the heart of the city. All rates are payable in advance.

The plaintiffs have relied on Rookland Water Co. v. Adams, 84 Me. 472, 30 Am. St. Rep. 368, 24 Atl. 840, Referred to in Turner v. Revere Water Co. 171 Mass. 329, 333, 40 L. R. A. 657, 68 Am. St. Rep. 432, 50 N. E. 634. It is enough to say of that decision, so far as the case now before us is concerned, that it did not appear that there were any special circumstances in it. The only question before the court there seems to have been whether, other things being the same, as much could be charged for water for four months as for the whole year.

The plaintiffs' citation of Norton v. Brookline, 181 Mass. 360, 63 N. E. 930, makes it necessary to point out that this is not a case submitted on agreed facts; that is to say, is not a case stated, but a case which was tried on a "statement of agreed facts submitted as evidence."

No error in law appearing in the finding of fact made by the Superior Court, the entry must be:

Bill dismissed.

Hiram E. CAMPBELL

v.

JUSTICES OF SUPERIOR COURT FOR SUFFOLK COUNTY.

(187 Mass. 509.)

A plaintiff in an equity case has no absolute right to proceed with the trial while he is in contempt of court for

NOTE.—For another case in this series as to dismissal of suit because of plaintiff's refusal to comply with directions of court, see Craft Refrigerator Mach. Co. v. Quinipiac Brewing Co. 25 L. R. A. 856.

As to right to strike out defendant's answer refusal to obey an order which can be enforced by mandamus.

(March 8, 1905.)

RESERVATION by the Supreme Judicial Court for Suffolk County for the opinion of the full bench of a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel the justices of the Superior Court to proceed with the trial of an action. Dismissed.

Petitioner filed his original bill seeking to enjoin the sale by the Carpenter-Morton Company of certain varnish stains, and to secure an accounting. Defendants filed a cross bill. Complainant's bill was dismissed, and under the cross bill he was enjoined from selling varnish stains. He disobeyed this injunction, and was adjudged in contempt, and a penalty laid upon him for the benefit of the defendants. Upon the accounting before the master, a finding was made in plaintiff's favor, to which both parties filed exceptions. Plaintiff requested the court to proceed with the hearing of the exceptions and upon its refusal sued out this writ.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Edgar O. Aohorn and Walter B. Grant, for petitioner:

The refusal to proceed is contrary to the petitioner's vested constitutional rights to a certain, free, prompt, and complete remedy for all injuries to his property, and that he shall not be deprived of it except by due process of law.

Bill of Rights, arts. 1, 10, 11, 12; U. S. Const. 5th Amend.

Due process of law is its regular administration, through courts of justice, by a timely and regular course of proceeding to judgment and execution.

Den ex dem. Murray v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 18 How. 272, 15 L. ed. 372; Rees v. Watertown, 19 Wall. 107, 22 L. ed. 72; Baker v. Kelley, 11 Minn. 480, Gil. 358; Dwight v. Williams, 4 McLean, 586, Fed. Cas. No. 4,218; Westervelt v. Gregg, 12 N. Y. 202, 62 Am. Dec. 160; Rowan v. State, 30 Wis. 129, 11 Am. Rep. 559; Huber v. Reily, 53 Pa. 112; State ex rel. Warfield v. Becht, 23 Minn. 413.

Mandamus is the proper remedy.

Chase v. Blackstone Canal Co. 10 Pick. 246; Re Strong, 20 Pick. 484; High, Mandamus, § 250, p. 189; People ex rel. Green v. De La Guerra, 43 Cal. 225; Carpenter v. Bristol County, 21 Pick. 258; Ex parte Morgan, 114 U. S. 174, 29 L. ed. 135, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 825; Ex parte Bradstreet, 7 Pet.

as a punishment for contempt, see Hovey v. Elliott, 39 L. R. A. 449, Affirmed in 42 L. ed. U. S. 215.

As to right to defend suit for divorce where 69 L. R. A.

647, 8 L. ed. 815; Re Washington & G. E. Co. 140 U. S. 91, 35 L. ed. 339, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 673; Ex parte Schollenberger, 96 U. S. 369, 24 L. ed. 853; Ex parte Russell, 13 Wall. 664, 20 L. ed. 632; People v. Common Pleas Judges, 1 Cow. 576.

The superior court having refused to let the case proceed according to the fixed rules of procedure of that court, the petitioner had no remedy by appeal, and none except by writ of mandamus.

Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wiswall, 23 Wall. 507, 23 L. ed. 103.

A court cannot deprive a party of his right of "due process of law" in the adjudication of his property rights, regardless of whether he is in contempt or not.

1 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. 5th ed. p. 505; Ricketts v. Mornington, 7 Sim. 200; Futroze v. Kennard, 2 Giff. 110; Fry v. Ernest, 9 Jur. N. S. 1151; Wilson v. Bates, 3 Myl. & C. 197; People ex rel. Crymble v. Horton, 46 Ill. App. 434; Ward v. Ward, 70 Vt. 430, 41 Atl. 435; Ferguson v. Elgin County, 15 Ont. Pr. Rep. 399; Hovey v. Elliott, 167 U. S. 409, 42 L. ed. 215, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 841.

A court cannot order plaintiff to perform the impossible, and then hold him in contempt, and deprive him of his legal rights for failure to obey.

Walton v. Walton, 54 N. J. Eq. 607, 35 Atl. 289; Hogue v. Hayes, 53 Iowa, 377, 5 N. W. 541; Ex parte Overend, 122 Cal. 201, 54 Pac. 740; Moseley v. People, 101 Ill. App. 564; Cooke v. Tanswell, 8 Taunt. 131.

Mr. G. W. Anderson, for respondents:

While the party in contempt has a right to defend himself against other parties who are prosecuting the case, he will not be permitted to ask for the favor of the court, nor to take any aggressive proceedings against his adversary.

Fletcher, Eq. Pl. & Pr. §§ 417, 559; Rapalje, Contempts, § 135; Brinkley v. Brinkley, 47 N. Y. 40; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 69 et seq.; Miller, Eq. Proc. § 243; Robinson v. Owen, 46 N. H. 38; Gordon v. Gordon, 141 Ill. 160, 21 L. R. A. 387, 33 Am. St. Rep. 294, 30 N. E. 446; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jennison, 60 Mich. 232, 27 N. W. 6; People ex rel. Gaynor v. McKane, 78 Hun. 154, 28 N. Y. Supp. 981; Wells, F. & Co. v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 9 Sawy. 601, 19 Fed. 20.

Knowlton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel the justices of the superior court defendant has failed to pay alimony as ordered by court, see Gordon v. Gordon, 21 L. R. A. 387.

to proceed with the hearing of a suit in equity, upon exceptions to a master's report, and thereafter upon the merits. We treat the reservation as a report of the questions of law which arise upon the record and the agreement of the parties, under Rev. Laws, chap. 156, § 7. We do not think that the slight change in this section from the language of Pub. Stat. 1882, chap. 150, § 8, was intended to change the meaning of the provision, and it has always been held that a justice of the supreme judicial court, sitting at the trial of an action at law, might report questions of law to the full court, without deciding them.

The petitioner, who is the plaintiff in that suit, is in contempt of the court for a violation of an injunction. The principal question is whether a plaintiff who is in contempt has an absolute right to proceed in the trial,—such that it is the legal duty of the court, upon his request, to permit him to go on. The authorities agree upon the familiar doctrine that a party in contempt is not in a position to ask the court for any favor or indulgence. 1 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. 5th Am. ed. 504, 505, and notes; Hovey v. Elliott, 167 U. S. 409, 42 L. ed. 215, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 841, and cases cited; Re Wickham, L. R. 35, Ch. Div. 272; Clark v. Dew, 1 Russ. & M. 103; Ricketts v. Mornington, 7 Sim. 200; Rogers v. Paterson, 4 Paige, 450. In Hovey v. Elliott, 167 U. S. 409, 42 L. ed. 215, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 841, many cases were reviewed; and it was held that, when a defendant in equity has filed an answer and prepared a defense, the plaintiff cannot have his answer stricken from the files, and the case go to judgment against him, because of his subsequent contempt. It was decided that such a proceeding, if enforced, would be a taking of property without due process of law. The case of Walker v. Walker, 82 N. Y. 260, which shows a different view, was criticized, and held to be without substantial support in the cases therein referred to. But the decision is not in conflict with the contention of the present respondents, that a plaintiff, while he is in contempt, cannot proceed to a trial upon the merits. The early English cases are conflicting on this point, but those that are relied upon by the petitioner (see Wilson v. Bates, 3 Myl. & C. 197; Cattell v. Simons, 5 Beav. 396; Chatterton v. Thomas, 36 L. J. Ch. N. S. 592) seem to be practically overruled by Re Wickham, L. R. 35 Ch. Div. 272, which holds that a plaintiff who disobeys an order for the payment of costs on a preliminary matter will not be allowed to proceed with his case. The principle is analogous to that which precludes a plaintiff who is nonsuited in an action at law from prosecuting a second suit until he has paid the costs. Rev. 69 L. R. A.

Laws, chap. 203, § 11. And it is inconsistent with the petitioner's contention that a plaintiff who has failed to do that which properly is required of him in the case may insist upon a trial as a matter of right. If a plaintiff prays for a decree against his adversary, we are of opinion that the principles stated in the cases first cited should be applied to a request to proceed with the case to a final judgment, as well as to requests for preliminary favors. It is plain that misconduct of a plaintiff that is treated as a contempt often may be of such a kind as would make it impossible to go on with the case without great injustice to the defendant. Suppose, for illustration, that a plaintiff disobeys an order to produce books and papers which the defendant is entitled to have in evidence, or refuses to answer interrogatories or questions put to him as a witness on the stand. It would be absurd to say that while in contempt for disobedience of an order of this kind a plaintiff would have a right to have the trial proceed. The statement of the law in Brinkley v. Brinkley, 47 N. Y. 40-49, is that "a party in contempt . . . will not be permitted to ask for the favor of the court, nor to take any aggressive proceedings against his adversary." The following cases also tend to support this proposition with greater or less force: Rogers v. Paterson, 4 Paige, 450; Hazard v. Durant, 11 R. I. 195; Walker v. Walker, 82 N. Y. 260; Pickett v. Ferguson, 45 Ark. 177-191, 55 Am. Rep. 545; Allen v. Georgia, 166 U. S. 138, 41 L. ed. 949, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 525; Robinson v. Owen, 46 N. H. 38. In Gordon v. Gordon, 141 Ill. 160-163, 21 L. R. A. 387, 33 Am. St. Rep. 294, 30 N. E. 446, the court said: "Where a complainant is in contempt, there may be cogent reasons for holding that his proceedings shall be stayed so long as he remains in contempt, under the well-known maxim that 'he who seeks equity must do equity.'" In the opinion in Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jennison, 60 Mich. 232, 27 N. W. 6, are found these words: "A complainant in a court of equity can always be compelled by that court to perform any conditions . . . which the court has a right to exact, by refusing to allow him to proceed in his cause until he does what he ought to do." In People ex rel. Crymble v. Horton, 46 Ill. App. 434, the court held that a defendant was not precluded from his right to defend by being in contempt, and added: "Had the suit been at his instance, and in such suit he, acting as one asking for relief, had been in contempt, a different question would have been presented." We are of opinion that a plaintiff who is in contempt of court cannot go on with his case against the defendant as a matter of right.

In many cases it would be plainly wrong to permit him to do so. It is conceivable that in others his objectionable conduct may be of such a kind, and the circumstances of the case may be such, that the court, in the exercise of its discretion, properly may permit him to go on. In a case like the present the court ought not to issue a writ of mandamus to compel the superior court to proceed with the trial.

It is contended that the last decree, ordering the plaintiff to pay the sum of $1,000 to the defendants, was erroneous. This part of the decree was intended to give the defendants compensation for their damages caused by the plaintiff's violation of the injunction. It has been said that, in the absence of statutory authority, the court cannot assess a party's damages for a breach of an injunction in a proceeding of this kind, and order them paid by the party in contempt. Swift v. State, 63 Ind. 81; Morris v. Whitehead, 65 N. C. 637; Re Pierce, 44 Wis. 411; State ex rel. Lanning v. Lonsdale, 48 Wis. 348, 4 N. W. 390; Eads v. Brazelton, 22 Ark. 499, 79 Am. Dec. 88. On the other hand, similar orders have been made without the authority of a statute. Wells, F. & Co. v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 9 Sawy. 601, 19 Fed. 20; Re North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co. 11 Sawy. 590, 27 Fed. 795; United States ex rel. D. & N. O. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 16 Fed. 853. In New York and Wisconsin, and probably in some other states, there are statutes in regard to this subject. We do not find it necessary to determine whether this part of the order is regular, for, if it is not, there is a valid adjudication that the plaintiff is in contempt. The decree referred to is in such a form that the first part of it is complete in itself, as an adjudication that the plaintiff is in contempt, and is separable from the last part, ordering the payment of damages.

We have considered the case on the merits, without passing on the question whether the petitioner has exhausted his rights in other forms of proceeding, so as to be entitled to make an application for this extraordinary remedy.

Petition dismissed.

Joseph HELLEN
v.

City of MEDFORD.

(188 Mass. 42.)

1. The statutory right to have dam-

NOTE.—As to legislative power to authorize the taking of land by eminent domain without compensation, see also, in this series, Abendroth v. Manhattan R. Co. 11 L. R. A. 634.

As to right to authorize temporary use of ages for land the fee of which is taken for public use assessed and paid in money is a substantial right which, after the proceedings have progressed so far that the fee has passed, cannot be impaired by the passage of a statute authorizing the abandonment of the land, and directing that the fee shall revert in the former owner, and the fact thereof be considered in reduction of the damages to be awarded.

2. Waiver of the right to have the whole damages for land the fee of which is taken for public use assessed and paid in money will be effected by the agreement of the former owner of the land that, if the proceedings are abandoned for his benefit, and the title reverted in him, his damages will be very light, if any.

(April 28, 1905.)

R EPORT by the Superior Court for Middlesex County for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court of a petition for the assessment of damages for land taken by eminent domain after the direction of a verdict in favor of petitioner Hellen for $1,000 and interest, and dismissing the claim of petitioner Cutter. Judgment for Hellen upon the verdict, and for Cutter for substantial damages.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Stephen H. Tyng and M. Lendsley Sanborn for petitioner.

Messrs. J. M. Hallowell and H. H. Kimball, for respondent:

Petitioner is estopped from denying the constitutionality of the statute of abandonment (Stat. 1900, chap. 196), and from claiming any more damages than he can recover under the agreement made between him and the city.

Retrospective laws which do not impair the obligation of contracts, or partake of the nature of ex post facto laws, are not condemned or forbidden by any part of the Constitution of the United States.

Watson v. Mercer, 8 Pet. 88, 8 L. ed. 876; Baltimore & S. R. Co. v. Nesbit, 10 How. 395, 13 L. ed. 469.

The landowner acquires his vested right under the statute when the highway is once completely established, and the damages of the land once settled by the mode pointed out by law.

Harrington v. Berkshire County, 22 Pick. 263, 33 Am. Dec. 741; New Bedford v. Bristol County, 9 Gray, 346; Corey v. Wrentham, 164 Mass. 18, 41 N. E. 101.

There is no provision in the Constitution which prevents the lawmaking power from changing the form of his remedy before the a public highway by a railroad company without compensation to abutting owner for destruction of access, see McKeon v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 61 L. R. A. 780.

landowner has taken advantage of the method already prescribed.

The city enters into no contract with the petitioner when it files its taking.

Danforth v. Groton Water Co. 178 Mass. 472, 86 Am. St. Rep. 495, 59 N. E. 1033.

He has no vested right under the statute until he has established his damages in the mode pointed out by the law.

Butler v. Palmer, 1 Hill, 324; Bennet v. Hargus, 1 Neb. 419; Untermeyer v. Freund, 7 C. C. A. 183, 20 U. S. App. 32, 58 Fed. 205; Dent v. Holbrook, 54 Cal. 145; Grim v. Weissenberg School District, 57 Pa. 433, 98 Am. Dec. 237; Pritchard v. Savannah Street & R. Resort R. Co. 87 Ga. 294, 14 L. R. A. 721, 13 S. E. 493.

A statutory right to a lien is not a vested right.

Woodbury v. Grimes, 1 Colo. 100; National Bank v. Williams, 38 Fla. 305, 20 So. 931; Holcomb v. Boynton, 151 Ill. 294, 37 N. E. 1031; Bangor v. Goding, 35 Me. 73, 56 Am. Dec. 688; Frost v. Ilsley, 54 Me. 345; John S. Hanes & Co. v. Wadey, 73 Mich. 178, 2 L. R. A. 498, 41 N. W. 222.

A party has no vested right to costs.

Taylor v. Keeler, 30 Conn. 324; Billings v. Segar, 11 Mass. 340; Com. v. Cambridge, 4 Met. 35; Ellis v. Whittier, 37 Me. 548.

Where a statutory remedy for a right created by the same statute is repealed, but the repealing statute provides a substantially similar remedy, the right may be prosecuted under the repealing statute.

Knoup v. Piqua Branch of State Bank, 1 Ohio St. 603; Debolt v. Ohio L. Ins. & T. Co. 1 Ohio St. 563; Mitchell v. Eyster, 7 Ohio, pt. 1, p. 257; Wilson v. Herbert, 41 N. J. L. 454, 32 Am. Rep. 243.

The legislature may take away one remedy for a cause of action already arisen and substitute another, although such change of remedy may affect the interests of individuals; and it does not matter that the law is retrospective if it is just.

Simmons v. Hanover, 23 Pick. 188; Upham v. Raymond, 132 Mass. 186; Jewett v. Phillips, 5 Allen, 150; Bigelow v. Pritchard, 21 Pick. 169; Loring v. Aline, 9 Cush. 68; Anding v. Levy, 57 Miss. 51, 34 Am. Rep. 435; 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 747-749; Forster v. Forster, 129 Mass. 559.

There is no constitutional right to a person whose land is taken to obtain the market value of the land. The only right under the Constitution is to obtain reasonable or adequate compensation.

Beale v. Boston, 166 Mass. 53, 43 N. E. 1029; Wall v. Platt, 169 Mass. 398, 48 N. E. 270.

Statutes authorizing discontinuance or abandonment are common.

Lynch v. Stone, 4 Denio, 356; Burnett v. Lynch, 60 L. R. A.

Com. 169 Mass. 417, 48 N. E. 758; Lewis, Em. Dom. 2d ed. chap. 29.

Hammond, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Under the authority of Stat. 1882, chap. 154, § 3, p. 111, the park commissioners of Medford took certain land, and on November 29, 1899, filed a certificate as required by the 4th section. No entry ever was made upon the land. The taking was simply on paper. By virtue of the proceedings, however, the respondent became the owner in fee of the land, and was bound to pay to those whose estate had been taken the damages respectively suffered by them. Stat. 1882, chap. 154, §§ 3, 6, pp. 111, 113; Hay v. Com. 183 Mass. 294, 67 N. E. 334. At the time of the taking the land was owned by the petitioner Hellen in fee, subject to an outstanding leasehold estate for years owned by one Cutter. It does not appear that the damages ever were estimated or determined by the commission. Several months after the taking, and while the parties were trying to come to some agreement as to the damages, and before any agreement had been reached or any proceedings had been taken in court, Stat. 1900, chap. 196, p. 138, was enacted. It provided that any part of the land or rights in land taken and described in the certificate of November 29, 1899, might in the manner set forth in the statute be abandoned; that such abandonment should "revest the title to such lands or rights as if they had never been taken, in the persons, their heirs and assigns, in whom it was vested at the time of taking;" and also that the abandonment might "be pleaded in reduction of damages in any suit on account of said takings." All of the land was duly abandoned in accordance with the terms of the statute, and to this petition that fact was pleaded in reduction of damages. The lessee, Cutter, upon a citation from the petitioner, appeared in the suit, and claimed damages for the loss of his leasehold estate. At the trial the court refused to rule as requested by the petitioners that Stat. 1900, chap. 196, p. 138, was unconstitutional, and submitted certain questions to the jury, who found, in substance, that the fair market value of the land at the time of the taking was $13,000; that the damage to Hellen by reason of the taking and abandonment was $1,000; that the damage to Cutter by the taking was $1,000, but, as reduced by the abandonment, nothing; and also that Hellen, by his agent, agreed that, if the property was abandoned by the respondent for his benefit, his damages would be very small. The judge thereupon ordered a verdict for the petitioner Hellen for $1,000 and interest, and at the request of the petitioner the case was reported to this court.

The first question is whether Stat. 1900, chap. 196, p. 138, is constitutional. In considering this question certain well-established rules must be borne in mind. Speaking generally, the power to take land for public use by right of eminent domain is limited not only as to quantity, but as to the nature of the interest taken, by the public necessity. It is said that "the right, being based upon necessity, cannot be any broader than the necessity." Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. 808. It therefore generally happens that in cases of land taken under the exercise of this right only an easement is taken, the fee remaining in the owner. A familiar example of this is to be found in the case of land taken for a highway. In such a case, where the easement is lawfully abandoned or discontinued as no longer necessary, the fee is in the owner, free from the easement; but, as stated by Shaw, Ch. J., in Harrington v. Berkshire County, 22 Pick. 263, 267, 33 Am. Dec. 741, "the enlarged enjoyment which the owner has thereby is not derived from the public, but is incident to the ownership which has always subsisted from the laying out of the highway." And in the case of such a lawful abandonment or discontinuance before the assessment of damages there can be no doubt that the fact of such an ending of the easement can be put in evidence on the question of damages. But the ground of the admissibility of this fact is not that the thing once taken from the owner has been restored to him, but that the evidence tends to show the nature and extent of the thing taken. The thing taken is the use of the land for a highway so long as the public necessity requires, and the sum to which the owner is entitled is the damage by reason of such taking. And that is the rule of damage all the way through, as well at the time of the trial as at the time of the taking. The evidence of a lawful ending of the easement before the trial, whether by discontinuance or otherwise, is admissible, therefore, to make more certain the nature of the easement taken, but not to show that the right to damages has been changed. It is manifest that the lawful ending of such an easement by the public authorities impairs no right of the landowner as to damages. It tends only to define this right as it at first existed.

It is pretty generally conceded, however, in the various state courts, that in some cases it is competent for the state to take for public use the land in fee, so that not even a possibility of reverter is left in the former owner. The idea seems to be that in some cases "the public purposes cannot be fully accomplished without appropriating the complete title, and [that] where this is so in the opinion of the legislature the same reasons which support the legislature in their right to decide absolutely and finally upon the necessity of the taking will also support their decision as to the estate to be taken." Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. 809, and cases cited in the notes. This principle is thus stated by Field, Ch. J., in Burnett v. Com. 169 Mass. 417, 48 N. E. 758: "When land is taken for a public use, it is ordinarily within the discretion of the legislature to determine whether it shall be taken in fee, so that when the public use is determined the title will remain in the body taking it, or whether it shall be taken only to the extent necessary for the public use, and so long as that use continues." As hereinbefore stated, in the case before us the fee was taken, leaving not even the possibility of a reverter in the former owner. Stat. 1882, chap. 154, §§ 3, 4, 6, pp. 111-113. For other instances of a taking of a fee, see Dingley v. Boston, 100 Mass. 544; Page v. O'Toole, 144 Mass. 303, 10 N. E. 851; Titus v. Boston, 161 Mass. 209, 36 N. E. 793. At the time Stat. 1900, chap. 196, p. 138, was enacted, the fee having passed to the respondent, the petitioners were entitled, under the Constitution and the statutes then in existence, to have their damages paid in money. This was a vested right. It is urged by the respondent that this vested right consisted of a constitutional right to reasonable compensation, and of the statutory right to have it assessed and paid in money; and that, while the constitutional right could not be impaired by the legislature, the statutory right might be changed at will, provided always that the constitutional right to reasonable compensation was not impaired. And it is urged that the statutory right does not become vested until it has been fully pursued and damages assessed. See Harrington v. Berkshire County, 22 Pick. 263, 33 Am. Dec. 741. While it is true that every state has complete control over the remedies it offers to suitors; while it may abolish one class of courts and create another, may abolish old remedies and substitute new, or may abolish even without substitution if a reasonable remedy remains (Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. pp. 515, 516, and cases cited in the notes thereto); and, while, as stated by Parker, Ch. J., in Com. ex rel. Springfield v. Highway Comrs. 6 Pick. 501, 508, "there is no such thing as a vested right in a particular remedy,"—yet a substantive vested right cannot be impaired under the guise of a change in the remedy. The statute in question did not undertake to define the nature of the thing originally taken, but to change the right to damages. Before the passage of the statute the petitioners were entitled to have their damages assessed and paid in money. This was a substantive right. After the statute they were deprived of this right, and were obliged to take land instead of money. This was a change, not only in the remedy, but in the thing that the petitioners were entitled to have. It is of no consequence whether the substantive right vests by virtue of a provision in the Constitution or in a statute, provided it is vested. The remedy may be changed, but the right to money cannot be changed. As to that, no matter how the remedy be changed, the result reached must be, in substance, the same. This conclusion is not inconsistent with the decision in Harington v. Berkshire County, 22 Pick. 263, 33 Am. Dec. 741, upon which the petitioners rely. We are of opinion, therefore, that the statute is unconstitutional as applicable to this case.

The next question is whether the petitioner Hellen is in a situation to avail himself of that point. The jury have found that he agreed that, if the property was abandoned by the respondent for his benefit, his damages would be very small, if any, and that $1,000 would be a reasonable sum for him under that agreement. It is not contended that the finding was not warranted by the evidence, and the fair inference is that the abandonment was made under that agreement. Under these circumstances, the case is within the well-known principle that, where a constitutional provision is designed for the protection of property rights of a person, it is competent for him to waive the protection, and to consent to such action as would be invalid if taken against his will (Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. 250, 251, and cases cited in the notes); and he must be held to have waived his right to insist upon the unconstitutionality of the statute. It does not appear, however, that Cutter waived his rights.

The result is that as to Hellen there should be judgment on the verdict, and as to Cutter judgment for $1,000, with interest; and it is so ordered.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Mary KELLEY, Admr., etc., of Ellen Neville, Deceased, Appt.,
v.

BUFFALO SAVINGS BANK, Respt.

(180 N. Y. 171.)

1. Ordinary care, under the circumstances of each particular case, is the measure of the duty of a savings bank in paying money out of a depositor's account after his death, upon production of the bank book and the presentation of a draft purporting to bear his signature, when the bank has no actual notice of the depositor's death, and nothing has transpired to charge it with knowledge of that fact.

2. Failure of the officers of a savings bank to make a physical comparison of the signature on a draft presented with a depositor's bank book with his signa-

NOTE.—Liability of savings banks for payments to fraudulent claimants.

I. General rule requiring reasonable care by the bank, 317.

II. The application of the rule of reasonable care as affected by the bank's by-laws.

a. In general, 318.

b. By-law providing for payment to the depositor's representative after his death, 323.

III. The binding effect of the by-laws upon the depositor.

a. Assent by the depositor, 324.

b. What is a reasonable by-law, 326.

IV. Limits of the application of the rule requiring reasonable care.

a. In general, 327.

b. Payment upon fraudulent claim of identity merely, 327.

c. Payment upon impersonation of the depositor, combined with forgery, 329.

d. Payment upon forged orders alone, 333.

e. Payment without either impersonation or forgery, 336.

IV.—continued.

f. Payment after the death of the depositor, 338.

g. The obligation to compare the signatures, 339.

V. Contributory negligence of the depositor.

a. In general, 340.

b. Failure to give notice to the bank, 341.

c. Failure to keep the pass book safely, 342.

VI. Matters of evidence, 342.

I. General rule requiring reasonable care by the bank.

Undoubtedly the cases show that the exercise of reasonable care in making a payment of a savings-bank account, as to the identity of the payee the genuineness of the paper offered, and otherwise as to the right or authority of the person presenting the depositor's pass book to receive payment, will form an excuse to the savings bank for loss resulting from the fraudulent representations of the claimant in regard to any of these matters; similarly, in the ordinary case not controlled by unusually stringent bank regulations forming part of the contract between the bank and the depositor, neglect on the part of the bank officials to use ture on file will render it liable for paying out money on a forged draft, in the absence of some unusual and pertinent excuse which will justify such failure.

3. A finding that there is no such disparity or difference between signatures on drafts presented to a savings bank and that of the depositor on file as to create a doubt or misgiving concerning the genuineness of the signatures in the mind of a competent and reasonably careful bank officer when presented by a person unknown to him, and that, therefore, the bank is not guilty of negligence in failing to make a comparison, is a conclusion of law reviewable by the appellate court, and not a finding of fact.

(December 30, 1904.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, affirming a judgment of the Erie County Circuit in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover a savings-bank deposit. Reversed.

Statement by Werner, J.:

The action is brought by the administratrix of Ellen Neville, deceased, to recover reasonable, or ordinary (which for this purpose is assumed to be the same degree), care, and prudence, and diligence will make the bank responsible for the loss to the depositor in the payment of his account to one not entitled to it. This rule has been laid down in the cases following, besides the large number of decisions which depend upon the former, and assume the rule to exist without expressing it: Sullivan v. Lewiston Inst. of Savings, 56 Me. 507, 96 Am. Dec. 500; Kimball v. Norton, 59 N. H. 1, 47 Am. Rep. 171; Brown v. Merrimack River Sav. Bank, 67 N. H. 549, 68 Am. St. Rep. 700, 39 Atl. 336; Appleby v. Erie County Sav. Bank, 62 N. Y. 12; Israel v. Bowery Sav. Bank, 9 Daly, 507; People v. Third Ave. Sav. Bank, 98 N. Y. 661; Smith v. Brooklyn Sav. Bank, 101 N. Y. 58, 64 Am. Dec. 653, 4 N. E. 123; Kummel v. Germania Sav. Bank, 127 N. Y. 488, 13 L. R. A. 786, 28 N. E. 398; Wall v. Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bank, 64 Hun, 249, 19 N. Y. Supp. 194; Tobin v. Manhattan Sav. Inst. 6 Misc. 110, 26 N. Y. Supp. 14, Affirming 3 Misc. 628, 23 N. Y. Supp. 1165; Gifford v. Rutland Sav. Bank, 63 Vt. 108, 11 L. R. A. 794, 25 Am. St. Rep. 744, 21 Atl. 340; KELLEY v. BUFFALO SAV. BANK, CHASE v. WATERBURY SAV. BANK, and LANGDALE v. CITIZENS' BANK. In Hayden v. Brooklyn Sav. Bank, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. 297, a case very much like KELLEY v. BUFFALO SAV. BANK in its facts, although the headnote states that payment by the bank is good if it has exercised "reasonable care and diligence," there is no mention of that rule in the opinion, which holds that a finding from the evidence that the bank officials acted upon "due inquiry" was not incorrect. In Schoenwald v. Metropolitan Sav. Bank, 57 N. Y. 418, Reversing 1 Jones & S. 440, the rule of reasonable care is entirely ignored, but, as appears below, as well as in KELLEY v. BUFFALO SAV. BANK, that case has been substantially overruled.

60 L. R. A.

from defendant bank the amount of certain deposits, which, with interest up to the time of the commencement of the action, were said to have amounted to upwards of $2,100. The material facts, as found by the trial court, and unanimously affirmed by the appellate division, are substantially as follows: On the 30th day of January, 1871, the plaintiff's intestate, Ellen Neville, then about eighteen or nineteen years of age, opened an account with the defendant bank. A bank book was issued to her in her name, and she signed her name in the signature book kept by the defendant for purposes of identification. At the time when this account was opened there were in force certain rules adopted by the defendant, which were posted in a conspicuous place in its banking room, and also printed in each pass book issued by it. One of these rules provided that "the secretary will endeavor to prevent frauds, but all payments made to persons producing the deposit books or duplicates thereof shall be good and valid payments to the depositors respectively." Another rule provided that "on the decease of any depositor the amount standing to

II. The application of the rule of reasonable care as affected by the bank's by-laws.

a. In general.

But this rule is frequently modified, in one way or the other, by the by-laws of the bank existing at the time of the first deposit, which become a part of the contract between the bank and the depositor, either expressly or by necessary implication. For the most part the modification, by the contract of the parties, of this rule of reasonable care, is in the direction of allowing the bank greater latitude in making payments to persons presenting the pass book of the depositor for payment; but in a few cases, as will be seen below, the contract may be so binding upon the bank as to prevent the exercise of reasonable care forming a sufficient excuse for payment to a fraudulent claimant of the fund. An instance of the difference of construction which may be put upon the same facts of contract, in regard to the liability of the bank for payment to unauthorized persons, which contract, as intended by the bank, was to relieve it from responsibility for payment to anyone presenting the book of the depositor, is seen in KELLEY v. BUFFALO SAV. BANK, where the bank claimed to be discharged by the payment, under the by-law in question. The prevailing opinion of the court held that the bank was bound to the use of reasonable care in spite of the by-law, and the opinion of Vann, J., concurred in the reversal of the court below but upon the ground, merely, that another by-law bound the bank absolutely to payment to the depositor's legal representatives after his death.

A by-law of a savings bank, when subscribed by the depositor, that "the institution will not be responsible for loss sustained when the depositor has not given notice of his book being lost or stolen, if such book be paid in whole or the credit of the deceased shall be paid to his or her legal representatives when legally demanded." During the lifetime of Ellen Neville she made 16 deposits to the credit of this account, presented her book to the defendant 15 times for the purpose of having interest credited thereon, and drew two checks upon said account, one dated September 22, 1873, for $335.98, and the other dated July 7, 1877, for $23.31. These were presented with her pass book, and she received the money thereon. She died on or about the 1st day of December, 1878, at the age of about twenty-five or twenty-six years, and at the time of her death there remained to her credit on said account the sum of $884.43. This is the amount, with compound interest, which the plaintiff seeks to recover in this action. Ellen Neville left her surviving, her sister, the plaintiff, another sister, named Kate, and her mother. At the time when this account was opened they all lived together in the city of Buffalo. Each of Ellen's sisters had a bank account of her own. Nearly twenty-three years after Ellen's death, and on the 22d of May, 1901, the plaintiff applied for and received letters of administration. About ten years ago the mother and sister Kate became inmates of St. Francis' Asylum for the Aged and Infirm of Buffalo, where they remained until the time of their deaths, which occurred about two or three years, respectively, before the trial. When they entered this asylum they paid to it the sum of $1,000. When Ellen died, on December 1, 1878, her bank book was in the house where the whole family then lived, and was taken possession of by her mother or her sister Kate or the plaintiff. Subsequent to Ellen's death the bank book was presented to the defendant by the mother or the sister Kate or the plaintiff for the purpose of having interest credited thereon on ten different occasions between the 1st of January, 1879, to and including July 1, 1883, and on the 4th day of March, 1882, the pass book was presented by some person unknown to the defendant (such person so presenting said book being the mother, the sister Kate, or the plaintiff), and a deposit of $70 was duly made and entered therein. Subsequent to Ellen's death the moneys to the in part on presentation," is a material part of the contract between the parties; but it does not relieve the bank from the duty of acting in good faith and with reasonable care in making a payment on the depositor's account. Brown v. Merrimack River Sav. Bank, 67 N. H. 549, 68 Am. St. Rep. 700, 39 Atl. 336; Cornell v. Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bank, 9 N. Y. S. R. 72.

And, notwithstanding a by-law to the effect that payments to persons producing the pass book should discharge the bank, it is bound to exercise reasonable care and diligence, in order to protect the depositor (Wall v. Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bank, 64 Hun, 249, 19 N. Y. Supp. 194), and continues liable for the moneys deposited, if with the exercise of such care it could have prevented the perpetration of the fraud. Tobin v. Manhattan Sav. Inst. 6 Misc. 110, 26 N. Y. Supp. 14, Affirming 3 Misc. 628, 23 N. Y. Supp. 1165; Israel v. Bowery Sav. Bank, 9 Daly, 507.

It is not error to charge the jury, in an action for an account paid to a fraudulent claimant, that the by-laws printed in the pass book given to the plaintiff when he became a depositor constituted a contract between him and the bank, and governed their relations, and that a payment, made in good faith in the exercise of reasonable care and diligence, to a person presenting the pass book, even though it were obtained by fraud, was a valid payment.

But the savings-bank officers owe to a depositor active diligence to detect fraud and forgery, upon making a payment to one who presents the pass book, although the by-laws provide that the bank will not be responsible for fraud. Kummel v. Germania Sav. Bank, 127 N. Y. 438, 13 L. R. A. 786, 28 N. E. 398.

And it seems to be against the policy of the law to allow a savings bank to discharge itself from all obligation to exercise ordinary care as to the identity of the persons presenting pass books, by a by-law to the effect that the "bank will not be responsible for frauds committed on the officers by producing the pass book and drawing money without the knowledge or consent of the owner." Salling v. German Sav. Bank, 15 Daly, 386, 7 N. Y. Supp. 642.

And, even in spite of a stipulation to the effect that the mere possession of the book shall be sufficient authority to warrant payments to its possessor, the bank must exercise ordinary care. Flicker v. Emigrants' Industrial Sav. Bank, 33 Misc. 92, 67 N. Y. Supp. 148.

In an important decision (distinguished in KELLEY V. BUFFALO SAV. BANK) where the by-law provided that the bank will use its best efforts to prevent fraud, but all payments made to persons producing the deposit book shall be deemed good and valid payments to the depositors respectively, it was held that the bank, because it had stipulated to use its "best efforts" to prevent fraud, was not entitled to a charge to the jury that, if its officers had exercised ordinary care and diligence and paid the money in good faith, it was excused. This was notwithstanding the ruling in Appleby v. Erie County Sav. Bank, 62 N. Y. 12 (infra, IV. c), which demanded only ordinary care, since the contract of the bank called only for its "endeavor." Allen v. Williamsburgh Sav. Bank 69 N. Y. 314.

This is in marked contrast with LANGDALE V. CITIZENS' BANK, where, although the by-law, on which the argument of irresponsibility of the bank is based, promises the employment by the bank of "every effort" to prevent fraud, it is held that the bank's official is not bound to compare the signatures of the order presented with that at hand upon the books of the bank, in order to discover the fraud.

In Kimball v. Norton, 59 N. H. 1, 47 Am. Rep. 171, an agent deposited money in a savings bank, signing, as agent, a certificate which provided that the account might be withdrawn credit of this account were paid out by the defendant on five separate drafts or written orders drawn in the name of Ellen Neville, as follows: December 28, 1878, $41.43; June 2, 1880, $50; July 30, 1881, $70.45; August 14, 1883, $56.62; September 1, 1883, $937. No part of these moneys was paid to the legal representative or representatives of Ellen Neville, but the payments referred to were made to her mother or to one of her sisters, and the signatures on these five drafts or orders, purporting to be the signatures of Ellen Neville, were not her signatures, but were made by her mother or one of her said sisters. The findings relating to the conduct of the bank officials in the payments of these drafts are as follows: "That by a critical examination and comparison of the said signatures on each of the aforesaid drafts or orders with the true signature of said Ellen Neville, entered and signed as aforesaid in the book of signatures, it would have been apparent to a competent bank officer that neither of the signatures to said drafts or orders was the genuine signature of said Ellen Neville. That, at the respective times at which such drafts or orders were presented to the defendant for payment, the defendant made no critical examination or physical comparison of the signatures thereon with that of the said Ellen Neville entered and signed in the book of signatures of depositors kept by the defendant aforesaid. That said drafts or orders were paid by defendant on presentation of the same with the pass book, and the defendant made no effort, by a critical examination or physical comparison, to ascertain the genuineness of the signatures of any of said drafts or orders, or to ascertain the identity of the person presenting the same. That there does not exist such a disparity or difference between the signature of said Ellen Neville upon the signature book of the defendant and the several signatures upon said five checks, or any or either of them, as to create doubt or misgiving concerning the genuineness of said five signatures, or any or either of them, in the mind of a competent and reasonably careful bank officer, when presented by a person unknown to him with a bank book, and therefore the defendant by the person who might present the book, or according to the charter and by-laws, as set forth in a book of deposit delivered to the depositor, and these by-laws provided that, "as it will be impossible for the officers of the corporation to identify every depositor, the production of the book of deposit will be held to show that the person producing the same is legally authorized to receive the deposit; and the corporation will not be responsible for loss," etc. It was held that this stipulation between the bank and the depositor did not relieve the bank from the duty of acting in good faith and with reasonable care, when the agent fraudulently presented the book and obtained payment. Such a stipulation between the parties "does not mean that the bank is absolved from all obligation of caution. A depositor is a beneficiary of a fund held by the bank as trustee. The trustee is incorporated for the purpose of exercising care in the management and preservation of deposits. This object would not be accomplished by care in the investment of the fund, and recklessness in paying a deposit to a wrongful possessor of a book. . . . The by-law and agreement are to be construed according to the authorized business and organic object of the institution. The terms of deposit cannot be understood to make the books payable to bearer, like bank bills, without imputing to the trustee a deliberate and studied attempt to expose beneficiaries to a great and unnecessary peril of loss, and to deprive them of important security which the trustee was chartered to furnish."

The fact of the by-law, as in this case, beginning with the statement that the bank officials will be unable to identify every depositor, so that the presentation of the book alone will be deemed sufficient authority for payment, puts cases involving such stipulations in a class by themselves, according to some decisions.

So it is laid down that a by-law of this 69 L. R. A.

character, stating also the reason for it, namely that "the officers may be unable to identify every depositor," contains a limitation upon its effect and meaning, and shows that the rule is only applicable to cases where the officers are unable, by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence, to identify; and that, if they can perceive the want of identity by reasonable care, they must use that which is reasonable care under all the circumstances, or be responsible to the depositor. Ladd v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 96 Me. 516, 58 L. R. A. 288, 52 Atl. 1012.

Where, however, a by-law practically identical with those last considered ended in a statement that "in all cases a payment upon presentation of a deposit book shall be a discharge to the corporation for the amount so paid," and the fraudulent claimant presented not only the deposit book, but also a forged order purporting to be signed by the depositor, it was held that the argument that the by-law was intended to protect the bank against the risk of mistake as to the personal identity of its depositors, and that therefore (as in the last case, Ladd v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 96 Me. 516, 58 L. R. A. 288, 52 Atl. 1012) it did not apply to a case where there was no mistake as to identity, but the payment was made upon a forged order purporting to be signed by the depositor, would be perhaps conclusive in favor of the depositor if it were not for the clause providing that the presentation of the book should be a discharge of the bank "in all cases;" in both cases the purpose of the by-law was to authorize the bank to rely upon the presentation of the book as its security against fraud; and if the bank, using reasonable care, and in good faith, paid the account upon the presentation of the book, the bank was discharged. Levy v. Franklin Sav. Bank, 117 Mass. 448.

And in a later Massachusetts case, going further, it was held that since the by-laws of exercised due care and caution, and was not guilty of negligence, in paying the five checks in question, nor in paying any or either of them." These findings of fact were followed by the legal conclusion that the complaint should be dismissed, and the judgment entered thereon has been unanimously affirmed by the appellate division.

Mr. Harry D. Williams, for appellant:

The defendant should be held liable for the breach of its express agreement that, "on the decease of any depositor, the amount standing to the credit of the deceased shall be paid to his or her legal representatives when legally demanded."

Mahon v. South Brooklyn Sav. Inst. 175 N. Y. 69, 96 Am. St. Rep. 603, 67 N. E. 118; Podmore v. South Brooklyn Sav. Inst. 48 App. Div. 218, 62 N. Y. Supp. 981.

The bank was bound to take notice of the depositor's death.

Hoffman v. Union Dime Sav. Inst. 41 Misc. 517, 85 N. Y. Supp. 16, 95 App. Div. 329, 88 N. Y. Supp. 686; Marlett v. Jackman, 3 Allen, 287; Christie v. Royal Bank, 1 Dunlop, B. & M. 745; Weber v. Bridgman.

the bank, subscribed by the depositor, provided that, "as the officers of the institution may be unable to identify every depositor, the institution will not be responsible for any loss sustained when a depositor has not given notice of his book being stolen or lost;" and the plain object of the by-law was to exonerate the bank from loss occasioned by the inability of its officers to identify the depositor, and to throw upon the depositor the risk of keeping his book safely, when the account was paid in good faith and without negligence, upon presentation of the book,—this was exactly the case which the by-law was intended to provide for; and the depositor could not recover without a violation of the terms of the contract which the bank made with him. Goldrick v. Bristol County Sav. Bank, 123 Mass. 320.

Similarly, it has been held, without special regard, apparently, to the question of reasonable care, but more by the force of a strongly worded contract, that where the by-law printed in the deposit book provided, "If any person shall present a deposit book at the office of this corporation, and allege himself or herself, untruly, to be the depositor named therein, and shall thereby obtain from the officers of this corporation the amount deposited, or any part thereof, and the actual depositor shall not have given notice at the office of his or her book having been lost or taken from him or her, this corporation will not be responsible for the loss so sustained by any depositor,"—this provision was reasonable and necessary for the protection of the bank, and was a complete defense to an action for the amount of a deposit withdrawn by a stranger presenting the book through the mail, with a forged check. Burrill v. Dollar Sav. Bank, 92 Pa. 134, 37 Am. Rep. 669.

In an interesting New Jersey case, involving the construction of a similar by-law, where the defense to an action for a savings-bank account was payment to a woman who repre-

113 N. Y. 600, 21 N. E. 985; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Wilson, 139 N. Y. 284, 36 Am. St. Rep. 696, 34 N. E. 784.

The fact of unauthorized payment having been established, the burden was on the defendant of showing affirmatively some valid reason for such payment.

Abramowitz v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 17 Misc. 298, 40 N. Y. Supp. 385; Allen v. Williamsburgh Sav. Bank, 69 N. Y. 317; Farmer v. Manhattan Sav. Inst. 60 Hun, 462, 15 N. Y. Supp. 235.

Messrs. Marshall & Rebadow, for respondent:

Before the by-law relating to payments to personal representatives can have any application, the bank must have actual notice of the depositor's death; or at least circumstances must have come to its knowledge sufficient to put it upon inquiry, and require further investigation in the exercise of reasonable diligence.

If the bank pays without knowledge of the drawer's death the money cannot be recovered back.

Edwards, Bills & Notes, 2d ed. p. 546; Tate v. Hilbert, 2 Ves. Jr. 118; Donlan v.

sented herself to be one of the plaintiffs, and presented the book, whereupon the bank officers used due care to identify the payee, but the by-laws, printed in the plaintiffs' book, provided that deposits "shall be drawn out only by the depositors in person, or by their written order, or by some person legally authorized, and only upon production of the depositor's book, that such payments may be entered therein, and all payments to persons who present the deposit book shall be valid payments to discharge the bank,"—it was thought by the supreme court that by these terms only three classes of persons could lawfully draw a depositor's money: (1) The depositor, upon the presentation of his book; (2) a person presenting the book with the written order of the depositor to draw the money; (3) any person lawfully authorized to receive the money on presentation of the book; and hence a payment to a stranger, even if with due care, was no discharge to the bank; for the last clause of the by-law, that "all payments to persons who present the deposit book shall be valid payments to discharge the bank and its officers," meant payments to such persons as were legally entitled to receive payment under the conditions previously specified in the by-law,—that is, one of the three classes named. But this decision of the supreme court was later reversed by the court of errors and appeals, which declared that the proper construction of the word "payment" as it was used in the last clause of the by-law in question was the turning over of money by the holder of it to any one of a designated class of persons; and that that class was not one inclusive merely of the three classes mentioned earlier in the by-law, but it was the class of "persons who present the deposit book." So a payment made by the bank in good faith and in the exercise of due care, to any person who produces the pass book, operates to discharge the bank, without regard Provident Inst. for Savings, 127 Mass. 183, 34 Am. Rep. 358; Cosgriff v. Hudson City Sav. Inst. 24 Misc. 4, 52 N. Y. Supp. 189; Riley v. Albany Sav. Bank, 36 Hun, 513, Affirmed in 103 N. Y. 669.

Defendant was only required to use ordinary care and diligence, and, having performed its duty in that respect, it is relieved from liability.

Reed v. McCord, 160 N. Y. 330, 54 N. E. 737; McGuire v. Bell Teleph. Co. 167 N. Y. 208, 52 L. R. A. 437, 60 N. E. 433; General Savings Bank Act, Laws 1875, § 408; Appleby v. Erie County Sav. Bank, 62 N. Y. 12; People v. Third Ave. Sav. Bank, 98 N. Y. 661; Wall v. Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bank, 64 Hun, 252, 19 N. Y. Supp. 194; Hales v. Seamen's Bank for Savings, 28 App. Div. 409, 51 N. Y. Supp. 140.

Werner, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Upon the foregoing facts the trial court dismissed the complaint. At the appellate division the judgment entered upon that decision was unanimously affirmed. This court must therefore assume that every fact found is based upon sufficient evidence (Marden v. Dorothy, 160 N. Y. 39, 46 L. R. A. 694, 54 N. E. 726; Reed v. McCord, 160 N. Y. 330, 54 N. E. 737; People ex rel. Manhattan R. Co. v. Barker, 152 N. Y. 417, 46 N. E. 875), and the judgment must be sustained unless the conclusion of law upon which it is predicated is erroneous, or other fatal errors affect the rulings made upon the trial.

The immediate question presented by this appeal is whether, upon the record before us, the plaintiff is entitled to recover; and, as the decision of this question necessarily involves an inquiry into the duties and responsibilities of savings banks toward their depositors, the case is one of more than ordinary professional interest and practical importance. Savings banks are prominent factors in our modern business life. Many of them count their deposits by the millions, and number their depositors by the thousands. Many, if not most, of these depositors are persons in the humbler walks of life, living in widely scattered sections of their respective communities, visiting the banks to whether the person is entitled to draw the money. Cosgrove v. Provident Inst. for Savings, 64 N. J. L. 653, 46 Atl. 617, Reversing 64 N. J. L. 39, 44 Atl. 936.

This is to be contrasted with a case in the New York court of appeals, Smith v. Brooklyn Sav. Bank, 101 N. Y. 58, 54 Am. Dec. 653, 4 N. E. 123. There the by-laws provided that "all payments made by the bank upon the presentation of the pass book, and duly entered therein, will be regarded as binding upon the depositor; money may also be drawn upon the written order of the depositor or his attorney when accompanied by the pass book." It was held that, although it might have been intended by the bank in framing the by-law that the phrase "all payments" should mean any sum of money delivered by it to any person who might, for the time being, have in his possession the pass book, yet, in order to make that understanding obligatory upon the customer, it was also necessary that he should have a similar understanding, or that the by-law should have been expressed in language incapable of any other fair construction; the phrase "all payments" could not be construed to mean any sums which the bank might choose to disburse, regardless of the person to whom they were made; so payment could be legally made only to the depositor or his authorized representative, and, in order to constitute any other transaction a payment, it is essential to its validity that it should be authorized by the person entitled to demand it. The by-law seemed to contemplate but two modes of payment, both requiring the presentation of the pass book, one providing for payment to the depositor personally, and the other for payment in his absence to a third person, presenting with the pass book a written order of the depositor. Hence, when the bank paid an account to a stranger presenting the pass book, but without any written order of the depositor, genuine or forged, if the bank were excused for making such a payment to a stranger having only the pass book, the provision authorizing the payment to a stranger having both book and order would be unmeaning.

It was declared, also, that the case was not affected by the decisions in Schoenwald v. Metropolitan Sav. Bank, 57 N. Y. 418, and similar cases where the language of the by-law provided plainly for payment to other persons than the depositor.

The by-law may be so loosely or liberally drawn, on the other hand, as to afford little protection to the bank for payment, even if made with due care, to one not entitled to it.

So although the bank book itself had printed upon its cover: "Caution to depositors. This book should be preserved with great care. If it should be lost give immediate information to this office,"—when it also contained a copy of one of its by-laws, to the effect that "payment on deposits shall be made only to the depositor or to his or her order, or the depositor's legal representatives, on the presentation of the depositor's book;" and payment was made to a person who presented the bank book with a forged order,—under these circumstances the court held that the forged authority was no authority at all; and the presentation of the book alone is of no greater effect, for the book was not negotiable and might be presented by a thief, as was the case; in addition, the book itself denied the legality of the payment, for the by-laws as well as the printed caution pointed out how the money should be drawn, and such a book ought not to be clothed with the character of a blank power of attorney. So, although it was said that there was great difficulty in conducting this kind of business if more than the book was required as an authority for payment, that many of the depositors could not be identified by their handwriting, and that it was quite impracticable to infrequently having no personal acquaintance with bank officials or employees, and no convenient or satisfactory means of immediate identification when their identity is questioned. These conditions are in striking contrast with those which prevail in the intercourse between the officers and employees of discount banks and their patrons. The majority of the latter are persons actively engaged in business, making daily, or at least frequent, visits to their respective banks. Their signatures are familiar to the officers and employees of the banks, and if, now and then, there is need of identification, it can usually be furnished without much difficulty. These considerations clearly indicate the difference between the two classes of banks, as well as the necessity for the law which permits savings banks to adopt reasonable rules, adapted to the nature of their business, which rules, when properly adopted and promulgated, are binding upon them, their depositors, and those who succeed to their interests. Outside of these special rules, however, there are many questions affecting the interests of savings banks and their depositors which must be determined by broad and comprehensive legal rules of general application. One of these questions arises out of the relations between savings banks and the legal representatives of deceased depositors. What degree of care must a savings bank exercise in paying money out of a depositor's account after his death, upon the production of his bank book, and the presentation of a draft purporting to bear his signature, when the bank has had no actual notice of the depositor's death, and nothing has transpired to charge it with knowledge of that fact? That is the question which underlies all other questions in this case.

In view of what has been said concerning the relations of savings banks and their depositors towards each other, it becomes obvious that any general rule that would require savings banks to act in such circumstances at their peril, without regard to the degree of care exercised, would ultimately cast as great a burden upon depositors and their legal representatives as upon the banks, and would disastrously affect the beneficent work which know them personally or their places of residence, which were constantly shifting, yet without some agreement to that effect these inconveniences could not annul the application of the principles of the common law. And even the general practice in the city, of paying in this way, could not justify the payment, because the bank declared that the money was payable to the depositor or his order or his legal representatives on the presentation of the book; and, further, such a practice could not of itself alter the general law. Eaves v. People's Sav. Bank, 27 Conn. 229, 71 Am. Dec. 59.

And when the by-laws printed in the pass book provided that the depositor, in order to draw, must present the book at the bank, if he drew it personally, or that an absent depositor could draw his deposit on his order or check, properly witnessed; and when the book, with a forged order, was presented by a stranger without the authority of the depositor, but the order was without witnesses as the by-law required,—it was held that the bank was liable for the amount to the depositor, for the money was paid out in violation of the contract between the bank and the depositor. It could not be pretended that the money was paid out in conformity to the by-law in regard to payment, since the order was not only forged, but it was also not witnessed. People's Sav. Bank v. Cupps, 91 Pa. 315.

In CHASE v. WATERBURY SAV. BANK the by-law (§ 15) on which the defendant bank relied was strongly stated in order to afford immunity to the bank, and nominally released it from "any" liability on account of "any" fraud practised on it; and, in holding that the bank was still bound to the exercise of ordinary care, the decision is apparently contrary to that of Levy v. Franklin Sav. Bank, 117 Mass. 448, supra, although the Connecticut court declares that the intent of the bank was not to release it from responsibility for losses which by the exercise of ordinary care it could prevent.

b. By-law providing for payment to the depositor's representative after his death.

The application to the rule of reasonable care of a by-law (in addition to that providing that all payments to persons producing the deposit books shall be valid payments to discharge the bank) to the effect that after the death of a depositor his account "shall be paid to his legal representative" presents the question of the construction of two inconsistent terms of the same contract, and is the subject of difference of opinion in KELLEY v. BUFFALO SAV. BANK.

In that case the prevailing opinion (distinguishing Mahon v. South Brooklyn Sav. Inst. 175 N. Y. 69, 96 Am. St. Rep. 603, 67 N. E. 118) is to the effect that the provision as to the payment upon the death of the depositor does not prevail, so as to charge the bank, unless the bank has notice of the death; while the opinion of Vann, J., maintains that the lack of notice will not protect the bank, and that under the by-law involved the bank is absolutely liable.

Several cases have been decided which are nearly in point.

In Hunter v. Wallace, 14 U. C. Q. B. 205, the deposit was made according to an arrangement to the effect that any person producing the pass book should be entitled to receive the amount of the account; and upon a payment, after the depositor's death, of which the bank had notice, to a mere connection of the depositor, who pretended to be entitled to receive it, it was held that, whatever the special agreement was between the depositor and the bank officer, it was terminated by the death of the depositor, and the bank was bound, when its officer became aware of the death, to retain the money until some one legally authorized should such institutions are designed to accomplish. If it were the duty of savings banks to establish at all hazards the identity of every person presenting a depositor's bank book and draft, it would be quite as impossible for them to continue business as it would be for some persons to avail themselves of the best-known and most generally approved method of investing and accumulating the fruits of frugal and patient economy. The same would be true of any other rule so onerous in its operation that such institutions could not do business without great inconvenience both to them and their depositors. A single illustration will suffice to demonstrate this. Take the case of a large savings bank, with so many accounts that it is impossible for the paying teller to know each depositor. It would be utterly impracticable to do business if each application for a withdrawal of money had to be delayed until a searching inquiry could be made as to the regularity of the transaction. But even if such a course were possible, so far as the bank were concerned, what would be the effect upon the poor and unknown depositor, whose place of residence may be remote from the banking house, and who may have no acquaintance with anyone who would be of the slightest assistance in identifying him? He would have no way of getting money that rightfully belonged to him, or, at least, might find his efforts in that direction so burdensome as to amount to the same thing. This is not an extreme illustration, but one that is fairly typical of the relations between great savings banks located in large centers of population, with many depositors, whose accounts are small, and whose deposits are made at rare intervals. Upon reflection it becomes obvious, therefore, that the only practicable general rule to which savings banks can be safely held in such dealings is the rule of ordinary care, leaving it to be applied in the light of the special circumstances that characterize each separate case. This is the rule that has been laid down by this court in a variety of similar cases. Schoenwald v. Metropolitan Sav. Bank, 57 N. Y. 418; Appleby v. Erie County Sav. Bank, 62 N. Y. 12; Kummel v. Germania Sav. Bank, demand it, and was, of course, in the meantime bound to the exercise of ordinary care.

So under by-laws providing, in the first place, that all payments to any person producing the pass book should be valid payments, where the bank, having notice of the depositor's death, negligently paid to a third person, undeniably the rule stated was materially qualified, if it was not made entirely inapplicable, by another and later by-law providing that on the death of a depositor the amount standing to his credit should be paid to his legal representative, and hence the question of negligence in the bank should not be taken from the jury. Farmer v. Manhattan Sav. Inst. 60 Hun, 462, 15 N. Y. Supp. 235.

And (following Farmer v. Manhattan Sav. Inst.) it was held in Podmore v. South Brooklyn Sav. Inst. 48 App. Div. 218, 62 N. Y. Supp. 961, when the usual by-law to the effect that all payments to persons producing pass books should be valid immediately follows another providing, as before, that on the death of a depositor his account shall be paid to his legal representative, the one first mentioned (and coming later in the by-laws) applies only to payments made during the life of the depositor, or, at most, without notice of his death. And upon appeal to the court of appeals this judgment was affirmed in 175 N. Y. 69, 96 Am. St. Rep. 603, 87 N. E. 118, the court saying that the exclusion of evidence offered by the defendant bank to show that the bank exercised due care in making the payment was proper, for the reason that the rule of diligence invoked by the bank applied only to the case of a living depositor, and not to the case of a dead one, who was unable to protect himself.

The real effect of this case is borne out by a recent case in the appellate division, which, being based upon practically the same facts as KELLEY v. BUFFALO SAV. BANK, would seem to have been overruled by the latter. This case 69 L. R. A.

declares that a bank, although without knowledge of the depositor's death, paying out his account to the depositor's attorney in fact, must make it good to the administrator. Hoffmann v. Union Dime Sav. Inst. 95 App. Div. 329, 88 N. Y. Supp. 686. Affirming on this point 41 Misc. 517, 85 N. Y. Supp. 16.

For treatment of the question of limits of the rule of reasonable care as applied to payment after the depositor's death, vide infra, IV. e.

III. The binding effect of the by-laws upon the depositor.

a. Assent by the depositor.

In most cases the depositor, when the first deposit is made, is required to subscribe the rules and by-laws of the institution, so that there can be no question of his being bound by them. In most cases, also, the by-laws are printed at length in the deposit book, and the attention of the recipient is then called to them at the time the book is given, which will have the same effect.

But, nevertheless, even if the attention of the depositor is not specifically called to the rules in his book, he assents to them when he receives the book containing them, he becomes legally chargeable with knowledge of them, and they become a part of his contract with the bank. Heath v. Portsmouth Sav. Bank, 46 N. H. 78, 88 Am. Dec. 194; Hayden v. Brooklyn Sav. Bank, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. 297; Schoenwald v. Metropolitan Sav. Bank, 57 N. Y. 418, Reversing 1 Jones & S. 440.

And where the by-laws required that each depositor should subscribe the rules and agree to be bound by them, but one depositor was not present and did not sign them, by holding the book having the by-laws printed in it as his voucher, and continuing to make deposits, he

127 N. Y. 488, 13 L. R. A. 786, 28 N. E. 398.

In the case of Allen v. Williamsburgh Sav. Bank, 69 N. Y. 314, the wife of a depositor had wrongfully secured possession of his pass book, forged his signature to a draft, and obtained payment from the bank. But there the bank had adopted a special by-law requiring it to use its best efforts to prevent fraud, and this was construed to bind the bank to a higher degree of care than that enjoined by the general rule.

It is to be observed that all of the cases above cited present instances of payments to the wrong persons during the lifetime of the depositors, and it is true that, in construing certain rules so generally adopted by savings banks as to have acquired almost the binding force of statutes, it has been held by this court that there is a difference between the relations of a savings bank and a living depositor, on the one hand, and the relations of such a bank and the legal representatives of a deceased depositor, on the other hand. The rules referred to are among the by-laws adopted and promulgated by the defendant bank, and are as follows: "The secretary will endeavor to prevent frauds, but all payments made to persons producing the deposit books, or duplicates thereof, shall be good and valid payments to the depositors respectively." "On the decease of any depositor the amount standing to the credit of the deceased shall be paid to his or her legal representatives when legally demanded." In the recent case of Mahon v. South Brooklyn Sav. Inst. 175 N. Y. 69, 96 Am. St. Rep. 603, 67 N. E. 118, we had occasion to discuss the effect of these two rules; and, as bearing upon the defense that the bank had exercised due diligence in paying out money upon the account of a deceased depositor, we said: "The rule of diligence invoked by the defendant bank applies only to the case of a living depositor. When, through a depositor's carelessness, his bank book gets into the hands of a third person, who presents it to the bank, the latter may show its care and diligence in making payment to the person presenting the pass book, and thus protect itself against a second demand for became bound by the rules. Ladd v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 96 Me. 516, 58 L. R. A. 288, 52 Atl. 1012.

When, also, the depositor was present, but was not compelled to subscribe the rules, and they provided that the depositor must so subscribe and by that act be considered as assenting to the by-laws, it was held that the fact that the bank took the deposit without requiring his assent by subscribing the by-laws was not conclusive that he did not assent to them, that being only one method of assent; and by receiving and holding the book containing the by-laws, of which he had actual knowledge, he must be taken to have actually assented to them, except that one which he knew was not complied with. Gifford v. Rutland Sav. Bank, 63 Vt. 108, 11 L. R. A. 794, 25 Am. St. Rep. 744, 21 Atl. 340.

And when an illiterate depositor subscribed the by-laws, but the bank had no notice of his inability to read, it had the right to assume that he had read them and knew their contents, and he was bound by them, as was his legal representative after his death. Donlan v. Provident Inst. for Savings, 127 Mass. 188, 34 Am. Rep. 358.

Where the by-laws, as contained in the deposit book given the depositor at the time of her first deposit, were later amended so as to make the responsibility of the bank for payments to fraudulent claimants less stringent, but no notice of the change was imputable to the depositor; and after the change several payments were made to a fraudulent claimant,—although the bank contended that the by-law later added became incorporated into the contract between the parties, under the general statute which provided that the deposits might be withdrawn in such manner as the by-laws directed, and under another by-law which was in force at the time of the first deposit, to the effect that changes might be made in the by-laws, and ex- 69 L. R. A.

pressing the depositor's agreement to abide by the regulations of the institution as expressed in the by-laws, it was decided that the power to change the by-laws did not empower the bank to change the contract which the parties had made (thus really begging the question, since the question was, What was the contract?); and authority to make such a material change in the contract, without the knowledge of the depositor, could not be inferred from her agreement to abide by the regulations of the institution. Klimins v. Boston Five Cents Sav. Bank, 141 Mass. 88, 55 Am. Rep. 441, 6 N. E. 242.

Where a bank had a standing rule to the effect that anyone presenting a pass book should be taken to be the depositor, or to have a genuine order from him if he presented an order, and that payment to him should be good against the depositor; but there was no evidence that this rule, although one of general notoriety in regard to all the savings banks in the city, had been brought to the attention of the depositor,—this was not binding upon him, when a by-law, which undoubtedly was binding upon both parties, provided that the account should be paid to the depositor, or to his order, or to his legal representative. Eaves v. People's Sav. Bank, 27 Conn. 229, 71 Am. Dec. 59.

Under the New York statute of 1875, chap. 371, § 23, a savings bank depending upon its by-laws for its defense in an action by a depositor to recover moneys paid out by it to a fraudulent claimant, must show affirmatively that it has complied with the provision of that statute directing that the bank shall put up in some conspicuous place, where its business is transacted, the regulations for payments of deposits, and that they shall be printed in the pass book; and it is not an excuse for failure to comply with the law that the regulations were printed in the pass book, when the deposit-payment by the careless depositor. But the by-law which is designed to protect the bank in such a case must be read in connection with the other by-law, which provides that, after the depositor's death, payment must be made 'to his or her legal representatives.' This latter by-law is for the protection of the depositor, who can no longer protect himself, and therefore the bank is bound to see that payment was made to the proper person. Payment to any other person is made at the bank's peril." That case is now relied upon by the appellant. As applied to the facts there established, the language just quoted was precise and correct, because the bank had knowledge of the depositor's death, and assumed to pay out the money credited to her account to one who claimed it by virtue of an alleged gift causa mortis, which the trial court found had never been made; and the unanimous affirmance of that finding of fact by the appellate division left this court no alternative but to apply the rule there laid down. In that case the finding of fact clearly established the absence of ordinary care, and the decision reached by this court was the only logical sequence of the finding. The language of the opinion is general and comprehensive, but of that it is enough to say that judicial discussion is to be limited to what is actually decided. People ex rel. Metropolitan Street R. Co. v. State Tax Comrs. 174 N. Y. 417, 63 L. R. A. 884, 67 N. E. 69.

In the case at bar the situation is different. While there is no direct finding to the effect that the officers of the respondent bank had no knowledge of Ellen Neville's death, that is the direct and inevitable implication of the other findings; and thus the question that remains to be discussed is whether the findings as to what the officers of the bank actually did, support the legal conclusion that they were not guilty of negligence in making payments to the persons who presented the decedent's pass book and drafts purporting to have been signed by her. The substance of the findings upon that subject is that a critical examination and comparison of the signatures on the several drafts referred to with the true signature of the or did not read them. Kress v. East Side Sav. Bank, 50 N. Y. S. R. 273, 21 N. Y. Supp. 652.

In the case of a savings bank organized under the Michigan general banking law, by which the profits belong to the stockholders, and not to the depositors, the by-laws of which provided that, "while the officers of this institution will do their utmost to prevent fraud, yet, as they will be unable to identify every depositor, this institution will not be responsible for loss sustained when a book has been mislaid, stolen, or lost, if, before the cashier is notified thereof, such book be paid;" and that the owner is required to give immediate notice of the loss of the book; but there was nothing to indicate that the depositor's attention had been called to the by-laws, or that he had even read them,—it was held that the decision cited by the bank, in Maine, Massachusetts, and New York, were in regard to savings banks which were created and managed for the benefit of the depositors, instead of the stockholders, and the conditions are so unlike those in Michigan that the decisions are not controlling in that state, where the officers of the bank are the agents of the stockholders and not of the depositors, so that the relation of debtor and creditor subsisted between the bank and the depositor, and the general rule would apply that the by-laws of the corporation are binding upon none but its members and officers; hence, a by-law passed by the bank is not a by-law of a depositor, and, if the effect of it is to change the relation of the creditor to the debtor so as to relieve the obligation of the debtor to the creditor, the creditor must have his attention called to the by-law in such a way that he shall understand its effect before he is bound by it. Ackenhausen v. People's Sav. Bank 110 Mich. 175, 33 L. R. A. 408, 64 Am. St. Rep. 338, 68 N. W. 118.
69 L. R. A.

b. What is a reasonable by-law.

In several instances judicial decisions have been made as to the validity of the by-laws of savings banks, as affected by their reasonableness.

So in Hayden v. Brooklyn Sav. Bank, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. 297, a regulation providing, as the by-laws usually do, that payments to persons producing the pass book should be good and valid payments to the depositor, was approved. (But in Kelly v. Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bank, 2 Daly, 227, half the court held that a by-law to the effect that "payments to persons producing the pass book shall be valid payments to discharge the bank" was void as not within the powers of a savings bank, granted by its charter.)

By-laws requiring the depositor, at the time his deposit book is given him, to sign the book kept for that purpose, and providing that he shall by that act be considered as assenting to and being bound by the by-laws, and also that the bank will not be responsible for loss sustained when a depositor has not given notice that his book has been lost or stolen, if it is paid on presentment,—were sustained as reasonable and binding on the depositor, in Gifford v. Rutland Sav. Bank, 63 Vt. 108, 11 L. R. A. 794, 25 Am. St. Rep. 744, 21 Atl. 340.

This is similar to the by-law held to be reasonable in LANGDALE v. CITIZENS' BANK.

A more stringent rule is approved in Burrill v. Dollar Sav. Bank, 92 Pa. 134, 37 Am. Rep. 669, providing, in exact terms, that "if any person shall present a deposit book at the office of this corporation, and allege himself or herself, untruly, to be the depositor named therein, and shall thereby obtain from the officers of this corporation the amount deposited, or any part thereof, and the actual depositor shall not have given previous notice at the office of his or her book having been lost or taken from decendent would have disclosed the fact that the signatures on the drafts were not genuine; that the officers of the bank made no critical examination or physical comparison of the signatures on the drafts with the genuine signature of the decendent, entered and signed in the bank's signature book; and that the officers of the bank made no effort, by a critical examination or physical comparison, to ascertain the genuineness of the signatures on the drafts, or to ascertain the identity of the person presenting the same. The use of the disjunctive "or" in these findings separates that portion of them which relates to a critical examination of the signatures from that which relates to a physical comparison thereof, and, fairly construed, they import that no physical comparison of the signatures was made by the officers of the bank. These two findings are not necessarily inconsistent with each other, but they are so divergent as to entitle the appellant to the benefit of the one most favorable to her. Redfield v. Redfield, 110 N. Y. 671, 18 N. E. 373. Whether the failure to make a physical him or her, this corporation will not be responsible for the loss.

IV. Limits of the application of the rule requiring reasonable care.

a. In general.

The standard of care which will determine the bank's liability for payment to a fraudulent claimant is that degree of care which persons of average prudence exercise, and not the degree of care ordinarily exercised by the bank in the conduct of its business. Brown v. Merrimack River Sav. Bank, 67 N. H. 549, 68 Am. St. Rep. 700, 39 Atl. 336.

It is necessary, however, for the depositor, in an action for the amount of his deposit, to give proof of facts tending to show a failure to exercise reasonable care and prudence in disbursing the money; and where the record presents no proof of such facts upon which negligence by the bank's officials can possibly be predicated, there is no question for submission to the jury, and a nonsuit is proper. Israel v. Bowery Sav. Bank, 9 Daly, 507.

Where the plaintiff testified that she had not received the money which the defendant alleged had been drawn by her, a nonsuit was improperly allowed, since the plaintiff was entitled to go to the jury on the question whether the bank had exercised proper care in making the payments alleged by it to have been made to the plaintiff, under the usual by-law providing that "the treasurer will endeavor to prevent frauds, but all payments made to persons producing the pass book shall be deemed valid payments." Fox v. Onondaga County Sav. Bank, 25 N. Y. S. R. 672, 7 N. Y. Supp. 17.

If there is nothing to arouse suspicion in the appearance or demeanor of a person presenting a pass book for payment, the fact that the whole deposit is demanded at once is not, as a matter 69 L. R. A.

comparison of the signatures in the case at bar was consistent with the exercise of ordinary care on the part of the defendant bank may depend upon peculiar facts which are not found in the record before us. The finding quoted in the foregoing statement of facts, to the effect that there was no such disparity or difference between the signature of said Ellen Neville upon the signature book of the defendant and the several signatures upon five checks as to create doubt or misgiving concerning the genuineness of said five signatures in the mind of a competent and reasonably careful bank officer, when presented by a person unknown to him, with the bank book, and that therefore the bank exercised due care and caution, and was not guilty of negligence, is really a conclusion of law, and not a finding of fact. It is possible that there may be special cases in which it may not be necessary for bank officers to make a physical comparison between one signature on file with a bank and another upon a draft or check presented to it for payment, but, if so, there must exist some unusual and pertinent ex-of law, a circumstance to cause inquiry or suspicion. Geltelsohn v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 17 Misc. 574, 40 N. Y. Supp. 662, Reversing 17 Misc. 57, 39 N. Y. Supp. 840.

b. Payment upon fraudulent claim of identity merely.

In many of the earlier cases involving the liability of savings banks for payments to fraudulent claimants all the means of identification of the applicant required by the bank were, first, the possession of the bank book, and correct responses to questions put to him at the time of the payment, without any requirement that the applicant make, at the time, a signature to be compared with the true signature of the depositor, kept on file. In the case of illiterates, who constitute a large proportion of the customers of most savings banks, this is impossible, but the practice is now very general of demanding the signature of an unknown applicant.

In Smith v. Brooklyn Sav. Bank, 101 N. Y. 58, 54 Am. Dec. 653, 4 N. E. 123, it was laid down that a pass book is not negotiable paper, and its possession, in itself, as bearing upon the question of the bank's negligence in paying a deposit, constitutes no evidence of a right to draw money upon it; it merely imports a liability of the bank to the depositor for the moneys deposited, and an agreement to repay them at such time and in such manner as he shall direct.

Since that case, however, it has been declared by an inferior court, under a particular by-law, that it is error for the court to charge that possession of a bank book by a stranger constitutes no evidence of the right to draw money upon it, since this completely ignores the rule under which the deposit is received, providing that the pass book shall be the evidence of the depositor's property in the incuse that is not discoverable in the findings now before us, tending to show that the failure to make such a comparison is not at variance with the requirements of ordinary care. We think the finding most favorable to the appellant, to wit, that the defendant made no physical comparison of the signatures upon the five drafts with the signature of Ellen Neville in the defendant's signature book, does not support the conclusion of law to the effect that the complaint should be dismissed, and for that reason the judgment herein should be reversed.

This view of the case renders it unnecessary to pass upon the exceptions to rulings that may not be repeated upon another trial, nor upon the extent of the appellant's rights in case she should recover a judgment, and it should appear that, as one of the surviving sisters of Ellen Neville, she has already received a part of the fund which she now seeks to get in her representative capacity.

The judgment herein should be reversed, and a new trial granted, with costs to abide the event.

Cullen, Ch. J., and O'Brien, Bartlett, Haight, and Martin, JJ., concur.

Vann, J., concurring:

I concur for reversal, but upon a more radical ground. While the defendant could have adopted a rule that would cover a payment made in good faith to a person in possession of the pass book of a deceased depositor, it had not done so when the payments in question were made. As its rules then stood, such a payment bound the depositor while he was alive, but did not bind his estate after he was dead, for they expressly provided that "on the decease of any depositor the amount standing to the credit of the deceased shall be paid to his or her legal representatives when legally demanded." This rule is absolute, and a part of the contract. It is the law of the case made by the parties. The language is that of the bank, and hence, if ambiguous, is to be construed in favor of the depositor, who is not responsible for the ambiguity. If we add to it, in effect, the proviso, "But payment to one presenting the pass book of a deceased depositor shall be good unless the bank has notice of the death," we make a new contract. I repeat, as applicable to the case in hand, what we recently said in another case: "This latter by-law is for the protection of the depositor, who can no longer protect himself, and therefore the bank is bound to see that payment was made to the proper person. Payment to any other person is made at the bank's peril." Mahon v. South Brooklyn Sav. Inst. 175 N. Y. 69, 72, 96 Am. St. Rep. 603, 67 N. E. 118.

stitution, and the presentation of the book shall be sufficient authority to the bank to make any payment to the holder of it. Geitelsohn v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 17 Misc. 574, 40 N. Y. Supp. 662, Reversing 17 Misc. 57, 39 N. Y. Supp. 840. (As to matters of evidence, see infra, VI.)

Unless, at the time of the payment, some fact or circumstance is brought to the attention of the bank's officers calculated to excite suspicion and inquiry by an ordinarily careful person, the bank will be discharged by payment of the account of a depositor, who is personally not known to the officers of the bank and who cannot write, to a person who presents the book and answers correctly all the questions contained in the signature book. Geitelsohn v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 17 Misc. 574, 40 N. Y. Supp. 662, Reversing 17 Misc. 57, 39 N. Y. Supp. 840.

Yet it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that a bank exercised ordinary care and diligence in protecting the depositor, when the depositor could not read or write, and the teller merely asked the person presenting the book her age, whether she was married, her name, her husband's name, and where she was born; and it was held that a verdict denying that the bank exercised such reasonable care and diligence should not be disturbed. Abramowitz v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 17 Misc. 297, 40 N. Y. Supp. 385.

Where the depositor subscribed the by-laws, which provided that "the institution will not be responsible for loss sustained when a depositor has not given notice of his book being stolen or lost, if such book be paid in whole or in part on presentment;" and the book was stolen, and the account drawn by a person pretending to be the depositor, who had not given notice of the theft,—it was held, on the one hand, a payment to the wrong person upon presentment of the book, even before notice of loss, if it were presented under such circumstances or in such a manner as would tend to excite suspicion, or put a man of ordinary prudence upon inquiry, would not exonerate the institution, whose officers should be held to the exercise of reasonable care and diligence; but, if using such care and diligence, but lacking the present means of identifying the depositor, they pay, upon presentation of the book by one apparently in the lawful possession of it as its owner, the institution has a right to rely upon the contract of the depositor safely to keep the evidence of his claim, or to make known its loss before it is presented for payment, and is accordingly not liable to the depositor for the amount of the deposit. Sullivan v. Lewiston Inst. of Savings, 56 Me. 507, 96 Am. Dec. 500.

But under this rule reasonable care is not exercised by the bank when its officers make a payment to a person unknown to them, who merely presents the bank book of a depositor, when they have not in a place convenient for reference the signature of the depositor, and do not exact from the applicant a signature made at the time, for comparison, and require no further proof of identity. Ladd v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 96 Me. 516, 58 L. E. A. 288, 52

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

Mary A. CHASE

v.

WATERBURY SAVINGS BANK, Appt.

(77 Conn. 295.)

1. An assignment that the court erred "in charging the jury as certified to in the printed record," without pointing out the error complained of, raises no question which the appellate court is bound to review.
2. A depositor in a savings bank, by accepting and using a deposit book, assents to and is bound by the rules printed therein regulating the method of withdrawing money.
3. A regulation printed in the deposit books of a savings bank, relieving the bank from liability for any fraud that may be practised on its officers in withdrawing money by means of forged certificates, does not relieve the bank from its duty to exercise ordinary care to prevent payment to the wrong person.
4. Negligence of a depositor in a savings bank in failing to keep his deposit book where it will not fall into the hands of persons who will fraudulently withdraw the deposit does not relieve the bank from liability in case it is guilty of negligence in paying out a deposit to one not authorized to receive it.
5. A depositor in a savings bank is not estopped to hold the bank responsible in case it negligently pays the deposit to an unauthorized person by the

Atl. 1012. (As for the obligation to require a signature for comparison, see infra, IV. g.)

And proof that the paying teller of a savings bank personally knew the depositor, and yet paid over his account to a stranger presenting his pass book, without any inquiry, is sufficient to sustain a finding that the bank did not exercise ordinary care and caution under the circumstances, but was guilty of negligence. Geitelsohn v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 20 Misc. 84, 45 N. Y. Supp. 90, affirming 19 Misc. 422, 44 N. Y. Supp. 89.

But it was sufficiently established, to support a verdict for a bank, that it exercised all necessary care in making a payment to one producing a pass book, upon proof by a bank officer, testifying from a book of the bank, without which witness admitted that he would not have remembered the transaction at all, that the individual answered correctly the questions put to her, and that all the formalities required in paying out the money were complied with. Hales v. Seamen's Bank, 28 App. Div. 407, 51 N. Y. Supp. 140.

c. Payment upon impersonation of the depositor, combined with forgery.

Where the fraudulent applicant presents with the book a receipt or withdrawal slip signed with the name of the depositor, the care required of the bank's officials would seem naturally to be greater in proportion to the ease of verifying the applicant's claim of identity with the depositor.

Under the usual by-law provisions that the fact that he also is negligent in the care which he takes of his bank book.

6. Whether or not a savings bank is negligent in failing to preserve the signatures of depositors for comparison, in paying money on forged orders without comparing the signatures, and in issuing a duplicate book without requiring adequate proof of the destruction of the original one, are questions for the jury.

(November 11, 1904.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Litchfield County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover a savings-bank deposit. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Nathaniel R. Bronson, for appellant:

Payment on presentation of the pass book was sufficient.

Eaves v. People's Sav. Bank, 27 Conn. 229, 71 Am. Dec. 59; Schoenwald v. Metropolitan Sav. Bank, 57 N. Y. 418; Levy v. Franklin Sav. Bank, 117 Mass. 448; Donlan v. Provident Inst. for Savings, 127 Mass. 183, 34 Am. Rep. 358; Goldrick v. Bristol County Sav. Bank, 123 Mass. 321; 5 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 608; McCaskill v. Connecticut Sav. Bank, 60 Conn. 308, 13 L. R. A. 737, 25 Am. St. Rep. 323, 22 Atl. 568; 2 bank will endeavor to prevent fraud, but that all payments to persons producing pass books shall be valid payments to discharge the bank, when the evidence does not show any effort on the part of the bank to ascertain whether the person presenting the book was entitled to its custody, and no questions appear to have been asked, although the teller was requested to prepare the draft signed by the person to whom the payment was made, and did so, the bank assumes the obligation of ordinary care, and must employ it in all cases where a demand is made, as, for instance, by a simple test, made by an examination of the signature of the depositor, if he can write, or an interrogation as to the number of the book, or as to the residence and antecedents of the person presenting the draft, which would perhaps be a sufficient compliance with the obligation assumed by the bank, if nothing suspicious appears as a result of the examination. Cornell v. Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bank, 9 N. Y. S. R. 72.

And, notwithstanding an agreement between a depositor and a savings bank, contained in the by-laws printed in the pass book, that all payments made to any person producing the proper pass book shall be good and valid payments, the bank continues liable for the moneys deposited, if, with the exercise of ordinary care, it could have prevented the perpetration of fraud upon it by the person presenting the pass book. So where the evidence showed that there was a marked difference between the signature of the depositor in the signature book kept by the bank and the signature to the forged withdrawal slip on which the payment was made; and, also, there was no evidence that there had been any comparison made between them at the time of the payment,—there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury on the question whether ordinary care had been used by the bank. Tobin v. Manhattan Sav. Inst. 6 Misc. 110, 26 N. Y. Supp. 14, affirming 3 Misc. 628, 23 N. Y. Supp. 1165.

Morse, Banks & Banking, § 620, p. 1030; Cosgrove v. Provident Inst. for Savings, 64 N. J. L. 653, 46 Atl. 617; Smith v. Brooklyn Sav. Bank, 101 N. Y. 63, 54 Am. Dec. 653, 4 N. E. 123; Hayden v. Brooklyn Sav. Bank, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. 297; Burrill v. Dollar Sav. Bank, 92 Pa. 134, 37 Am. Rep. 669; Allen v. Williamsburgh Sav. Bank, 69 N. Y. 314; Israel v. Bowery Sav. Bank, 9 Daly, 507; Mitchell v. Home Sav. Bank, 38 Hun, 257; Hales v. Seamen's Bank for Savings, 28 App. Div. 407, 51 N. Y. Supp. 140; Gifford v. Rutland Sav. Bank, 63 Vt. 113, 11 L. R. A. 749, 25 Am. St. Rep. 744, 21 Atl. 340; Heath v. Portsmouth Sav. Bank, 46 N. H. 78, 88 Am. Dec. 194; Sullivan v. Lewiston Inst. of Savings, 56 Me. 507, 96 Am. Dec. 500; Appleby v. Erie County Sav. Bank, 62 N. Y. 12; Reinstein v. Watts, 84 Me. 139, 24 Atl. 719; Wall v. Provident Inst. for Savings, 3 Allen, 96; First Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 151 Mass. 283, 21 Am. St. Rep. 450, 24 N. E. 44; Gloucester Bank v. Salem Bank, 17 Mass. 33; First Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 4 Ind. App. 355, 51 Am. St. Rep. 221, 30 N. E. 808; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 110.

In Kummel v. Germania Sav. Bank, 127 N. Y. 488, 13 L. R. A. 780, 28 N. E. 398, the rule provided that the bank would not be responsible for any fraud committed on the officers in producing the pass book and drawing money without the knowledge or consent of the owner; and when a payment was made to one presenting the book and a receipt, and the applicant was asked by the cashier where he lived, and gave different answers, but was not asked any further questions, and was then paid the money,—it was held that the question of the bank's negligence was clearly for the jury, since it affirmatively appeared that the cashier did not avail himself of the means at hand to identify the person presenting the pass book and the forged receipt.

In a case, however, where the clerk making the payment "judged from the first that the signature to the receipt was not exactly right," asked the person presenting it if he could not write a more fluent hand, receiving from the applicant the explanation that he was not feeling well, and then put to him questions appearing upon the signature book, which were correctly answered, it was held that the question was involved in more doubt; but that, since the signature was such as to lead the clerk, an interested witness, to judge that it was not right; and since the two signatures were before the court and jury for comparison, upon which the variance might have been so great as, of itself, to put a prudent person on

Mr. Frank W. Etheridge, for appellee:

If, by by-laws or stipulations with depositors, an incorporated savings bank can discharge itself from the legal responsibility of its public employment and the duties it was created to perform, it is to be presumed that the by-laws and stipulations made by the bank were not designed thus to defeat the intention with which the legislature passed the act of incorporation, and such by-laws and stipulations do not relieve the bank from the duty of exercising reasonable care.

Kimball v. Norton, 59 N. H. 1, 47 Am. Rep. 173.

A payment to the wrong person upon presentation of a deposit book, if it is presented under such circumstances or in such a manner as would tend to excite suspicion, or put a man of ordinary prudence upon inquiry, will not exonerate the bank, even where there is a by-law of the bank (assented to by the depositor, authorizing such payment.

Sullivan v. Lewiston Inst. of Savings, 56 Me. 507, 96 Am. Dec. 502; Gifford v. Rutland Sav. Bank, 63 Vt. 108, 11 L. R. A. 794, inquiry,—the question was considered to be one for the jury. Ibid.

It is error to refuse to allow the jury to pass upon the question whether the bank was guilty of negligence in making a payment to one presenting a pass book, when an officer of the bank admitted, in his testimony, that, after making a comparison of the signature of the depositor in the signature book and the forged draft check upon which the payment was made, he could readily distinguish the forgery; and that, when the fraudulent claimant presented the book, he thinks he did not ask him the questions set down opposite the name of the depositor in the signature book; and that, on account of a rush of business, if a signature presented was a tolerably good one the bank officers paid it without asking any questions; and this is error in spite of a by-law by which the "bank will not be responsible for frauds committed on the officers by producing the pass book and drawing money without the knowledge or consent of the owner." Saling v. German Sav. Bank, 15 Daly, 386, 7 N. Y. Supp. 642.

So the court refused to disturb a finding of negligence in a savings-bank officer making a payment to a person presenting the pass book with a forged check signed with the name of the depositor, when, being doubtful of the genuineness of the signature after comparing it with the signature upon the signature book, he required the person presenting it to indorse the depositor's name upon the check, and paid it without further inquiry; the bank should have taken steps to test the identity of the individual, in compelling him to produce some evidence or other person to identify him. Hager v. Buffalo Sav. Bank, 10 Misc. 455, 31 N. Y. Supp. 448.

A verdict for the plaintiff, in an action against a savings bank for the amount of a deposit paid to a stranger presenting the book, will not be disturbed where the depositor could 25 Am. St. Rep. 744, 21 Atl. 340; Ladd v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 96 Me. 516, 58 L. R. A. 288, 52 Atl. 1012; Allen v. Williamsburgh Sav. Bank, 69 N. Y. 314.

Even if plaintiff was negligent, her negligence did not excuse the bank officers from the exercise of reasonable care in the adoption of suitable means of preventing such mistake, and in making payments to wrong persons.

Ladd v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 96 Me. 512, 58 L. R. A. 288, 52 Atl. 1012; Brown v. Merrimack River Sav. Bank, 67 N. H. 549, 68 Am. St. Rep. 700, 39 Atl. 336; Geitelsohn v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 17 Misc. 574, 40 N. Y. Supp. 662; Ladd v. Androscoggin County Sav. Bank, 96 Me. 520, 52 Atl. 1016; People's Sav. Bank v. Cupps, 91 Pa. 315.

A party setting up an estoppel must show that he exercised good faith and diligence in endeavoring to ascertain the truth.

Morgan v. Farrel, 58 Conn. 427, 18 Am. St. Rep. 282, 20 Atl. 614; Bigelow, Estoppel, 480; Moore v. Bowman, 47 N. H. 499; Odlin v. Gove, 41 N. H. 465, 77 Am. Dec. 773.

merely make his mark, and the person paid made a mark which was observed by the bank's officers to be different from the mark made by the depositor in the signature book, whereupon the stranger returned with another man who identified him as a depositor, but not as the depositor in question, and the bank made no further effort to ascertain the truth of the statements made, although the place of business of the depositor was around the corner from the bank. Rosen v. State Bank, 32 Misc. 231, 65 N. Y. Supp. 666.

And where there were circumstances calculated to raise suspicions of the identity of the applicant, the marked difference between the signature of the depositor and of the applicant arresting the attention of the bank's officials, who required him to identify himself, which he attempted to do, these facts were ample to sustain a finding of negligence in the bank's officers. Wegner v. Second Ward Sav. Bank, 76 Wis. 242, 44 N. W. 1096.

But it has been held, in so many words, that the proposition that a mere difference in the signatures requires a submission of the case to the jury on the question of the negligence of the bank's officers is not sound. Ferguson v. Harlem Sav. Bank, 43 Misc. 10, 86 N. Y. Supp. 825.

Accordingly, under the usual by-law regulation that the bank would endeavor to prevent fraud, but that payments to persons producing the pass book should be valid payments to discharge the bank, where it was proved by an officer of the bank, and uncontradicted, that a few irregularities in the signature to the draft aroused his suspicion, that he then asked all the test questions required for identification, and that the fraudulent claimant correctly answered all of them, whereupon the payment was made, the bank had a right to rely upon the appearances thus presented; and hence a verdict should have been directed for the defendant bank Ibid.
69 L. R. A.

Bankers are presumed to know the signatures of their depositors.

Weisser v. Denison, 10 N. Y. 68, 61 Am. Dec. 733; Hardy v. Chesapeake Bank, 51 Md. 562, 34 Am. Rep. 325; National Park Bank v. Ninth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 77, 7 Am. Dec. 310; Allen v. Williamsburgh Sav. Bank, 69 N. Y. 314; Frank v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 84 N. Y. 209, 38 Am. Rep. 501.

The rights of the parties are founded upon contract, and the questions of contributory negligence and estoppel are not properly in the case.

Brown v. Merrimack River Sav. Bank, 67 N. H. 549, 68 Am. St. Rep. 700, 39 Atl. 336.

The measure of the bank's duty is good faith and reasonable care, and, failing in this, it still continues liable to the depositor, where it has made payment to the wrong person, notwithstanding such person presented the book at such time.

Sullivan v. Leuiston Inst. of Savings, 56 Me. 507, 96 Am. Dec. 500; Ladd v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 96 Me. 510, 58 L. R. A. 288, 52 Atl. 1012; Kimball v. Norton, 59 N. H. 1, 47 Am. Rep. 171; Brown v. Merrimack River Sav. Bank, 67 N. H. 549, 68 Am. St. Rep.

Where the applicant presented the book, and, pretending to be the depositor, wrote a check for the amount, which was carefully compared by the teller with the signature of the depositor in the book kept for that purpose, and the payment was then made, it was held in the leading New York case that a nonsuit after the refusal to allow the plaintiff to go to the jury on the question whether the alleged failure to discover any discrepancy between the genuine signature and the disputed one was negligence was not error. If, however, the two signatures were so dissimilar that when they were compared the discrepancy would be easily discovered by a person competent for the position of teller, then the failure to discover it would be evidence of negligence which should have been passed upon by the jury; but it would not be evidence of negligence if the difference was not marked and apparent, or if it would require a critical examination to detect it, and especially if the discrepancy was one as to which competent persons might easily differ in opinion. But, nevertheless, the bank will not be discharged by a payment upon the production of the pass book, irrespective of the exercise of ordinary care and diligence upon the part of the teller in discovering the dissimilarity in the signatures and instituting further inquiry. Appleby v. Erie County Sav. Bank, 62 N. Y. 12.

And where the defendant's officer testified that he compared the signature of the draft ticket presented with the pass book, and then asked the person presenting it his name, where he was born, in what ship he came to this country, and his mother's maiden name, all of which he answered correctly according to the signature book, and the officer then paid the amount demanded, upon the strength of the comparison and these answers, the majority of the court held that this evidence, not being rebutted or contradicted in any way, presented no

700, 39 Atl. 336; Appleby v. Erie County Sav. Bank, 62 N. Y. 12; Allen v. Williamsburgh Sav. Bank, 69 N. Y. 314; Gearns v. Bowery Sav. Bank, 135 N. Y. 557, 32 N. E. 249; Tobin v. Manhattan Sav. Inst. 6 Misc. 110, 26 N. Y. Supp. 14.

Whenever the depositor is able to write, no bank can claim to be in the exercise of reasonable care unless, before payment, it makes comparisons of signatures.

Handwriting is, and has been for ages, the test of identity.

Allen v. Williamsburg Sav. Bank, 69 N. Y. 314; Boone v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 84 N. Y. 83, 38 Am. Rep. 498; Smith v. Brooklyn Sav. Bank, 101 N. Y. 63, 54 Am. Dec. 653, 4 N. E. 123; Kummel v. Germania Sav. Bank, 127 N. Y. 488, 13 L. R. A. 786, 28 N. E. 398.

Rules do not dispense with the exercise of ordinary care on the part of the officers of the bank.

Appleby v. Erie County Sav. Bank, 62 N. Y. 17; Kummel v. Germania Sav. Bank, 127 N. Y. 491, 13 L. R. A. 786, 28 N. E. 398; Israel v. Bowery Sav. Bank, 9 Daly, 507; Ladd v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 96 Me. 510, 58

L. R. A. 288, 52 Atl. 1012; Sullivan v. Lewiston Inst. of Savings, 56 Me. 507, 96 Am. Dec. 500; Allen v. Williamsburgh Sav. Bank, 69 N. Y. 314.

A bank neglecting to obtain the signature of a customer is presumed to be familiar with his signature.

Weisser v. Denison, 10 N. Y. 68, 61 Am. Dec. 731.

It makes unlawful payment at its peril.

Tobin v. Manhattan Sav. Inst. 6 Misc. 110, 26 N. Y. Supp. 14.

Hall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

From April 1, 1887, to September 26, 1900, the plaintiff made in person 25 deposits in the defendant's savings bank, which, with dividends added at the rate declared by the bank, amounted at the time of the trial, in March, 1904, to $3,230. The plaintiff has neither herself withdrawn any part of said sum, nor has she given any order for any payment to others. Upon four occasions between December 31, 1901, and March 3, 1902, the plaintiff's daughter Mrs. Keith, who, with her husband, lived with question of fact for the jury, but only one of law for the court, on the issue of the negligence of the bank in making the payment. Wall v. Emligrant Industrial Sav. Bank, 64 Hun, 249, 19 N. Y. Supp. 194.

And, going still further, it is held that there is no evidence on which to go to the jury on the question of negligence in the savings-bank officers, where the usual test questions are put to the person presenting the pass book and draft, and are all answered correctly, except that the occupation of the depositor is given as "stone mason" when it was originally given as "stone cutter" (but here there is no mention in the report of a physical comparison of the signature of the draft with that in the signature book), when it appears that the genuine depositor had made six separate deposits after the alleged fraudulent draft, which was shown in the pass book at all those times. Ferguson v. Harlem Sav. Bank, 92 N. Y. Supp. 261.

Where a deposit was made in the name of another person than the depositor, and the person presenting the book, after the death of the depositor, was questioned as to various matters apparently identifying him, answered the description of the depositor, and made a signature which was compared by the official representing the bank with the genuine signature of the depositor on file, and was thought by him to resemble it sufficiently; and the finding of a referee was that the official had used reasonable and ordinary care and diligence in making the payment,—the latter was entitled to the protection given to such a payment by the bank's by-laws. People v. Third Ave. Sav. Bank, 98 N. Y. 661.

It was also held that when the deposit was made with false descriptions of the depositor's name, occupation, and age, his administrators were properly defeated, where the bank official acted in good faith, and with ordinary care and diligence, in making the payment to one answering the description, and the questions were put to him satisfactorily, and his signature was thought by the bank's representative to correspond sufficiently to that of the depositor. Ibid.

In Gifford v. Rutland Sav. Bank, 63 Vt. 108, 11 L. R. A. 794, 25 Am. St. Rep. 744, 21 Atl. 340, the majority of the court held that, where a bank had not been notified of the loss of the book, and the depositor was not personally known to any officer of the bank, not having been present when the deposit was made, and the applicant was also unknown to them, but came with the book apparently lawfully in his possession, and on inquiry answered correctly that the money was originally sent for deposit by letter, that being a fact not likely to come to the knowledge of persons not having to do with and interested in the deposit, and although he wrote awkwardly the middle initial of the depositor's name, and comment was made upon it by the bank officer making the payment, the bank was not bound to require the thief to identify himself further than he did by producing the book, there being no circumstances which the court considered suspicious.

Where the evidence as to the diligence used by the bank teller to identify the person presenting the book was not very definite or positive, but he admitted that he testified rather from his usual way of transacting such business than from recollection of what inquiries he made, and there were proved the presentation of the book, the presence of the husband of the depositor, and his assent to the payment, no circumstances of suspicion being shown to be apparent, the signing of the initials of the depositor, and a memorandum made by the teller at the time showing that he "tested" the validity of the claim,—it was held that the evidence, on the whole, would sustain a finding of a referee that the teller made the the plaintiff, obtained money from the bank, amounting in all to $500, by presenting the plaintiff's bank book, of which she had fraudulently obtained the possession, and by presenting with the bank book forged orders purporting to have been signed by the plaintiff, directing payment to be made to Mrs. Keith of the sums named in the orders. Early in April, 1902, Mrs. Keith confessed to her mother that she had drawn money upon the bank book, but claimed that she could obtain no more without an order from the plaintiff, and offered to write to the bank and secure a reply which would satisfy the plaintiff, and a few days later read to her mother what purported to be a letter from the bank to the effect that no further money could be drawn on the plaintiff's account without an order from the plaintiff, and that it would be all right. Thereafter the plaintiff kept her bank book locked up in a more secure place, but did not then notify the bank that her daughter had thus wrongfully obtained possession of the bank book and drawn the money. On the 16th of April, 1902, Mrs. Keith presented at the bank to Mr. Merriman, the defendant's bookkeeper, a forged letter of that date, purporting to have been signed by the plaintiff, addressed to the treasurer of the bank, representing that the plaintiff had accidentally destroyed her bank book, and requesting that a new one be issued in its place, and further stating that the plaintiff was an invalid, and had sent her daughter Mrs. Keith to get the new book, and had inclosed an order for money. Mr. Merriman informed Mrs. Keith that a new book could not be issued until a bond had been given to the bank, and prepared and gave to Mrs. Keith a form of a bond, with instructions to have it executed by the plaintiff and some responsible person as surety. On the following day Mrs. Keith presented the bond to Mr. Merriman at the bank, with the plaintiff's name as principal, and the name of another person as surety signed thereto. Both signatures were forgeries. In the absence of the treasurer of the bank, and without inquiring as to the responsibility or existence of the person whose name appeared as surety on the bond, and without submitting the matter to the "board of direction," or to "a committee appointed for that pur-payment after "due inquiry." Hayden v. Brooklyn Sav. Bank, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. 297.

For a case denying the responsibility of the bank for payment to an applicant who sent the book with a forged order through the mail, the decision being based upon a strong by-law, without special regard to the degree of care required of the bank, see supra, II.—Burrill v. Dollar Sav. Bank, 92 Pa. 134, 37 Am. Rep. 669.

d. Payment upon forged orders alone.

In considering the question of what degree of care must be exercised by the bank in cases where the pass book is presented by one who does not pretend to be the depositor, with a forged order purporting to be executed by the latter, the inquirer is met by the difficulty presented by the construction of by-laws governing the transaction and intended to limit the liability of the bank for payment to fraudulent claimants, which by-laws frequently make no provision for irresponsibility in case of payment to a fraudulent claimant whose fraud consists simply in the production of a forged order purporting to be signed by the depositor, and not in pretending to be the depositor himself.

Thus, where the bank had no by-law limiting its liability in case a depositor's bank book should be lost or stolen, and the bank, without notice of such loss, made a payment to a person who falsely impersonated the depositor and presented the book, and did pay out the account upon a forged order, no question of negligence either of the depositor or of the bank officials was involved, and the liability of the bank rested solely on the contract found in the bank's regulations providing that "money deposited may be withdrawn, in whole or in part, by the depositor, or by any other person duly authorized, at any time without notice." Ladd v. Androscoggin County Sav. Bank, 96 Me. 520, 52 Atl. 1016.

Where the bank's rule provided only for payment to the depositor or his order, payment upon a forged order was not good payment, since a forged authority is no authority at all. Eaves v. People's Sav. Bank, 27 Conn. 229, 71 Am. Dec. 59.

Similarly, where the by-law involved was, "as the officers of this institution may be unable to identify every depositor transacting business at the bank, the institution will not be responsible for loss sustained where the depositors have not given notice that their books have been stolen or lost," it was held (following Kimins v. Boston Five Cents Sav. Bank, 141 Mass. 33, 55 Am. Rep. 441, 6 N. E. 242) that this exonerated the bank for payment to one who falsely impersonated the depositor, but not for payment to one who falsely claimed to act under authority from the depositor; and hence payment to one presenting the book with a forged order purporting to be signed by the depositor was not excused. Kingsley v. Whitman Sav. Bank, 182 Mass. 252, 94 Am. St. Rep. 650, 65 N. E. 161.

But where one of the rules of the bank was to the effect that, "as the officers of the institution may be unable to identify every depositor, the corporation will not be responsible for loss sustained, where a depositor has not given notice of his book being stolen or lost, if such book be paid in whole or in part on presentment;" and "in all cases a payment upon presentment of a deposit book shall be a discharge to the corporation for the amount so paid;" and the fraudulent claimant presented not only the deposit book, but also a forged order purporting to be signed by the depositor it was held that the argument that the by-law was intended solely to protect the bank against the risk of mistake as to the personal identity of its depositors, and therefore that it did not apply to a case where there was no mistake as to identity, but the payment was made upon a forged order purporting to be signed by the pose," Mr. Merriman issued and delivered to Mrs. Keith a new book, in the name of the plaintiff, with the balance due upon the first book transferred thereto, and at the same time paid to Mrs. Keith $300 upon a forged order presented by her, dated April 16, 1902, purporting to have been signed by the plaintiff, and directing said sum to be paid to Mrs. Keith upon the amount due upon the first book. Six payments, amounting to $1,700, were made by the bank to Mrs. Keith upon presentation of said second book with forged orders of the plaintiff; the last payment having been made on the 27th of October, 1902. The plaintiff had no knowledge of the existence of said second book, nor of the payment of any of the money drawn by her daughter thereon, until informed of these facts by the bank on the 1st of November, 1902, when she immediately obtained from her daughter the second book, and $20 of the money which she had fraudulently drawn. Said second book was issued and all the payments upon both bank books were made, by the bank in good faith, and upon the belief that the letter and orders purporting, to have been signed by the plaintiff were genuine; and the plaintiff gave no notice to the defendant that Mrs. Keith had fraudulently obtained possession of the first book, and that said letter and orders were forgeries, until November 1, 1902.

The following statement was printed in the plaintiff's bank book:

"Take Care of This Book. If you lose it or mislay it give immediate notice to the bank, as, if it gets into improper hands, you may be defrauded."

Among the by-laws printed in plaintiff's book were these:

"Art. 13. Dividends and money withdrawn shall be paid only to the depositor, or to the depositor's order, or legal representative; but neither the principal nor interest of any deposit shall be paid to any person, unless the depositor's book of entries made by an officer of the corporation or of the direction shall be presented that such payments may be entered therein, or unless the depositor shall prove to the satisfaction of the board of direction, or a committee appointed for that purpose, that such book has been lost or destroyed, in which case depositor, would be, perhaps, conclusive in favor of the depositor if it were not for the last clause, providing that the presentation of the book should be a discharge of the bank "in all cases." In either case the purpose of the by-law was to authorize the bank to rely upon the presentation of the book as its security against fraud; and if the bank, using reasonable care, and in good faith, paid the account upon presentation of the book, the bank was discharged. Lery v. Franklin Sav. Bank, 117 Mass. 448.

Where the rules and by-laws provided that "the secretary will use his best efforts to prevent frauds; but all payments to persons presenting the deposit book shall be deemed good and valid payments to depositors respectively," when a payment was made to a man presenting the book with an alleged forged order very much like the signature made at the time of the deposit, by the depositor, who was a woman, in the book kept for that purpose, it was held that, the rules allowing payment to anyone producing the pass book, no order for payment was required, and the question of the genuineness of the signature was wholly immaterial, and, this question being the only one given to the jury on the trial, a new trial was necessary. Schoenwald v. Metropolitan Sav. Bank, 57 N. Y. 418, Reversing 1 Jones & S. 440. This decision, however, has been practically overruled upon this point by Allen v. Williamsburgh Sav. Bank, 69 N. Y. 315, which, like the Schoenwald Case, is treated and distinguished in KELLEY v. BUFFALO SAV. BANK.

The by-law provided, in that case, that "the bank will use its best efforts to prevent fraud, but all payments made to persons producing the deposit books shall be deemed good and valid payments to depositors respectively," and the depositor's wife fraudulently applied to the bank for the money, presenting the pass book and a check with the forged signature of the depositor; and the jury were charged that the only question for them to determine was whether the bank used its best efforts to secure the payment to the proper person. And, in affirming a judgment for the plaintiff, the court distinguished and limited Schoenwald v. Metropolitan Sav. Bank, 57 N. Y. 418, supra, in which, it was said, no special attention was given to the clause in the rules to the effect that the secretary would use his best efforts to prevent fraud. There the signature to the order used for the purpose of obtaining payment was very much like the signature of the depositor upon the signature book. From some statements in the Schoenwald Case, however, the court sharply dissented,—for instance, that to the effect that "a bank had a right to make the payment on the simple production of the pass book," the fact being that the depositor was a woman and the book was produced by a man, which fact at once notified the bank that it was not the depositor who applied for the payment; and in such a case it could not be that the bank officers should not be called to the exercise of inquiry and care. The officers of savings banks, acting under rules like those under discussion, are bound to the exercise of care and diligence, up to the standard fixed for the bank by those rules, and, the book being produced by a person of the opposite sex from the depositor's, it was then necessary to rely upon an order from the depositor, and the bank could no longer depend upon the rule that the production of the pass book was enough to allow the payment. The case of Appleby v. Erie County Sav. Bank, 62 N. Y. 12, supra, was also distinguished upon the ground that the decision there, affirming the refusal of the trial court to give to the jury the question of the negligence of the bank, because the difference between the two signatures was not marked enough to the trial court to require it, was grounded upon the reason that the appellate court did not have the opportunity which the the depositor or his legal representative shall lodge with the treasurer a written discharge."

"Art. 15. This bank will not be responsible to any depositor, or to his heirs or assigns, for any fraud that may be practised upon any of the officers of this institution by forged signatures, or by presenting a depositor's book, and drawing money without the knowledge or consent of the owner. And all entries of money paid, made in the depositor's book by an officer of the institution, shall be deemed good and valid evidence of money paid, and shall exonerate this bank from any liability on account of any fraud practised in drawing the money of any depositor."

The above facts appear to have been proved at the trial beyond controversy.

Whether the officers of the bank exercised reasonable care in issuing the second book, and in making the payments to Mrs. Keith upon the first and second book upon the forged orders, and whether the plaintiff was negligent in failing to keep her first bank book in a safe place, and in not notifying the bank that her daughter had fraudulently drawn money on the first book when she learned of it, in April, 1902, were among the disputed questions of fact at the trial.

The only properly assigned reasons of appeal are the denial of the defendant's motion for a new trial upon the ground that the verdict was against the evidence, and the failure of the trial judge to charge the jury in accordance with the specific requests set forth in the appeal. The last reason of appeal, that "the court erred in charging the jury as certified to in the printed record," is not a proper assignment of error. It fails to point out the particular errors complained of in a charge covering 12 pages of the printed record, and therefore raises no question which this court is bound to review. Gen. Stat. 1902, § 802; Hayden v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co. 76 Conn. 355-365, 56 Atl. 613; Simmonds v. Holmes, 61 Conn. 1-9, 15 L. R. A. 253, 23 Atl. 702.

The substance of the several requests contained in the appeal may be fairly stated as these four requests to charge: First, that article 15 of the by-laws was sufficient authority to the bank for the payments trial court had to inspect the signatures, and also upon the ground that there the person presenting the book was of the same sex as the depositor. Allen v. Williamsburgh Sav. Bank, 69 N. Y. 314.

It was also held that, because the bank had stipulated to use its best efforts to prevent fraud, it was proper to refuse to charge that, if the bank's officers exercised ordinary care and diligence, and paid in good faith, it was excused; in the Appleby Case, 62 N. Y. 12, supra, also, the contract of the bank did not call for its best efforts, but only for its "endeavor." Ibid.

In regard to the sufficiency of the facts put in evidence to show negligence in the defendant bank, in a case where the thief produced the book and a check with the forged signature of the depositor, and the cashier paid it after comparing the signature with that of the depositor in the signature book, it was held, upon the question whether the cashier used reasonable care in the comparison, that what the jury were to determine was what degree of significance would be attached to the differences observed in the signatures, not by a common person, but by a skilled person such as the cashier was; from his examination and cross-examination a jury could judge not only of what was the effect upon his mind caused by his comparing the signatures, but of what would have been the effect if he had given due attention to what the dissimilarities indicated. Fricke v. German Sav. Bank, 24 Jones & S. 468, 4 N. Y. Supp. 627.

And if, at the time of the payment of a savings-bank account, a fact or circumstance is brought to the attention of the bank's officers which is calculated and ought to excite the suspicion and inquiry of an ordinarily careful person as to the identity or authority of the person making the demand, it is the duty of the bank to institute such an inquiry, and 69 L. R. A.

failure to do so presents a question as to the bank's negligence, for the consideration of the jury. And such a fact or circumstance is brought to the attention of the bank's officers when a person unknown to the bank's officers presents the pass book, together with a forged paper, apparently a power of attorney, signed with the name of the depositor in his individual capacity, and giving the holder authority to draw all funds to the credit of the depositor as executor of an estate mentioned in the instrument, when the funds actually deposited are to the credit of the depositor as administrator of another estate; since the forged paper, although it correctly gives the number of the pass book, does not relate at all to the deposit in question, and confers no authority on the person presenting it to draw the money, this furnishes sufficient grounds for suspicion, and the question of the defendant bank's negligence, in an action for the amount paid, should be submitted to the jury. Gearns v. Bowery Sav. Bank, 135 N. Y. 557, 32 N. E. 249.

But where the by-laws provided that payments to persons presenting the book, whether with or without an order or letter of attorney, purporting to be signed by the depositor, should be deemed good payments to depositors respectively, and discharge the bank; and payments were made to a man who presented with the book orders purporting to be signed by the depositor (who was a woman); and upon the trial both parties moved for a direction of a verdict; and the court made a finding in favor of the defendant,—it was held that, it being necessary to take the view of the evidence most favorable to the defendant, there was nothing in the evidence or in the attendant circumstances to put the bank upon such notice as to require it to exercise diligence other than such as would have been required by its rule in cases where only the deposit book was produced; and hence the finding was not disturbed. Winter v.

made to Mrs. Keith; second, that the plaintiff's failure to notify the bank that Mrs. Keith had fraudulently drawn money on her deposit book when she first learned of that fact prevented the plaintiff from recovering the sums paid by the bank to Mrs. Keith; third, that, if Mrs. Keith obtained possession of the deposit book through the carelessness of the plaintiff in her manner of keeping it, the plaintiff could not recover the money paid by the bank to Mrs. Keith by reason of her possession of the book; fourth, that the jury would not be justified in finding negligence on the part of the bank from the mere fact that signatures of depositors were not kept for the purpose of comparison, and that the fact that Mrs. Keith was a daughter of the plaintiff might be considered as partially excusing the officers of the bank for not having exercised greater caution.

By accepting from the bank and using, as she did, the deposit book, in which articles 13 and 15 of the by-laws were printed, the plaintiff assented to these regulations, and they became a part of the contract of deposit for the protection of the bank and the depositor, and binding alike upon both. Eaves v. People's Sav. Bank, 27 Conn. 229-231, 71 Am. Dec. 59; Donlan v. Provident Inst. for Savings, 127 Mass. 183, 34 Am. Rep. 358; Appleby v. Erie County Sav. Bank 62 N. Y. 12. By the language of article 13, in the absence of any modifying agreement the bank was authorized to pay deposits and dividends only to the depositor or his attorney, or, in case of his death, to his legal representative; and the bank could not avoid liability for payment made upon a forged order to one who had fraudulently obtained possession of the deposit book, even by showing that such payment was made in good faith, and in the exercise of ordinary care, and in accordance with the general practice among savings banks. Eaves v. People's Sav. Bank, 27 Conn. 229-231, 71 Am. Dec. 59. It was evidently for the purpose of relieving the bank from so great a liability that the provisions of article 13 were modified by those of article 15. It was undoubtedly learned from experience that the depositors of a savings bank were so numerous that they could not all be personally Williamsburgh Sav. Bank, 68 App. Div. 193, 74 N. Y. Supp. 140.

Where the husband of the depositor presented the book at the savings bank, which declined to pay until assured by the husband that he acted as agent for the wife, whereupon he was given a check, payable to wife's order, upon a national bank, which refused to pay it without the wife's indorsement, and the husband then returned to the savings bank and stated that he was authorized to do business for his wife, when an indorsement was written on the check by a bank officer in this form: "Ellen Clark, as his authorized by William X Clark. Witness,

mark

Frank Russell;" and upon this indorsement the national bank paid the money to the husband,—it was held that the savings bank was liable to the depositor for the payment, and hence that a judgment in her favor should not be disturbed; but upon entirely different grounds, one of the two justices saying that the question of the defendant's negligence in delivering the check to the fraudulent claimant was properly submitted to the jury, upon the evidence in the case, the deposit being marked in the pass book "special," and the evidence showing that notice was given to the bank by the depositor to pay to no one but herself; the other justice, however, declared that the savings bank, by giving only a check payable to the real depositor, which could not be paid without the depositor's indorsement, protected her against payment to any other person; but the national bank, in paying the check without the indorsement of the payee, was not authorized to charge the amount against the savings bank, for the savings bank was not bound by the indorsement, as to which its agent only witnessed and became responsible for the genuineness of the mark, and did not guarantee that the husband was authorized by the depositor to act for her; and hence 60 L. R. A.

the plaintiff was entitled to recover against the savings bank because the national bank had no right to charge against the savings bank's account the money paid on the check, and the savings bank had a good cause of action against the national bank. Clark v. Saugerlies Sav. Bank, 62 Hun, 346, 17 N. Y. Supp. 215.

In a case in which the liability of the bank for making the payment was simply assumed by the court, where a depositor's attorney drew out all her account upon presentation of the pass book and a forged order, and later deposited in the bank to her credit a less sum, and gave her the new pass book, it was held that, after drawing out the sum deposited by her attorney to her credit, she might recover from the bank the sum which he fraudulently drew before. The bank, being negligent in making the payment, always remained her debtor for the sum her attorney drew out, and that indebtedness could not be discharged by a payment on a forged order and a fraudulent surrender of the pass book; so when the additional sum was deposited by the attorney the bank owed her the sum of the two amounts, and the attorney still owed to the bank the amount he fraudulently drew. Underhill v. Foughkeepsie Sav. Bank, 32 Hun, 432.

e. Payment without either impersonation or forgery.

The reasonable care the lack of which renders the bank responsible for payments to fraudulent claimants may fall to be exercised in other matters than mere identification of the person presenting the pass book or a check or order, or than scrutiny and comparison of the signature on the paper presented. So when there is no impersonation of the depositor, and no pretense of presenting genuine paper signed by him, payment by the bank, to one who mere known to its officers, that many of them were unaccustomed to writing, that they frequently kept their bank books where they were accessible to others, and that therefore in some instances competent officers, in the exercise of proper care and caution, would fail to detect forgeries and prevent imposition by persons presenting deposit books. It was clearly to protect itself against losses from such impositions, and not from losses which it was its duty to prevent, and which by the exercise of ordinary care it could prevent, that article 15 was adopted. By its provisions the bank was not relieved from its duty to exercise ordinary care to prevent payment to the wrong person, even though such person presented a deposit book, and in accepting this regulation the depositor agreed to bear the loss of a payment to the wrong person presenting the deposit book only to the extent that the bank acted reasonably. Ferguson v. Harlem Sav. Bank, 43 Misc. 10, 86 N. Y. Supp. 825; Kummel v. Germania Sav. Bank, 127 N. Y. 488, 13 L. R. A. 786, 28 N. E. 398; Sullivan v. Lewiston Inst. of Savings, 56 Me. 507, 96 Am. Dec.

ly pretends to be legally authorized to draw upon the account in question, will be at the peril of the institution.

Payment upon the production of a pass book by the father of the owner of a deposit, when the bank officers know him to be the depositor's father, but he is not his general guardian, is no protection to the bank, which in so paying does not exercise the ordinary care necessary in making payments, notwithstanding stipulations in the by-laws, binding upon the depositor, to the effect that the possession of the book shall be sufficient authority to warrant payments to the possessor. Ficken v. Emigrants' Industrial Sav. Bank, 33 Misc. 92, 67 N. Y. Supp. 143.

And in a case where an agent deposited money in a savings bank in the name of the principal, signing, as agent for the owner, a certificate which provided that the account might be withdrawn by the person who might present the book, or according to the charter and by-laws as set forth in the book of deposit delivered to the depositor; and these by-laws in the deposit book provided that, "as it will be impossible for the officers of the corporation to identify every depositor, the production of the book of deposit will be held to show that the person producing the same is legally authorized to receive the deposit; and the corporation will not be responsible for loss sustained when the book of deposit is so produced and the money paid entered thereon, unless the depositor has given notice to the treasurer that said book has been lost or stolen,"—it was held that this stipulation between the bank and the depositor did not relieve the bank from the duty of acting in good faith and with reasonable care, when the agent, without the knowledge of the depositor, abstracted the book and presented it to the bank, which took it in pledge knowing that the pledgor was not the apparent owner of the book, and without re-

500; Ladd v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 96 Me. 510, 58 L. R. A. 288, 52 Atl. 1012; Gifford v. Rutland Sav. Bank, 63 Vt. 108, 11 L. R. A. 794, 25 Am. St. Rep. 744, 21 Atl. 340; Brown v. Merrimack River Sav. Bank, 67 N. H. 549, 68 Am. St. Rep. 700, 39 Atl. 336; Wegner v. Second Ward Sav. Bank, 76 Wis. 242, 44 N. W. 1096. The by-law in question was therefore not a sufficient authority to the bank for payments negligently made to Mrs. Keith, and the court did not err in not charging the jury in accordance with the first request.

Nor did the trial court err in not charging in accordance with the second and third requests. Article 15 furnished a complete defense against liability for payments to Mrs. Keith made by the bank in the exercise of reasonable care. The second and third requests must therefore rest upon the claim that, under the doctrine of contributory negligence or of estoppel, the defendant would not be liable even for payments negligently made, if it also appeared that the plaintiff was negligent in not notifying the bank of the fraudulent acts of Mrs. Keith, or in not taking proper care of her bank quiring him to produce evidence of his authority from the depositor, such as an assignment, order, or proof of delivery; and hence the depositor was entitled to the possession of the book discharged from the pledge. The stipulation between the parties (the court says) "does not mean that the bank is absolved from all obligation of caution. A depositor is a beneficiary of a fund held by the bank as trustee. The trustee is incorporated for the purpose of exercising care in the management and preservation of deposits. This object would not be accomplished by care in the investment of the fund, and recklessness in paying a deposit to a wrongful possessor of a book. . . . The by-law and agreement are to be construed according to the authorized business and organic object of the institution. The terms of deposit cannot be understood to make the books payable to bearer, like bank bills, without imputing to the trustee a deliberate and studied attempt to expose beneficiaries to a great and unnecessary peril of loss, and to deprive them of important security which the trustee was chartered to furnish." Kimball v. Norton, 59 N. H. 1, 47 Am. Rep. 171.

And similarly, in two decided cases payments were made under similar circumstances, but after the death of the depositor.

In Hunter v. Wallace, 14 U. C. Q. B. 205, the bank representative knew of the death of the depositor. According to his testimony the deposit was made with the express understanding that any person producing the pass book should be entitled to receive the amount of the deposit, and, upon payment, after the death of the depositor, to one of his connections, who later absconded, it was held that whatever the agreement was between the depositor and the bank's officer when the money was deposited, it was terminated by the death of the depositor, and the bank was bound, when its officer became aware of the death, to retain the money book. If the question whether the plaintiff was negligent in these matters were a material one in this case, it may well be doubted whether the jury would have been justified in finding, upon the facts, that the exercise of reasonable care by the plaintiff to prevent the bank from being imposed upon required her to give notice in April, 1902, of her daughter's fraudulent acts, or to keep her bank book more securely than she did before she learned that her daughter had wrongfully obtained possession of it and drawn money upon it. The plaintiff knew that, by the by-laws of the bank, "neither the principal nor interest of any deposit" would be paid to any person "unless the depositor's book" should be presented. Upon learning of her daughter's acts she at once put the book where her daughter could not get possession of it. Can it be said that ordinary care required the plaintiff to anticipate that her daughter, without having possession of the deposit book, might continue to draw her money, by procuring, as she did, by fraud and forgery, a new book to be issued? As to the plaintiff's alleged carelessness in leaving her bank book where Mrs. Keith could obtain possession of it, it appears that she kept it locked with other valuable papers in a bookcase drawer in the hallway on the second floor of her dwelling, with the key in her own sleeping room. Can depositors in savings banks be reasonably required, under ordinary circumstances, to take greater precautions in keeping their bank books? And especially could the plaintiff be reasonably expected to take greater precautions to prevent her own daughter from obtaining possession of the book before she learned that she had wrongfully drawn money upon it?

But without deciding whether there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury upon the question of the plaintiff's negligence had that been a material inquiry in this case, we hold that the bank would not have been exonerated from liability for payments neguntil some one legally authorized should demand it.

*So in Hoffmann v. Union Dime Sav. Inst. 95 App. Div. 829, 88 N. Y. Supp. 686, Affirming upon this point 41 Misc. 517, 85 N. Y. Supp. 16 (treated infra, IV. f), where a depositor had given her attorney a power of attorney, which he presented after her death with the pass book, and the bank paid without knowledge of the death, it was held, in spite of the by-law's provision for discharge for payments to persons producing the pass book with or without a letter of attorney, that, since the by-laws also provided that on the death of any depositor the amount standing to his credit should be paid only to his legal representative, the payment must be made good to the administrator. This decision, however, as based simply upon the by-law, seems to have been overruled (except in the opinion of Vann, J.) by KELLEY v. BUFFALO SAV. BANK. (See also, Farmer v. Manhattan Sav. Inst. 60 Hun, 462, 15 N. Y. Supp. 235, and Podmore v. South Brooklyn Sav. Inst. 48 App. Div. 218, 62 N. Y. Supp. 961, Affirmed in 175 N. Y. 69, 96 Am. St. Rep. 603, 67 N. E. 118, in the following subdivision.)

f. Payment after the death of the depositor.

When the fraud is perpetrated after the depositor has died, the rule of liability of the bank for its negligence varies, depending in the first place upon the question whether or not the bank had notice of the death.

So, under by-laws providing in the first place that the officers will endeavor to prevent frauds, but all payments made to any person producing the proper deposit pass book shall be good and valid payments, where the bank, having notice of the depositor's death and the appointment of an administrator in another state, paid over the amount to a third person, who had presented the book and an affidavit from the administrator that he had been discharged and that the holder of the book was entitled to receive the money; and the bank assented to a collusive judgment being taken against itself for the amount,—the judgment, being collusive, did not protect the bank in its payment, and in an action brought by an ancillary administrator of the depositor, later appointed in this state, it was error to refuse to allow the plaintiff to go to the jury on the question of the bank's negligence in paying the account, as it did. The representations of the administrator, after he was discharged from his trust, to the effect that the payee was entitled to receive the money, could have no greater effect than the representations of a stranger; and, whatever might have been the position of the parties if the rule of the bank stood alone, that all payments to persons producing the pass book should be valid, undeniably the rule, if it was not made entirely inapplicable, was materially qualified by the later rule providing that on the death of a depositor the amount standing to his credit should be paid to his legal representative. Farmer v. Manhattan Sav. Inst. 60 Hun, 462, 15 N. Y. Supp. 235.
69 L. R. A.

The same result is reached, on different grounds, in Hunter v. Wallace, 14 U. C. Q. B. 205, supra, IV. e.

And in a case discussed, quoted, and distinguished in KELLEY v. BUFFALO SAV. BANK.—Mahon v. South Brooklyn Sav. Inst. 175 N. Y. 69, 96 Am. St. Rep. 603, 67 N. E. 118, Affirming 48 App. Div. 218, 62 N. Y. Supp. 961,—when one by-law printed in a pass book, "although the institution will endeavor to prevent frauds and impositions, yet all payments to persons producing the pass book issued by it shall be valid payments to discharge the institution," immediately followed another providing that "on the decease of any depositor, the amount standing to the credit of the deceased shall be paid to his or her legal representatives,"—it was held that the one first mentioned applied only to payments made during the life of the depositor, or, at most, without notice of his death, and not when the bank knew that he was dead. Hence, the exclusion of evidence, offered by the defendant bank, to show that the bank exercised due care in maklently made by its officers to Mrs. Keith, even if the jury could have properly found from the evidence that the plaintiff was guilty of the claimed negligence. This is not an action based upon the negligence of the defendant, in which the plaintiff was required to prove that she exercised due care. It is an action to recover money deposited by the plaintiff with the defendant, and which the defendant contracted, as declared in the deposit book, to repay to the plaintiff, or to her order, or to her legal representative, upon presentation of the book. Eaves v. People's Sav. Bank, 27 Conn. 229-231, 71 Am. Dec. 59. From its absolute undertaking to pay to the depositor or his order, article 15 relieves the bank in cases of payments made in good faith and in the exercise of ordinary care to persons presenting the book, even though such payments are made upon forged orders. As we have already shown, no greater protection than this was intended to be afforded the bank by the provisions of article 15.

ing the payment, was proper, for the reason that the rule of diligence invoked by the bank applied only to the case of a living depositor, and not to the case of a dead one, who was unable to protect himself.

The prevailing opinion in KELLEY v. BUFFALO SAV. BANK, however (while holding the bank liable on account of negligence in failing to compare the signatures in its possession), distinguishes the Mahon Case upon the ground of the presence in it of knowledge of the fact of the death, there being no notice of it in the KELLEY CASE, the bank paying the amount of the deposit to a member of the same family.

In Hoffmann v. Union Dime Sav. Inst. 95 App. Div. 329, 88 N. Y. Supp. 686, Affirming 41 Misc. 517, 85 N. Y. Supp. 16 (mentioned supra, IV. e) the bank was held to be liable, though without knowledge of the depositor's death, for payment to a fraudulent claimant, when the by-laws contained the same by-law occurring in the Mahon Case and the KELLEY CASE, providing that on the death of the depositor the amount should be paid to his representative; but this case is not now authority, according to the KELLEY CASE.

In a Massachusetts case, however, going in the other direction, when the bank book was presented to the bank by a stranger after the death of the depositor, and after the executor had issued the usual probate citations, and it was paid in good faith by the bank, which had no actual notice of the death; and it appeared that the depositor had subscribed the by-laws printed on the bank book, providing that the institution would not be responsible when the depositor had not given notice of the book being stolen or lost, and for the consequences of any mistake in identity, if it paid to the wrong person upon presentation of the book,—it was held that the by-laws applied equally to the depositor and to his legal representatives; that the citation in the probate court did not affect the bank with any notice of the death of the depositor: and hence that there could be no re-

Even if the plaintiff was negligent, as claimed, that did not excuse the bank officers from exercising ordinary care to prevent one who they knew was not a depositor from obtaining money upon a forged order, nor relieve the bank from liability for payments negligently made to the wrong person. The question of contributory negligence is not involved in the case. If the bank officers failed to exercise ordinary care in making the payments to Mrs. Keith upon forged orders, the bank was liable to the plaintiff for the sums so paid. If the officers exercised such care, the bank was relieved from liability by the provisions of article 15 of its by-laws. Geitelsohn v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 17 Misc. 574, 40 N. Y. Supp. 662; Brown v. Merrimack River Sav. Bank, 67 N. H. 549, 68 Am. St. Rep. 700, 39 Atl. 336; Ladd v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 96 Me. 520, 52 Atl. 1016; People's Sav. Bank v. Androscoggin County Sav. Bank, 96 Me. 520, 52 Atl. 1016; People's Sav. Bank v. Cupps, 91 Pa. 315.

covery by the depositor's executor. Donlan v. Provident Inst. for Savings, 127 Mass. 183, 34 Am. Rep. 358.

In Hayden v. Brooklyn Sav. Bank, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. 297, and People v. Third Ave. Sav. Bank, 98 N. Y. 661 (treated supra, IV. c), involving the question merely of the requisite degree of care to be exercised by the bank in the identification of the person presenting the pass book, although the payments were made after the death of the depositor, this fact is not treated as in any way affecting the decision.

g. The obligation to compare the signatures

It has hitherto probably not been suspected that a savings bank could be discharged in a case not governed by extraordinarily stringent by-laws, from liability for a payment to a fraudulent claimant presenting a forged check, if it does not avail itself of the means ready and at hand to discover the fraud, upon a comparison of the check's signature with the signature of the genuine depositor in the books of the bank.

From scores of decisions hitherto presented this question would appear not to be disputable; but in some cases it has seemed to be necessary to lay down the law in accordance with the general notion.

Thus, the supreme court of Maine has declared, in regard to what is reasonable care, to be exercised by the bank, that it has been decided that officers of a savings bank having many thousands of depositors, who make a payment to a person unknown to them, who claims to be a depositor, and presents the bank book of such depositor, when they have not in their possession, convenient for ready reference and comparison, that depositor's signature, and do not obtain from the person presenting the book his signature for comparison, and do not require any further proof of identity than the possession of the bank book, have not pursued reasonably safe methods of doing business, and have not exercised reasonable care to prevent loss; and, if a comparison of the signature of

If the alleged negligence of the plaintiff had been proved, it would not have estopped her from claiming that the orders were forged, if the defendant was also negligent in not ascertaining that fact. If the bank officers were thus negligent, the facts would fail to show any such equity in the defendant as would enable it to invoke the principle of equitable estoppel against the plaintiff. Morgan v. Farrel, 58 Conn. 413-427, 18 Am. St. Rep. 282, 20 Atl. 614.

The trial court rightly declined to instruct the jury as to the effect upon the question of defendant's negligence of the particular facts referred to in the fourth request. The question was one of reasonable care under all the circumstances, and these facts, with others, were properly left to the consideration of the jury in determining whether the defendant had exercised that degree of care.

The plaintiff claimed that it appeared from the evidence that the defendant was guilty of negligence in failing to make proper examinations and comparisons of the handwriting and signatures of the orders and the letter for the purpose of ascertaining whether they were genuine, in not having the signature of the plaintiff for reference and comparison, and in issuing a new bank book to Mrs. Keith without requiring proper proof of the destruction of the first one, or attempting to ascertain whether the signatures to the bond presented by Mrs. Keith were genuine. The question whether the bank officers were guilty of negligence in making these payments in the manner they did was one of fact, and was fairly submitted to the jury and decided against the defendant.

An examination of the evidence fails to convince us that the trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion for a new trial upon the ground that the verdict was against the evidence.

There is no error.

the person falsely presenting the book with the genuine one of the depositor on file would have prevented the imposition, then such payment is no defense to an action by the depositor. Ladd v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 96 Me. 516, 58 L. R. A. 288, 52 Atl. 1012.

And, according to the New York court of appeals, the savings bank will not be discharged by a payment upon the production of the pass book, irrespective of the exercise of ordinary care and diligence upon the part of the teller in discovering the dissimilarity in signatures and instituting further inquiry. Appleby v. Erie County Sav. Bank, 62 N. Y. 12.

Thus, where it affirmatively appears that the paying officer did not avail himself of the means at hand to identify the person presenting the pass book and the forged receipt, the question of the bank's negligence is clearly for the jury. Kummel v. Germania Sav. Bank, 127 N. Y. 488, 13 L. E. A. 786, 28 N. E. 398.

The decision in LANGDALE v. CITIZENS' BANK, freeing the bank from the obligation to compare the signatures in its possession if the pass book is presented by a person apparently rightfully in possession of it, and unless there are "circumstances to excite suspicion," is a new doctrine, therefore; and the decision is further remarkable because of the agreement made by the bank with the depositor that the bank would use its "best efforts" to prevent fraud. This amounts, therefore, to a declaration that the "best efforts" which the bank covenants to use in order to prevent loss to the depositor do not include a mere reference to a signature on file in order to discover whether the signature presented bears any resemblance to it.

In KELLEY v. BUFFALO SAV. BANK, however, is found a contrary decision, which would seem on the authorities to carry more weight; and there it is laid down firmly that a failure to compare, in the absence of some unusual and pertinent excuse, will make the bank responsible for the payment.

And, upon the question whether the officer used reasonable care in the comparison, it is held that what the jury are to determine is what degree of significance would be attached 69 L. R. A.

to the differences observed in the signatures, not by a common person, but by a skilled person such as the cashier was; so that they might judge not only of what was the effect upon his mind caused by his comparing the signatures, but of what would have been the effect if he had given due attention to what the dissimilarities indicated. Fricke v. German Sav. Bank, 24 Jones & S. 468, 4 N. Y. Supp. 627. (See supra, IV. d.)

V. Contributory negligence of the depositor. a. In general.

While an action against a savings bank by a depositor for the amount of an account paid to a fraudulent claimant is necessarily one founded upon the contract, entered into by the bank at the time of the deposit, to pay to the real owner of the account, the element of negligence in making the payment, in theory, can enter into the action on the contract only upon the supposition that the bank contracted not to be negligent in making any payments, but to use reasonable care, or its best efforts, as the case might be, to avoid imposition and consequent damage to the depositor.

Similarly, logically, the element of contributory negligence can enter into the discussion only upon the theory that the bank, in making the contract not to be negligent, only agreed to this upon the condition, generally unexpressed, that the depositor should not be negligent in providing a stranger with the material for perpetrating the fraud, either by allowing him to obtain possession of the book which by the contract was to constitute the evidence of the right to draw upon the account; or by affording him information which, being such as only the depositor would naturally possess, would enable the fraudulent claimant to convince the bank's officials of his identity with the depositor; or by making the deposit in the name of another person; or by failing to give the bank notice, in good season, of the loss or theft of the book immediately after discovering the fact.

In a case where the evidence showed that the depositor received a letter requesting in-

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

William LANGDALE, Plff. in Err.,
v.
CITIZENS' BANK OF SAVANNAH.

(121 Ga. 105.)

- *1. A depositor in a savings bank is bound by the reasonable rules of the bank, to which he assents by an agreement in writing.
2. A rule providing that "every effort will be made to protect depositors against fraud, but payment made to a person presenting pass book shall be good and valid on account of the owner, unless the pass book has been lost and notice in writing given to [the] bank before such payment is made," is reasonable, and binding upon depositors.
3. Under the terms of such a rule,

*Headnotes by CANDLER, J.

(October 17, 1904.)

formation as to certain personal matters, which would enable its possessor to answer the test questions usually put to one applying at a savings bank for money, in order to identify him, and the depositor answered the letter, giving the desired information, this amounted to contributory negligence which, as a matter of law, would bar an action by the depositor for money paid by the savings bank to one who represented himself to be the depositor, and in answer to the test questions put to him gave the answers so obtained. Wall v. Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bank, 64 Hun, 249, 19 N. Y. Supp. 194.

And where the account was begun in the name of another than the real depositor, but not in trust for anyone, and the person in whose name the deposit was made discovered the fact, stole the bank book, and drew the money, it was held that the depositor was guilty of such gross negligence as not to entitle him to any favorable consideration by the court, and, inasmuch as the bank acted in good faith and without negligence in protecting the rights of the depositor, since the signature of the fraudulent claimant, upon which he drew the money, was his genuine signature, and, upon the face of the records of the bank and all information possessed by its officers, he was the person entitled to the money, it was wholly unlike the case of money being drawn from a bank on a forged check or order, for there the bank officers are bound, at their peril, to know that the signature on which they pay out the funds of a depositor is genuine. Arkofsky v. State Sav. Bank, 91 Minn. 440, 103 Am. St. Rep. 519, 98 N. W. 326.

So, also, where the deposit was made in the name of someone else than the depositor, and, after the real depositor's death, the person presenting the book, whether or not he was the same person as the one in whose name the money was deposited, was questioned as to various matters apparently identifying him, answered to the description of the depositor, and made a signature which was compared by the official representing the bank with the genuine signature of the depositor on file, and was thought by the official to resemble the genuine where a pass book is presented by a person other than the depositor to whom it belongs, together with a forged check bearing a signature similar to that of the depositor, and there is nothing to arouse the suspicion of the teller or put him upon inquiry as a reasonably prudent man as to the genuineness of the check, and the bank in good faith pays the check, believing the person presenting it to be the depositor, it is not liable in a suit by the depositor to recover the money so paid.

4. The principle announced in the preceding headnote is not affected by another rule of the bank prescribing that depositors must always present their pass books when depositing or withdrawing money, and that, "If not present personally, an order properly signed and witnessed must accompany the presentation of the book in case of withdrawal."

one sufficiently,—a finding by a referee in favor of the bank was not disturbed on appeal. People v. Third Ave. Sav. Bank, 98 N. Y. 661.

And the fact that he is illiterate and cannot read the by-laws printed on his pass book is no excuse to the depositor for not keeping his book safely as the rules demanded. Burrill v. Dollar Sav. Bank, 92 Pa. 134, 37 Am. Rep. 669.

On the other hand, in the same jurisdiction as that in which two of the last cited cases were decided, it has been declared since that the rule of contributory negligence of the depositor has no application to such a case, in spite of the holding in Wall v. Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bank, 64 Hun, 249, 19 N. Y. Supp. 194. Geitelsohn v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 17 Misc. 574, 40 N. Y. Supp. 662.

So if the case is one of mispayment contrary to the published rules there can be no question of contributory negligence in the case. Peoples' Sav. Bank v. Cupps, 91 Pa. 315.

And when the lack of care of the depositor is not the legal cause of the injury, but merely the occasion of it, or merely an antecedent condition, the only question is whether the bank used reasonable care, and the question of contributory negligence is not involved in it. Brown v. Merrimack River Sav. Bank, 67 N. H. 549, 68 Am. St. Rep. 700, 39 Atl. 336.

b. Failure to give notice to the bank.

When the depositor, having discovered that his pass book is missing, fails to let the bank officials know of the fact without delay, he is generally guilty of the very negligence which the by-laws are intended to guard against.

Under a by-law providing that "payments to persons producing the pass book shall be valid payments to discharge the bank," a depositor discovering the loss of his book is bound, at his peril, to notify the bank promptly of the fact; and payment to a thief presenting the pass book with a forged order, two days after the loss and after it is suspected by the owner, who has in the meantime an opportunity to inform the bank of it, discharges the bank from liability, on the ground of contributory negligence in the depositor. Kelly v. Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bank, 2 Daly, 229.

ERROR to the City Court of Savannah to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover money which plaintiff had deposited with defendant. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. Jacob Gazan, for plaintiff in error:

A rule required that, if not present personally, an order properly signed and witnessed must accompany the presentation of the book in case of withdrawal.

The depositor was not personally present when the $50 were withdrawn; nor was the order "properly signed and witnessed."

The payment was contrary to the rule, and the bank is liable.

2 Morse, Banks & Banking, 4th ed. § 620e; Ladd v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 96 Me. 516, 58 L. R. A. 288, 52 Atl. 1012; Kummel v. Germania Sav. Bank, 127 N. Y. 488, 13 L. R. A. 788, 28 N. E. 398; People's Sav. Bank v. Cupps, 91 Pa. 315.

The money was paid without any effort being made to protect the depositor against fraud, and solely because the pass book was presented; and the bank is liable.

24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1259 (2); 2 Morse, Banks & Banking, 4th ed.

Naturally, however, when the failure to give notice was due to the depositor having been shot by the thief who presented the book and obtained the payment, and his having been disabled until after the payment, there could be no question of negligence on his part. Wegner v. Second Ward Sav. Bank, 76 Wis. 242, 44 N. W. 1096.

And where the person presenting the book was not required to identify himself, and no comparison was made of his signature with that of the depositor on file, the neglect of the depositor in not reporting the loss of the book was not the legal cause of the injury complained of, but only the occasion of it, or merely an antecedent condition; and hence the question of contributory negligence was not involved. Brown v. Merrimack River Sav. Bank, 67 N. H. 549, 68 Am. St. Rep. 700, 39 Atl. 336.

c. Failure to keep the pass book safely.

Where the case is one of payment contrary to the published rules of the bank, there can be no question of contributory negligence in the depositor in not keeping his book safely. People's Sav. Bank v. Cupps, 91 Pa. 315; Geltesohn v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 17 Misc. 574, 40 N. Y. Supp. 662.

But it has been held that if the officers of the savings bank, using care and diligence, but lacking present means of identifying the person presenting the book, pay to one apparently lawfully in possession of the pass book as its owner, they have a right to rely upon the contract of the depositor safely to keep the evidence of his claim, or to make known its loss before it is presented for payment. Sullivan v. Lewiston Inst. of Savings, 56 Me. 507, 98 Am. Dec. 500.
69 L. R. A.

§ 620e; Allen v. Williamsburgh Sav. Bank, 69 N. Y. 314.

A by-law that "the institution will not be responsible for loss sustained when the depositor has not given notice of his book being lost or stolen" does not relieve the bank from the duty of acting in good faith and with reasonable care.

Brown v. Merrimack River Sav. Bank, 67 N. H. 549, 68 Am. St. Rep. 700, 39 Atl. 336; Kimball v. Norton, 59 N. H. 1, 47 Am. Rep. 171; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1258b.

Active vigilance to detect fraud and forgery is due by savings-bank officers to a depositor on paying the deposit to one presenting the pass book.

Kummel v. Germania Sav. Bank, 127 N. Y. 488, 13 L. R. A. 786, 28 N. E. 398; Brown v. Merrimack River Sav. Bank, 67 N. H. 549, 68 Am. St. Rep. 700, 39 Atl. 336; Ladd v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 96 Me. 516, 58 L. R. A. 288, 52 Atl. 1012; Allen v. Williamsburgh Sav. Bank, 69 N. Y. 314; Boone v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 84 N. Y. 83, 38 Am. Rep. 498; Smith v. Brooklyn Sav. Bank, 101 N. Y. 63, 54 Am. Dec. 653, 4 N. E. 123.

Whether or not the bank was negligent in paying to one who had stolen the pass book,

VI. Matters of evidence.

Under the principle that a savings bank must exercise ordinary care in making payments, it is necessary for the depositor, in an action for the amount of his deposit, involving the validity of such payments, to give proof of facts tending to show a failure to exercise reasonable care and prudence in disbursing the money. So where the record presents no proof of such facts upon which negligence by the bank officials can possibly be predicated, there is no question for submission to the jury, and a motion to dismiss should be granted. Israel v. Bowery Sav. Bank, 9 Daly, 507.

And under the New York statute (Laws of 1875, chap. 371, § 23) a savings bank depending for its defense upon its provisions, in an action by a depositor to recover moneys paid out by it to a fraudulent claimant, must show affirmatively that it has complied with the provision of that statute directing that the bank shall put up the regulations for payments of deposits, in some conspicuous place, and that they shall be printed in the pass book; and it is no excuse for noncompliance that the regulations are printed in the pass book, when the depositor did not read them. Kress v. East Side Sav. Bank, 50 N. Y. S. R. 273, 21 N. Y. Supp. 652.

And, as bearing on the question whether the depositor had colluded in the presentation of the book and withdrawal of the account, it is proper to admit the evidence of the plaintiff, the depositor's administrator, that the depositor, dying soon after the payment, was nearly penniless. Brown v. Merrimack River Sav. Bank, 67 N. H. 549, 68 Am. St. Rep. 700, 39 Atl. 336.

L. B. B.

and who presented it at the bank, personating plaintiff, and signing his name to the check, the bank having no notice of the theft, is a question for the jury.

Wegner v. Second Ward Sav. Bank, 76 Wis. 242, 44 N. W. 1096; Farmer v. Manhattan Sav. Inst. 60 Hun, 462, 15 N. Y. Supp. 235; Allen v. Williamsburgh Sav. Bank, 69 N. Y. 314; Saling v. German Sav. Bank, 15 Daly, 386, 7 N. Y. Supp. 642.

The bank having paid on the faith of the book being presented, and not because of any similarity in the signatures, it must be justified in making the payment on that ground or lose.

2 Herman, Estoppel, p. 947; Fenn v. Ware, 100 Ga. 666, 28 S. E. 238; People's Sav. Bank v. Smith, 114 Ga. 185, 39 S. E. 920; Atlanta Trust & Bkg. Co. v. Close, 115 Ga. 939, 42 S. E. 265; Choice v. State, 31 Ga. 425.

Messrs. Adams & Adams, for defendant in error:

The signing of the book was the token of an agreement to abide by the rules, and was not put there for comparison.

The agreement that payment made to a person presenting the book shall be good is absolute and unconditional, in the absence of bad faith on the part of the bank.

Stonestreet v. Harrison, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 161; First Nat. Bank v. Foster, 9 Wyo. 157, 54 L. R. A. 549, 61 Pac. 466, 63 Pac. 1056.

The bank book must be produced in order to draw the deposit, and production of the book shall be authority to the bank to pay the person producing it.

If the bank pays to one having the book, there being no circumstances to excite suspicion and base an imputation of negligence on the part of the bank, the payment is good.

2 Morse, Banks & Banking, § 620, * 959; 5 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 608; Schoenwald v. Metropolitan Sav. Bank, 57 N. Y. 418; Levy v. Franklin Sav. Bank, 117 Mass. 448; Goldrick v. Bristol County Sav. Bank, 123 Mass. 320; Burrill v. Dollar Sav. Bank, 92 Pa. 134, 37 Am. Rep. 669; Donlan v. Provident Inst. for Savings, 127 Mass. 183, 34 Am. Rep. 358; Sullivan v. Lewiston Inst. of Savings, 56 Me. 507, 96 Am. Dec. 500; Cosgrove v. Provident Inst. for Savings, 64 N. J. L. 653, 46 Atl. 617.

If it had occurred to Mr. Farr that there was something suspicious about this matter, and he had looked at the signature in the book, such examination would have been calculated to confirm the right of the party to draw, and not to excite suspicion.

Rogers, Expert Testimony, pp. 177, 178.

Candler, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There is practically no dispute as to the 69 L. R. A.

material facts of this case. The defendant in the court below was a banking corporation, conducting under authority of its charter a savings department, depositors in which were paid interest on their deposits. The savings department was governed by certain rules and regulations, and depositors were required, upon opening their accounts, to sign an agreement to abide by these rules, of which the following are material to the present discussion: "A depositor must always present his or her pass book when depositing or withdrawing. If not present personally, an order properly signed and witnessed must accompany the presentation of the book in case of withdrawal." "Every effort will be made to protect depositors against fraud, but payment made to a person presenting pass book shall be good and valid on account of the owner, unless the pass book has been lost and notice in writing given to this bank before such payment is made." The plaintiff was a depositor in the savings department, and as such had assented to the rules mentioned. The cashier of the bank cautioned him to take good care of his pass book, and not let it "lie around loose," pointing out to him the rules on the subject. A check for $50 was drawn against the plaintiff's account, and was cashed. He claims that the check was a forgery, and brings this suit to recover from the bank the amount for which it was drawn. From the plaintiff's testimony it appears that his pass book was kept locked in a trunk, and never, so far as he knew, left his possession. Presumably, however, it was stolen, and afterwards returned, for the evidence of the bank cashier is undisputed that the person who drew the money on the check presented the pass book, and the first knowledge that the plaintiff seems to have had that the $50 had been withdrawn from the bank was when, on a subsequent occasion, he took the book to the bank for the purpose of withdrawing money, and noticed the entry of the alleged forged check. The admittedly genuine signature of the plaintiff, as well as the signature to the check alleged to have been forged, both appear in the record; and, while no member of this court claims to be a handwriting expert, it is obvious that the signatures bear a general similarity to each other.* When the

*A comparison of the genuine and spurious signatures as they appear in the record discloses that they are no more similar than the handwriting of any two laboring men might naturally be supposed to be. There was no attempt in the spurious signature to copy the genuine, but the signatures stand with the distinguishing characteristics of the writing of the two persons who executed the signatures apparent upon them. No one familiar with handwriting would, with the genuine signature check for $50 was presented for payment, the cashier did not compare the signature with the genuine signature of the plaintiff on the books of the bank, but paid the check on the strength of the possession of the pass book and the similarity of the appearance of the person presenting the check to that of the plaintiff as he recollected him. The depositors in the savings department of the defendant numbered more than 2,000, the great majority of whom were persons who did not do a general banking business, who were not frequently seen at the bank, and who were, therefore, not familiar to the bank officials and employees. The plaintiff was a motorman in the employment of a street railroad company, and the person drawing the check was apparently also a street railroad employee. The testimony for the defendant was positive to the effect that there was nothing to put the cashier, who paid the money, on notice that the check was not genuine, or to arouse his suspicion that the person presenting it was not the plaintiff. As to this the evidence for the plaintiff was, in the nature of things, silent. On this state of facts the case went to the jury, who found for the defendant. The plaintiff made a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and he accepted.

The motion for a new trial contains numerous grounds, but in its last analysis the case turns upon the single question whether, under the circumstances already narrated, and in view of the rules of the defendant bank, it was the duty of the cashier to make a comparison of the signature to the alleged forged check with the genuine signature of the plaintiff on the books of the bank, or if, there being nothing to reasonably excite his suspicion as to the honesty of the transaction, he was authorized to pay the money by reason of the presentation of the pass book and an apparently genuine check. So far as we are aware, no case has ever been decided by this court which is in point on this subject, and we are therefore compelled to rely upon standard text-books and cases adjudicated by other courts for authority for the ruling now made. There are many points of marked difference between savings banks and ordinary banks which receive deposits subject to check and pay no interest thereon. In the nature of the relationship between the savings bank and its depositors, the rules governing that relationship enter into the contract of deposit, and especially is this so when the depositor agrees in writing that he shall be bound by these rules. It is a common rule of such banks that the depositor shall produce his bank book in order to draw his deposit, or any part of it, and that production of the book shall be authority to the bank to pay the person producing it. "This is regarded as a reasonable and binding regulation, and if the bank pay to one having the book, there being no circumstances to excite suspicion and base an imputation of negligence on the part of the bank, the payment is good." 2 Morse, Banks & Banking, § 620; Schoenwald v. Metropolitan Sav. Bank, 57 N. Y. 418; Levy v. Franklin Sav. Bank, 117 Mass. 448; Goldrick v. Bristol County Sav. Bank, 123 Mass. 320; Burrill v. Dollar Sav. Bank, 92 Pa. 134, 37 Am. Rep. 669; Donlan v. Provident Inst. for Savings, 127 Mass. 183, 34 Am. Rep. 358; Cosgrove v. Provident Inst. for Savings, 64 N. J. L. 653, 46 Atl. 617. In the case of Sullivan v. Lewiston Inst. of Savings, 56 Me. 507, 96 Am. Dec. 500, which is very closely in point, it was held: Officers of savings institutions are required to exercise reasonable care and diligence only in making payments on account of deposits. And if, using such care and diligence, but lacking present means of identifying the claimant of the deposit, they make a payment upon presentation of the book by one apparently in the lawful possession of it as owner, the institution has a right to rely upon the contract of the depositor safely to keep the evidence of his claim, or to make known its loss before it is presented for payment, and the depositor is bound by the payment.

The reason for such a rule is at once apparent when the nature of savings institutions is considered. Deposits are not subject to check, and most of the depositors are seen but occasionally at the bank, rendering identification of the depositor more difficult in mind, have honored the spurious one. Therefore, the decision of the court amounts to a holding that production of the pass book with no suspicious circumstances to put the bank officers on guard is sufficient to justify the payment of checks by a savings bank, and that such bank is not bound to know the signatures of its depositors, and that the rule applicable in case of other banks by which the signature is given such prominence in the bank's dealings is not applicable in case of savings banks. This rule is somewhat startling, and certainly relieves the savings bank of the duty of making use of one safeguard, 69 L. R. A.

which, in the case of ordinary banks, is held to be of the highest importance. With the genuine signature on file, subject to the inspection of the bank officer at any time, it would seem to be gross negligence on his part, not at least to compare the signature of the proffered check with that on file, in case the signature was not familiar to the officer to whom the check was presented. The observance of such a rule in the case above reported would have prevented loss, and it is difficult to see how the bank could be relieved from liability when it utterly neglected to take so simple a precaution. [Ed.] than is the case with ordinary banks. By agreement between the bank and its depositors, possession of the pass book is made prima facie evidence of the right to draw upon the fund which it represents. The check itself is unlike checks drawn upon ordinary banks, not being negotiable, and being in reality nothing but a receipt for the money drawn. Of course, a savings bank would be liable if its officers or employees should negligently or recklessly pay out money to one not entitled to receive it; and this seems to be the basis of the cases relied upon as authority by counsel for the plaintiff in error. But in this case there seems to have been no negligence chargeable to the bank. The money was paid in good faith to one in possession of the plaintiff's pass book, and apparently clothed with the right to that possession. Under the rules of the bank assented to by the plaintiff, possession of the pass book was prima facie evidence of the right to draw the money which it represented; and there seems to have been absolutely nothing to put the teller on inquiry as to the genuineness of the check. Under these circumstances we cannot hold that it was his duty to go further, and compare the signature with that of the plaintiff on file in the bank, and that, failing in this, the bank is liable for the money so paid out.

Much stress is laid in the brief of counsel for the plaintiff in error upon the rule that, unless the depositor is personally present with his pass book when drawing money, "an order properly signed and witnessed must accompany the presentation of the book in case of withdrawal," and it is urged that because the plaintiff did not appear in person, and the person who did present the pass book had no order as required by the rule, the bank is liable for the payment of the money. Thoughtful consideration must show that this argument is entirely specious. Plainly, this rule has no application to a case like this, where the check drawn was in fraud of both the plaintiff and the bank. Its purport is merely to show that a savings-bank account is not negotiable by delivery of the pass book, and to prescribe that when a depositor wishes to assign his funds on deposit he must do it in a certain manner. It is also urged that the rule reciting that "every effort will be made to protect depositors against fraud" required that the cashier or teller to whom the check was presented should at least compare the signature to the check with that of the plaintiff on file with the bank; and that the ensuing clause, "but payment made to a person presenting pass book shall be good and valid on account of the owner," etc., when taken in connection with the first part of the rule, conveys the meaning that the bank will only be excused from liability when it pays the money after having exerted "every effort" and used extreme caution to prevent fraud. We cannot agree with this construction of the rule. Giving it what seems to us a reasonable intendment, the rule means this: "We will do what we can to keep you from being defrauded, but, as the pass book is prima facie evidence of the right to draw money, you must look well after your pass book, and see that it does not fall into the hands of a thief or forger. Our means of identification are imperfect, and if your pass book is presented by someone other than yourself, with apparent right to draw your money, we will, unless our suspicions are aroused, honor his check without further question. We will deal honestly and fairly with you, but you must take every precaution to protect yourself by the preservation of your pass book." Such a rule is reasonable, and, as the plaintiff in the present case assented to it in writing, he is bound by its terms.

The foregoing disposes of the case on its substantial merits, and it follows that, regardless of inaccuracies in the charge of the court as disclosed by the motion for a new trial, the verdict was demanded, and the judgment overruling the motion will not be disturbed.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE of the State of Michigan
v.

John P. SCHNEIDER, Plff. in Certiorari.

(.... Mich.)

1. Power to require the registering and numbering of automobiles is conferred upon the city council by charter authority to control, prescribe, and regulate the manner in which the streets shall be used and enjoyed.

2. The court will take judicial notice of the fact that many automobiles may be driven at a speed of at least 40 miles per hour.

3. Authority given to a municipal corporation to regulate includes authority

NOTE.—As to limitation of speed of automobiles in streets under control of park commission, see, in this series, Com. v. Crowninshield, 68 L. R. A. 245, with footnote as to 60 L. R. A.

missioners, see, in this series, Com. v. Crowninshield, 68 L. R. A. 245, with footnote as to to license as a means of regulation when it cannot be otherwise accomplished.

4. Requiring an automobile to carry a number does not violate the constitutional provision against unreasonable searches, or compel the owner to testify against himself, or deprive him of property without due process of law.

(April 21, 1905.)

CERTIORARI to the Recorder's Court of Detroit to review a judgment convicting defendant of violating a municipal ordinance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Henry F. Chipman and Henry Look, for plaintiff in certiorari:

Municipal corporations derive all their power from legislative acts, and can pass no ordinance which conflicts with the terms of the charter.

People v. Armstrong, 73 Mich. 288, 2 L. R. A. 721, 16 Am. St. Rep. 578, 41 N. W. 275; Taylor v. Bay City Street R. Co. 80 Mich. 77, 45 N. W. 335; Grand Rapids v. Newton, 111 Mich. 48, 35 L. R. A. 226, 66 Am. St. Rep. 387, 69 N. W. 84.

Whenever a by-law is clearly unconstitutional, or its provisions are inconsistent with any of the requisites to its validity, it becomes the duty of the courts, as a matter of law, to declare it void.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 240.

Police power may regulate and preserve, and extend to the protection of, the public health, good order, and decency, the lives, health, and property of citizens; may maintain good order and public morals, and prevent imposition and fraud.

People v. Wagner, 86 Mich. 594, 13 L. R. A. 286, 24 Am. St. Rep. 141, 49 N. W. 609; Davock v. Moore, 105 Mich. 120, 28 L. R. A. 783, 63 N. W. 424; People v. Phippin, 70 Mich. 6, 37 N. W. 888; Sherlock v. Stuart, 96 Mich. 197, 21 L. R. A. 580, 55 N. W. 845; People v. Walling, 53 Mich. 264, 18 N. W. 807; Robison v. Haug, 71 Mich. 38, 38 N. W. 668; People v. Henwood, 123 Mich. 317, 82 N. W. 70; People v. Reetz, 127 Mich. 87, 86 N. W. 396.

But property is sacred.

People v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 52 Mich. 277, 17 N. W. 841; Re Frazee, 63 Mich. 396, 6 Am. St. Rep. 310, 30 N. W. 72.

In Michigan police power is not omnipotent; it cannot, under the guise of regulation, destroy property rights arbitrarily and without reason.

Grand Rapids v. Powers, 89 Mich. 94, 14 limitation of speed of vehicles in streets generally.

As to validity of regulation of use of bicycles on streets, see note to Taylor v. Union Traction Co. 47 L. R. A. 289. 69 L. R. A.

L. R. A. 498, 28 Am. St. Rep. 276, 50 N. W. 661; Chaddock v. Day, 75 Mich. 527, 4 L. R. A. 809, 13 Am. St. Rep. 468, 42 N. W. 977.

Any person is at liberty to pursue any lawful calling, and to do so in his own way, not encroaching on the rights of others.

Sherlock v. Stuart, 96 Mich. 197, 21 L. R. A. 580, 55 N. W. 845; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 742.

Property does not consist merely in the title and possession; it includes the right to make any use of it.

Kuhn v. Detroit, 70 Mich. 534, 38 N. W. 470.

The ordinance is inquisitorial, and compels the owner either to submit to a search or to give testimony against himself.

Robison v. Haug, 71 Mich. 38, 38 N. W. 668; Chaddock v. Day, 75 Mich. 527, 4 L. R. A. 809, 13 Am. St. Rep. 468, 42 N. W. 977; Weimer v. Bunbury, 30 Mich. 201; Rosenthal v. Dickerman (Rosenthal v. Muskegon Circuit Judge), 98 Mich. 208, 22 L. R. A. 693, 39 Am. St. Rep. 535, 57 N. W. 112; Rouse, H. & Co. v. Donovan, 104 Mich. 234, 27 L. R. A. 577, 53 Am. St. Rep. 457, 62 N. W. 359; Parsons v. Russell, 11 Mich. 113, 83 Am. Dec. 728.

The common council of the city of Detroit possesses no authority to make criminal by ordinance that which is not so in fact.

Grand Rapids v. Powers, 89 Mich. 94, 14 L. R. A. 498, 28 Am. St. Rep. 276, 50 N. W. 661; Re Frazee, 63 Mich. 407, 6 Am. St. Rep. 310, 30 N. W. 72.

The ordinance, in compelling owners of automobiles to take out a license, imposes a burden upon one class of citizens in the use of the streets not imposed upon others, and is a restriction which is not applied alike to all.

Chicago v. Collins, 175 Ill. 445, 49 L. R. A. 408, 67 Am. St. Rep. 224, 51 N. E. 907; Wilkie v. Chicago, 188 Ill. 444, 80 Am. St. Rep. 182, 58 N. E. 1004; Cairo v. Bross, 101 Ill. 475; Kiel v. Chicago, 176 Ill. 137, 52 N. E. 29; Besette v. People, 193 Ill. 334, 56 L. R. A. 558, 62 N. E. 215.

An automobile is a vehicle entitled to all and equal rights in the public streets with other vehicles.

A bicycle is a vehicle.

Myers v. Hinds, 110 Mich. 300, 33 L. R. A. 356, 64 Am. St. Rep. 345, 68 N. W. 156; Murfin v. Detroit & E. Pl. Road Co. 113 Mich. 675, 38 L. R. A. 198, 67 Am. St. Rep.

As to license fee for use of streets by vehicles, see Tomlinson v. Indianapolis, 36 L. R. A. 413, and note; also Chicago v. Collins, 49 L. R. A. 408.

489, 71 N. W. 1108, Leslie v. Grand Rapids, 120 Mich. 28, 78 N. W. 885.

Messrs. Timothy E. Tarsney and J. Walter Dohany, for defendant in certiorari:

The ordinance is not void for discrimination.

Des Moines v. Keller, 116 Iowa, 648, 57 L. R. A. 243, 93 Am. St. Rep. 268, 88 N. W. 827; People v. Hanrahan, 75 Mich. 611, 4 L. R. A. 751, 42 N. W. 1124.

The council has the power to provide for the preservation of the general health of the inhabitants, and to make regulations to secure the same.

Chicago Packing & Provision Co. v. Chicago, 88 Ill. 221, 30 Am. Rep. 545; Kinsley v. Chicago, 124 Ill. 359, 16 N. E. 260.

The legislature has power to delegate to municipalities the regulation of general street traffic.

Cicero Lumber Co. v. Cicero, 176 Ill. 9, 42 L. R. A. 696, 68 Am. St. Rep. 155, 51 N. E. 758; Dane v. Mobile, 36 Ala. 304; People ex rel. Nechamov v. City Prison, 144 N. Y. 529, 27 L. R. A. 718, 39 N. E. 686; Dill. Mun. Corp. p. 810, § 682.

The delegation of power by the legislature to the common council in §§ 169 and 170 of the charter is not such a delegation of power as will be held unconstitutional.

Brodhine v. Revere, 182 Mass. 598, 66 N. E. 607; Nagle v. Augusta, 5 Ga. 546.

No one can say that the license charge of $1, which includes the price of the tag or number, is unreasonable or a tax, when the paying of the sum but once entitles the person to use said number and operate his automobile for all time to come.

Terre Haute v. Kersey, 159 Ind. 300, 95 Am. St. Rep. 296, 64 N. E. 469; Brown v. Galveston, 97 Tex. 1, 75 S. W. 488; Norfolk v. Flynn, 101 Va. 473, 62 L. R. A. 771, 99 Am. St. Rep. 918, 44 S. E. 717.

Police power in its broadest acceptance means the general power of a government to preserve and promote the public welfare by prohibiting all things hurtful to the comfort, safety, and welfare of society, and establishing such rules and regulations for the conduct of all persons and the use and management of all property as may be conducive to the public interests.

22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 916; Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814, 25 L. ed. 1079; Wettengel v. Denver, 20 Colo. 552, 39 Pac. 343; Love v. Recorder's Ct. Judge (Love v. Phalan) 128 Mich. 545, 55 L. R. A. 618, 87 N. W. 785; Com. v. Bearse, 132 Mass. 542, 42 Am. Rep. 450; State, Cape May, D. B. & S. P. R. Co., Prosecutor, v. Cape May, 59 N. J. L. 404, 36 L. R. A. 657, 36 Atl. 678; American Rapid Teleg. Co. v. Hess, 69 L. R. A.

125 N. Y. 641, 13 L. R. A. 454, 21 Am. St. Rep. 764, 26 N. E. 919; Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 140, 62 Am. Dec. 625; Braun v. Chicago, 110 Ill. 187; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; People ex rel. Mizer v. Manistee County, 28 Mich. 422; Com. v. Stodder, 2 Cush. 562, 48 Am. Dec. 679; Frankfort & P. Pass. R. Co. v. Philadelphia, 58 Pa. 119, 98 Am. Dec. 242.

The common council has power to provide for the general health of the inhabitants of the city, and to abate and remove all nuisances in said city.

Rex v. Egerly, Cited in 3 Salk. 183; Rex v. Cross, 3 Campb. 226; King v. Russell, 6 East, 427; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 660, note. The ordinance is reasonable.

People v. Lewis, 86 Mich. 273, 49 N. W. 140; People v. Hotchkiss, 118 Mich. 59, 76 N. W. 142; Jackson v. People, 9 Mich. 111, 77 Am. Dec. 491; Hyde v. Nelson, 11 Mich. 353; Linn v. Roberts, 15 Mich. 443; Lynch v. People, 16 Mich. 472; Brown v. Blanchard, 39 Mich. 790; Sheldon v. Stewart, 43 Mich. 574, 5 N. W. 1067; Fellows v. Canney, 75 Mich. 445, 42 N. W. 958; Crawford v. Byrnes, 112 Mich. 599, 71 N. W. 152.

Carpenter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Certiorari to the recorder's court of the city of Detroit. Respondent was convicted in the lower court, and fined $25, for operating an automobile in the streets of the city of Detroit without having first registered said automobile, and without placing thereon a number, as required by an ordinance of said city. We are asked to set aside said conviction upon the ground that said ordinance is invalid.

The provisions of said ordinance material to this decision are as follows:

"Sec. 1. No person or persons shall drive or propel any automobile or other motor vehicle within what is known as $\frac{3}{4}$ mile circle at a rate of speed to exceed eight (8) miles per hour; nor shall any person or persons drive or propel any automobile or other motor vehicle outside of said $\frac{3}{4}$ mile circle within the city limits at a rate of speed to exceed twelve (12) miles per hour; and at no time shall any person or persons drive or propel any automobile on any street, highway, or public place in a careless, reckless, or negligent manner. . . .

"Sec. 2. The owner or driver of any automobile or other motor vehicle shall, before operating the same, register with the license collector his name and residence, together with a description of the vehicle so owned or operated, and the license collector shall enter such name and residence and description in a record kept for that purpose, and shall furnish the person so registered with one or more aluminum figures sufficient to compose a number corresponding with the number appearing upon the record so made. The figures shall be four (4) inches high, and three (3) inches in width, for which the person to whom delivered shall pay to said license collector the sum of one dollar ($1). The owner of such vehicle shall place, or cause to be placed, such figures on the rear of his vehicle in the center of the bed thereof, arranging the same in a horizontal line with a space of one and one-half (1½) inches, between the nearest adjacent points thereof, and on a dark background; but said figures may be rigidly attached to the axle or hung under the body of the vehicle; said figures shall at no time be concealed or covered, but shall be kept in plain sight. . . .

"Sec. 5. No person shall operate, or cause to be operated, an automobile or other motor vehicle upon any of the streets, alleys, boulevards, park driveways, or public grounds, of the city of Detroit without complying with the provisions hereof.

"Provided that the provisions of the ordinance relating to the registration and numbering of such vehicles and notification as to transfers thereof shall not apply to automobiles or other motor vehicles owned by nonresident visitors when said vehicle is kept in the city for not more than two (2) days.

"Sec. 6. Any person violating any of the provisions of this ordinance shall be punished by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars ($100) for each offense; and, in the imposition of such fine, the court may make a further sentence that, in default of the payment of such fine, the offender may be imprisoned in the Detroit House of Correction for such offense for any period of time not exceeding three (3) months."

Respondent concedes that part of the ordinance regulating the speed of automobiles is valid. He contends, however, that the provisions respecting registration and numbering are invalid. His objections to the validity of those provisions may be classified thus: (1) The legislature has never granted to the common council of Detroit authority to enact them. (2) They interfere with respondent's constitutional rights. We will consider each of these objections separately.

1. Has the legislature authorized the common council to enact the provision in question? This depends upon the proper construction of § 170 of the city charter, which gives the common council authority "to control, prescribe, and regulate the manner in which the highways, streets, avenues, lanes, alleys, and public grounds and spaces within said city shall be used and enjoyed." It is scarcely necessary to say that this gives the common council ample authority to enact ordinances which will tend to make streets safe for the traveling public. We may take judicial notice that many of these automobiles may be driven at a speed of at least 40 miles an hour. Driven by indifferent, careless, or incompetent operators, these vehicles may be a menace to the safety of the traveling public. Under its authority to regulate the use of the streets, the city may enact ordinances which will diminish this danger. It is clear, and it is conceded, that it may regulate the speed of automobiles and repress their careless management, but it is contended that it has no power to provide for their registration and numbering. It is not difficult to see that the registration and numbering of automobiles is intimately connected with their safe operation in the streets. In a city like Detroit many automobiles are precisely alike in external appearance. They are sometimes operated by persons whose faces are partially concealed and whose identity is uncertain. Those operators who are most reckless and indifferent—and those are the ones who endanger the safety of others—may violate this ordinance with impunity unless some method is adopted by which they or their automobiles may be identified. The provision in the ordinance for registration and numbering is such a method. It is reasonable to believe that, when he knows that the number displayed at the rear identifies his automobile, fear of discovery and punishment will lead the automobile's driver to observe the requirements of the ordinance. Indeed, we cannot say that the common council did not decide—and did not justly decide—that the provision for identification by registering and numbering was necessary to prevent injury to pedestrians and other travelers from the careless management of automobiles. If authority be needed for the proposition that the city may enact this provision for the purpose of identifying automobiles which endanger the safety of travelers, Frankford & P. Pass. R. Co. v. Philadelphia, 58 Pa. 119, 98 Am. Dec. 242, is such an authority. The ordinance there in question provided "that each car run shall be numbered and have its number painted in a conspicuous place." The court sustained this ordinance, saying: "It is obvious . . . that its effect is that of a police regulation. It clearly furnishes a means of identifying every car which may be run in violation of those rights and public interests which the city is authorized by its charter to maintain and secure." See also Laundry License Case, 22 Fed. 703.

But it is said that the provision for registration and numbering is a license, and that the grant of authority to regulate gave the city no power to license. If the provision for registration and numbering—which involves no discrimination, and requires the payment of nothing more than is necessary to pay for the number which the municipality furnishes—can be regarded as a license (for conflicting definitions of "license," see Cooley on Taxation, 3d ed. p. 1137; Adler v. Whitbeck 44 Ohio St. 539, 9 N. E. 672), it is not a license for the purpose of raising revenue. If it were, it might well be contended that it did not pass as an incident to the power to regulate. See Cooley, Taxn. 3d ed. p. 1141; Laundry License Case, 22 Fed. 703. It is a license (if a license at all) as a mere means of regulation: indeed, we might say, as already shown, as a necessary means of regulation. This proposition is self-evident, vis., that the grant of authority to accomplish a certain purpose carries with it authority to use any proper and lawful means without which that purpose cannot be accomplished. If, therefore, the speed of automobiles cannot be effectually regulated without licensing them, the grant of the power to regulate confers upon the city power to license, unless some other provision of law forbids the exercise of that power. I think this conclusion is supported by the following authorities: Russellville v. White, 41 Ark. 485; Ft. Smith v. Ayers, 43 Ark. 82; St. Johnsbury v. Thompson, 59 Vt. 300, 59 Am. Rep. 731, 9 Atl. 571; Laundry License Case, 22 Fed. 703. In the Laundry License Case, which involved the licensing of laundries in the city of Portland, Oregon, it was said: "The words 'to control' and 'to regulate,' ex vi termini, imply to restrain, to check, to rule and direct. And in my judgment, the power to do either of these implies the right to license, as a convenient and proper means to that end. . . . By this means the persons or occupations to be regulated are located and identified and brought within the observation of the municipal authorities, so that whatever regulations are made concerning them may be the more easily and certainly enforced." There are cases holding that the grant of power to regulate does not confer upon the city power to license. See Burlington v. Baumgardner, 42 Iowa, 673. In that case (that was a grant of authority to regulate taverns and houses for public entertainment) it might be said that the power of regulation might be effectually exercised without licensing. That is by no means an authority for the proposition that, when regulation cannot otherwise be effectual, the grant of power to regulate does not carry with it power to license. We do not think that any of the cases cited by respondent are opposed to this conclusion. The cases most nearly in point are Chicago v. Collins, 175 Ill. 445, 49 L. R. A. 408, 67 Am. St. Rep. 224, 51 N. E. 907, and Chicago v. Banker, 112 Ill. App. 94. In Chicago v. Collins the supreme court of Illinois held invalid an ordinance of Chicago which imposed a license fee of $10 on each vehicle using the streets of the city. The grounds of that decision were these: (a) The city had no authority to prohibit, and therefore no authority to license, "an ordinary method of locomotion, or even an extraordinary method, if it is not of itself calculated to prevent a reasonably safe use of the street by others." (b) The city had no authority to raise a revenue by taxing the use of vehicles which were already subject to taxation under the general laws of the state. That decision has no application to the case at bar. It does not hold nor indicate that municipal authorities may not (if in their judgment such a requirement is essential to safe travel) exclude from their streets automobiles not registered and numbered. Chicago v. Banker, 112 Ill. App. 94, is more nearly in point. In that case it was decided that an ordinance of the city of Chicago compelling one "who uses his automobile for his private business and pleasure only to submit to an examination and to take out a license (if the examining board see fit to grant it) . . . is beyond the power of the city council, and is therefore void." Without approving that decision, it is sufficient to point out that the ordinance in question in that case goes further than the ordinance in the case at bar.

We conclude, therefore, that the common council of the city of Detroit had authority to provide for the registration and numbering of automobiles under the grant of power to regulate the use of the streets, unless the exercise of that power is forbidden on some constitutional ground.

2. Is the ordinance constitutional? Respondent contends that the ordinance violates § 26, art. 6, of our Constitution, which forbids "unreasonable searches," and § 32 of article 6, which reads: "No person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor to be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." We deem it sufficient to say that the provision requiring one operating an automobile on the street to display thereon a number furnished by the municipality is not an unreasonable search. The statement in the opinion of this court in Robinson v. Haug, 71 Mich. 38, 38 N. W. 668, relied upon by respondent, which denies the right of the public to look into one's private place of business or residence, manifestly has no application. We think it equally clear that the ordinance does not compel an automobile owner or operator to testify against himself, or deprive him of any property rights. It is merely a justifiable exercise of the police power in the interest of the safety of the traveling public. We think it unnecessary to discuss any other objection.

The conviction is affirmed.

Wheeler MUMFORD

v.

Adolph M. STARMONT et al., Plffs. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

1. The arrest of a motorman to abate a nuisance caused by the running of cars when the trolley wire is in such poor condition that it is liable to come down to the injury of travelers upon the street is not justified when the result can be obtained by cutting the feed wires or removing the controllers from the cars.
2. The mayor and chief of police of a city are liable in damages in case they arrest motormen of street cars to abate a nuisance caused by the operation of cars when the trolley wire is in such poor condition as to be liable to fall, when the object can be effected by merely cutting the wires or removing the controllers from the cars.
3. Upon trial of an action for false imprisonment plaintiff may testify that he felt humiliated by the arrest.
4. It is not error to exclude evidence, in an action by a motorman for false imprisonment for attempting to run cars against the orders of the municipal authorities, to the effect that plaintiff was subsequently complimented by his employer for his effort to do so.
5. The exclusion of evidence as to a custom to search prisoners is not error in an action for wrongful arrest, where plaintiff was not searched.
6. An instruction in an action for false imprisonment permitting the damages to be fixed by what the average man would suffer under the circumstances is not reversible error, where there is nothing to show that plaintiff suffered less than would the average man, although the measure of damages should actually have been what plaintiff suffered.

(February 28, 1905.)

NOTE.—As to liability of officer for making arrest, see also, in this series, Leger v. Warren, 51 L. R. A. 198, and note, and McCullough v. Greenfield, 62 L. R. A. 906.

As to liability of municipal corporation for wrongful arrest generally, see Bartlett v. Columbus, 44 L. R. A. 795, and note, and McGraw v. Marion, 47 L. R. A. 593, and note.
69 L. R. A.

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Ingham County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for false imprisonment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Black & Reasoner, with Mr. O. J. Hood, for plaintiffs in error:

The mayor was authorized to abate this public nuisance.

Hart v. Albany, 9 Wend. 571, 24 Am. Dec. 165; Fields v. Stokley, 99 Pa. 306, 44 Am. Rep. 109; Gunter v. Geary, 1 Cal. 462; Harvey v. Dewoody, 18 Ark. 252; Wetmore v. Tracy, 14 Wend. 250, 28 Am. Dec. 525; Van Wormer v. Albany, 18 Wend. 169; Pedrick v. Bailey, 12 Gray, 161; Brown v. Perkins, 12 Gray, 89; Detroit v. Ft. Wayne & E. R. Co. 90 Mich. 646, 51 N. W. 688.

The defendants were authorized to abate this nuisance by the express resolution of the common council. The common council had authority to pass the resolution under the general police power of the state. Under the police power, business injurious or hazardous may be prohibited.

People v. Hawley, 3 Mich. 330; People v. Gallagher, 4 Mich. 244.

It is as full and complete as any other governmental power.

Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 32 L. ed. 346, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 232, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 6; Richmond, F. & P. R. Co. v. Richmond, 96 U. S. 521, 24 L. ed. 734; Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814, 25 L. ed. 1079.

The judicial power will not interfere with the legitimate discretion of any other department of government.

Detroit v. Hosmer, 79 Mich. 384, 44 N. W. 622; Dixon v. Detroit, 86 Mich. 516, 49 N. W. 628; Rae v. Flint, 51 Mich. 526, 16 N. W. 887.

Individual interests must yield to the public welfare.

Fields v. Stokley, 99 Pa. 306, 44 Am. Rep. 109; Welch v. Stowell, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 332; Meeker v. Van Rensselaer, 15 Wend. 397; Shafer v. Mumma, 17 Md. 331, 79 Am. Dec. 656; Manhattan Mfg. & Fertilizing Co. v. Van Keuren, 23 N. J. Eq. 255; Coe v. Schultz, 47 Barb. 64.

Public officials are not liable for their acts done in good faith.

Gardner v. Couch (Mich.) 11 Det. L. N. 340, 100 N. W. 673; Brooks v. Mangan, 86 Mich. 576, 24 Am. St. Rep. 137, 49 N. W. 633; Ournow v. Kessler, 110 Mich. 10, 67 N. W. 982; Tillman v. Beard, 121 Mich. 475, 46 L. R. A. 215, 80 N. W. 248; James v. Sweet, 125 Mich. 132, 84 N. W. 61.

Defendants had the right summarily to do what they did.

Houghton v. Butler, 4 T. R. 364; Wistar v. Addicks, 9 Phila. 145; American Print

Works v. Lawrence, 1 N. J. L. 248, 3 N. J. L. 590, 57 Am. Dec. 420; Meeker v. Van Rensselaer, 15 Wend. 397; 2 Wood, Nuisances, p. 948; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 991.

Mr. Russell C. Ostrander also for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. Searl & Montfort for defendant in error.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendants were respectively mayor and chief of police of the city of Lansing. The plaintiff recovered a verdict and judgment for $150 against them, and they have brought the case to this court by writ of error.

The action was for false imprisonment, based upon an arrest and detention of the plaintiff by the police, under directions of the defendants. The record shows that the plaintiff was a motorman upon a street car operated upon the streets of Lansing. There was proof tending to show, and the court charged the jury, that the overhead system of the street railway was so out of repair as to be dangerous to persons and horses using the street, owing to the frequent falling of the wires, and that it was a public nuisance. The common council had, by resolution, so declared it, and directed that it be abated. There was evidence to the effect that the running of trolley cars increased the danger by causing the wires to break and fall. The mayor thereupon gave notice to the railway company that it must cease running cars while the wires remained in this dangerous condition. The cars were stopped, and did not run again that day. Some of the feed wires were cut. On the evening of that day the plaintiff learned of the difficulty between the city and the company, but having been ordered to report for duty on July 2d, the next day, he did so, and ran his car south on Washington avenue. On his return trip he met two cars at the intersection of the Michigan avenue branch with the Washington avenue line, being the principal business corner of the city. He stopped his car and started to take his controller cranks to the other end of the car, when defendant Starmont took them. The plaintiff took hold of the rope to reverse the trolley, when defendant Starmont took hold of him, and handed him over to a policeman, giving orders to hold him until Starmont should direct his discharge. He was taken to the police station, and, with other motormen who had been arrested, had an interview with the city attorney, who told them that they had resisted an officer and broken city ordinances, that unless they should promise not to run the cars again they would have to be arraigned for trial, and asked them to decide. Plaintiff said that he would run a car every fifteen minutes if given the opportunity, for such were his instructions. Before dinner the men were discharged, after being taken before a magistrate. The defendants stated that it was their intention to stop the cars, and that to accomplish that it was necessary to restrain the motormen for a time. The judge directed the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff, and assess his damages, which was done. Counsel have discussed several assignments of error, among them the following: (1) That the court should have directed a verdict for the defendants; (2) that, if not, the cause should have been left to the jury upon the question of plaintiff's right to recover.

The testimony conclusively shows that the defendants took the cranks or controllers used in starting plaintiff's car, and that without them he could not have afterwards started the car. Notwithstanding this, they took plaintiff into custody and detained him at the police station for several hours, in a vain attempt to secure a promise that he would not run the car if discharged. Then he was discharged. The car was stopped, and could not be run so long as the police retained custody of it, and there was no justification, so far as the facts disclosed by this record go, for the arrest and detention. The taking of the plaintiff before a magistrate was a further wrong, for there was no ground for the claim that he had been guilty of the offense of resisting an officer. The only thing that he is shown to have done after the controllers were taken from him prior to his arrest was to reverse the trolley of the car. That put the car in readiness to be run, but nothing more, and plaintiff made no effort to start the car. Indeed, he could not have started it, for the policemen had the necessary appliances. The only excuse for the detention of the plaintiff was that he would not promise not to run the car if liberated, and that it was more convenient to arrest and detain all of the motormen than to put a man in charge of each car, it appearing that seven or eight motormen were thus treated. The defendants seek to justify their action upon the ground that the condition of the overhead construction of the street railway line was a public nuisance, in that it was a menace to persons using the highway, and that it was the defendants' duty, both by virtue of their office, and by reason of the action of the common council which had declared it a nuisance, to abate the danger by preventing the operation of cars until the wire should be replaced by new. Defendants had forbidden and prevented the railroad company from making temporary repairs, being apparently of the opinion that they would be ineffective. The condition of the wire was not admitted to be so bad as to make the same a nuisance, and it is not clear that the judge was justified in instructing the jury that it was a nuisance; but these defendants cannot complain of such instruction, for the reason that it is what they claimed, and was distinctly favorable to them. Apparently the judge chose to eliminate that question, in view of his intention to direct a verdict for plaintiff. The undisputed facts in the case are that the defendants arrested and detained the plaintiff, as a means of preventing the running of cars, or, as they state, abating a nuisance. If the circumstances shown were such as to justify the abatement of a nuisance, it could have been done by removing the dangerous wires, or by cutting the same off from the power house from whence the current was furnished. The stopping of the cars was not essential to this. If the danger existed only by the reason of the running of the cars, cutting the wire would have been an effective method of stopping the cars, or they might have been stopped by taking possession of or disabling them without cutting the feed wire. Either of these methods would have been preferable to the wholesale arrest of the motormen. The evidence shows that the plaintiff's car was disabled through the seizure of the controllers. Counsel cite no case recognizing the method taken of abating a nuisance, or preventing injury to citizens, where the person arrested is not chargeable with a public offense or threatened breach of the peace. The conduct of the defendants was so clearly in excess of necessity that we find it unnecessary to discuss at length the authority of municipal officers as to summary abatement of nuisances. Under the admitted facts the court could have done no less than to direct a verdict for the plaintiff. This being so, it becomes unnecessary to refer to the other questions pertaining to that subject, and it is only necessary to inquire whether errors were committed in relation to the amount of damages suffered.

We think it was not error to allow the plaintiff to state that he felt humiliated by the arrest. It was not error to exclude evidence that subsequently he was complimented by his employer for his effort to run the car. Neither was it error to exclude evidence that it was the custom to search prisoners, which custom was not followed in this case. The court was justified in saying that there was no evidence tending to show that plaintiff resisted an officer.

In the course of his instructions, the court said to the jury that they should give the plaintiff actual damages, and that they were to say "what damage, if any, the average man would suffer, and to award plaintiff, if anything, such an amount as would compensate him for his actual damages sustained, and no more." In one instance he varied this by saying: "The sense of shame and mortification, of wrong and of outrage, for which the plaintiff may recover, is not limited to the actual time he was under restraint, but includes all such sense of shame, mortification, wrong, and outrage as it can be said the average man under like circumstances might have expected to experience for all time, arising from such arrest and detention as has been shown. No witness has placed a money standard on injured feelings, humiliation, sense of outrage, and mental suffering arising from an unlawful arrest and imprisonment, and no witness can do so. To do that is solely your province. The law has no other remedy for an action for wrong than to compensate, so far as it can be by way of money, for the injury done by one man to another. The facts and circumstances surrounding the doing of the unlawful act are to be considered by you, and you are to consider as best you can, from all the evidence, what sense of shame, mental suffering, humiliation, and sense of outrage the average man under similar circumstances might reasonably be expected to sustain, and award the plaintiff the amount thereof as his damages in this case." It is insisted that the measure of damages should not have been what the average man would suffer under the same circumstances, but what the plaintiff had suffered. Undoubtedly the latter is the rule, but in this case there is nothing to indicate that this plaintiff suffered less than the average man, and no injury is discernable from the instructions. We fail to discover any unfairness in the charge.

The judgment is affirmed.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

J. H. BARNUM

v.

E. B. LE MASTER et al.

(110 Tenn. 638.)

1. A conveyance of land from husband to wife in the usual form, for a valuable consideration, though without words disclosing an intent to do so, vests in her a separate estate which she may transfer without his joinder or consent.

2. Marriage is a valuable consideration sufficient to support a conveyance from husband to wife.

(June 16, 1903.)

NOTE.—Effect of conveyance by husband to wife.

- I. At common law.
 - a. Transfers of real estate, 353.
 - b. Gifts of personality, 355.
- II. In equity.
 - a. Conveyances upheld, 357.
 - b. Conditions upon which conveyances are upheld, 358.
 - c. Necessity of trustee, 362.
 - d. Effect of conveyance, 362.
- III. Effect of statutes.
 - a. In general, 363.
 - b. Exception of conveyances from husband, 364.
 - c. Exemption from husband's debts, 366.
 - d. Permitting revocation, 367.
- IV. Conveyance by third person at instance of husband, 367.
- V. Consideration, 368.
- VI. Does conveyance create separate estate, 370.
- VII. Remaining interest of husband.
 - a. In general, 374.
 - b. Curtesy, 375.
- VIII. Rights against husband's heirs, 377.
- IX. Homestead and community, 378.
- X. Effect of divorce, 379.
- XI. Form and provisions of conveyance, 380.

I. At common law.

a. Transfers of real estate.

The changes to which well-established rules of law are subject have perhaps no better illustration than is afforded by a comparison of the ancient rule with respect to conveyances between husband and wife with the rule as it obtains at the present time in most jurisdictions whose law is derived from the common law of England.

Littleton says: A man may not grant or give his tenements to his wife during coverture, for his wife and he be but one person in the law. §168.

And while the common-law writers are not agreed as to the reason for the rule, both courts and text writers agree that such a conveyance had no effect. Furrow v. Athey, 21 Neb. 671, 39 Am. Rep. 867, 33 N. W. 208; Smith v. Dean, 60 L. R. A.

CROSS-APPEALS from a decree of the Chancery Court for Shelby County rendered in a suit to enjoin the sale and delivery of certain real estate; defendants appealing from so much of the decree as held that there was no right to make the sale; and complainant appealing from so much as held that certain agreements with respect to the property had not been proved. Reversed on defendants' appeal.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Smith & Tresevant, for complainant:

Land settled on the wife as separate estate will not carry rents, unless there 15 Neb. 433, 19 N. W. 642; White v. Wager, 25 N. Y. 323; Kinney v. Dexter, 81 Wis. 80, 51 N. W. 82; Martin v. Martin, 1 Me. 397; Allen v. Hooper, 50 Me. 371; Jewell v. Porter, 31 N. H. 38; Ransom v. Ransom, 30 Mich. 323; Voorhees v. Presbyterian Church, 17 Barb. 103; Chouteau v. Magenis, 28 Mo. 187; Gluck v. Cox, 75 Ala. 310.

A conveyance by husband to wife has no effect on the legal title. Gaston v. Welr, 84 Ala. 193, 4 So. 258.

A deed poll without consideration, by which a man grants all his estate to his wife, is void at law, and creates no trust which a court of equity will enforce. Price v. Price, 14 Beav. 598. The master of the rolls says, If I were to decide that this deed would be good as between strangers, I should really be deciding that, if a man execute a deed simply saying, "I hereby give all my estate at A to another," and nothing further takes place either to give possession, or to transfer the legal estate, this court would complete the delivery of the estate. This would, in my opinion, be contrary to the authority. With respect to the transfer of the estate he says nothing took place but the execution of the deed, the communication of it to the wife, and the delivery of it to the attesting witnesses. He further says that he is unable to discover on what principle the position that a voluntary gift by a man to his wife can properly rest.

That a deed from husband directly to his wife is a nullity at common law is a doctrine as old as the law itself. It results inevitably from the principle that the husband and wife are one, and of course are incapable of contracting with each other. Coates v. Gerlach, 44 Pa. 43.

In Beard v. Beard, 3 Atk. 72, the court, in speaking of a deed poll, says it cannot take effect as a grant or deed of gift to the wife because the law will not permit a man to make a grant or conveyance to the wife in his lifetime; neither will equity suffer the wife to have the whole of the husband's estate while he is living, for it is not in the nature of a provision, which is all the wife is entitled to.

In Moyse v. Gyles, 2 Vern. 385, an attempted grant by a man to his wife of his moiety in a church lease was held to be absolutely void at law.

In Firebrass ex dem. Symes v. Pennant, 2 Wills. 254, the question arose whether or not is something in the settlement showing that they are included.

Ordway v. Bright, 7 Heisk. 681.

Intention to exclude the marital rights must be "expressed in the clearest and most unequivocal terms."

Wood v. Polk, 12 Heisk. 222; Houston v. Embry, 1 Sneed, 489; Murdock v. Memphis & O. R. Co. 7 Baxt. 558.

The rule in gifts of personalty by a husband to his wife does not apply to real estate.

Murdock v. Memphis & O. R. Co. 7 Baxt. 572; Vick v. Gower, 92 Tenn. 391, 21 S. W. 677.

The husband's right, as husband, in his wife's real estate, is an estate for the lives of the two, which may continue during the husband's life.

Guion v. Anderson, 8 Humph. 298; 2

Kent, Com. * * 130 et seq.; Coleman v. Satterfield, 2 Head, 261; Bottoms v. Corley, 5 Heisk. 4.

And during their joint lives the law gives him the right to the crops, profits, and products of her land.

Lucas v. Rickerich, 1 Lea, 728; Ables v. Ables, 86 Tenn. 333, 9 S. W. 692; Jones v. Ducktown Sulphur, Copper & I. Co. 109 Tenn. 375, 71 S. W. 823.

A wife who has abandoned her husband cannot sell the interest in her estate which he has acquired, either during their joint lives or during his life, if he is a tenant by curtesy.

The common law cannot be changed indirectly, or by implication, by a statute. To change it the language of the statute must be clear and direct.

Eaton v. Dickinson, 3 Sneed, 400; 1 Kent, a man could grant land to his wife by copy of court roll, and it is stated that, the case being quite new, no authority could be cited to show whether the grant was good or bad, and the court said this was a provision by a man for his wife which should be gained, if possible, to get over the maxim at law, that a husband and wife are one person, and therefore cannot grant lands to one another. This was an original, voluntary grant from a husband to the wife, who cannot by law take immediately from him any more than a monk who is dead in law, and considered as no person; so here is no person to take, for the husband and wife are only one person. We might as well repeal the first section of Littleton as determine this grant from the husband immediately to his wife to be good.

Prior to New York Acts 1887, a deed of lands from a man to his wife was void unless founded upon a valuable or meritorious consideration, such as would enable a court of equity to sustain it. Dean v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 119 N. Y. 540, 23 N. E. 1054. The court says in cases where equity interferes to sustain a deed between husband and wife an equitable consideration must be shown either upon the face of the conveyance itself or by extraneous proof.

In Parker v. Stuckert, 2 Miles (Pa.) 278, it is said that a direct transfer from husband to wife, purporting to be founded on a valuable consideration, cannot be effected at all. A transfer of this description implies a contract to which a feme covert can in no instance be a party.

All conveyances made by a man to his wife directly are at common law invalid for the reason that husband and wife are regarded as but one person, and the legal existence of the wife is merged into that of the husband. And the statutes creating and defining the separate estates of married women are not in abrogation of this doctrine of the common law; they are not intended to sever the unity of husband and wife so far as to confer upon them capacity to contract with, or to convey directly to, each other. But a court of equity will, when the contract is fair and just, give it full effect and validity. Seals v. Robinson, 75 Ala. 363.

In Washburn v. Gardner, 76 Ala. 599, the 69 L. R. A.

court says, with reference to the power of a married woman over land which her husband has conveyed directly to her, that, if the question was one of first impression before the court, much might be said against the theory that she had a right to treat it as though she was a feme sole. The court says the conveyance is inoperative at law. And does it not follow that in any relief which the law court can administer the property is that of the husband, unaffected by his abortive attempt to divest the title out of himself? And has the wife any interest in her right to the property other than the equitable right to invoke the powers of the chancery court to perfect that which the husband, by force of the relation which he sustains to the wife, was incompetent to do? And is this equitable right of the wife the equivalent of an estate secured to her sole and separate use?

At common law husband and wife could not separate their interests in common property by deeds of partition. Frissell v. Bozler, 19 Mo. 448.

A husband cannot convey land directly to his wife without the intervention of trustees. Fletcher v. Mansur, 5 Ind. 267.

In Burdeno v. Amperse, 14 Mich. 91, 90 Am. Dec. 225, the court held that the basis of the common-law disability of married women rested on the peculiar disqualification and burdens of the wife, and not upon anything growing out of the marital relation. It said that the wife, by her coverture, ceased to have control of her actions or her property, which became subject to the control of her husband, who alone was entitled, during the marriage, to enjoy the possession of her lands, and who became owner of her goods, and might sue for her demands. The husband alone remained sui juris, as fully as before marriage. It followed from this legal merger by coverture into a single personality, that the husband could make no grant to the wife, and the wife could make none to the husband. And furthermore, a grant to her by her husband, of a freehold, would be, in effect, a grant to take effect in futuro (the husband retaining possession for life), and such a grant was unlawful because a freehold could only pass by livery of seisin, which must operate either immediately or not

Com. 433; Horne v. Memphis & O. R. Co. 1 Coldw. 72; Lucas v. Rickerich, 1 Lea. 728; Ables v. Ables, 86 Tenn. 333, 9 S. W. 692; Jones v. Ducktown Sulphur, Copper & I. Co. 109 Tenn. 375, 71 S. W. 823; Brasfield v. Brasfield, 96 Tenn. 580, 36 S. W. 384.

The deed of a married woman alone is void for all purposes, if this be a general estate.

Cope v. Meeks, 3 Head, 387; Ellis v. Pearson, 104 Tenn. 591, 58 S. W. 318.

Messrs. Frank P. Poston and J. W. Canada for defendants.

Shields, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question for determination in this case is whether a conveyance of lands made by a husband to his wife, in the usual at all. When equity recognizes a power in the wife, who is the disabled party, not only to deal with others, but even to contract with and make provision for her husband out of her separate funds, it can hardly be claimed that the husband, who was always sui juris, is restrained by any but technical rules from transferring to her directly. Equity will enforce even such conveyances. But there never was a time when he could not, by his deed, put property where she could control it. If it were not that by standing in her name he became legally the owner of the usufruct, there could be no valid reason why any indirection ever need be resorted to. It is not against the policy of the law that the wife should have the real benefit of his gift; and equity, looking through the form at the substance, calls it, as it is in fact, a gift from husband to wife.

In Riehl v. Bingenheimer, 28 Wis. 86, there is a dictum to the effect that a conveyance by a man directly to his wife is void at law.

And, by way of argument, the court, in Welch v. Welch, 63 Mo. 59, says at law gifts from husband to wife are held to be entirely void; but equity upholds some classes of gifts except where the claims of creditors might interpose.

So in Doe ex dem. Abbott v. Hurd, 7 Blackf. 510, the court, in considering the validity of a trust deed, stated that a man cannot convey land immediately to his wife on account of the legal unity of the parties, but he may convey it to trustees for her use.

B. Gifts of personalty.

Under the old theory that a husband and wife were in law one person, and that therefore there could be no contracts or conveyances between them, gifts of personalty were as ineffectual as transfers of real estate. There are some cases which have applied this theory with the result of nullifying attempted gifts.

In Neufville v. Thomson, 3 Edw. Ch. 93, it is said at common law there cannot be a gift of chattels inter vivos, from the husband to the wife during coverture; for, being but one person in law, she cannot take independently of him; and, though there might be a declared gift and delivery to the wife, yet the title would remain form, without any words indicating an intention to do so, has the effect in law, ex proprio vigore, to create a technical separate estate in the wife. The facts necessary to be stated are these: Complainants J. H. Barnum, and defendant Clara S. Barnum, are husband and wife, without issue of their marriage. J. H. Barnum, on December 2, 1895, in consideration of an antenuptial contract, conveyed to his wife, Clara S. Barnum, certain valuable lands lying in Shelby county, near Memphis, the conveyance being in the usual form, without any words indicating an intention to create a separate estate, reciting a consideration of love and affection, and containing covenants of seisin and general warranty. Clara S. Barnum, without the consent or joinder of her husband, J. H. Barnum, November 7, 1902, conveyed by deed with in the husband, and at his death pass to his representatives, except it should be paraphernalia and personal ornaments, suitable to the wife's condition, which the law, as against his representatives, would allow her to retain.

In Mews v. Mews, 15 Beav. 529, the master of the rolls, in deciding against the wife's claim to personal property on the evidence, said that he entertained no doubt that there might be a gift made by a man to his wife, which, though bad at law, would be supported in equity. But he states that there must be some clear and distinct act by which the husband has divested himself of the property, and engaged to hold it for the separate use of his wife.

A deed of gift of a slave by a man to his wife is absolutely void at law. Tourney v. Sinclair, 3 How. (Miss.) 324. The court says it did not profess to give her a separate property. It consequently vested an absolute right in the husband, and, unless he has divested himself of the right, he must be entitled to recover possession of the slave in the action of detinue which he had instituted.

In a case where the man bought a leasehold estate in the joint name of himself and wife, the court held that it was void under the custom of London, saying that in his lifetime he had equal power to dispose of it as any other part of his personal estate; and, further, that, if he had taken it entirely in the name of his wife, then it would have been the estate of his wife, and he might have disposed of it in his lifetime equally as now. Coomes v. Effling, 3 Atk. 676.

But the invalidity of gifts from husband to wife was difficult to maintain in practice. When she claimed small amounts of pin money, and personal ornaments and wearing apparel, it seemed absurd to insist that she was not entitled to them; and therefore the rule began to give way at this point very early. The first exceptions to the rule were by courts of equity under the principles noticed in the next subdivision of this note. But the distinction between law and equity has been abandoned, and such gifts have for a long period been upheld, even by courts of law.

In Slanning v. Style, 3 P. Wms. 334, the lord chancellor recognized the claim of a widow against her husband's estate for money which proper privy examination, for a valuable consideration, a portion of these lands to the defendant E. B. Le Master. Complainant filed his bill November 14, 1902, charging that Mrs. Barnum had only a general estate in said lands, and could not sell and convey them without his joining in the conveyance, and that the deed made by her was void, and a cloud upon his marital rights in the premises. The prayer is that the conveyance be declared void, canceled, and surrendered, and E. B. Le Master be enjoined from taking possession of the property. This relief was granted by the chancellor, and a decree pronounced in accordance with the prayer of the bill, from which the defendants have appealed and assigned errors.

Complainant, as stated, contends that the defendant Clara S. Barnum had only a general estate in the lands; that by virtue of his marital rights he has the right to the possession of them during their joint lives, and that she cannot sell or convey them during that period without his joining in the conveyance; and therefore the sale and conveyance made by her to E. B. Le Master is a nullity, and a cloud upon his title. While the insistence of the defendant is that the conveyance to Mrs. Barnum, being one from husband to wife, by necessary implication and operation of law created and vested in her a separate estate in the lands conveyed, notwithstanding the entire absence of any words evidencing such intention, and which are necessary in transfers he had allowed her to receive out of sales of small produce from the farm, citing the unreported case of Calmady v. Calmady, where an agreement by which the husband permitted the wife to retain a certain amount upon the renewals of their lease was upheld.

Jewels given by a man to his wife to wear upon her person constitute her paraphernalia, which, in case he dies before her without having disposed of them, will belong to her; but he may dispose of them during his lifetime. Graham v. Londonderry, 3 Atk. 393.

In Grant v. Grant, 34 Beav. 623, it is said that so far as gifts of chattels are concerned, it is merely a question of evidence; and it cannot now be disputed that a husband may be a trustee for his wife.

In Graham v. Londonderry, 3 Atk. 393, the court cites Cowper's Case to the effect that personal property given by a man to his wife may be her separate estate.

And when the statutes began to recognize a separate personality in the wife the way was already paved for the courts to hold that gifts of personality from her husband were effectual to vest the property in her.

So that now it has been repeatedly held that husband and wife may assign and transfer personal property directly to each other. Dean v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 119 N. Y. 540, 23 N. E. 1054; Whiton v. Snyder, 88 N. Y. 304; Armitage v. Mace, 96 N. Y. 538.

At common law a man may make a gift of personal property to his wife. Cottrell v. Spless, 23 Mo. App. 35.

A gift of personal property by a man to his wife will be upheld without the aid of the married woman's acts. Kelly v. Campbell, 1 Keyes, 30.

A man may transfer a bank account to his wife by gift. Re Holmes, 79 App. Div. 264, 79 N. Y. Supp. 502, Affirmed in 176 N. Y. 603, 68 N. E. 1118.

A conveyance of personal property directly to the wife is binding upon the grantor. De Garca v. Galvan, 55 Tex. 53.

In McWilliams v. Ramsay, 23 Ala. 813, it is said that gifts of personality by a man to his wife are supported upon the presumption that he intended it to be for her separate use.

The wife may take title to a chattel by gift from her husband. Armitage v. Mace, 16 Jones & S. 108.

Although a deed of slaves by a man to his 69 L. R. A.

wife will not vest title in her, it amounts to a declaration of trust in her favor. Huntly v. Huntly, 43 N. C. (8 Ired. Eq.) 250.

A direct conveyance of slaves by a man to his wife in consideration of her relinquishment of dower will vest title property in her to her separate use without words to that effect. Powell v. Powell, 9 Humph. 480. The court says, when the husband himself sells and conveys property to his wife for a valuable consideration paid him out of her separate estate, there can be no intent in favor of his rights to the property thus conveyed, and it is absurd to talk about such conveyance being against his common right, for it is impossible to hold with regard to intention that a sale of property to a wife by the husband for a valuable consideration to him out of her own private estate can have any other design than the separate use and benefit of the wife. The husband parts from his interest by his conveyance, and, if the operation of the conveyance be to vest the property in the wife for his use and benefit, and he be immediately remitted to all his original rights, then is the whole transaction a farce, and the law, in permitting such contracts, has placed itself in a very ridiculous position.

And the rule recognizing the validity of the transfer has been extended to uphold gifts of notes and bonds, and to enforce notes executed by the husband in favor of the wife.

In Re Murray, 9 Ont. App. Rep. 374, Reversing 29 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 443, a gift by a man to his wife of promissory notes was upheld.

A note representing a portion of the proceeds of homestead real estate may be made the separate property of the wife by the consent of the husband. Ogden v. Giddings, 15 Tex. 485.

A gift of a note by a man to his wife may be effected by directing the note to be made payable to her, and delivering it into her possession. Reed v. Reed, 52 N. Y. 651.

A note executed by a man to his wife in consideration of money belonging to her separate estate is enforceable against his estate. Hall v. Hall, 52 Tex. 204, 36 Am. Rep. 725.

Equity will enforce a note executed by a man to his wife during coverture on consideration of her moneys received or collected by him. McC Campbell v. McC Campbell, 2 Lea, 664, 31 Am. Rep. 623.

But in Fourth Ecclesiastical Soc. v. Mather, of personal and conveyances of real property by strangers to married women in order to create such an estate; and that the conveyance made to E. B. Le Master vests in him a valid title, free from any and all claims of her husband. It has long been the established rule in this state that transfers of personal property, made by a husband to his wife without words to that effect, by implication and as a matter of law vests in the wife a technical separate estate in the thing transferred; but we have no reported case involving a conveyance of real estate in which the doctrine has been invoked. We, however, can see no reason why a distinction should be made in this respect between transfers of personal property and conveyances of real estate.

15 Conn. 587, it was held that during coverture no agreement could be made between husband and wife which in legal effect would transfer to the wife the title to a note representing the proceeds of her real estate.

And in Glass v. Burt, 8 Ont. Rep. 391, it was held that a bond given by a man to his wife for the payment of money to her by his executors cannot be upheld in law or in equity, since, being an imperfect gift, it cannot be beneficially enforced, and it cannot be regarded as a declaration of trust.

A woman claiming personal property as a gift from her husband must establish a clear and satisfactory case. Walter v. Hodge, 2 Swanst. 98, Wils. Ch. 445.

And in Finch v. Finch, L. R. 23 Ch. Div. 267, it was held that a claim to chattels cannot be maintained on the unsupported testimony of the claimant.

So in Moore v. Moore, L. R. 18 Eq. 474, an attempted gift of stock failed because of failure to have a transfer made on the books.

II. In equity.

a. Conveyances upheld.

As noticed in the preceding subdivision, courts of equity at an early date began to ignore the unity of husband and wife, and to support gifts of personal property from husband to wife if the circumstances were such as to call for equitable intervention. So that in Walter v. Hodge, 2 Swanst. 97, Wils. Ch. 445, it is stated that in equity exceptions are introduced to the rule that a man cannot give property to his wife, such as cases of paraphernalia, trinkets, or savings of pin money.

There are species of allowance to the wife by the husband which may be classed under the head of pin money. It is where he permits the wife to have and make of certain articles of his property, either for her own use, or in consideration of her supplying the family with particular kinds of necessaries, or when he makes to her a yearly allowance for keeping his house. The profits in the first case and the savings in the other will, in equity, be considered as the wife's separate estate. Kee v. Vasser, 37 N. C. (2 Ired. Eq.) 553.

But the exception to the rule was not long limited to the matters mentioned in that case, and equity extended its power over all kinds of

The reasons given in support of the rule as applied to personal property, the chief of which is that the transfer is without beneficial effect, and abortive, unless a separate estate is vested, apply with equal force to conveyances of lands. This fully appears from a review of our cases involving sales and gifts of personal property by husbands to their wives. The earliest of these cases is that of Powell v. Powell, 9 Humph. 486, where a sale of four slaves, made by Robt. Powell to his wife, Mary L. Powell, for a valuable consideration, was in issue. Judge Turley, for the court, in this case says: "We have seen that though, by the common law, a married woman could not have and hold property to her separate use, yet equity has so far qualified this as conveyances, both of real and personal estate. McKenzie v. Ohio River R. Co. 27 W. Va. 306; Ex parte Wells, 3 Desauss. Eq. 158; Williams v. Avery, 38 Ala. 115; Pennsylvania Salt Mfg. Co. v. Neel, 54 Pa. 9; Thompson v. Allen, 103 Pa. 44, 49 Am. Rep. 110; Reagle v. Reagle, 179 Pa. 89, 36 Atl. 191; Humphrey v. Spencer, 36 W. Va. 11, 14 S. E. 410; Cosner v. McCrum, 40 W. Va. 339, 21 S. E. 739; Putnam v. Bicknell, 18 Wis. 334; Hannan v. Oxley, 23 Wis. 519; Wheeler & W. Mfg. Co. v. Monahan, 63 Wis. 198, 23 N. W. 127; Albright v. Albright, 70 Wis. 528, 36 N. W. 254; Herr's Appeal, 6 Law Rep. 408.

A gift of a note by a husband to his wife may be rendered effective in equity. Wood v. Warden, 20 Ohio, 518.

Equity will sustain gifts of slaves though no trustee is named. Eddins v. Buck, 23 Ark. 507.

And a deed from husband to wife is not void if good in equity. Bedell's Appeal, 87 Pa. 510.

In Barron v. Barron, 24 Vt. 375, it is said that courts of equity have for more than a century disregarded the rule that conveyances by a man to his wife were void, and for many purposes treat husband and wife as distinct parties capable of contracting with each other and of having separate estates. And as a general rule whenever the contract would be good at law when made with trustees for the wife that contract will be sustained in equity when made with each other without the aid of a trustee.

Equity, which looks more to the substance than to the form, holds that a conveyance directly from the husband to the wife, if fair and free from signs of fraud, is just as valid as if the conveyance had been made to a trustee for the benefit of the wife. Sayers v. Wall, 26 Gratt. 373, 21 Am. Rep. 303.

Equity will sustain a conveyance by a man to his wife of real estate for her suitable maintenance. Shepard v. Shepard, 7 Johns. Ch. 57, 11 Am. Dec. 396; Strong v. Skinner, 4 Barb. 552; Simmons v. McElwain, 26 Barb. 419.

Equity will sustain a conveyance from a man to his wife when a proper case is made out. Fritz v. Fritz, 23 Ind. 388.

Equity will uphold a deed if supported by adequate considerations. Brown v. Brown, 79 Hun, 44, 29 N. Y. Supp. 652.

In Garlick v. Strong, 3 Paige, 440, it is said that it is well settled that a postnuptial to permit her to take and enjoy property to her separate use, when it is given to her to that intent. But equity has done this with timidity, for it holds that each claim on the part of a married woman, being against common right, and it being a presumption of law that all property of which she becomes the owner is her husband's, a trust by which it is to be secured to her separate use free from his marital rights should very distinctly express that intention. It, however, holds it to be immaterial in what form or phrase a trust of that nature is described, technical language not being deemed necessary, and it only being required that the intention of the gift shall appear manifestly to be for the wife's separate enjoyment, and in bar of the husband's right. This is unquestionably the law in relation to gifts, devises, or settlements made in favor of married women by third persons, and perhaps to gifts and voluntary settlements made after marriage by the husband, though that is not so clear. But is this principle applicable to the cases of purchases made by the wife from the husband for a good and valuable consideration paid him by her out of her estate which has already been settled to her separate use and maintenance? I think not, because, in the first place, the reason why such direct expression of intention is regarded when gifts are made to the wife, as we have just seen, is because, in contemplation of law, all gifts of property to the wife are gifts to the husband, and that any other intendment is agreement between the husband and wife, by which property is set apart to her separate use, will be sustained in equity.

And that case was followed in Searing v. Searing, 9 Paige, 284, and Jaycox v. Caldwell, 37 How. Pr. 240.

The voidness at law of a deed directly from a man to his wife does not interfere with equitable rights which may grow out of such instrument, they being capable, in equity, of being considered two persons. Peck v. Brown, 26 How. Pr. 350.

Equity should be very reluctant to disturb in favor of collateral heirs of the husband, a conveyance mutually satisfactory to both husband and wife. Wells v. Wells, 35 Miss. 638.

In Rose v. Latschaw, 90 Pa. 238, it is said that gifts and conveyances by a man to his wife have long been sustained in equity, and that in Pennsylvania a wife's equitable rights have been maintained in equity in actions at law, for rules in equity and of law are enforceable in the same form of procedure.

In equity gifts to the separate use of a married woman—as well those presented by her husband as those given by third persons, which are without the intervention of trustees expressly named—will be protected in cases where they have been made in good faith, and the rights of creditors are not infringed. Neufville v. Thomson, 3 Edw. Ch. 92.

A gift by a man to his wife will be upheld when the rights of creditors are not in question. Borst v. Spelman, 4 N. Y. 284.

In Lane v. Union Nat. Bank, 75 Ill. App. 299, it is stated that a deed from husband to wife is good as against all the world except creditors.

In Ogden v. Walters, 12 Kan. 282, the court says: We suppose a married man may convey real estate directly to his wife where it is right and equitable that he should do so, and where the conveyance does not interfere with the rights and equities of third persons. Such a deed, though void at law, is good in equity.

And the same statement is repeated in Sproul v. Atchison Nat. Bank, 22 Kan. 336.

The principle to be deduced from the English cases is that when a husband makes a deed of land to his wife which would have been operative to pass the title had it been made to a stranger the court will support it by declaring him to be a trustee of the land for his wife. Kent v. Kent, 20 Ont. Rep. 445.

69 L. R. A.

The equitable title of a promissory note given by a husband to his wife vests in her. Tullis v. Fridley, 9 Minn. 79, Gil. 68.

Under a deed of real estate from husband to wife, although the legal title remains in him the beneficial use will vest in her as her separate estate, which, upon her death, will descend to her heirs. Cotton v. Brown, 3 Ky. L. Rep. 679.

An attempted partition deed by which a man conveys his interest in the common property to his wife, though inoperative at law, in equity has the effect of constituting a trust of the legal estate remaining in him in favor of his wife. Davissou v. Sage, 20 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 115.

The evident intention of a man who conveys real estate to his wife and her heirs, to their sole and only use forever, may be given effect by a court of equity, so far as the beneficial interest is concerned, so as to vest the equitable title to the property in her. Whitehead v. Whitehead, 14 Ont. Rep. 621.

If the conveyance is not a fraud on creditors, and is a reasonable provision for the wife, it will be upheld. Babcock v. Eckler, 24 N. Y. 623.

In Kent v. Kent, 20 Ont. Rep. 158, the court says there is reason for upholding cases of benefaction between husband and wife where the transfer, being complete and apt for the purpose, falls of full effect only because of the legal and technical unity of giver and taker, which does not exist between strangers or others not so related when the gift or transfer is found to be inherently imperfect, or incomplete. And the court concludes that, so far as form and substance go, that which would be good at law if made by a stranger is good in equity if made by husband to wife.

And that case was affirmed in 20 Ont. Rep. 445.

b. Conditions upon which conveyances are upheld.

Not every attempted conveyance by a man to his wife will be upheld in equity. That court has certain well-defined principles upon which it administers relief, and a wife coming before it to establish title to property which she claims to have received from her husband must bring her case within these principles.

Conveyances by a man to his wife are not in violation of his rights. But such is not the case when he himself sells and conveys property to his wife for a valuable consideration paid him out of her separate estate. In such case there is and can be no intentment in favor of his rights to the property thus conveyed, and it is absurd to talk about such a conveyance being against his common right; for it is impossible to hold, with regard to intention, that a sale of property to the wife by the husband for a valuable consideration, paid him out of her own private estate, can have any other design than the separate use and benefit of the wife. The husband parts from his interest by his conveyance, and, if the operation of the conveyance be to vest the property in the wife for his benefit and use, and he be immediately remitted to all of his original rights, then is the whole transaction a farce and the law, in permitting such contracts, has placed itself in a very ridiculous position."

In McCampbell v. McCampbell, 2 Lea, 664, 31 Am. Rep. 623, the court, citing with approval the Powell Case, says: "A consideration passing from the wife will sustain a direct conveyance of the property by the husband to her and the very nature of the transaction will fix the property, even if personalty, with a trust for the separate use of the wife, without any words to that effect."

In Sherron v. Hall, 4 Lea, 500, it is said: "But the gift was, in effect, as if the husband, for a valuable consideration, had only sold at law, but equity will exercise a sound discretion as to whether or not they will be upheld in that form. Bunch v. Bunch, 26 Ind. 400.

As said in Elliott v. Elliott, 21 N. C. (1 Dev. & B. Eq.) 57, since the conveyance is void at law the case in equity must always be that of an application to aid a defective conveyance. The wife cannot have that assistance unless she shows herself to be meritorious, and shows, further, a clear intention that what was done should have the effect of divesting the interest of the husband and creating a separate estate in her which she should have the immediate power to dispose of as she chose, and that the estate was but a reasonable provision for her.

In Loomis v. Brush, 36 Mich. 40, it was stated that it is well settled that a quitclaim deed from husband to wife is of no more validity as an actual conveyance in equity than at law, and, in order to work out any equity, there must be a clear right working out of matters independent of the deed, as well as some further conveyance or release calculated to carry it into effect as an agreement or obligation. There can be no ground for claiming that a deed absolutely void at law when made is validated as a conveyance by the subsequent laws which enable married women to take and enjoy property as if sole. While courts will, under peculiar circumstances, carry out a purpose which has failed by reason of the incapacity of the wife to accept the deed from her husband, the case must be plain and the equity manifest.

Although this note is not intended to deal with the rights of creditors, it may be stated that no conveyance will be upheld which will operate as a fraud upon their rights. Moreover, the intent to make the gift must be clearly made out, for courts of equity require clear and incontrovertible evidence to establish gifts between husband and wife. Keniston v. Keniston, 56 Vt. 680.

The fact of the gift must be clearly proved. Shuttleworth v. Winter, 55 N. Y. 624.

In a case in which the attack on the conveyance was made by a creditor, the court said, equity examines transfers by husband to wife with great caution before it will confirm them. They must be fair and certain; it must be clearly and satisfactorily shown that the purpose is a provision for the wife; the property must be distinctly separated from the mass of the husband's property; and the transfer must not interfere with the rights of creditors. Hinman v. Parkie, 33 Conn. 197.

So, in order to support a gift by a man to his wife, there must be an unequivocal act by which the husband divests himself of the property and places it at the disposal of the wife. Hoyes v. Kindersley, 2 Smale & G. 195.

Therefore in order to place the title to the proceeds of the farm in the wife there must be proof of an unequivocal, complete, and final intention on the part of the husband to constitute himself a trustee for his wife. Whittaker v. Whittaker, L. R. 21 Ch. Div. 657.

To uphold a gift by a man to his wife nothing else will do than a clear, irrevocable gift either to some person as a trustee, or by some clear and definite act of the husband by which he divested himself of his property, and engaged to hold it as a trustee for the separate use of his wife. And the court held that the evidence was not sufficient to raise an issue. M'Lean v. Longlands, 5 Ves. Jr. 71.

Another rule is that the man must not impoverish himself. It is against public policy to permit a man to divest himself of his property so as to create the possibility of his becoming a public charge.

A settlement by a man of his whole estate upon his wife will not be upheld. O'Doherty v. Ontario Bank, 32 U. C. C. P. 299.

A gift of real estate by a man to his wife will be upheld in equity if the transaction appears to have been fair, and to amount to no more than a reasonable provision for the wife's maintenance and support. Wilder v. Brooks, 10 Minn. 50, 88 Am. Dec. 50, Gil. 82.

An assignment by a man of a deed in which he is named as grantee to his wife and her heirs after his death has no legal operation in favor of the wife, and it will not be enforced in equity, where the subject-matter of the grant was the principal or chief part of his estate. Benedict v. Montgomery, 7 Watts & S. 238, 42 Am. Dec. 230.

But a conveyance of real estate by a man to his wife will be upheld in equity, although it is not stated to be for the purpose of her maintenance and support. Hunt v. Johnson, 44 N. Y. 27, 4 Am. Rep. 631. The court distinguishes White v. Wager, 25 N. Y. 328, and Winans v. Peebles, 32 N. Y. 423, on the ground that in those cases the conveyances were from the wife made the conveyance to the wife, in which case the transaction, from its very nature, would confer a separate estate, without express words."

In Templeton v. Brown, 86 Tenn. 55, 5 S. W. 441, the court says: "The intention to create a separate estate must clearly appear either by express terms or by necessary implication; otherwise the marital rights of the husband will attach. When the gift is from a stranger, the intention must usually appear from the express language of the donor in terms creating such an estate; otherwise the rights of the husband will not be excluded. But where the gift is from the husband, the intention to exclude himself is inferred from the circumstances of the case and the situation of the parties, without the use of the express words that would be required where a third person is the donor;" citing 1 Bishop, Married Women, § 119; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1373; Perry, Tr. 639.

In Carpenter v. Franklin, 89 Tenn. 142, 14 S. W. 484, it is said: "An agreement that the gift of the husband to the wife shall be to her separate use arises from the very necessity of the case, else the gift would be ineffectual. A gift to the wife of her own earnings, either from her labor as for sewing, or from the profits of her boarders, or of her savings from money furnished her for her own personal expenses or her household expenses, may be made out by circumstances, and, when so made out, is as effectual as if proved by express con-to the husband, and therefore not supported by the same equitable considerations.

No intention on the part of the wife to circumvent or defraud her husband must appear.

If the wife secures the title to property by fraud, with the intention of procuring a separation, it will be restored to the husband. Meldrum v. Meldrum, 15 Colo. 478, 11 L. R. A. 65, 24 Pac. 1083.

A deed of property secured by the wife upon separating from her husband in contemplation of entering into an illicit relation with another will be set aside in equity. Evans v. Carrington, 2 De G. F. & J. 481.

A wife will be compelled to reconvey to her husband land transferred to her upon her representation that upon his death she will be left without support, where immediately after obtaining the title she abandons him. Dickerson v. Dickerson, 24 Neb. 530, 8 Am. St. Rep. 213, 39 N. W. 429. The court places this ruling upon the ground that a person who, by means of confidential relations between the parties, by deceit and imposition, obtains property of another, will be compelled in a proper case by a court of equity to restore the same to the person injured.

If a wife who has been guilty of adultery obtains a conveyance from the husband, who remains ignorant of that fact, the conveyance may be set aside at his request. Evans v. Evans, 118 Ga. 890, 98 Am. St. Rep. 180, 45 S. E. 612.

That the conveyance was procured by threats of abandonment does not constitute a ground for cancellation. Grove v. Jaeger, 60 Ill. 249.

The mere facts that a woman importuned her husband to convey real estate to her upon the suggestion that they would enjoy it as a home, and that subsequently, upon difficulty arising between them, she expelled him from the premises, do not show such fraud as will require the setting aside of the conveyance. Finlayson v. Finlayson, 17 Or. 347, 3 L. R. A. 801, 11 Am. St. Rep. 836, 21 Pac. 57.

A deed to the wife of merely her dower interest in the husband's lands will not be set aside on the ground that she had a husband living at the time of her marriage to the grantor, if at the time of the conveyance he knew of that fact so that no fraud was committed on him. Chew v. Chew, 38 Iowa, 405.

Equity will not aid a wife who has been unfaithful to her marriage vows to enforce a deed to her from her husband where no consideration is shown other than a desire to furnish her with support. Miller v. Miller, 17 Or. 423, 21 Pac. 938.

Some cases have held that the conveyance must be supported by a consideration.

A deed without consideration, conveying real estate from a man directly to his wife, is void both at law and in equity. Fowler v. Trebelin, 16 Ohio St. 493, 91 Am. Dec. 95. The court says the conveyance which the grantor attempted to execute directly to his wife was in law an utter nullity. The legal title remained in him as fully after its execution as before. The relation of the parties inter se rendered him incompetent to convey the legal title to real estate from the one to the other. Such a conveyance from the husband to the wife, and founded upon a sufficient consideration, might be upheld in equity. But in this case the deed had been found to be without consideration. Even as between the parties, then, this instrument purporting to be a conveyance was simply void both at law and in equity.

Equity will not specifically enforce against himself an agreement by a man to make a settlement on his wife which is not founded on an adequate consideration. Andrews v. Andrews, 28 Ala. 432.

Where the deed is intended as a mere gift it is wholly invalid, even in equity, since equity will not complete an unexecuted gift which, being unsupported by a consideration, is devoid of equity. But it is a sufficient consideration that the gift was in the nature of a settlement, and was intended to be a reasonable provision for the support of the wife. Crooks v. Crooks, 34 Ohio St. 610.

It will be noticed that in the last-cited case it is intimated that a desire to provide for the maintenance of the wife is a sufficient consideration. That being so, the instances would be few when a consideration could not be shown, so that the rule requiring a consideration is more theoretical than practical. The considerations which will move the court to aid the wife have been summed up as follows:

Although void at law, a conveyance by a man to his wife will be upheld in equity, first, when the consideration of the transfer is a separate interest of the wife, yielded up by her for the husband's benefit, or that of the family, or which had been appropriated by him to his tract. Especially does the implication of a gift to her sole and separate use arise where, as in this case, the wife, with the assent of the husband, loaned out such earnings and savings in her own name, . . . taking title to herself."

In Snodgrass v. Hyder, 95 Tenn. 575, 32 S. W. 764, the court again holds as follows: "A direct gift by the husband to the wife, during coverture, of money or other personalty, creates, by necessary implication, a separate estate in the wife, . . . and likewise a gift of earnings or savings may be shown by circumstances, and, when so shown, is as effectual as if proved by express contract;" citing Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1100. It seems to be taken for granted by the court in these and all other cases that the rule is the same in relation to both personal and real estate.

Some stress in the earlier cases appears to be laid upon the fact that a valuable consideration was paid by the wife to the husband, but in the later ones the doctrine is applied without question to gifts from the husband. This conveyance, however, was made in consideration of marriage, which is a valuable consideration, and held to be sufficient to support a settlement by the husband upon his wife by all the authorities. Nelson v. Trigg, 2 Tenn. Cas. 645; Spurlock v. Brown, 91 Tenn. 241, 257, 18 S. W. 868.

While, as stated, this doctrine has not been heretofore applied in this state in any reported case to a conveyance of real estate uses. Second, where he is in a situation to make a gift to his wife, and distinctly separates the property from the mass of his property, and sets it apart to the separate, sole, and exclusive use of the wife. Sims v. Ricketts, 35 Ind. 181, 9 Am. Rep. 679.

A man may make a gift to his wife without the intervention of a trustee, and equity will hold it good if it be no more than a reasonable provision for her; be proportioned to his circumstances, and not hurtful to his creditors. The deed will not be upheld if it is for all the husband's property. A conveyance which denudes a husband of all, or the greater part, of his property is much more than a reasonable provision for the wife; for, in considering what is and what is not a reasonable provision, the circumstances of the husband are to be regarded as probable necessities as well as debts. Coates v. Gerlach, 44 Pa. 48.

A conveyance of real estate by a man to his wife will be upheld in equity if made upon good or meritorious considerations, and it is free from imposition or fraud. Waterman v. Higgins, 28 Fla. 660, 10 So. 97.

It would seem that relief must be applied for in due season.

In Stolt v. Ayliff, Rep. in Ch. 60, a suit was brought to enforce a promise by a man to pay money to his wife, but the court, for the reason that the debt was sixteen years old, and the promise entirely void at law, refused to interfere.

The English court has had some difficulty in carrying the doctrine which upheld the gift to the extent that it has been carried in this country because of the theory upon which it has attempted to work it out. As has been seen, gifts of paraphernalia and pin money were held valid, but, when the question was reached as to the validity of larger gifts, the attempt was made to solve it upon the theory that the husband must have actually divested himself of the title, as stated in the cases cited in the early part of this subdivision, or upon the equitable doctrine that the gift must be regarded as creating a trust. The rules governing such trusts had been established in other classes of cases.

In Kekewich v. Manning, 1 De G. M. & G. 176, the question was merely what was sufficient to make a perfect gift, the court saying a distinction exists between the cases depending upon the answer to the question whether 69 L. R. A.

a gift, or a promised or intended gift, was in truth a perfected act or completed gift, resting neither in promise merely, nor merely in unfulfilled intention, or was incomplete, was imperfect, and rested merely in promise or unfulfilled intention.

In Richards v. Delbridge, L. R. 18 Eq. 11, a man made a deed conveying his stock in trade and other property to his grandson, and delivered it into the keeping of the latter's mother. The court held it to be without effect. The court applied the rule that the one thing necessary to give validity to a declaration of trust is that the donor shall have absolutely parted with that interest which had been his.—shall have effectually changed his right in that respect, and put the property out of his power, at least, in the way of interest. The court says a man may transfer his property without valuable consideration in one of two ways; he may either do such acts as amount in law to a conveyance or assignment of the property, and thus completely divest himself of the legal ownership and vest it in the donee; or he may, by one or other of the modes recognized as amounting to a valid declaration of trust, constitute himself a trustee. For a man to make himself a trustee there must be an expression of intention to become a trustee, whereas words of present gift show an intention to give over property to another, and not retain it in the donor's hands for any purpose.

In Milroy v. Lord, 4 De G. F. & J. 264, the beneficiary was a niece of the settlor, and the settlement was imperfect because of failure to transfer the shares of stock, which was the subject-matter of the settlement, upon the books of the corporation. The transaction was not founded upon a valuable consideration, but was merely gratuitous and voluntary, and the court held that equity would not enforce the attempted settlement specifically against the executor of the settlor.

When the question of the effect of an attempted gift from husband to wife came before the court the principles announced in these cases were applied.

By such application a letter purporting to give personal property forming part of the household furniture to the wife as her separate estate was held not sufficient to constitute the husband a trustee for her benefit. Re Bregon, L. R. 17 Ch. Div. 416. The vice chancellor says that he is unable to support the gift as a trust made by a husband to his wife, it has been by the courts of last resort in a number of other states, and an examination of the opinions of those courts will show that the same reasons advanced in our cases for the creation of a separate estate in transfers of personalty are there given to support the application of the rule to conveyances of land. The case of McMillan v. Peacock, 57 Ala. 127, is very much in point. In the opinion, Chief Justice Brickell speaking for the court, it is said: "To the creation of the equitable separate estate no particular form of words, no technical expressions, are necessary. A clear, unequivocal, intention to exclude all marital rights of the husband to secure to the wife the separate, exclusive enjoyment of the estate, manifested by the terms or legal operation of the instrument creating it, is sufficient. If the grant or conveyance is made by a stranger, the intent to exclude all right of the husband, and to vest in the wife the entire, exclusive interest, must be expressed in clear terms. It cannot rest on conjecture or implication. . . . A conveyance by the husband to a trustee for the use of the wife is, necessarily, for the separate, exclusive use of the wife; otherwise it would be vain and inoperative. . . . A gift or conveyance made by the husband directly to the wife, during coverture, at common law is void, as are all contracts made between husband and wife. Courts of equity have long been accustomed to support and maintain such gifts and conveyances, when they are not fraudulent.

declared by the husband in favor of the wife. "I am very sorry for it because it is a monstrous state of the law which prevents effect being given to such a gift." He treats an attempted gift to a wife or to a stranger as the same, and says it is manifest from the transaction, taken by itself, that the alleged donor was mistaken as regards the proper and legal method of effecting what he intended to do. And that, in order to cause equity to afford its aid, there must be either a transfer of the property or a declaration of trust; following Milroy v. Lord, 4 De G. F. & J. 264, and refusing to follow Fox v. Hawks, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 822.

So, in Hayes v. Alliance British & F. Life & Fire Assur. Co. Ir. L. R. 8 C. L. 149, it was held that a deed poll was not sufficient to transfer a life insurance policy from a man to his wife. The court said it was admitted that the deed could not operate as an assignment, being made to the wife; but it was strongly urged that it amounted to a declaration of trust in favor of the wife. But the court held that the rule laid down in Milroy v. Lord, 4 De G. F. & J. 264, and Richards v. Delbridge, L. R. 18 Eq. 11, was fatal to the contention of the claimant. The intention was to assign and transfer. There was no mention of a trust, and the rule was that, if a settlement was intended by one of the two possible modes,—that is, by present gift,—the court would not give it effect by applying the other,—that is, hold the settler to be a trustee.

c. Necessity of trustee.

Before the possibility of making a conveyance directly to the wife had been recognized that result had been accomplished by conveying the property to a trustee for her benefit. After equity began to uphold conveyances directly from husband to wife, the intervention of a trustee was no longer necessary.

As a general rule whenever a contract would be good at law if made with trustees for the wife that contract will be sustained in equity, though made by the husband and wife, without the intervention of trustees. Maraman v. Maraman, 4 Met. (Ky.) 84.

A wife may acquire a separate property in equity by agreement with her husband without the intervention of trustees. McKenna, 69 L. R. A.

v. Phillips, 6 Whart. 571, 37 Am. Dec. 438; Fisher v. Filbert, 6 Pa. 61; Furrow v. Athey, 21 Neb. 671, 59 Am. Rep. 867, 33 N. W. 208; Story v. Marshall, 24 Tex. 305, 76 Am. Dec. 106; Richardson v. Hutchins, 68 Tex. 87, 3 S. W. 276; Evans v. Opperman, 76 Tex. 299, 13 S. W. 312.

The intervention of a trustee is not necessary to validate a voluntary settlement by a man upon his wife. White v. Bettis, 9 Heisk. 645; Powell v. Powell, 9 Humph. 480.

In Jones v. Clifton, 101 U. S. 225, 25 L. ed. 908, which was an action by an assignee in bankruptcy to set aside conveyances by the debtor to his wife, the court says the intervention of trustees in order that the property conveyed may be held to her separate estate beyond the control or interference of her husband is no longer required.

This is especially true under the statutes which have been passed for the benefit of married women.

Under the married woman's acts a man may grant to his wife the legal title to real estate without the necessity of a trustee. Blake v. Blake, 7 Iowa, 46.

Under the Iowa statutes the wife can take title to real estate by gift or grant from the husband without the necessity of a trustee. Hoffman v. Stigers, 28 Iowa, 308.

In Barker v. Koneman, 13 Cal. 9, it is stated that under the California statutes a man could convey his property as a gift directly to his wife without the intervention of a trustee.

d. Effect of conveyance.

Since it is only in equity that the conveyance is regarded as valid, the question arises as to the character of the estate which is conveyed. The logical answer is that, if there is no estate which will be recognized by a court of law, it must be an equitable, and not a legal, estate which she requires.

While in equity an absolute conveyance of property from a man directly to his wife is sufficient to divest him of such property and vest it in the wife (Craig v. Chandler, 6 Colo. 543), yet she secures an interest in the property only because equity intervenes to aid her by holding the husband to be a trustee for her benefit or otherwise. Therefore, it is generally considered that a conveyance of lands lent, as to creditors." The necessity for creating in "the wife a separate estate, vesting in her the entire, exclusive interest [is apparent], since otherwise the transaction, which was intended to have some effect, can have none in law or equity. . . . [And, further,] all that is necessary to the creation of an equitable separate estate is, as we have seen, . . . a clear, unequivocal manifestation and declaration of the intention to relinquish his own rights, and to clothe the wife with them; and that intention a court of equity will carry into effect."

The case of Helmetag v. Frank, 61 Ala. 69, in which the opinion was also delivered by Brickell, Ch. J., is to the same effect. It is there said: "We regard it as the settled law of this state that a gift by the husband to the wife of property, real or personal, creates in the wife an equitable estate. Property thus acquired by the wife is not within the influence and operation of the statutory or constitutional provisions which create separate estates."

In the case of Kimbrough v. Kimbrough, 99 Ga. 134, 25 S. E. 176, the supreme court of Georgia holds: "Where a husband, with his own money, purchased and paid for a home, and deliberately and intentionally had the same conveyed to his wife, with no understanding or agreement that he was, in any event, to have an interest in the title, the transaction amounted to a gift from the husband to the wife, and, as between them, the property became absolutely her by a man directly to his wife passes to her only an equitable estate, leaving the legal title in him, which on his death will descend to his heirs. Powe v. McLeod, 76 Ala. 418; Washburn v. Gardner, 76 Ala. 599; Bush v. Heney, 85 Ala. 606, 5 So. 321; Sibley v. Wass, 49 N. J. Eq. 463, 24 Atl. 233; Vought v. Vought, 50 N. J. Eq. 177, 27 Atl. 489.

Although a man purchases real estate which is conveyed to him, with his wife's money, a conveyance by him directly to her will not vest the legal title in her. Crawford v. Whitmore, 120 Mo. 144, 25 S. W. 365, Overruling Bangert v. Bangert, 13 Mo. App. 144, and Cooper v. Standley, 40 Mo. App. 138.

A conveyance of real estate by a man to the sole and proper use and behoof of his wife vests in her merely an equitable estate, so that if he has curtesy in it, it is of an equitable nature, and one who levies upon and sells it cannot enforce his rights by an action at law. Carlington v. Richardson, 79 Ala. 106.

But a conveyance by husband to wife vests in her an equitable estate which she may charge. Rabitt v. Orr Bros. 83 Ala. 185, 3 So. 420; McIlwain v. Vaughan, 76 Ala. 489; Snediker v. Boyleston, 83 Ala. 408, 4 So. 33.

And a deed by a man to his wife may convey the equitable estate, and, when the legal estate is outstanding in a prior mortgagee, such deed may convey all the remaining interest of the grantor. Jones v. McGrath, 15 Ont. Rep. 189.

Upon a subsequent hearing of the case, however, judgment went against the grantor in favor of a purchaser from the wife, on the ground that the statute made a recital of consideration in the deed conclusive in favor of purchasers without notice. The court, however, intimated that the grant might be supported even by the general rule governing conveyances from husband to wife. 16 Ont. Rep. 617.

III. Effect of statutes.

a. In general.

After it had become established that an attempted conveyance of property was void at law, but might be upheld in equity, statutes were passed enlarging the powers of married women, and securing to them greater control over their separate property; and the contention was at once made that these statutes removed the barriers which had prevented the husband from conveying property to his wife. The position which the courts took upon the question depended largely upon the form of the statute, but the tendency seems to have been towards conservatism and to hold that the right to contract between themselves did not exist unless expressly conferred. Thus it has been held that a conveyance by a man to his wife of property purchased with money in which she has an interest is absolutely void at law, notwithstanding the enactment of a statute providing that a married woman may sell and convey her real and personal estates to the same extent and with like effect as a married man may. Aultman v. Obermeyer, 6 Neb. 260; Johnson v. Vandervort, 16 Neb. 144, 19 N. W. 461, 20 N. W. 122.

So in Kent v. Kent, 20 Ont. Rep. 445, Armour, Ch. J., said that in his opinion, since the act of 22 Vict. chap. 34, an effectual conveyance of the legal estate in land can be made by a husband to his wife, but that, from the construction which had been placed upon the act, his opinion could not prevail. And Street, J., says that the statute which merely declared that the wife might hold her dower property did not have the effect of permitting the husband to convey directly to her.

But the form of many of the statutes has been such as to leave no question that the power to make such conveyances was conferred.

Thus the Maine act of 1847, chap. 27, § 2, expressly recognized the validity of conveyances directly from husband to wife. Johnson v. Stillings, 35 Me. 427.

So, under the Maine statutes, a note given by a man to his wife for borrowed money may be enforced against him. Webster v. Webster, 58 Me. 139, 4 Am. Rep. 253.

Under the Utah statutes authorizing married women to take property by gift, purchase, etc., and to hold, manage, and transfer the same, and to sue and be sued, a man may convey property directly to his wife without the intervention of a trustee. Cereghino v. Wagener, 4 Utah, 514, 11 Pac. 568.

By the Ontario statute (49 Vict. chap. 20 § 6), a man can convey real estate directly to his wife. Whitehead v. Whitehead, 14 Ont. Rep. 621.

Under the statutes preserving the estates of married women, the husband may transfer directly to his wife securities which form separate estate. Where the husband and wife took joint possession of the property thus conveyed, and after they had lived together thereon for a time she was forced, by mistreatment and cruelty on his part, to leave the premises, and he remained in possession, he was, in law, her tenant at sufferance, and upon his refusing to surrender possession to her when so demanded it was her right to sue out a dispossessory warrant for the purpose of ejecting him."

In the case of Whitten v. Whitten, 3 Cush. 199, which was the case where land was purchased by the husband with his money, and the title taken in his wife, the court says: "Where the husband himself makes a gift or grant to the wife, the intention to relinquish his own rights in favor of the wife, and thus to give her a separate property or interest, is necessarily and most clearly and unequivocally manifested and declared."

In the case of Sayers v. Wall, 26 Gratt. 373, 21 Am. Rep. 303, the court says: It seems to be well settled that express words are not necessary to create a separate estate in a deed from the husband to his wife. The law attaches to absolute deeds and transfers a full alienation of the entire interest of property, so far as the alienation is permitted by the principles of law and equity.

In Garland v. Pamplin, 32 Gratt. 314, it is held: "The general rule is that a conveyance by the husband directly to his wife, although void at law, or to a third person part of her separate estate. Beard v. Dedolph, 29 Wis. 138.

The English statute 44 & 45 Vict. chap. 41, § 50, permitted a conveyance of real estate by husband to wife. Whitehead v. Whitehead, 14 Ont. Rep. 621.

Under the South Carolina Constitution, a woman may acquire separate estate by gift from her husband. State v. Pitts, 12 S. C. 180, 32 Am. Rep. 508.

Under a constitutional provision creating a separate estate in a married woman with respect to her property, free from the debts, engagements, or obligations of her husband, he may convey real estate directly to her. Walker v. Long, 109 N. C. 510, 14 S. E. 299.

